DATELESS ARTICLES

DAVID W. GRIFFI

Whose work more than that o director has advanced the the motion picture pl

By HENRY MACMAH

MOST remarkable of r in the theatre has be ance of "kings th Joseph"; of sceptre dying dynasties and wielded b of rulers with Aladdin-like fort from coast to coast, build transl gage and dissolve armies over ate ephemeral enterprises—all American holiday—beside the which much historical pioneeri tion of actual events seem but

Among the mightiest of the kings—kings of the outdoor th Wark Griffith. A tall, clean-thirty-five years of age, Griffit of manner and no vanities.
eral Griffith, commanded a Southern side in the Civil W a good but not a liberal ed actor for a decade, then be writer, finally a director and pendent producer of "sile tive ability to handle paternal inherit Griffith u lish h

hit in the part. He is a ... Creole by birth and played ... roles with Sarah Bernhardt before going out to Los Angeles. The costuming of the young soldier is wonderfully accurate to the period of 1864. Some of the recent civil war portraits in the magazines and newspapers are almost doubles of this sentry figure, showing what care Griffith has used in reproducing the civil war type.

Lillian Gish wears the costumes of civil war and reconstruction times that are heirlooms in her family. Through Griffith's skill all the actors in the production are made to appear as if to the manner born and not awkwardly moving about in habiliments to which they are unaccustomed.

Press Mar. 2/5

CENSOR

GAINST
SORS BILL

(Morning Telegraph.)
NY, March 4. interests were a hearing held mbly Judiciary bill, which State Board of
s. George H. censes in New bill, on behalf f New York. of the proould have is more power-the Commis-revoke the ibiting any-three mem-the work ical Press contended lutely un-laws are ith such unproper sion of ntended is puralified are, or are not for such purposes exclu he asked.

Joseph Price, a member of tional Board of Censorship bill for two reasons, that he any legal censorship, and that be a physical impossibility for of three members to pass upo films produced for exhibition York. He further declared that prove an entering wedge to the ship of the press, drama, art essentially free methods of The National Board of Cens said, is now viewing about month, an average of thirty ing day. The only reason they is because it is a board of 150 divided into various sub-commi also objected to the bill on th that it permitted rejection only grounds of immorality, while there were other good reasons ing some pictures.

Couldn't Get Sense

Walter W. Irwin, attorney
Vitagraph Company of America,

Dateless - Scattered Articles

German

S. N.Y. Up.

LIBERTY.

facility, with which motion pic-can paint history has been graph-shown the past week in the big epic, "The Birth of a Nation" Liberty Theatre fifty since some of the memorable of American history associated the civil war took place. In this narrative screen drama Griffith in able to make these stirring oc-live as faithfully as if one participating in the actual events.
production starts to-day upon its month and has aroused more in-than any offering of the current on the New York stage. Its suchas been duplicated in Boston, Angeles and San Francisco, and are now shaping for a Chicago exhibition. Nearly 125,000 people have the picture and the receipts have mark in New

New York is packing theatre to see a feature Birth of a Nation" which the regular two dollar time a movie has been ymnan's Views that anyone who has d motion picture Griffith's "The Birth

the Forrest Thea

ED. 02-191

EAGLE

Brooklyn, N.Y. FEB 22 1915

March 14

...e Birth ... of a Nation" Big and Fine

By Charles Darnton.

"The Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty Theatre last night was revealed, incidents in the growth of the motion picture-drama in this country. D. W. Griffith's spectacle is beyond doubt the greatest production of its kind that has been made in America. It is on a scale with "Cabiria," and its armies make it a thing of national interest.

With its reproduction of Sherman's march to the sea this latest wonder of the camera assumes amazing proportions and acquires a sweep calculated to carry any audience off its feet. Here for the first time the North is given full swing, and the effect is remarkable. But good showman as he is, Mr. Griffith should hold this picture until his audience has had time to take it in, instead of switching it off before all the interesting details can be caught. An extraordinary sense of distance is conveyed, and the "dashing Yankee boys" are seen moving irresistibly across a natural amphitheatre that adds immensely to the dramatic effect. The burning and looting and destruction of the territory is vividly shown, while the flight of terrified hundreds gives this war-picture a last touch of reality. The charging of the trenches with hand-to-hand fighting is another scene that has a deadly fascination, while the tremendous artillery duel leaves little to the imagination.

The purpose of this picture-drama, as the title indicates, is to show that the individual States were welded into a true union by the events depicted. There are scenes of the South before the war and then the first part of the story is carried to Lee's surrender to Grant. The second part shows the hellish time experienced by the whites in the South during the Reconstruction period. One or two episodes in which white girls are involved give an ugly aspect to the story, but the street scenes in which the blacks run riot are not only interesting but they testify to Mr. Griffith's skill, not to say generalship, as a producer who knows how to handle throngs of people. The marshalling of the Ku Klux Klan is another achievement that reaches the thrilling point when these mysterious nightriders in their ghostly disguises gallop in hundreds across the screen.

All the massed pictures are splendid, and the most dramatic events in our United States history have been reproduced with striking realism. We may be inclined to shrink from seeing the assassination of President Lincoln in Ford's Theatre during a performance of "Our American Cousin"—which we have come to know as "Lord Dundreary"—but the tragedy itself, as well as the excited, heart-stricken audience, is an impressive example of stage management.

There is a rather lame attempt to drag in a universal peace propaganda at the end, and throughout "The Birth of a Nation" the Southern point of view is emphasized, no doubt because of Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," which forms the basis of the spectacle. The pictures that bring the characters and scenes of Mr. Dixon's story are neither better nor worse than hundreds of other "movies" but in depicting the great national scenes forming its background Griffith's production is big and fine, stirring and affecting.

Pren... Theat... qu... Suc...

AUDIENCE LIT... ALL

Production Stu... dous
Gorgeous ... Prodigal

By REN... OLD WOLF.

As the audience filed last night the Liberty Theatre where the moving picture, "The Birth of a Nation," was having its metropolitan premiere, they observed the letters "D. G." embossed in gold upon a heavy plush stage curtain. Mrs. A. H. Woods, who was also arrayed in plush and gold, remarked that the letters stood for "Damned Good." While as a matter of fact the monogram was merely Mr. D. Griffith's way of expensively calling attention to the fact that the enterprise belonged to him, Mrs. Woods's estimate of the merits of the production is so nearly the writer's that it is accepted at face value as a general summing up of the evening's entertainment.

If one were inclined to drift into French concerning a subject so intensely American as "The Birth of a Nation," one might call it the dernier cri in motion picture production. Certainly nothing so stupendous, so prodigally detailed and so thrilling has ever before been produced by an American director and, indeed, the picture compares most favorably with such sensational foreign outputs as "Cabiria" and "Quo Vadis."

As nearly everybody knows, "The Birth of a Nation" is founded upon Thomas Dixon's story, "The Clansman," which was presented in acted form on the same stage nearly ten years ago. Mr. Dixon said so himself last night, in an entr'acte speech which served also to bring Mr. Griffith before the curtain. Also Mr. Dixon, who was formerly the Rev. Thomas Dixon, proved to be an excellent press agent for his own wares, because he gave the film version an emphatic endorsement, remarking that it was the greatest moving picture ever produced in the entire world, "either in this hemisphere or the other."

Love Story Runs Through Picture.

A love story, of the romance-across-the-bloody-chasm variety, runs through the picture, and serves to give it a certain sequence and the touch of sentiment upon which motion picture patrons appear to thrive. Two chums, one of the Confederacy and the other of the Union Army, meet in battle, and, of course, spare each other. Also a Northern girl loves a Southern officer and vice versa, after a fashion that has done service in nearly every war play from "Barbara Frietchie" to "The Warrens of Virginia."

But the love story was really the least important phase of "The Birth of a Nation." It was in its spectacular features that the picture was superb and in its patriotism that it was thrilling, historical and educational. Beginning with the earliest importation of slaves, the picture shows the United States in some of the gravest throes of its evolution, skipping the period of history between Colonial times and the outbreak of the Civil War.

At the outset, the pictures run along tamely enough, but with the beginning of civil strife they grow thrilling almost beyond description. They reach the highest point perhaps in the delineation of Sherman's march to the sea, and are absolutely harrowing in the scenes showing the assassination of President Lincoln in Ford's Theatre, the interior of which, with its audience, is graphically pictured.

The South's Regeneration.

The second part of the picture is devoted almost exclusively to ... tion of the South follow... the Ku Klux Klan.

...ay of ...spectac... ...e pre... Theatre ...duce the ...f theatri... ...it evoked ...hexpected ...pposedly ... Griffith

---

...ve M... L-MAR. 14 1915

FILMS AND FILM FOLK

by L...

"WID"

The big event in film circles this week is the opening Wednesday of D. W. Griffith's tremendous production, "The Birth of a Nation." This is the first film ever to be presented for a run in America at prices running to $3. When "Cabiria" was shown in Europe, before being shown in this country, the prices were as high as $2, but when this great Italian masterpiece was offered in New York the top price was $1. After seeing his big film started on its New York run, Mr. Griffith will return at once to California, where his companies are working, and he will personally begin on other big productions.

...th ...port ...

...ic... to ... of t... Lodge ...p h... that ... tion was contem... d.

The picture ... vided into parts of six reels each. The fi... sketches the beginning of the ci... war, shows a great battle scene ... which hundreds of men acted b... fore the camera and hundreds ... horses took part in the cavalr... charge. President Lincoln pic... turesquely portrayed by Josep... Henabery, was applauded. His cabi... net was pictured, while one of th... most dramatic scenes was the as... sassination of the war time presiden... in Ford's theater, a programme not... assuring that every detail of the... historic playhouse had been observed... in the building of a special theate... for picture purposes.

The playing of the differen... parts was more or less subjugated... to the ensemble, although Lillian... Gish as the heroine; Henry Wal... thall, as the hero; George Seig... mann, as the mulatto villian, and... Misses Miriam Cooper and Mae... Marsh were good.

Morning Telegraph-Mar. 2...

BIRTH OF NATION PRIVATELY SEE...

Notable Representation of Soci... Finance and the Varied Art... at the Liberty Theatre.

FOR ... TO OPEN...

... and the varied arts ... at a private showing of ... motion picture, "The ... at the Liberty The... ...oon. The showing ... a forerunner to the ... dnesday night when ... tics will view the ...

... Vanderlip, Feli... P. Shonts repr... World. Society w... James Burton, Mr... Osgood Field, Mr... William Hamilto... Belmont. The oper... Gadski and he... Gadski-Tauscher, M... Madame Gatti-Casazza... Minor Gerhardt, Madam... ame De Segurola, E... and Mr. Edward S... were Booth Tarking... ng Davis, Jean Webs... Woodrow, Owen John... Robert W. Cham... Rex Beach, Miss O... and Mrs. Ellis P... ...on and ... that it would be impossible to ... proper sense of the public opinion with a board of only three members. He maintained that motion pictures must have a much higher standard than operas and tragedies of Broadway, because they go to a difference class, the masses. Other speakers against the bill were Miss Lillian Detts of the Brooklyn Neighborhood Association, Jacob S. Cheater, representing the Universal and Mutual corporations, the Majestic Film Company, the Apex Film Company and others.

The principal speaker in favor of the bill was the Rev. Dr. William S. Chase, rector of Christ's Church, Brooklyn, who said there is general dissatisfaction with the National Board of Censorship, the volunteer organization to which motion picture manufacturers voluntarily submit films for approval. Miss Sarah Temward of Boston also spoke against the bill. During the hearing 122 telegrams were received protesting against the bill, and with fifty-seven signatures ...d. Practically all were from New ...

Lovey Marsh

Marguerite Marsh the auburn haired motion picture favorite who was recently seen in the "Runaway June" series has been persuaded by her friends to change her name and take her own name, that of Marsh. It took a great deal of persuasion to get Marguerite to take her own name and up to the last would not consent to drop the name of Loveridge, until it was explained to her that Marsh was a much easier name to remember. Instead of retaining the name of Marguerite, this popular little actress will be known as Lovey Marsh. Every one has called her Lovey ever since she has entered the motion picture world and after she was told that she would be called Lovey Marsh she at last consented to change her name.

Lovey Marsh.

Lovey Marsh will now be advertised in the forthcoming Griffith Mutual Master-Pictures under her new name, and when you see this name you will know it is the dear little red-head that you formerly knew as Marguerite Loveridge.

BALTIMORE, (MD.)

ate .....

MAR

Harry P[illegible]r, Gaby's dancing partner,

CHEER KU KLUX KLAN

Southerners will be surprised to hear that one of the features in "The Birth of a Nation" that the big New York [illegible] will never fails to cheer is the dash of the Ku Klux Klan across the screen. [illegible] was fo[illegible] that this play was so greatly [illegible] others that it would [illegible] which N[illegible] were audiences, but [illegible] crowd [illegible] seen in the Libe[illegible]

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" IS A GREAT MOTION PICTURE DRAM[illegible]

D. W. Griffith's Retold Story of the Civil War, Which He Spent Eight Months in Making, Arouse Wonder at the Liberty.

By BURNS MANTLE.

The lay mind falters and the typewriter balks before an atte[illegible] to either measure or describe D. W. Griffith's crowning achievement in screen drama, "The Birth of a Nation."

It could easily be the greatest moving picture ever taken and we not know it, because we have not seen all the others.

Certainly it is the greatest moving picture we have ever seen, and technically approaches as near perfection as we can imagine perfection being achieved under prevailing limitations.

Here, apparently, are the most dramatic and the most tragic events of American history re-enacted with astonishing accuracy before the most modern of cameras.

You stand on the top of a hill and look down upon thousands of men fighting in the valley below. You see Sherman on his march to the sea, cutting that path of devastation that he conceived as necessary to conquer an all but unconquerable people.

Fighting the Civil War Over Again.

You stand in the trenches with men waving the Stars and Bars and shoot men a hundred yards or so away, who cling as valiantly to the Stars and Stripes. And then you change positions and help in the defense of the Union trenches when the charge of the men in gray is hurled at you. And seemingly miles beyond you stretch other trenches and other thousands of fighting men.

You stand in a corner of the courthouse at Appomattox and watch the handsome and carefully groomed Gen. Lee, strangely calm but also impressively lifelike, sign the treaty of surrender and later shake hands with the sturdy and somewhat mussed-up Gen. Grant.

You are present when the [illegible]rtain in Ford's Opera House rises on the first act of that gala performance of "Our American Cousin," being [illegible]eated apparently in the first balcony. You see Laura Keene bow before the reception of her admirers and receive the bouquets handed her over the footlights, and you glance an[illegible]ly [illegible] the box [illegible] in the ne[illegible] tion's colors awaiting the arrival of President Lincoln and his party.

Henry Walthal and Lillian Gish in "The Birth of a N[illegible]

Seeing Lincoln Killed.

The assassination is re-enacted before your eyes; you are witness to the first appearancec of Booth; you see him fir[illegible] the shot and make the twelve-foot le[illegible] to the stage, and you see the figure [illegible] the martyred one, not as that of a ba[illegible] made-up actor, but in the distance a[illegible]pearing much as the real Lincoln mu[illegible] have appeared, crumple up pathetically [illegible] in the chair and sink a moment later into the arms of anxious attendants.

And then you see a series of tremendously dramatic but rather unpleasant pictures of the South in the throes of reconstruction, which represent a filming of the Thomas Dixon story, "The Clansman," with all the racial bitterness and ugliness and horror forty-odd years ago repeated, for no good purpose that we can see.

Again the carpet bagger and the fanatics harass the beaten southerners; again the ignorant negroes abuse their new freedom; again white women are insulted and attacked, and again the righteous Ku Klux Klan rides to the rescue.

Audience Greatly Excited.

Many of the pictures are wonderful, and there is an element of excitement that last night swept a sophisticated audience like a prairie fire in a high wind. But as propaganda it seemed both needless and futile, and as a significant note in the birth of a nation it was highly localized and evidently more than a trifle prejudiced.

The Griffith pictures are given in two sections, and though they cover twelve reels, are so carefully projected and [illegible] wonderful[illegible] varied that th[illegible] tiring. [illegible] the use of two machines [illegible] there are neither breaks i[illegible] the films. As photograp[illegible] by alone these [illegible] well wor[illegible] seeing, many o[illegible] ing the composition and beauty [illegible] paintings.

FIL[illegible]MS A[illegible] FILM [illegible]

By Wi[illegible]

[illegible]or some time I ha[illegible] the fact I am a "film [illegible] have refused to allow [illegible] or from the "legit" [illegible] upon me and get aw[illegible] day I am a little mor[illegible] I have seen Griffit[illegible] Nation," and I kn[illegible] "high and mighty" "theatrical" world [illegible]

It surely did m[illegible] walk through the c[illegible] [illegible]d in the smoki[illegible] [illegible]st part and hear [illegible]pressions of ent[illegible] [illegible]r from some w[illegible] [illegible]e fence" regard[illegible] [illegible]f the films.

It was a supre[illegible] master of the fil[illegible] truthfully say n[illegible] industry begrud[illegible] of his well-e[illegible] power to him.

With this prod[illegible] further doubt in [illegible] fact that the fil[illegible] in many vitally [illegible] a production to [illegible] a success, and [illegible] for others to [illegible] wise." It is [illegible] of the indus[illegible] the success o[illegible] the big men w[illegible] the film indu[illegible] [illegible]here can I [illegible] this film t[illegible] thing I lo[illegible] [illegible]t "the way [illegible] mean a lim[illegible] [illegible]ather a ques[illegible] like, but delib[illegible] [illegible]fith!

Eve. JOURNAL MAR. 4

[illegible]s Worth $5 a Seat to See "The Birth of a Nation"

By "ZIT."

[illegible]ore appropriate theatre for the [illegible]entation of "The Birth of a Na[illegible] photo drama production could [illegible]ave been selected. For Liberty [illegible]e name of the theatre, and [illegible]erty and Union" are the last [illegible] on the screen of this marvelous [illegible]e of work of the camera's lens. [illegible]irst of all, children must be sent to [illegible]e this masterpiece. Any parent who neglects this advice is committing an [illegible]ational offense. For no film ever produced has more educational points than Griffith's latest achievement in the moving picture world. Grownups will be taken back to history, and things will be shown to them that they have forgotten or that they never even knew. Unfortunately, this film production (for we must call it a production) is something so great and wonderful that pristers [illegible] could never describe it. All the shoutings of praise in the world could never be as convincing as seeing it. For, really, seeing is believing.

Upon leaving the theatre Mr. Ab[illegible]m said, "Zit, how do you like the picture?" My only reply was, "Find me words to tell you how much I liked it—I know them not." When I noticed in previous announcements that there were 15,000 people employed in making this film, I [illegible] inwardly, and when I heard that over $100,000 was spent in producing the picture, I almost believed it. But, after last night I am almost willing to believe anything in the future. For, the 15,000 looked like 36,000, and the $100,000 looked like $200,000. The picture itself is perfect in every detail. No detail is forgotten, even to the two little dogs and the cat, and the Southern mine which the little girl used as [illegible] her dress. The exact reproduction of how ex-President Lincoln was assassinated is more than realistic. "The Birth of a Nation" will thrill you, startle you, make you [illegible] your seats. It will make you [illegible]. It will make you cry. It will make you angry. It will make you [illegible]. It will make you [illegible]. It will make you love. It [illegible] [illegible]

ALL

San Francisco, Cal.

MAR 4 1915

"Clansman" Film to Stay Another Week at Alcazar

D. W. Griffith's masterpiece, "The Clansman," or "The Birth of a Nation," is being shown in twelve stupendous reels at the Alcazar Theater. The management of the theater is able to show this great production as an Exposition attraction at popular prices. Twenty-five thousand people have seen this great picture up to date and police regulations have had to be enforced in front of the O'Farrell street playhouse to handle the crowds. Nothing like this spectacular production has ever been offered at the Alcazar to the lovers of motion pictures. Originally scheduled for one week, the Alcazar management has canceled all immediate attractions that "The Clansman" may be continued for a second week beginning next Monday afternoon. There will be performances daily at 2 and 8 o'clock. The gorgeous stage setting, depicting an old Southern plantation, the enlarged orchestra and the big chorus of Southern jubilee singers are [illegible]ded features. The production [illegible]ven months to complete and it is the most startling battle [illegible]ver enacted. The cast includes [illegible]lish, Henry Walthall and [illegible]. Joseph Hannaberry is [illegible] role of Abraham Lincoln.

[illegible]unds of shares in [illegible]cerns, at least a[illegible]

Day-Mar. 8-1915

נייע קאלאסאלע מואווינג פיק־טשר אין א בראדוויער טהעאטער.

פאר דעם ערשטען כאל אין דער גע־שיכטע פון מואווינג פיקטשורס וועט היינט געוויזען ווערען אין א בראדוויי'ער טהעאטער א בילד פאר א פריין ניט ווע־ניגער ווי א געוואוינליכער טהעאטער פאר־שטעלונג. דאס וועט זיין אין ליבערטי טהעאטער. דאס בילד טראגט דעם נאמען „דהי בוירטה אוו א ניישאן".

דיעזעס בילד, זאגט מען, איז די גרעסטע זאך וואס איז נאך ווען אונטער נומען געווארען אין מואווינג פיקטשורס — נאר גרעסער ווי עס איז געווען „אבי־ליש". פאר וועלכער דער בעריהמטער אר־טאליעניישער פאשאן ר'שאנגעיא אים גע־שריבען דעם אינהאלט.

„דהי בוירטה אוו א ניישאן" איז אן אמעריקאנער פראדוקט אין יעדער הינ־זיכט. דער אינהאלט איז ענטנומען פון אן אמעריקאנער ראמאן, פערפאסט פון מאסאס דיקסאן, אונטער'ן נאמען עפיזאד־רען פון דער אמעריקאנער געשיכטע. אין דער פאלשטעלונג פטייליגען זיך פיעל מויזיקער מענשען פון אינגאנצען, כעל־דעם מען, האט דאס בילד אבגעקאסט א היבשע עמליכע טהעאטער פאזענג דאלאר. אויב די ארבייט פון דיזער מואווינג פיקטשור טעט־זיין ניט ערגער ווי אין „קאבירייא", דאן קען מען ווירקליך ערד־ווארטען עפעס אויסערגעוואוינלי־ך־ווייל די מעגליכקייטען פון מואווינג פטשורס זיינען אין א מעדיטען זיך אר־ברענגען אזא כען דאך דיר די ארויסב־ען מעגען וואס מען האט מען אויף דער נע־ס א מעדיטער געווען אי

[illegible] characters and great [illegible]arised according to the [illegible] succeeding generations." [illegible]incipal requirement as to [illegible]s?"

[illegible]s!" was the emphatic re- [illegible]re is much talk of pict- [illegible]es and all that, but over [illegible]equirements, so called, is [illegible]e of great personalities, [illegible]es and the unhistrical

[illegible] the stars who come to [illegible]age lack the sincerity, [illegible]er efforts before the [illegible] 'Tess,' was a notable [illegible] drew from me the [illegible] Comédie Française ac- [illegible]d Le Bargy, who ap- [illegible] French pictures, [illegible] and [illegible] of their [illegible]rayal. On the other [illegible] widely advertised and [illegible]ular pictures from [illegible] the defect of [illegible] are magnificent [illegible] actors? Here [illegible] a school of silent actors [illegible]rpass the finest efforts of [illegible]ooks."

[illegible]," continued Mr. Griffith, [illegible] modes of the stage some- [illegible]ew of us sensed we were [illegible] art form. The primitive [illegible] laid out in acts, strict unity [illegible] being always observed, the [illegible] shown in an unvarying [illegible] a single action.

[illegible]hat a sensation I caused in [illegible]tudios, in Fourteenth Street, [illegible] 'close-up' figures.

[illegible] do at all,' objected the [illegible]ors look as if they were [illegible] have them float on. [illegible] But I persisted, and [illegible]s alleged that the [illegible] disapproval with [illegible]se-ups' were exhibited. To-day the 'close-up' is essential to every motion picture, for the near view of the actors' lineaments conveys intimate thought and emotion that can never be conveyed by the crowded scene.

"I borrowed the 'cut-back' from Charles Dickens. Novelists think nothing of leaving one set of characters in the midst of affairs and going back to deal with earlier events, in which another set of characters is involved. I elaborated the 'cut-back' to the 'story within a story,' and to the so-called parallel action. I found that the picture could carry not merely two, but even three or four simultaneous threads of action—all without confusing the spectator. At one point in my latest drama four actions are represented simultaneously, by the device of switching scenes every few moments. Each action heightens the effects of the others—a technique that, so far as I am aware, is absolutely novel in story telling art. My point is that photographic drama is constantly progressing, and he is indeed foolish who would set arbitrary limits as to what it can or cannot accomplish in the course of its marvellous evolution. For one thing, the telling of history, the education of old and young, may be entirely revolutionized by its strangely new processes."

With these words the picture producer went back to his unending task of bringing "The Birth of a Nation" for its initial presentation here. Perhaps the biggest things in his work are not those that have been described in this article. For Griffith is, above all, a lover of nature and a lover of beauty. The landscape glories of perfect sky and earth settings, the chiaroscuro that Rembrandt loved, the play of animals, the graceful beauty of idealized humanity, the subtle sentiment, comedy and pathos lurking in the byways and corners of the big game of existence—these are the things that show the true poet beneath the big executive genius of the picture producer and the things that cause him to be regarded by his fellows in Pictureland as the real art craftsman of them all.

[illegible]UMES ARE AUTHE[illegible]

[illegible] and Lillian Gi[illegible]

Types of War Times.

[illegible] goal of this comedy is horse- [illegible] David W. Griffith is "The [illegible] Nation," at the Forrest [illegible] proved that quiet, refined [illegible] a big laugh maker and [illegible] better than the old style [illegible] "naughty" in "The [illegible] Nation" is the lovelock sen- [illegible] hospital scene gazing at [illegible] This particular bit is [illegible] for [illegible] or saver do [illegible] miss the rapt devotion [illegible] and the haughty ex-

LILLIAN GISH.

[illegible] of the young woman rebuking [illegible]th a million-miles away look. [illegible] LeBlanc [illegible] the name of the [illegible] actor [illegible] the unexpected [illegible] New Orle[illegible] co

D. W. GRIFFITH.

[illegible]ction of "The Birth of a Nation," now at the Nixon.

[illegible] organized hospital corps of a chief surgeon, four assistant surgeons and a staff of orderlies accompanied the troops. This was no mere decorative effect but the grim necessity of an arduous campaign.

The fighting was directed exactly like that of modern warfare by field telephones, "General" Griffith's headquarters was in a high tower overlooking the scene of action as pictured above. A network of underground telephones connected him with his sub-directors in various parts of the field.

The realism of the battle scenes has never been even approached before, and yet with the vast number of troops engaged there were no really serious injuries, although the surgeon and his staff was kept busy with minor hurts.

[illegible] that the stock mar- [illegible]usands of shares in [illegible]cerns, at least a [illegible]

[illegible] self.

[illegible] 4, 191[illegible]

[illegible]F A NATION [illegible]DER IN PICTURES

[illegible]SMAN" ON THE SCREEN [illegible] HOUR PRODUCTION.

[illegible],000 Actors [illegible] 3,000 Employed—A Ta[illegible] of the [illegible]n [illegible]econstruction Days Viv- [illegible] Portr[illegible]yed—Other News of the World of [illegible]e Stage.

The moving picture has entered the $2 class of entertainment. At the Liberty last night there was presented "The Birth of a Nation," a three hour entertainment, the story of which is based on the famous novel, "The Clansmen" from the pen of the Rev. Thomas Dixon. The offering justifies the use of "stupendous" in describing the spectacle. It is the largest and most extensive movie offering on record, having taken eight months in preparation, and the services of 18,000 actors and 3,000 horses. There is action aplenty and acting of a superior quality. A noticeably gratifying feature is the avoidance of "overacting" on the part of the principals. There is more of the natural movement of the drama proper, which is something for which to be thankful.

The story begins in the seventeenth century with the bringing of African slaves to North America. Its further progress is closely related to varied phases of slavery and its bearing upon the history of the United States.

In the wake of the abolition movement comes the Civil War, with its battles and the toll of death and broken hearts; Sherman's march to the sea; the burning of Atlanta; the downfall of Petersburg; Lee's surrender to Grant at Appomattox; the assassination of Abraham Lincoln; the ordeal of the reconstruction period; the Ku Klux Klan; the establishment of everlasting peace in the end.

All of these historic scenes are given in detail. A drama of human conflicts shown with well drawn characters links history to romance. For there is plenty of romance and excitement in the play which is participated in, and woven about, the adventures of a family of boys, one from the North and the others from the South, whose association is broken up by the Civil War.

An orchestra of forty adds to the entertainment. A score fitting the thread of the story, written by Joseph Carl Briel was played most effectively. Matinees will be given daily.

The complete cast is as follows: Col. Ben Cameron, Henry Walthall; Margaret Cameron, the elder sister, Miriam Cooper; Flora, the pet sister, Mae Marsh; Mrs. Cameron, Josephine Crowell; Dr. Cameron, Spottiswoode Aiken; Wade Cameron, the second son, J. A. Beringer; Duke Cameron, the youngest son, John French; Mammy, their faithful old servant, Jennie Lee; Hon. Austin Stoneman, Leader of the House, Ralph Lewis; Elsie, his daughter, Lillian Gish; Phil, his elder son, Elmer Clifton; Tod the younger son, Robert Harron; Jeff, the blacksmith, Wallace Reed; Lydia Brown, Stoneman's mulatto housekeeper, Mary Alden; Silas Lynch, mulatto Lieutenant-Governor, George Seigmann; Gus, a renegade negro, Walter Long; Abraham Lincoln, Joseph Henabery; John Wilkes Booth, Raoul Walsh; Gen. U. S. Grant, Donald Crisp; Gen. Robert E. Lee, Howard Gaye.

The

SAN ANTONIO TEX. LIGHT
MARCH 14, 191

People and 3,000 Horses in O

ey Talk About Griffith's $,000 Didn't He Have to Command oth s During the Four Years' War in the 13,000-Foot Picture?

D.W. GRIFFITH

.E'S an interesting man in town. Here's proving it.

salary is $200,000 extras it. He won't ut it. Q. E. D.

Griffith, who is usually of in the moving picture as the foremost producer of pictures, blew into town k to be on h for the oving ation calls "The Birth of a Nation" Mr. Griffith follows fairly closely the story in Thomas Dixon's novel, "The Clansman." The mere fact that part of the story took him from the beg ng to the end of the Civil W attered net. For three month of the eight Mr. Griff d forth at the top of to ndred feet or more in b onally directed not of blame near s fought pictures close 00 people and 3,000 horses employed. One of Mr. assistants is authority for the statement that the only members of this cast whom Mr. Griffith did not know by first name were a few of the commissary department

The Birth of a Nation" is by all odds the most pretentious moving picture ever attempted. As finally assembled it runs feet in length, longer a thousand feet longer than "Cabiria," up to this the most pretentious moving picture ever made.

But it is not in length alone that this achievement of Mr. Griffith outranks all other pictures. For many of the scenes that are shown on the screen the actual spread of the stage setting is more than mile in length and for the of the picture one village thousands of small villages was completely destroyed.

When the picture is shown at the Liberty Theatre next Wednesday night for the first time, New Yorkers are going to see not only the most stupendous camera feat ever attempted and the single work for which those in back the project considere Griffith's salary of $200,00 only fair compensation, b are going to be taught t lesson in where to sh ture to the b orchestra

New York is going to get its first touch of real high life in moving pictures.

All of which is ch Griffith

New York Has $2 Movie Show

"The Birth of a Nation" Shown In Films at Liberty Theater Draws Big Price.

NEW YORK, March 13.—The pioneer two dollar moving picture show has come to town. They are getting two greenbacks per seat in gaps of the Liberty Theatre, for the elaborate picture, "The Birth of a Nation," based on Thomas Dixon Novel, "The Clansman."

It is impossible to see "The Birth of a Nation" without getting superlative. The work which must been done in staging it is stag But it is difficult to a less f

Liberty Theatre will be given its initial glimpse of the greatest photoplay spectacle that has thus far come to the metropolis. This remarkable film has for its foundation the sensational story and play, by Thomas Dixon, "The Clansman." It tells the story of the nucleus of the Dixon story and has been elaborated, in several places, to advantage. It has been converted into a photo-spectacle by its author and has been directed by the masterful hand of D. W. Griffith, who is known as the master in connection with productions of this kind, a long chain of successes has shown.

One of the many features will be the characters of the Dixon Stories of women will be seen in the screen version of to-day. It is known that the prevailing styles of the women of to-day are similar to those of the days when the stories were written, but when the women in the days shortly after the war, it seems strange to appreciate that it is these styles that the women of to-day are so closely copy-at "The Birth of a Nation" is a and startling drama will be by appreciated by the perusal of following brief synopsis:

tion slaves are introduced into the Revolutionary Century. Slave labor is official in the South. The Union Abolitionists take up the cause of the Negroes, in the Northern States. The Civil War breaks out. The former friends are arrayed on opposite sides. The grim years drag by. The railroad exit Sherman's devastating march to the sea is seen. Grant and Lee face each other in a desperate struggle at Petersburg. Austin Stoneman, a parliamentary leader, is rising power in both branches of the Congress of the United States. His protégé, a cousin of his favorite child, and two sons, Phil and Tod, are at their Pennsylvania home. Their father resides in a Washington, near the Capitol.

happy days of peace are ended the news of Lincoln's election in the South. Secession is in the air. The Northern boys hurry to join the cause. South Carolina leaves the Union. Other South-ern States follow. President Lincoln issues the first call for 75,000 volunteers. The Civil War breaks out. The former friends are arrayed on opposite sides. The grim years drag by. The railroad exit Sherman's devastating march to the sea is seen. Grant and Lee face each other in a desperate struggle at Petersburg. The wars ends. The pall falls across the land of the Stoneman and the Cameron families. The Appomattox brings the surrender of Lee at last. Great Stoneman is magnanimity. North and South accept the old con-

Lincoln hears of his mother's plight and gives the pardon of Ben Cameron. The President calls to heal the nation. This draws the bullet of fanatic lays the great leader to Booth's martyrdom. Stoneman and leaders of old and plunge the country into the blackest period of the war. Stoneman, seeing clean to absolute ruin, begins to wash out all enmity and fear.

Stoneman's radical theories in operation. His mulatto favorite, has set up his headquarters at Piedmont, S. and the reign of carpet-baggers and their negro mates begins. Stoneman visits at Piedmont to see his decrees formed. Negroes are given the ballot. The white residents are denied their right to vote.

Phil Stoneman still loves Margaret Cameron. The shadows of war are so deep for Cupid to pierce. Ben Cameron declares his love for Elsie Stoneman and meets encouragement which elected Lieutenant-Governor of South Carolina. He looks high for love mate. Elsie does not fathom his intentions. Negro supremacy makes out of bounds. The big majority is the Legislature decrees legal marriage of blacks and whites. A handful of white men are helpless in the reign of terror.

THE SONG OF HATE

authorities, publicists, editors and was suggested by Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," exhibits the short even of the war between the states, the assassination of President Lincoln's death, the surrender of Lee at Appomattox, the battle of Petersburg, the march of Grant, and the assassination of Lincoln at Ford's Theatre. Until it was the operator of the Griffith film in the second half the story, this time Aaron Burr, uprising, this time Aaron Burr, carpetbagger, reconstruction, thrilling story of reconstruction. The romance of the Civil Conflict, Ben Cameron, with Miss Lillian Gish, Phil Stoneman, and of the Unionist Cameron, Phil Stoneman, with Margaret Cameron, Fred Stoneman, Miss Carolina Cameron, threads of continuous love-interest throughout the story.

But the great out-of-doors is Griffith's canvas. Gold, Tremendous in scope, Kind, are seen the hands of Lincoln, Grant, Lee, Sherman, were employed in the picture. Griffith invest even more that the stock market thousands of shares in Cerna, at least

LIBERTY THEATRE 42d St. West of Broadway

EVENINGS at 8.05 SHARP, 25c., 50c., 75c. & $1
MATINEES at 2.10 SHARP, 25c. and 50c.

ALL SEATS RESERVED

HOUSE REMODELED ACCORDING TO SCIENTIFIC ADJUSTMENT OF FOCAL REQUIREMENTS—THESE LOGE SEATS WILL BE $2 AT NIGHT & $1 AT MATINEE PERFORMANCES

BEGINNING THIS NEXT WEDNESDAY NIGHT

MARCH 3d

AND TWICE DAILY THEREAFTER INCL. SUNDAYS

A RED BLOODED TALE OF TRUE AMERICAN SPIRIT

LOVE AND ROMANCE MID HISTORIC SCENES

COMEDY WHICH RELIEVES THE THRILL OF ADVENTURE

GRIPPING HEART INTEREST AND SOUL STIRRING EMOTIONS

SEE THIS MASTERPIECE

THE BIRTH OF A NATION

The Mightiest Spectacle Ever Produced!

D. W. GRIFFITH'S

COLOSSAL PRODUCTION WHICH WILL STARTLE THE WORLD!

TOO GREAT FOR COMPARISONS

CONCEIVED, INSPIRED AND CREATED IN AMERICA

THE EXPRESSION OF GENIUS IN A NEW REALM OF ART

A COMPOSITION OF NATIONAL FIGURES WITH THE UNIVERSE AS ITS BACKGROUND

RICH IN HISTORICAL VALUE

THE MOST REALISTIC AND STUPENDOUS VIEW OF STIRRING EVENTS IN THE DEVELOPMENT OF OUR COUNTRY.

FOUNDED ON THOMAS DIXON'S FAMOUS NOVEL AND PLAY

The Clansman

SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA OF 40

SEATS NOW

18,000 PEOPLE
3,000 HORSES
8 MONTHS
In the Making
COST $500,000.00

THE BIRTH OF A NATION.

On Wednesday night, March 3, in the Liberty Theatre, D. W. Griffith will present for the first time in New York, a photographic spectacle entitled The Birth of a Nation. The story upon which the work is based is Thomas Dixon's novel and play, The Clansman.

Mr. Griffith has been known heretofore as the foremost producer of motion picture processes in houses devoted to this style of entertainment. His present production is a step forward which will demonstrate the marvelous scope and artistic values of the camera play as a work of incomparable dramatic appeal. There are no established standards by which his newest production can be gauged. The producer devoted eight months to its making. He employed the services of 18,000 people and 3,000 horses to get the needed effects. A complete score has been written for the presentation by Joseph Carl Briel. The accompaniment will be played by an orchestra of forty musicians.

The story begins in the seventeenth century with the coming of African slaves to North America. Its further progress is closely related to varied phases of the slavery question and its bearing upon the history of the United States. In the wake of the abolition movement comes the Civil War with its terrific battles and the toll of death and broken hearts; Sherman's march to the sea; the burning of Atlanta; the downfall of Petersburg; Lee's surrender to Grant at Appomatox; the assassination of Abraham Lincoln; the ordeal of the Reconstruction period; the Ku Klux Klan's solution of the problem; the establishment of an everlasting peace in the end. These historic scenes are given in accurate detail. A drama of human conflict as shown in well-drawn characters links history to romance. It is all portrayed upon the largest plan ever conceived and executed by any artist in the world.

Motography - MAR 6 - 15

Griffith Highly Honored

D. W. Griffith, whose spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," opens at the Liberty Theater, New York City, next week, has returned from Washington, D. C., where, on Friday night, before the National Press Club, he gave a private exhibition of this wonderful picture. Chief Justice White of the United States Supreme Court was the guest of honor. Other distinguished personages present were Secretary of the Navy Daniels, thirty-eight members of the United States Senate and fifty Representatives from the House. The statesmen were accompanied by the ladies of their respective parties.

After the presentation of the picture Mr. Griffith was showered with congratulations by the newspaper men and their distinguished guests.

Next Thursday night, Mr. Griffith, in recognition of his remarkable achievements with this picture, will be the guest of honor of the National Press Club at its "Inside Dope Night," and will deliver a talk along the lines indicated by this event upon the development of the art of motion pictures in this country.

Review, Mar. 6, 191

"THE BIRTH OF NATION" IS THE GREATEST

D. W. Griffith's Photo Play at Liberty Theatre Is Impressive Masterpiece.

...omething heretofore never at ...on so great a scale in motion ...s was the production last W... night at the Liberty Th... W. Griffith's "The Birth ..." The story is based ...on's novel and play ...n." ...his film spectacle ...d largest ever pro... ...ght months to prepa... ...vices in one capacity the ...some 18,000 persons were ...were required to obtain ...fect.

Large audiences while ...week went away with ...the production is a st... the demonstration of ...artistic values of the ... The dramatic appeal wa... ticularly.

The story begins in the ...century with the bringing ...slaves to North America. ...progress is closely related ...hases of slavery and its ...he history of the United ...

In the wake of ...ment comes the ...battles and t... ...ken hearts; Sherman's ...he burning of At... ...fall of Petersburg, Le... ...rant at Appomatto... ...tion of Abraham Lin... ...of the reconstruction ...klux Klan, the establi... ...lasting peace in the en...

All of these historic ...given in detail. A dram... conflicts shown with well ...acters linked history to roma... there is plenty of romance and e... ment in the play, which is particu... in and woven about the adventu... a family of boys, one from the ... and the other from the South ... association is broken up by ... War.

A musical score was written ... ...sentation by Joseph Carl ... served as supplementa... ...al music to the ... ...paniment was played by an ... of forty pieces.

D. W. Griffith has done ... the progress of motion pictures ... any other man and ... Nation" is easily ... will be long befor... preserve is show... less Mr. Gr... self.

From CALL
Address: San Francisco, Cal.
Date

ALCAZAR TO SHOW GREAT WAR MOVIE

"The Clansman," or the "Birth of the Nation," in twelve reels, conceded to be one of the greatest motion pictures ever produced, will be shown at the Alcazar Theater beginning Monday night, March 1.

The film is based on the novel by Thomas Dixon Jr., but it deals more broadly with American history than does either the play or book. It deals with the American civil war and the reconstruction period that followed. It treats impartially with the causes that led up to the conflict and shows the conditions in both the North and the South before, during and following the conflict.

In "The Clansman" are shown spectacular battle scenes, with 25,000 soldiers, including thousands of horses and batteries of artillery in action. Artillery duels at night are shown.

Among the principal features shown in "The Clansman" are the battle before Petersburg, the bombardment and burning of Atlanta, the fleeing of the refugees from the stricken city, Lee's surrender to Grant, assassination of President Lincoln, organization and motives of the famous Ku Klux Klan, with thousands of these white-hooded ...rs seen in spectacular raids.

Interwoven among the spectacular features of "The Clansman" is a beautiful double romance of the South. The allegorical finish to "The Clansman" contains a powerful plea for universal peace.

Mar. 6, 1914.

MOTION PICTURE NOTES.

The first performance of D. W. Griffith's great film, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Liberty Theatre Wednesday night proved the biggest moving picture event of the season and the theatre has been crowded at each performance since. It really is one of the most striking pictures ever shown, and the indications are that it will run at the Liberty for months.

From NEW YORK COMMERCIAL
Address: New York City
Date MAR 6 - 1915

So warm has been the welcome extended to D. W. Griffith's stupendous photographic spectacle "The Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty that it looks as if this great picture has settled down for a long engagement. The demonstration of war's futility and the trials and suffering inflicted by blind hatred when passions are aroused in these mighty conflicts carries one of the most impelling lessons of the kind ever encountered in the theatre.

...n the welcome extended ...stupendous photographic ...of a Nation" at the ...as if this great picture ...for a long engagement ...of war's futility and ...ring inflicted by blind ...are aroused in these ...the one of the most im... ...ing ever encountered

...invest even more ...that the stock mar... ...sands of shares in ...cerns, at least

...e Theatre

...h of a Nation" at the Liberty.

...beyond question the most ...ry picture that has been ...en in America so far. In ...of detail, in the care and ...have been expended on it, ...e scope of the tremendous ...depicts, "The Birth of a ...ar and away above every... ...has been attempted hith... ...fact, I seriously doubt ...does not excel even the ...tions of the European fea... ...ke "Quo Vadis." For here ...ce of the subject and the ...n which it has been trea... ...any mere historical ro... ...the drama of an entire ...with a lucidity and ...ness that would be im... ...y other method.

...ight it may seem an ...talk so enthusiastic... ...ture. Personally, I do ...to be a lover of the ...movie. Nearly all the so... ...re "illums" I have seen ...have turned out to be ...e. All the more surpris... ...see anything so inte... ...ensely absorbing, as this

...of a Nation" goes fur... ...it covers practically the ...of the most momentous ...the political history of ...starts by showing the ...the slave trade and the ...duction of the germs of ...enough of the plot of ...n" is introduced to im... ...interest to the picture ...dramatic romance to ...The battle scenes are ...and on a large scale. ...quent picture of the ...rs of the civil war. ...ting enough for the ...ach. Then there are ...Lincoln and Sumner, ...the capitulation by Lee, ...on of Lincoln in the ...showing the grief that ...nth when the news of ...blished.

...amazingly catholic. ...ira shown at the Lib... ...nce included many of ...atrical first nighters ...ally to be seen at the ...ll as the professional ...and persons commer... ...d in the industry. And ...ared to be equally en...

...of a Nation" is founded ...nsman," by Thomas ...it is actually bigger in ...tistic, and less lurid in ...novel. After all de... ...nationalism and occa... ...of slop, Mr. Dixon's ...reconstruction period in ...undeniably powerful. ...en a vivid picture of ...ary conditions, they ...siders an explanation ...ack of the organization ...x Klan, for instance, ...d clarity that no other ...ave effected.

...rawback to he film ...so full of incident ...be reeled off at a speed ...ne of the pictures un... ...Klux cavalry, for in... ...ing riding at a speed ...might have envied. ...ough ... uphill and ...e velocity. ...along so rapid... ...are invisible. The ...grotesque.

...picture, as a whole, is ...achievement. It is be... ...think of the elaborate ...the number of people, ...nt of equipment it re... ...this drama in the ...which goes to prove ...ericans are willing to ...pains they can pro... ...esults as remarkable ...d in any other coun... LOUIS SHERWIN.

...NT The World - MAR 6-15

...EF WASHINGTON ITEMS.

...dent Wilson and several members ...cabinet and their families were ...at a private exhibition of "The ...of a Nation," which is based on ...Clansman," a book written by ...Dixon, a former schoolmate of ...sident. The exhibition was given ...East Room of the White House, ...the white walls were used in lieu ...reen.

...Commercial, MAR. 6 1915

...n the welcome extended ...stupendous photographic ...of a Nation" at the ...as if this great picture ...for a long engagement ...of war's futility and ...ring inflicted by blind ...are aroused in these ...the one of the most im... ...ing ever encountered

Est... 1884

DENVER, COL.
Address
Date
Establishe

STAY HOME AND SAVE $1.95 EACH JIT SHOW

New Yorkers Are Charged $2 Now for a Movie, but Expert Explains How to Avoid 2,000 Miles Travel and See Film for a Nickel.

BY RICHARD MILTON.

THE difference between $2 and 5 cents is $1.95. It is not stated because it is difficult to figure, but as an easy way to get this started. As an added bit of information, perhaps superfluous, it is 1,934 miles by shortest railroad route to New York.

And in New York they are charging $2 for motion pictures, including music. In Denver, where a great many New Yorkers believe civilization is not, they are charging 5 cents. In Kansas City 25, 50 and 75 cents, in Chicago 25 cents to $1. Seemingly, as you go eastward, you pay more for your film enjoyment.

The prices quoted are for big feature plays it cost thousands of dollars each to produce. New York had its first taste of $2 motion pictures this week. D. W. Griffith, promoter producer, took over the Forty-second Street theater, hung out a $2 sign, and announced "The Birth of the Nation" to the Broadway first-nighters, who have been having their fill of the hoorah-twinkling-toe-pretty-maidens combination so far this season. Whether the intrepid promoters sat forlorn and lonesome in their empty house waiting watchfully for patrons or whether the theatergoers, thru admiration for their nerve or a genuine desire to see the picture, flocked and filled the place has not yet been learned.

* * *

BUT the point is that "The Birth of the Nation," which is declared a complete working out of the contributory themes in American history on which Thomas Dixon Jr. founded his novel and play, "The Clansman," perhaps is not a whit more stupendous a production than those which come to Denver for the "jitney." More than 18,000 persons were employed in making the picture, so the press agents say, and the scenic supplements are unusually elaborate. But the Paris, it will be remembered, showed "Julius Caesar," with 20,000 people in the cast, which cost George Kleine considerably more than $100,000, in Denver not so very long ago at 5 cents the single admission. It will be remembered, also, that "Quo Vadis," "The Christian" and like attractions have been shown in Denver for 5 cents. More than 10 cents has seemed a prohibitive admission price by the 125,000 weekly Curtis street motion picture patrons always.

So imagine Manager Baxter of the Isis hanging out a $2 sign before his theater. Or Manager Percy before the Paris. Or Manager Noland before the Plaza. Can't you see them calling the reserves out to hold the eager crowd in check? Can't you visualize milling, pressing throngs thrusting $2 bills in overworked ticket sellers' hands? And the legitimate theater managers watching with deep chagrin? Neither can we.

With New York 1,934 miles to the east of us, it seems probable the $2 admission price will have a long, slow, tedious and tiresome time reaching Denver.

* * *

WE'VE heard it remarked often, the good order that obtains in the Curtis street motion picture places. Managers are complimented daily because of the fact they themselves attend to the "bouncing" job, standing thru their own shows, at the back of the audience, keeping watchful eye constantly roving over the heads of the screen fans. Because they do, the complaints received by the police in other cities, arising from the opportunities darkened theaters give miscreants, are not received by the Denver police.

But there are pests the managers cannot squelch. They are not criminal pests or merely mischievous pests who can be kicked out summarily at the first offense. But they are pests from all stations in life. Many of them are unconscious of the fact they annoy those around them. The managers have plenty of chances to observe them, but can do nothing. And each manager has his own particularly offensive offenders. Hear them:

"The most annoying person, from all I can gain from complaints that come to me," H. E. Ellison says, "is the man or woman who feels called upon to explain every picture flashed upon the screen and display a fancied recognition of the events soon to come. One man or one woman who sits thru a show and explains every scene, and anticipates the picture's climax out loud, can annoy everybody within a radius of fifty feet.

"And Denver has a lot of SAYS Samuel Baxter: "It [illegible] most trouble. More than [illegible] the come in early, before the hous[illegible] They, [illegible] next to the aisle and sit there [illegible] have to climb over them to get [illegible] stand up, obstructing the view [illegible]

And Manager Percy: "[illegible] closely at home to gossip, or is [illegible] the motion picture show with the latest [illegible] tures and hearing all the latest [illegible] friends. A lot of women can w[illegible] the same time, discuss everythin[illegible] to the proper recipe for making [illegible]

D.W. GRIFFITH WHOSE MASTERPIECE "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" IS AT THE LIBERTY THEATRE PHOTO BY BANGS

From DEUTSCHES JOURNAL
Address: New York City
Date

Photodrama im Liberty Theater.

Reich an grossartigen scenischen Effekten.

"The Birth of a Nation" [illegible] Schlachtscenen bei [illegible] Bürgerkrieg.

Das Photodrama „The Birth of a Nation", das mit grossem Erfolg im Liberty Theater zur ersten Darstellung gebracht worden ist, gibt einen interessanten Beweis, wie erstaunlich gross sich in Zeit von wenigen Jahren die Photodramen entwickelt haben. Das Wandelbilder-Drama ist nach Thomas Dixons bekanntem Roman „The Clansman" bearbeitet und bringt in meisterhaft ausgeführten Wandelbildern die letzten Schlachten des Bürgerkrieges und die nachfolgende Reconstructionsperiode, in welcher das Treiben des Geheimbundes der Ku Klux eine so hervorstechende Rolle spielte. Viele große geschichtliche Ereignisse jener stürmenden Zeit werden als Wandelbilder vorgeführt. Darunter die Ermordung Lincolns mit solch ausbundeteller Deutlichkeit, daß man sie mit zu erleben meint. Die Schrecken und Verwüstungen des Krieges ziehen an den Augen der Zuschauer vorüber. Von ganz besonderem Interesse ist das heimliche Treiben des geheimen Geheimbundes der Ku Klux, der damals nach dem Krieg die meisten Südstaaten terrorisierte, den aber die gegenwärtige Generation kaum noch den Namen nach kennt und von der sie sich keine rechte Vorstellung mehr zu machen imstande ist. Durch diese Vorgänge einer aufgeregt wilden Zeit zieht sich, wie ein goldener Faden durch ein buntes Gewebe, eine anmutige und romantische Liebesgeschichte, die teils in nördlichen, teils in südlichen Staaten spielt und in der das große geschichtliche Drama des Bürgerkrieges einen imposanten Hintergrund bildet.

From STANDARD UNION
Address: Brooklyn, N. Y.
Date MAR 4 1915

AMUSEMENTS.

"The Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty Theatre, Manhattan—Notes.

The Birth of a Nation," a picture drama based upon Thomas Dixon's novel and play, "The Clansman," was shown on the screen for the first time last night at the Liberty Theatre, Manhattan. Judged by all photo dramas New York has given, this new film spectacle is the greatest and largest ever produced. Eight months were taken for its preparation, and in many capacities the services of 18,000 persons and 3,000 horses were required. The cost is said to have been $150,000. A capacity audience witnessed the first public showing of film play, and most of them must have taken with them the belief that this new production shows a decided advance in camera plays. Greater artistic values than ever before were demonstrated and a strengthening dramatic appeal was evident. The story begins with the bringing negro slaves to North America, its progress shows the influ which slavery had had upon the tory of this country. The ba fields of the Civil War, Sherm march to the sea, the burning o lanta, Lee's surrender, the murd Lincoln, the tragedy of the re struction period, the Kuklux and the establishment of peace historic scenes given in detail an naturally that this film is often gotten. Charming love stories interwoven and a special mu score has been composed by Jos Carl Briel and is played by an chestra of forty pieces.

KNICKERBOCKER PRESS
ALBANY, N. Y.
MAR 7 - 1915
CABLE ADDRESS
CLIPPING FROM Patriot
Date 3-14-15

D. W. Grimth's big special [illegible] production, "The Birth [illegible] based on the novel [illegible] and its first public showing [illegible] Liberty Theater, New York [illegible] the picture [illegible]

...ade of Clansmen Excites Cheers at "The Birth of a Nation"

...ost thrilling scenes ...derful D. W. Grif... ...o-spectacle, "The ...on" at the Liberty ... per...us charge of ... This ...eat scene has ... for ... restoration ... Broad...y, and as it ... upon the screen each ... spectators actually rise ... seats and burst into ... It is indeed some time ... audiences have been inspired and excited by a dramatic production to such a high pitch, but nevertheless it is a common occurrence at the Liberty.

"The Birth of a Nation" is interspersed with many exciting scenes and furnishes its spectators with a thrill that has long been absent from Broadway. Aside from this the story from which this remarkable photo-drama masterpiece is made has been declared to be the most vital document of its kind ever written. Thomas Dixon, whose novels, "The Clansman" and "The Leopard's Spots," have proven that he is a daring and fearless writer, has contributed the theme of this remarkable film production. The nucleus of the former novel has been utilized in its entirety with elaborations here and there to the advantage of the spectacle.

The remarkable story of "The Birth of a Nation" is one that commands your entire attention throughout its entire action and thrills you to the core. It is the greatest thing of its kind ever accomplished in "screen" productions, and aside from its dramatic qualities as an attraction, it is abundant with historical knowledge. Among other things it has proven beyond doubt that the world, or, rather, the metropolis, still loves the hero. No better corroboration could be asked than the tumult of cheers that greets the film actors in the famous Ku Klux Klan charge at each performance.

"The Birth of a Nation" is a film drama that is in every way a masterpiece. It is splendidly acted by a competent company, staged by D. W. Griffith, "The Belasco of the Movies," and its quality cannot be appreciated until seen.

IN BIG PHOTO PLAY SE...

Lillian Gish in "The Birt... Nation."

Moving Picture World Mar. 6-15

Production Versus Manufacture.

Samuel Goldfish Returns From West With Well Defined Impressions of Exhibiting Conditions—Comparative Importance of Feature Producer and Distributor.

SAMUEL GOLDFISH, who returned last Monday from an extended transcontinental tour and visit to the studios of the Lasky Feature Play Company in Hollywood, California, declares that he has been greatly impressed by the manner in which the moving picture industry is evidently approaching legitimate theatrical conditions. "Elaborate feature productions, based rather on successful plays or established works of fiction, are positively the order of the day from New York to the Pacific," said Mr. Goldfish when seen at his office. "The old-time authorities who predicted that the feature business would turn out to be only a fad must feel strangely now if they are correctly informed.

"Throughout my trip I was deeply impressed by the rapidity with which the moving picture business is apparently become more and more similar to the conditions of 'legitimate' theatrical management. After seeing Griffith's 'The Birth of a Nation,' which is founded on 'The Clansman,' I was forever convinced of one thing—that it is no longer the length, but the value of the picture which counts. The time has forever gone when people will want to see a picture just because it moves and because it is a certain number of thousand feet in length. The wise producer is the man who makes the picture precisely the length that the nature and force of the subject demand, just as the wise playwright does not gauge himself by the number of words his comedy or drama. This means that the picture industry is getting down to the elements of 'show business,' and that the ultimate aim must be to provide for audiences those things which are truly of most absorbing interest. During my trip I tried to analyze local exhibiting conditions in many cities and found them amazingly uniform. The time has come, or is fast coming, when the picture 'manufacturer,' who turns out so many reels or so many brands, must disappear from the scene, only the few genuine moving picture producers left. To 'manufacture' is one thing; to 'produce' in the sense of actually creating something worth while survives not because of any system, but because the public absolutely wants it, is entirely a different thing. It is, of course, the 'show business' all over again, the main issues at stake not money so much as Art.

"The needless loss of money in the moving picture business has been caused by the various supposedly efficient systems for disposing of the studio's output. When the picture business first came into existence the would-be investors, wishing to interest capital, assured the men who were to invest that the product could readily be disposed of at high prices on the States' rights system. This theory has now died a natural death. More recently the program idea has replaced the States' rights idea, and thousands of unsuspecting investors have been induced to risk capital for the making of mediocre subjects on the assurance that wonderful returns could positively be obtained through this or that program. Though the program idea is still comparatively young, many of the investors have lost their money through their belief in that theory and learned the sad lesson that the mere making of photographic images on one side of a celluloid film is not necessarily worth thousands of good, real dollars. The only program which can succeed is one which supplies the very best productions. It is the producer who makes the success of a program, because his offerings bring money to the managers of the theaters, and not the program which supports the producer.

"An article recently published in the Saturday Evening Post, the authorship of which is ascribed to a well known theatrical manager, is just the sort of article which has done much to mislead the public and bring into disrepute people who should never have involved themselves. This article dwelt upon the fabulous salaries paid to moving picture artists and directors and how a legitimate producer has received $150,000 for versions of his plays. One might almost infer from the article of being written with the intention of misguiding the misguided public into invest even more money. It is the shame of this business that the stock market is loaded down with hundreds of thousands of shares in so-called alleged motion picture concerns, at least a portion of which are absolutely unworthy of any serious consideration.

"There are only two essentials in a moving picture—the popular value and the artistic merit. The program system itself has proved that if a picture is truly great it will not be long unknown to a public which craves fine photodramas; if it is not good, there is no power on earth which can make it anything else than what it is. Therefore, as I have already said, the day of the real producer is dawning, for only he can face the competition of an art which is developing by leaps and bounds; only he can establish a program and triumph by genuine superiority while the mere mechanics of the business fall by the wayside.

"Considering all these things, it is evident that the theatrical experience of Mr. Jesse Lasky has been of inestimable advantage to our entire organization. He had the right experience, and he has known just how to use it. In the same manner, their long familiarity with theatrical producing has been infinitely valuable to Mr. Cecil B. De Mille and Mr. Wm. C. De Mille, in their respective capacities as producer and photodramatist.

"Our whole energy is now being bent, as ever, not on the manufacturing, but the producing of photodramas which shall positively set new standards and lead in the march of advancement."

Globe March 6, 1915.

THE BEST MOVING PICTURES

"BIRTH OF A NATION."

The opening of D. W. Griffith's photographic spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Liberty Theatre on Wednesday night proved the stirring event of the season. It looks as if this marvellous picture has settled down for the most memorable engagement ever devoted to this branch of art in the history of the New York stage. Much was expected of the picture, but none in the audience was prepared for such a revelation. The magnitude of the production, its bewildering detail, the dramatic possibilities it unfolded, and above all other things, the wonderful message of peace it conveyed were elements of the greatest surprise. The engagement at the Liberty Theatre is for two daily presentations, afternoon and evening, including Sundays.

Press March 7, 1915

LIBERTY.

The opening of D. W. Griffith's photographic spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," in the Liberty Theatre last Wednesday night proved an important event. The magnitude of the production, the dramatic possibilities it unfolded and the message of peace it conveyed were elements of the greatest surprise. The demonstration of war's futility and the trials and suffering inflicted by blind hatred, when passions are aroused in these mighty conflicts, carried an impelling lesson. The picture is shown twice daily, including Sundays.

Morning Telegraph

MARCH 7, 1915.

...ing high dives through the ice into the lake. Received a snapshot of Clara, and she looks like an Esquimau queen.

D. W. Griffith has an eye for beauty. Get a squint at Peggy Shannon, who receives the patrons of the Liberty Theatre and you will realize the truth of the statement.

From DISPATCH

Address: Pittsburgh, Pa.

Date MAR 6 -

"The Birth of a Nation," a large film presented in New York Wednesday night, is a history of the Civil War in picture. It required eight months to make it. It is said to be technically perfect, but the subject matter is at times objectively gruesome, being based on the Rev. Mr. Dixon's "The Clansman." It is plainly propaganda.

BILLBOARD

From

Address Cincinnati, Ohio

Date MAR - 6

PHOTO PLAYS.

LIBERTY—The opening ... Griffith's photographic spect... Birth of a Nation," on Wedne... proved one of the stirring e... season. It looks as if this ... picture has settled down fo... memorable engagement ever ... this branch of art in the hi... New York stage. Much was ... the picture, but none in t... was prepared for such a reve... magnitude of the producti... wildering detail, the drama... ties it unfolded and abov... things the wonderful messa... it conveyed were elements ... est surprise. The demonstr... futility and the tri... inflicted by blind hatre... are aroused in these ... carried the most impel... kind that has ever ... the theatre. The ... Liberty Theatre is ...

...entations, after... ...cluding Sundays.

PRINCESS—The ... the James Barin... the heart of ... "Through Centr... with matinees ... and Sundays. T... native and anima... much attention. ...

WEBER'S—T... ...ments in that ... Continent south... Sir Douglas Ma... markable motion ... animal life, are in... the general public ... interested the ge... when shown on his ... ous to beginning ... engagements in this ...

GRIFFITH MASTERPIEC

New York, Feb. 27.—On Wednesd... March 3, in the Liberty Theater, D. ... will present, for the first time in N... photographic spectacle, entitled "The ... a Nation. The story upon which ... based is Thomas Dixon's novel ... Clansman.

Mr. Griffith has been kno... foremost producer of motion ... His present production is ... will demonstrate the ... tistic values of the c... incomparable dramati... devoted eight months ... ployed the services ... bored to get the ... sco... is been writ... Jos... Earl Brig... played ... an ...

THE PRESS. SUNDAY, MARCH 7, 1915.

From VARIETY

Address: New York City

Date MAR 5 1915

BIG FEATURE SHOWING.

The biggest American made feature film to reach the screen commenced exhibiting at the Liberty Wednesday night. It is "The Birth of a Nation," produced by D. W. Griffith from the Thomas Dixon story of "The Clansman."

Another record that goes with the showing is the picture scale of prices, up to $2, the highest yet charged over here for what would be termed a "regular feature," though of extraordinary length and production.

The Liberty has had itself prepared for the film season. Ushers are in khaki uniform, to harmonize with the war scenes of the film. In the outer vestibule a couple of girls in Colonial dress salaam to each visitor or group.

A private view of the Griffith feature was given Monday afternoon in the theatre attended by a capacity crowd, on invitation.

The various standard feature makers in New York are curiously watching the outcome of the attempt to play a feature film in New York at the $2 scale.

"The Birth of a Nation" ("The Clansman") was made with D. W. Griffith in full charge of the production. Griffith started the big picture on the Coast last May. Exactly 120,000 feet of celluloid was reeled. At the Liberty 12,000 of this is shown, the cutting down being done slowly by Griffith himself.

Griffith, himself a Kentuckian, took unusual pride in the film, using the Thomas H. Dixon story only as a groundwork. From picture viewpoint the picture is: Griffith, 90 per cent.; Dixon, 10 per cent.

J. J. McCarthy, formerly of the George H. Brennan attractions (Brennan having made the road production of "The Clansman"), has been engaged to handle the bookings, with Theodore Mitchell devoting his attention to the publicity.

"The Clansman," about a year or so ago, was sold to the Kinemacolor Company, but several hitches resulted in Dixon taking back his title and story and later disposing of it to Griffith.

Herald - Mar. 7-15

$2 Movie and 10 Cent Dance Innovations in Theatre World

FOR years it has been the plaint of the legitimate theatrical producers that the motion picture has been their most serious and obstinate competitor. Overlooking the fact that hundreds of thousands every day, in every city, town and village, find diversion in motion pictures, the managers were inclined to attribute the popularity of the film drama chiefly to the low prices. They attributed the disappearance of gallery audiences to the higher prices the spoken drama demands.

But last week came two events completely changing the situation. In the Liberty Theatre the new motion picture spectacle, "Birth of a Nation," produced by D. W. Griffith, was presented at $2 prices for the best seats, and on the same day Miss Isadora Duncan announced that she has arranged to take the Century Theatre for four weeks, and that a thousand seats will be sold at prices between ten cents and fifty cents.

* * * * *

THE "new movement" in the drama, which is associated in the average playgoer's mind with painted walls depicting "night" or "morning" as the case may be, shredded curtains signifying forests, overhead lighting and no footlights, also is an economical movement. Some one has said that when Granville Barker moves his company from Wallack's Theatre and sends his productions on tour he will ship the scenery by parcel post.

Miss Duncan's stage decorations in the Century will be simplicity personified. She has used the draped gray curtains with satisfactory results in her several performances at the Metropolitan Opera House. She will restore the Elizabethan "apron" to the Century stage, which will extend some nineteen feet into the orchestra, and she will use overhead lighting effects, discarding the footlights. This innovation David Belasco and Mr. Barker this season have used in their productions. Coupled with her desire to reach the masses with her art, Miss Duncan pursues a practical business policy in charging ten cents for seats. She can afford to do it, because the cost of her production does not run into many thousands of dollars. And those who occupy the best seats in the house will pay something more than two dollars.

* * * * *

BUT what about the "new movement" in motion pictures, which provides a cinema film 12,000 feet in length in which thousands of actors take part? "Birth of a Nation" will be followed by other ambitious attempts by American producers along the same line. But, as in the case of the new attraction in the Liberty, the producers will be compelled, in order to obtain a return on their investment, to charge more than the ordinary motion picture prices and to compete strictly from a box office standpoint with the spoken drama. It is said that in the making of "Birth of a Nation" more than 250,000 feet of film was used. This was but one item of expense. For many consecutive days the railroad fares of the company amounted to $700 daily. The day has passed, apparently, when motion pictures can be made in a city studio.

* * * * *

THIS matter of the price of seats ever will be a constant source of reflection for managers and theatregoers. The HERALD several weeks ago told to what extent the practice of selling "cut rate" tickets has grown. Managers are divided over the question of the business ethics of the "cut rate" ticket. The fact remains, in the judgment of one experienced manager who never has permitted ticket "scalping," that the ultimate effect will be bad. It has taken years of effort to educate playgoers to the two dollar standard, he declares, and all this may be undone in a few seasons if the "cut rate" ticket continues in vogue as it has this season. It means nothing less, he says, than that the manager is selling something for one-half or three-quarters as much as he advertises, and the playgoer who once has tasted the glories of the "cut rate" ticket will be as averse to buying his seats at the higher standard as the theatrical "deadhead" to pay for his tickets at any price.

Henry Walthall, "The Birth of a Nation" Liberty

Mar. 5-15

THE ROCKLAND COUNTY LEADER

Published at Spring Valley, N. Y.

Liberty Theatre.

On Wednesday night in the Liberty Theatre, D. W. Griffith presented for the first time in New York a photographic spectacle entitled "The Birth of a Nation." The story upon which the work is based is Thomas Dixon's novel and play, "The Clansman." Mr. Griffith has been known, heretofore, as the foremost producer of motion picture successes in houses devoted to this style of entertainment. His present production is a step forward which will demonstrate the marvelous scope and artistic values of the cinema play as a work of incomparable dramatic appeal. There are no established standards by which his newest production can be gauged. The producer devoted eight months to its making. He employed the services of 18,000 people and 3,000 horses to get the needed effects. A complete score has been written for the presentation by Joseph Carl Briel. The accompaniment will be played by an orchestra of forty musicians.

ed, Rochester, NY
Mar. 7-1915

playing vaudeville we otion pictures at two of the topsy-turviness Dixon. "The Birth of a is D. W. Griffith's film Thomas Dixon's "The Clans-the record breaking "movie." doubt the most spectacular mo-ture yet produced, costing an un-le sum and calling on even the warriors—exploded at night to effects of camera lighting—th
"m-les de luxe." But pay a two

DISPATCH

Pittsburgh, Pa.

There is a rumor afloat that the Griffith production, "The Birth of the Nation," will be shown at all the Klaw & Erlanger houses after its run at the Liberty Theatre, New York. This is the picture that has been packing them in at prices ranging from $50 to $2.

David Robinson
N. Y. NEWS SERVICE
MAR 6 1915

The great [illegible] drama, "The Birth of a Nation," opened on Wednesday night at the Liberty Theater. It is a red-blooded tale of true American spirit, love and romance, mid historic scenes. It is a comedy which gives the thrill of adventure, full of throbbing heart interest and soul stirring emotion. It is a masterpiece of the most realistic and stupendous view of stirring events in the development of our [illegible] history, received, [illegible] and [illegible] America. This [illegible] founded on [illegible] novel, [illegible]

[illegible] Johnson an ng Telegraph Mar 7, 1915

S REACHED
FFITH FILM

f a Nation" Has an s Opening at the rty Theatre.

ION IS NOTEWORTHY

ole, Thrilling Documen ork of Art, the Pic e Is Unequalled.

heights of motion picture produc
n and presentation have been attained
D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Na on," which had its metropolitan pre ere at the Liberty Theatre on Wednes y night.

The atmosphere of the picture was care lly maintained in every detail. Miss ggy Shannon, in curls and hoop-skirt, rtesied gracefully to the playgoers as y filed in, and several other comely ldens attired in the fashion of the acted as ushers. Confederate and on soldiers stood on guard in the r of the theatre, and the orchestral choral accompaniments were in the n the melodies of fifty years ago.
othing so stupendous, so elaborate and thrilling has ever before been pro ed by an American director.

The Birth of a Nation" proves be d a doubt that a "Cabiria" and a "Quo dis?" can be made on this side of the er. Indeed many will maintain that, ddered solely as a motion picture, it the greatest thing the world has yet duced. Certainly it will silence for the scoffers who profess to believe the art of the silent drama is not as ring as that of the spoken play.
he ever necessary ent, and because duction it is almo to be.

the interest is the art of the a pity that it

Thrilling and Historical.

t the love story is the least important of "The Birth of a Nation." It is its spectacular features that the pic is superb and in its patriotism that thrilling historical and educational ning with the earliest importation of es, it shows this country in some of gravest throes of its evolution, skip g the period of history between Colonial s and the outbreak of the Civil War.
th the beginning of civil strife the grows thrilling almost beyond de tion. It reaches the highest spectacu point perhaps in Sherman's march to sea, and is absolutely gripping in the es showing the assassination of Presi Lincoln in Ford's Theatre, the in which, with its audience, is pictured.

re is divided into two parts of feet. Each is almost complete
As a spectacle, as a thrilling and as a work of art, it is un
It has strength where other mas were weak.

Birth of a Nation" gives the other of the story told in "Uncle Tom's n." It is right that the country should the conditions of the Construction
d. The scenes are horrible, of course.
facts which they depict were horrible.
Ku Klux Klan saved the South.

Not Attack on North or Negro.

has been said that D. W. Griffith as utherner has made his scenes stronger the facts. This is hardly true. It been said that the picture is an attack the North. This is foolish. He has ce ful to establish the fact that the y of a generous North was misused few men to gain power for them
s. He has been careful to show that responsibility does not rest upon the e race. Conditions were not of their ng. The black mob went wild as any will do. It is the mixing of historical and history that constitutes the most vulnerable point.

y of the most thrilling scenes are depicting the remarkable horseman of the Ku Klux Klan. One pictorial follows another in the second half of cture, and time and again the au broke into applause. Numerically, all and in general lavishness of effort Birth of a Nation" represents the momentous motion picture of it e flashback been used t as in the second part. N without trembling wit of those scenes. D. W ed himself the premie oducer of our land, if no d to Fine One.

s as follows:

meron, Henry Walthall; Mr
h, Miriam Cooper; Flora, M
Cameron, Josephine Crowel
Spottiswoode Aiken; Wa
Beringer; Duke Camero
Jimmy, Jennie Lee; Hot n; Ralph Lewis; Elsi hll, Elmer Clifton; Tod
Jeff, Wallace Reed; Lydi lden; Silas Lynch, George Walter Long; Abraham
Henabery; John Wilkes
Walsh; Gen. U. S. Grant,
Gen. Robert E. Lee, Howard a cast of such excellence ult assists to pick those the others go to Henry h, Lillian Gish, Miriam s and George Seigmann.

s was portrayed by with a make-up suff to be satisfying. Both General Robert E. Lee, ald Crisp and Howard won individual rounds of nance "The Birth of a rating the fact that a be shown profitably is worthy of all the Bliss it.

HENRY WALTHALL AND LILLIAN GISH IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" LIBERTY THEATRE

Henry Gishes & Miriam Cooper "The Birth of a Nation" Liberty

'Birth of a Nation' Sets a New Record

The opening of D. W. Griffith's photographic spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Liberty Theatre on Wednesday night proved one of the stirring events of the season. Much was expected of the picture, but none in the audience seemed prepared for such a revelation. The magnitude of the production, its bewildering detail, and the wonderful peace message were elements of great surprise.

The demonstration of war's futility and the trials and suffering inflicted by blind hatred when passions are aroused in these mighty conflicts carried an impelling lesson.

MAIL MAR. 6-1915

It was quite interesting to note the frank admissions on the part of practically all of the dramatic critics on the New York dailies that they could not properly judge "The Birth of a Nation" because they did not know films. It was something like a man trying to write up a baseball game who didn't know the rules or at least the names of the best players. The production of this great film and its presentation in the manner Mr. Griffith has done, gives to the amusement world a new, distinct concrete idea of the magnitude of film possibilities.

Of course, the way has been paved for this thought by "Quo Vadis," "Cabiria," "Neptune's Daughter" and other big films, but it took this offering and the manner in which it has been presented, to convince the theatrical world that here is a gigantic factor to be reckoned with, and I have a little hunch that some of the managing editors read the reviews of their dramatic men and realized for the first time that films are one thing and dramatic offerings another.

The inability of some of the critics to grasp the thought of handling the thousands of people, the artistic groupings of the characters, the "swing" of the action and the typical Griffith cut back and flash, was in a way rather amusing. The average film fan can follow those things undoubtedly better than most of the present-day dramatic critics, for the simple reason that the film fan knows the film possibilities through having studied them and the critic does not because he has seen very few films, and those probably badly chosen.

I am sure the film industry owes to Mr. Griffith much more than most of the film people realize for the manner in which he has produced this great film and furthermore, for the presentation of the production here in New York. Gradually the scoffers have been beginning to slip into the line of the supporters of films, but after this production as presented, no man of any claim to intelligence dare scoff at the films.

He may pick out bad ones. That is easy. In the same way anyone can go out and pick out bad dramatic companies, although it would be harder to find them to-day because the public refuse to pay for them any more since they can go to the films now instead and refuse to support any dramatic organization unless it is "worth while." Surely the films have arrived.

The producer of a film (by producer, I mean the man who actually directs the making of the production) either makes or breaks the effort. Yet the producer has never, to date, had the credit he deserves. This is especially true as far as the public is concerned. To the fans the producer has been an unknown quantity.

To my mind he is entitled to a large share of any glory there may be and the best way I know of to allow him to get that glory is to start a discussion as to who are the really great producers. And so here we have it. I'll grant that it is only a personal opinion, but I want to register right here the fact I have studied films for six years very carefully and I will say with confidence that I will not be contradicted, that within the past two years I have seen more films than any man in this country, looking at them from a critical, technical viewpoint. Yet at the same time approaching with a willingness to be "carried" by an emotional scene or spectacular effect.

I am "carried" when the bits of business are well handled and for that reason think I am a good audience. All right! Having presented that alibi as a reason for thinking I know something about who is making real films and having told any that don't know it that I am a film man first and a newspaper man second, I will proceed with my opinions:

I am naming the producers in the order in which I think they should be mentioned, considering what they have done. With each I have given what I consider their greatest film. I may be in error on some of the listings, and will say frankly that I am open to conviction, and if I am shown changes will be made before the next "rating" is given. There may be one or two producers I have overlooked; if so, they will get their just due later. I intend to keep this discussion alive, because I think it the livest issue in the production of films. There are more incompetents making films than there should be, and there are many real producers who have never been actually checked up and given their just dues. So here we are:

D. W. GRIFFITH,
"The Birth of a Nation."
HERBERT BRENON,
"Neptune's Daughter."
RALPH INCE,
"The Sins of the Mothers."
HUGH FORD and EDWIN PORTER
"The Eternal City."
MAURICE TOURNIER,
"Alias Jimmy Valentine."
MACK SENNETT,
"Tillie's Punctured Romance."
LOIS WEBER,
"Hypocrites."
FRED THOMPSON,
"The Goose Girl."
EDGAR LEWIS,
"Samson."
JOHN W. NOBLE,
"Satan Sanderson."
FRANK POWELL,
"A Fool There Was."
FRANK CRANE,
"Old Dutch."
COLIN CAMPBELL,
"The Spoilers."
HARRY DAVENPORT,
"The Island of Regeneration."
TOM INCE,
"The Battle of Gettysburg."
ALAN DWAN,
"David Harum."
HOBART BOSWORTH,
"The Sea Wolf."
OTIS TURNER,
"Damon and Pythias."
CECILLE DE MILLE and OSCAR AP
"The Girl of the Golden West."
JAMES YOUNG,
"My Official Wife."
J. SEARLE DAWLEY,
"Tess of the D'Urbervilles"
O. A. C. LUND,
"The Dollar Mar
TEFFT JOHNSON,
"The Locked Door."
HENRY FITZMAURICE,
"Stop Thief."
THOMAS HEFFRON,
"The Man from Mexico."
LIONEL BELMORE,
"The Silent Plea."
JAMES DURKIN,
"The Celebrated Scandal
JAMES KIRKWOOD,
"Behind the Scenes."
THE WHARTONS,
"Prince of India."
JACK PRATT,
"Shore Acres."

Kindly understand that while mentioned only one film for ducer, I have considered very other work done by each indi have tried to give my best jud ...st thirty producers in to-day.

In considering the first five n I will go a little into detail. fith is absolutely the peer to-d Several men are devoting v and the future may bri to-day he stands a "Neptune's Daug sensational succ "Kreutzer Sonat ity as a produc He does things in but so handles "puts them over shown some won and is improving it is only Mr. Br ...n that he

Porter
produ

From STAATSZEITUNG
Address: New York City.
Date MAR 7 1915

Wandelbilder.

D. W. Griffith's großartige Wandelbilderserie "The Birth of a Nation", nach Thomas Dixon's berühmter Erzählung "The Clansman", ist als Kolossal-Attraktion zweimal täglich mit vollem Symphonie-Orchester von 40 Mann im Liberty Theater zu sehen. 18,000 Personen und 3000 Pferde sind in dieser gigantischen Serie [illegible]

Establis

PRESS
From Address GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.
Date MAR 6 1915

One of the most gigantic motion picture productions made this season, "The Birth of a Nation," has just been presented in the Liberty theater, New York. It is a historical drama in two acts, founded upon Thomas Dixon's story, "The Clansman." W. D. Griffith, the producer, is said to have invested a fortune in the production and the re- ...that it is a greater film than "Quo Vadis" or "Cabiria."

Bee

SACRAMENTO CAL

MAR 20 1915

Thrilling Ku-Klux Pictures Are Twice as Biggest Offering of Season by New York Critic

Elaborate Production for Visualization of Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman" One of Greatest Efforts of Film Producer

By JAMES S. METCALFE,
Dramatic Editor Life, Bee's Special Correspondent.

NEW YORK, March 14.—This is where the movies score. From both the financial and dramatic point of view the most important amusement production, not only of the current week, but for weeks past, is a moving picture. It is not only playing in a regular theater usually devoted to regular theatrical attractions, but it is getting and getting regular theater prices, two dollars for orchestra seats and the other seats in theater seats and the other seats in the house on the same basis. That this house could be done by any moving pictures was denied by the theatrical managers, and the ticket speculators paid absolutely no attention to the new venture.

Now that the Liberty Theater is twice daily and Sundays holding bigger audiences than ever before in its history and with a big advance sale, the speculators are kicking themselves for their lack of foresight and trying to get even by selling the 55-cent gallery tickets to the scalpers at a dollar on the assumption that they are the best seats in the house, an assurance the more readily accepted, as no one in New York ever heard of moving pictures being shown at regular theater prices.

Biggest of the Movies.

This exceptional attraction is called "The Birth of a Nation," and is to some extent founded on Thomas Dixon's Ku Klux story, "The Clansman." A large part of its appeal to all kinds of people is due primarily to the tremendous events in comparatively recent American history with which it deals, and almost as much to the fact that it is produced by D. W. Griffiths, who has been in the moving picture business since its very beginning and who knows how to utilize every one of its resources to affect the public.

On a thread of primitive romance, not important to the experienced theatergoer, but dear to the heart of the movie fan, are strung tremendous battle scenes reproduced from the Civil War, a remarkable showing of Ford's Theater, with its audience and performance the evening Lincoln was assassinated, the assassination itself in vivid depiction and, most exciting of all, thrilling episodes during the period of negro domination in the Southern States, and its final wiping out by the mysterious Ku Klux Klan.

For real dramatic interest, and its drama is so intense that it brings the audiences to their feet as no theatrical play has in many, many years, we are given in absolute action the great story of the contest between races, with the whites fighting for the honor of their women and their very lives, ranged on the one side and on the other the negroes drunk with their new power and urged on by self-seeking politicians of the vilest sort.

Remarkable Set of Films.

More than eight months were consumed in preparatory work before the pictures were ready to show. Thousands of men, women and horses were employed, to say nothing of the costumes, weapons and ammunition that had to be provided. A special theater was built, its interior an exact reproduction of Ford's, in measurements, decorations and arrangement of the boxes, seats and stage. Right here it is proper to say that it must be a very hardened theatergoer and a very small American who does not feel a thrill when Abraham Lincoln enters his box and bows in kindly recognition of the audience that rises to greet him.

The battle scenes, pictured in clear mountain air, are wonders of photographic accomplishment entirely outside of their material bigness and their effective details of men engaged in what it is hard to believe is not the actual fighting of war.

Fidelity of Pictures.

There are some of us who are thoroughly familiar with the happenings of this time, some by personal knowledge and others by close contact with those who had participated in them. The more one knows the more one is impressed by the fidelity of the pictures to the things and people they represent and their historical accuracy.

Any one who was alive and of understanding and [illegible] at the time of Lincoln's assassination must feel as if he saw the scenes in Ford's Theater, one of the most memorable nights brought to light in these pictures, that is, if he knows the truth only exactly as it happened. South[illegible] who [illegible] upon the negro [illegible] sided over by a negro Lieutenant Governor, and its membership largely made up of ignorant field-hands, say that the pictures of episodes depicted are in no way exaggerated. The Ku Klux Klan is shown only in its picturesqueness and in its creditable accomplishments, so not so much can be claimed for accuracy in this respect, although the feature of course adds much to the effectiveness of the picture play and its dramatic interest.

Effect on Audiences.

It is a curious fact that, although the film runs continuously with an eight minute intermission, for practically three hours, which is longer than the acting time of a more than usually long drama, the audience does not for a moment lose interest and is in a condition of thrill during most of the performance. The great majority of the spectators leave the theater in a state of mental, emotional and physical languor. This is true of experienced playgoers and those who rarely see moving pictures quite as much as of the regular fans.

In the view of the theatergoers even the careful production has all the characteristic defects of the moving picture. Producers of picture-plays are strenuous in maintaining that their methods are correct and that a study of the moving-picture public has shown them that, when they try to approach the conventions of the theatrical stage their spectators lose interest in the story that is being unfolded.

Therefore they insist on the unnatural speed of the moving characters, upon the interruption in scenes, the quick alternation backward and forward of disconnected episodes and the apparent repetition of things that have been seen before. All these are in a way annoying to the regular theatergoer and, if he is not mistaken in his understanding of himself, diminish rather than enhance his interest.

Secret of Thing.

The secret of the whole thing probably lies in the fact that the largest part of the moving-picture public has been educated and developed by moving-pictures. It has not been taken from the theaters but has been created mostly by the pictures themselves. It compares the pictures it sees not with any other way of telling a story but only with pictures it has seen. Therefore the producers may be right in their viewpoint that they know what their public wants and that it would be a mistake to try to make their methods conform to the requirements of any other kind of intelligence.

The moving-picture producer to be successful must be a showman in the sense of studying the public and finding out what it wants. He must also be a photographic mechanician able to devise the mechanical photographic effects that the moving-picture audiences insist upon having. He must be, too, something of a psychologist to study and learn how to excite and to hold the attention of the human mind of average caliber. With all this equipment he is not a dramatist in the sense of the theater and his best and most startling accomplishments cannot continuously hold the attention of the playgoer whose intelligence cannot be conquered by the eye alone, even with the aid of his own imaginations and the sound supplied by an orchestra and a chorus of voices.

Confirms Interest.

These statements may seem to deny what has been said of the interest created by "The Birth of a Nation" even among playgoers. On the contrary it simply confirms the fact that this production is a wonderfully exceptional one because to all the ordinary attractions of the moving-picture it adds a new way of beholding and knowing great historical events in which we are all interested. Take them away or derive them from fiction and "The Birth of a Nation" would be simply the usual moving-picture better done than usual and therefore attractive to the moving-picture public.

Take away the artificial romance and the movie tricks for holding interest and this film play would still interest the intelligent American, although it would perhaps and probably not be very highly regarded by the movie fan. However, "The Birth of a Nation" seems to have been produced by a genius to interest all classes and conditions of Americans. The proof of which is shown by its [illegible] business in which there is [illegible] off until [illegible] weeks.

London, 1881; "Ne[illegible]

[illegible] four-[illegible] four from [illegible] six from [illegible] Switzerland, three [illegible] twenty-six [illegible] the starring Euro[illegible] two from the Balkan [illegible] from Australia, four [illegible] from China and Jap[illegible] from South American [illegible] from South Africa, one [illegible] one from Egypt, but [illegible] has not, however, [illegible] in New York. [illegible] Osborne, the noted at[illegible] for the National [illegible] for the Advancement of [illegible] who persist in [illegible] to have changes [illegible] The organization [illegible] two big scenes of the [illegible] of which a negr[illegible] a girl over a cliff and [illegible] mulatto politician tri[illegible] on the daughter [illegible]

The association [illegible] have been m[illegible] have not been [illegible] comes up in [illegible] women, Mrs. [illegible] leading so[illegible] Willis Ovington, au[illegible] Leslie Jones, suf[illegible] will be asked to give [illegible] the points at issue. [illegible] is quoted as saying [illegible] with the protesting [illegible]

[illegible] legal battle is expected [illegible] D. W. Griffith, who [illegible] is represented by [illegible] Martin W. Lit[illegible] the giants of the New [illegible]

Th[illegible] gr[illegible] th[illegible]

[illegible] of D. W. Griffith's photo[illegible] "The Birth of a Na[illegible] Liberty Theatre on [illegible] night proved an event of [illegible]

The engagement at the [illegible] is for two daily pres[illegible] afternoon and evening, in[illegible] days.

[illegible] ago, w[illegible] pany, [illegible] Dixo[illegible] and [illegible]

NE[illegible]

Date_____

Established: London

Herald, Mar. 7-15

"Talking about press agents have you observed the masterful way in which Theodore Mitchel has handled the publicity end of "The Birth of a Nation," the great photoplay sensation at the Liberty?

At the Liberty, the other evening, two men passed the Union and Confederate soldiers that are stationed in the lobby to give color to "The Birth of a Nation." One said: "Why don't that fellow wear a union suit?" "And why don't he show his union card," said the other.

American, Mar 7-15

BULLETIN
San Francisco, Cal.

7 7 1915

"CLANSMAN" FILM IS ALCAZAR MAGNET

ONE of the most remarkable features of D. W. Griffith's spectacular film drama, "The Clansman," or "The Birth of the Nation," now running at the Alcazar Theater, is the naturalness of the action on the part of the players.

Instead of the exaggerated, false melodramatic acting that appears in the average motion picture production, the players in "The Clansman," go through with their parts with such natural movements that they appear to be real living characters.

Henry Walthall, who has the role of the "Little Colonel," became sick and was confined to his bed for several weeks. During Walthall's illness the entire production stopped, but all members of the company, including extras, were retained on the payroll, at an added cost of $1000, in order that the same faces would be seen in the subsequent scenes.

TABLE ADDRESS CLIPPING FROM Times
Denver, Colo.
Date 3-10-15

"What's in Harvest be?

"The Clansman" is showing in the Liberty Theater, New York, to $2 prices, and it is said that the various feature makers are curiously watching the outcome. The name of the film has been changed to "The Birth of the Nation." Two thousand were turned away on the opening night.

LILLIAN GISH IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" AT THE LIBERTY

"BIRTH OF A NATION" AT THE LIBERTY

The opening of D. W. Griffith's photographic spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Liberty Theatre on Wednesday night, proved the striking event of the season. It looks as if this marvellous picture had settled down for the most memorable engagement ever devoted to this branch of art in the history of the New York stage. Much was expected of the picture, but none in the audience was prepared for such a revelation.

The magnitude of the production, its bewildering detail, the dramatic possibilities it unfolded, and above all other things, the wonderful message of peace it conveyed were elements of the greatest surprise.

The leading event of last week in motion pictures, the presentation at regular theatre prices of the film "The Birth of a Nation" in the Liberty Theatre, continues to be the subject of discussion among film men and picture enthusiasts. The Liberty Theatre probably will continue to be a motion picture playhouse, with "The Birth of a Nation" as the attraction for many weeks.

• • •

From COMMERCIAL TRIBUNE
Address: Cincinnati, O.
Date MAR

To operatic stars playing [illegible] we must now add motion pi[illegible] $3 as evidence of the topsy-[illegible] of this strange season. "Th[illegible] of a Nation," which is D. W. Griffith's filmization of Thomas [illegible] "The Clansman," is the recordbreaking movie. Without doubt the most spectacular motion picture yet produced, costing an unbelievable and calling on even the [illegible] wartime—exploding at night [illegible] weird effects of camera light[illegible] show is certainly "movies [illegible] But how long will even Broadway [illegible] a two-dollar top price for p[illegible]

Sun, Mar. 7-15

THE WORLD ON THE SCREEN

Among the popular picture entertainments now on view to be recommended are "The Birth of a Nation," the wonderful series of views showing the picture version of Thomas Dixon's novel "The Clansman," which ranks with the best of the foreign picture plays ever brought over here, Sir Douglas Mawson's views and accounts of his adventures in the Antarctic regions which are shown at Weber's Theatre.

James Barnes's views of life in the African bush, which he travelled four thousand miles to take with his camera.

The Vitagraph Theatre continues to supply most excellent picture plays that are interesting as well as thrilling and amusing as well.

[illegible] Johnson

Birth of a Nation' a Wonderful Spectacle

Liberty Theatre on ... evening a new ... in the motion ... Its herald was "The Nation."

Griffith presented it. It ... as a historical ... two acts, founded on ... ter when he defined great motion pictures as "Painting in drama."

Those who knew that the young and greatest producer of motion pictures had produced in picture form the Browning poem drama, "Pippa Passes" and "The Plot on the Scutcheon" expected to find poetry in the spectacle of "The Birth of a Nation." And they found

Mae Marsh and Henry Walthall, at the Liberty Theatre, in "The Birth of a Nation."

Thomas Dixon's novel and subsequent play, "The Clansman," but "The Birth of a Nation" is so much more than the original form that in the final output "The Clansman" is a small island surrounded by the very large "Birth of a Nation."

"The Birth of a Nation" is an epochal production because it is the largest motion picture drama ever presented. Its 13,058 feet filled three hours with entertainment, save for the eight minutes' intermission, yet no one showed the slightest sign of weariness. It cost a half a million dollars. It required 18,000 actors. It was eight months in the making.

The claim that motion pictures would always be a cheap and inferior form of entertainment was slain by the mammoth and beautiful production. "It is grand opera in picture form," said one person passing out of the Liberty Theatre. David W. Griffith had said it better, not only poetry, but pathos and sublimity and a surpassing tenderness. These, combined with the tremendous power that massed and marshalled and manoeuvred 18,000 persons in breathlessly swift action have placed D. W. Griffith among the geniuses of the stage.

The spirit and atmosphere of the old South are beautifully preserved. The fidelity of the pictures of President Lincoln in the White House and in his box at Ford's Theatre, when he was assassinated, was so great as to move a large part of the audience to tears. These effects bespoke the most careful research. Eighteen of the best authorities were consulted to secure that fidelity in all the pictures in which President Lincoln appeared. Even the detail that President Lincoln changed his position somewhat in the box and drew a cape over his shoulders to withstand the cold was gleaned from authority on the point of the weather in Washington at the hour of the fatal day. Even to the sigh with which General Lee stifled his grief at the surrender, there is an amazing attention to detail.

The heroes of history were greeted with the same applause as though their flesh and blood embodiments appeared. Lincoln, bowed of shoulder, lean and sunken of face, his clothes loosely fitting him; Stanton, stout and peppery; Charles Sumner, venerable and with the vision of the humanitarian; General Grant, with his directness and his inevitable big cigar; J. Wilkes Booth, handsome and frenzied, were admirably impersonated. The Griffith pioneer art of taking the pictures "close up," so that the characters are of life size, was triumphantly exemplified. The curtain of the years fell back, and those in front felt that they were in the breathing presence of the heroes of that troubled time.

The love scenes and home pictures were done with sentiment and sympathy. But probably what will be regarded as the greatest merit of the stupendous work is that in which great masses of men were marshalled in terrific battle scenes. The scenes of the fighting about Petersburg, in Virginia, were powerfully realistic. The rush of a company of the Ku Klux Klan to the defense of a town held the audience breathless.

Drama and pathos mingled in scenes on the battlefield. The "Little Colonel" ... hose in his charge to gi... drink of water to a wounded ... soldier, whereupon he was ... by the Union men, themselves, before resuming the hatch... killing. Tender, too, was the ... side by side of a Union and a Confederate soldier who had been ... in life.

Through the ... and bewildering splendor of the pictures runs the story, strong, human and well sustained. The treatment of "The Birth of a Nation" is unsectional and unpartisan.

"What shall we do now?" a Confederate is made to exclaim at the news of the assassination of Lincoln. "We have lost our best friend."

The burning of Atlanta, Sherman's March to the Sea through the beautiful valleys of Georgia, the bonfires by night at Piedmont were spectacles deserving the spontaneous applause they received. The great battle scenes were the first ever taken at night. Patented illuminators were scattered over an area of two miles to secure these pictures.

Henry Walthall and Lillian Gish, at the Liberty Theatre, in "The Birth of a Nation."

At his own headquarters Director Griffith availed himself of an appliance that might have turned the tide at Waterloo. He gave his orders to his company by telephone. But that is one of the least of the reasons why he is being called "The Napoleon of the Moving Pictures."

ELSIE JANIS NOW QUEEN OF MOVIES

MISS ELSIE JANIS will be ... for the first time on ... screen to-morrow afternoon at the Rialto Theatre, ... motion picture, "The ... Kitty," is to be shown. "Miss ... not only takes the leading ... is also the writer of the ... She devised and carried out the ... structure of the photo-play ... tically no assistance. The ... is that of a capricious young ... search of romance—just the ... type Miss Janis liked to play ... musical stage. The company ... acted the play before the camera ... includes Courtenay Foote, Hal ... Standing, Miss Vera Lewis, ... Myrtle Stedman and Miss Mae ... Maddox. At the Strand will be ... seen a new Keystone comedy, a ... ical review, and some scenic and ... entific pictures.

At the Vitagraph Theatre the ... ing attraction will be "The ... naut," written by Donald L. ... and Ralph W. Ince, telling a ... modern business life. Shorter ... are "Mr. Jarr Brings Home a Turk," a comedy by Roy L. McCardell, "Postponed," "The Battle of Fr... man's Run," a comic picture sho... a burlesque dual, and "The Gen... tion of the Major," a love story.

The title of the chief attra... the first part of the week at ... Broadway Theatre is "Rule G." ... has to do with the regulations ... ing liquor from the employees of ... certain railroad. "Broadway Curr... Events," a scenic view, and a ... picture will also be shown.

Another week of the motion ... tures showing Sir Douglas Mawson's travels in the antarctic regions ... begin to-morrow at Weber's Th... Sir Douglas lectures on "Battling ... Death in the Antarctic Blizz... and uses the films to illustrate ... talk.

James Barnes's African pic... continue at the Princess Theatre.

At the Liberty Theatre "The ... of a Nation," which delighted a ... audience at its opening Wedn... night, has begun what promises to ... a long run.

Hitchcock pictures are sho... every hour at the Eden Muse... the reduction in prices has increa... the attendance.

Eve. Telegram Mar. 7-15

D. W. Griffith's photographic spec... "The Birth of a Nation," at the Lib... Theatre, is one of the notable events ... the season. It looks as if this marvel... picture has settled down for a long ... gagement. The demonstration of war's ... tility and the trials and suffering infli... by blind hatred when passions are aro... in these mighty conflicts carries the ... impelling lesson of the kind that ha... been encountered in the theatre.

MAIL, MAR. 6-15

Eve. World Mar. 6-15

WORTH-WHILE FEATURE FILMS

RECOMMENDED BY "WID."

D. W. Griffith's Production of "THE BIRTH OF A NATION." Special Offering.

As a whole	Tremendous
Story	Gripping
Photography	The last word
Light effects	Superb
Camera Work	Supreme
Star	Henry Walthall
Support	Excellent
Detail	Perfect
Exteriors	America's Greatest
Interiors	Splendid
Direction	Supreme
Length	Twelve Reels

Truly has this offering marked a new epoch in the production of films in America. Technically this is not a greater film than "Cabiria," although it is to be classed with it. For an American audience the appeal is much greater. From the technical viewpoint I think "Cabiria" showed more wonderful spectacular effects in many ways, and was a greater production, but for appeal nothing has ever been offered to the American public, be it film spoken drama or spectacle, that can approach this great work in the "swing" of its powerful "pull" or the almost uncanny reproductions of historic scenes. The greatness of the film is in its spectacular points and these historic reproductions, yet the drama is so clearly defined and carefully presented that it grips and grips hard. Naturally the master producer of the films has been the first man in this country who has ever been able to instill enough confidence in the films to get the necessary money to go out and work on such a really gigantic undertaking. It was, to film folk, rather amusing to see and hear the theatrical folk and the first nighters fairly gasp as they saw these thousands handled before their eyes with movements that convinced because of the atmosphere, and an action that swirled you along with it because of the flashes and cutbacks. A producer can make or break any production by his cutting and assembling after he has taken all his scenes, and since, in this case, Mr. Griffith took over one hundred thousand feet of negative to get the twelve thousand feet utilized one can readily realize what the cutting and assembling means. For that part, I feel that there is still room for some improvement. In a few places the flashes were three or four feet too short, and in the second part, the story of "The Clansman," the dramatic action is held a bit too long before the spectacular is swung into it again. I also want to complain against the use of the camera in front of the speeding "Ku Klux Klan," when the camera is moving rapidly before them. It absolutely kills the illusion. When they sweep down upon you as the camera stands stationary the effect is tremendous, but the minute you flash from that to a view of the men riding at breakneck speed and apparently not gaining upon you, it hits you slap in the face, and even the layman stops for a second and then says to himself, "Oh, they have the camera in a fast auto," and the illusion is gone. The presence of the camera is felt. Mr. Griffith's greatest work was in the realistic detail of the assassination of Lincoln, the other historic reproductions, the marvelous battle scenes, day and night, and in the tactful manner in which he handled the big "punch" of the play, the attack on the white girl. The first six reels are absolutely superb. The second six are wonderful, but in the drama there is here and there a weak moment. It seems that a better assembling in certain parts might help these points. Henry Walthall as the Little Colonel was superb, and Ralph Lewis as the northern leader, and George Siegman as the mulatto lieutenant-governor, were very fine. The girls did not carry their scenes as well as the men. The allegorical scenes at the close of the film I did not care for. I do not like an anti-climax. When a great film is finished allow your audience to applaud. They were all ready to even cheer at the finish, when on came the allegorical scenes and hushed them, with the result that at the finale half of the house was standing putting on their wraps and there was only a ripple of applause instead of the spontaneous outburst that would have come otherwise. But remember, excepting "Cabiria," on the technical, it is the greatest film production ever made, and it is the greatest production, film or theatrical, ever made in America.

MAE MARSH & HENRY WALTHALL IN THE BIRTH OF A NATION, LIBERTY

"BIRTH OF A NATION" REVEALS GOOD ACTING.

Now that D. W. Griffith's wonderful picture drama "The Birth of a Nation" has settled down for a run at the Liberty Theatre there is one detail of the performance which, it can be authoritatively stated, will be continued without any danger of a lapse from the rigid rules of stage direction. One emphatic statement Mr. Griffith makes is that the players in this big story will hold strictly to the text and not deviate one iota from the actions and business, and there will be no guying or fooling with the audience. Of course the fact that their first characterizations and business have been indelibly registered upon the film makes it possible for Mr. Griffith to make this positive declaration. It has been the custom in long runs for actors to tire of their parts and seek relaxation in friendly taking and razzing, but in "The Birth of a Nation" there will be nothing like this. Audiences will ... with a sense of delight, ... there have been ... fell below the cri...

News and Views

By FREDERICK JAMES SMITH

received the en... accorded ... W.

INTERNATIONAL FILMS

"Birth of a Nation" Liberty Theatre Event

On Wednesday night, at the Liberty Theatre, D. W. Griffith presented for the first time in New York a photographic spectacle entitled the "Birth of a Nation." The story upon which the work is based is Thomas Dixon's novel and play, "The Clansman."

Mr. Griffith has been known heretofore as the foremost producer of motion picture successes in houses devoted to this style of entertainment. His present production is a step forward which will demonstrate the marvelous scope and artistic values of the camera play as a work of dramatic appeal. There are no established standards by which his newest production can be gauged. The producer devoted eight months to its making and employed 18,000 people and 3,000 horses to get the needed effects. A music score has been written by Joseph Briel. The accompaniment will be played by an orchestra of forty musicians.

The story begins in the seventeenth century with the coming of African slaves to North America. Its further progress is closely related to varied phases of the slavery question and its bearing upon the history of the United States. In the wake of the abolition movement comes the Civil War, with its terrific battles and the toll of death and broken hearts; Sherman's march to the sea; the burning of Atlanta; the downfall of Petersburg; Lee's surrender to Grant at Appomattox; the assassination of Abraham Lincoln; the ordeal of the reconstruction period; the Ku Klux Klan's part in the problem, and the establishment of peace in the end.

Record Mar. 24, 1915
Moving Picture World

From CALL
Address: New York City
Date MAR 7 - 1915

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" HAS MANY SCENES PORTRAYED UPON THE LARGEST PLAN EVER CONCEIVED AND EXECUTED IN MOVIES.

Est

In the Liberty Theater, D. W. Griffith is presenting for the first time in New York a photographic spectacle entitled "The Birth of a Nation." The story upon which the work is based is Thomas Dixon's novel and play, "The Clansman."

Griffith has been known heretofore as the foremost producer of motion picture successes in houses devoted to this style of entertainment. There are no established standards by which his newest production can be gauged. The producer devoted eight months to its making. He employed the services of 18,000 people and 3,000 horses to get the needed effects. A complete score has been written for the presentation by Joseph Carl Briel. The accompaniment is being played by an orchestra of forty musicians.

The story begins in the seventeenth century with the coming of African slaves to North America. Its further progress is closely related to varied phases of the slavery question and its bearing upon the history of the United States. In the wake of the abolition movement comes the Civil War, with its terrific battles and the toll of death and broken hearts; Sherman's march to the sea; the burning of Atlanta; the downfall of Petersburg; Lee's surrender to Grant at Appomattox; the assassination of Abraham Lincoln; the ordeal of the Reconstruction period; the Ku-Klux; the establishment of peace. These scenes are all portrayed upon the largest plan ever conceived and executed by any artist in the world.

From SUN
Address: Baltimore, Md.
Date MAR 7 - 1915

18,000 PEOPLE IN FILM OF FIRST $2 "MOVIE"

Miles Of Trenches Dug For War Scenes And Real Cannon Fired In "Birth Of A Nation."

1884

THE realism of war was carried to such an extent in the making of David W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" that a regularly organized hospital corps of surgeons and nurses accompanied the "troops." This photoplay, based on Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," was presented at Liberty Theatre New York, last Wednesday night at regular theatre prices—the first movie-play ever stages at $2 per seat.

In making it 18,000 men and 3,000 horses were engaged in a march of over 50 miles of rough country representing the scenes of the Battle of Petersburg, the Appomattox campaign, and (in reconstruction days) the North and South Carolina raids of the clansmen. Camps had to be pitched nightly, commissariat supplied and wells dug. Trenches extended for miles.

Cannon were loaded not with pyrotechnic powder, but with actual shells. Each shell cost $80, so a round of artillery fire was expensive.

The "war" was directed, as modern war is directed, by field telephone. "General Griffith's headquarters was in a high tower overlooking the scene of action. A network of telephones connected him with his 50 subdirectors in various parts of the field. It took three-quarters of a day "to set" each scene. The placing of the troops was a complicated matter that had to be all worked out to suit the camera requirements, say, for six or eight hours previous to the film taking. The completed picture of 12,000 feet of Civil War and other historical film cost the producers several hundred thousand dollars, and those who have seen the show are not surprised at the great expense incurred.

"The Birth of a Nation' is the most pretentious moving picture ever attempted. As finally assembled it runs 13,500 feet in length, or over a thousand feet longer than "Cabiria," up to this time the most pretentious moving-picture ever made.

CONCORD (N. H.) MONITOR
MARCH 16, 1915

The G. W. Griffith feature motion picture, "The Birth of a Nation," was shown in New York at prices up to $2.00 and it did business in one week to the amount of $14,000.

Bulletin San Francisco
mar 17, 1915 cal

From NORTH AMERICAN
Address: Philadelphia, Pa.
Date MAR 7 - 1915

Something heretofore never attempted on so great a scale in motion pictures was the production recently at the Liberty Theater of D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation." The story is based on Thomas Dixon's novel and play, "The Clansman." According to all reports, this film spectacle is the greatest and largest ever produced. At any rate, it took eight months to prepare, and the services in one capacity or another of some 18,000 persons and 3000 horses were required to obtain the needed effect. The story begins in the seventeenth century with the bringing of African slaves to North America. Its further progress is closely related to varied phases of slavery and its bearing upon the history of the United States. In the wake of the abolition movement comes the civil war, with its battles and the toll of death and broken hearts; Sherman's march to the sea, the burning of Atlanta, the downfall of Petersburg, Lee's surrender to Grant at Appomattox, the assassination of Abraham Lincoln, the ordeal of the reconstruction period, the Klu-Klux Klan, the establishment of everlasting peace in the end. The accompaniment was played by an orchestra of forty pieces.—New York Sun.

From "THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

...ment, "The Birth ... a pictorial sur... story of Ku-Klux ... a love story based on ... "The Clansman."

... with the well ... and realism, are ... After seeing it ... enough to pre... novels of the ... in pictures rather ... it cost to produce

...ANCISCO (Cal.) CALL & POST
MARCH 21, 1915

...MAN' FILM
...AY 5TH WEEK

...twelve reel motion ... "The Clansman," now is in ... at the Alcazar The... afternoon ... of the North ... Piedmont, N. C. ... Washington"; ago, ... and Elsie are pany ... Dix... and ... to fiction ... of the South of ... the Civil War, and ... Griffith mingles spec... the hand of a ... always on the ... impression that ... on admiration ... reconstruction ... the Ku Klux ... will continue ... the Alcazar ... Monday

Date

Established:

CHICAGO (Ill.) HERALD
MARCH 17, 1915

SEEN on the ... by Carc...

"Birth of Nation" New Star In Crown of D. W. Griffith

NOT only David W. Griffith but the whole film world has scored in the presentation of "The Birth of a Nation," taken from "The Clansman," Thomas Dixon's novel and play.

The play scored because experienced theatrical men scoffed at the idea that any movie could ever do business at $2 a seat. "The Birth of a Nation" is running at the Liberty Theater and drawing capacity houses.

Every one, including those who belong within the inner film circle and those who do not, has expected that Griffith, called the Belasco of motion pictures, would be the first man to bring the photoplay up to the stage standard.

It took eight months of hard work to produce this masterpiece. It cost $500,000, it is said. In that time 18,000 men, women and children and 3,000 horses were used in the production.

Griffith shows that slaves before the war were well housed and fed and kindly treated. The South's trials during the reconstruction period and the Kuklux Klan are brought into the story with interesting detail.

The production is spectacular and splendid and carries the suspense that Griffith gives to all his masterpieces.

Lincoln is shown signing the first call for volunteers. The surrender of Lee to Grant at Appomattox and Lincoln's assassination are all given in an impressive manner.

The acting, the photography and all are said to be even finer than in "Cabiria," up to now considered the acme of film excellence.

Both Mr. Dixon and Mr. Griffith responded to (I almost said curtain calls) screen calls and gave short impromptu speeches.

Mr. Dixon said he considered Mr. Griffith's screen version of "The Clansman" to be "better than either the book or the play." Mr. Griffith thanked the audience for their appreciation and thus the first night of the ... movie went on as merrily as ... stage ball.

From NEW YORK REVIEW
Address: New York City
Date MAR 7 1915

„The Birth of a Nation."

Im Liberty-Teater, an derselben Stelle, an der vor neun Jahren die dramatische Version des berühmten Thomas Dixon'schen Romans „The Clansman" sich vergeblich durchzusetzen suchte, wird jetzt unter dem Titel „Birth of a Nation" ein Filmdrama gewaltigem Erfolge gezeigt, das dem Inhalt desselben Dixon'schen Romans von D. W. Griffith aufgebaut ist, aber in weit auffallenderer Weise die Sklaven-Emancipation, den Kampf zwischen Süden und Norden und die Verschmelzung beider zu einer gewaltigen Nation, der amerikanischen, behandelt. Das abendfüllende Lichtspieldrama bringt Szenen von ungeahnter Grösse ... Establish

Eve. Telegram, Mar 9-15

Moving Pictures.

At the Liberty Theatre "The Birth of a Nation," one of the greatest film dramas ever presented, has caught the breathless attention of big audiences.

From EVENING SUN
Address: New York City
Date MAR 8 1915

The Griffith masterpiece, the photoplay spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," is doing the biggest business that has ever been known at the Liberty Theatre. This is true in spite of the fact that this playhouse has housed several strong attractions in the past.

Globe, Mar. 8-1915

"BIRTH OF A NATION."

The opening of D. W. Griffith's photographic spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Liberty Theatre on Wednesday night proved the stirring event of the season. It looks as if this marvellous picture has settled down for the most memorable engagement ever devoted to this branch of art in the history of the New York stage. Much was expected of the picture, but none in the audience was prepared for such a revelation. The magnitude of the production, its bewildering detail, the dramatic possibilities it unfolded, and above all other things, the wonderful message of peace it conveyed were elements of the greatest surprise. The engagement at the Liberty Theatre is for two daily presentations, afternoon and evening, including Sundays.

STANDARD UNION
Address: Brooklyn, N. Y.
MAR 7 - 1915

Manhattan Theatres

LIBERTY, MANHATTAN.—The great photographic spectacle, called "The Birth of a Nation," has made a great hit at the Liberty Theatre, Manhattan, being declared by all who have seen it to be the greatest and grandest thing ever thrown on a screen in Greater New York. Although on less than a week it is already being exhibited to capacity audiences. The play is based upon Thomas Dixon's novel "The Clansman," and 18,000 people as well as 3,000 horses were required to secure some of the desired effects.

Evening Post, Mar. 6-15

WOULD STOP "BIRTH OF A NATION" FILM

ADVANCEMENT ASSOCIATION FEARS DISTURBANCES.

Spectacle Portrays Conditions that Are a Libel on Their Race, Negroes Complain — Contend that Moving Picture of Civil War, Reconstruction and Ku Klux Klan Days Misrepresents Colored People — Fear May Cause Disorder.

Campaign for the suppression of a motion-picture spectacle, "The Nation," the drama of Civil War reconstruction, and Ku Klux Klan days in the South, based upon Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," which opens at the Liberty Theatre on Wednesday night, has been undertaken by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Evidence that the film is causing among the negroes of the city it is feared may grow into disorders if the film continues to be shown, is the basis of the Association's action. Officials explained to-day at headquarters, 70 Fifth Avenue, that complaints had been coming to them that action be taken to stop it, and that the protests arise from resentment against the character of the negro in the story and the representation of the violence of the Ku Klux Klan. If their opposition is successful, these officers say, the results.

Negroes feel that the story of the play is a libel upon their race, in that it represents the negro as a brutal and ignorant brute, and treacherous crimh... the officials of the Association. Their position is backed by the National Board of Censorship, which has repeated consid... present fo... Southe... hav... an...

A weakness of the National Board of Censorship of moving pictures is clearly brought out by the production in this city, despite its disapproval, of the film play which is based on Thomas Dixon's notorious novel, "The Clansman." A considerable portion of this film play is contrary to good morals, if not a direct incitement to crime. It is a deliberate effort to arouse racial prejudice and to injure a large class of our citizens. Fortunately, 80 per cent. of the moving picture houses are glad to abide by the decision of the National Board; but the managers of this enterprise place dollars above all else, and so are continuing to produce the play. "The Clansman," it will be remembered, was ordered out of a number of theatres, notably in Philadelphia by order of the Mayor, when produced in its dramatized form. An effort in the City of Brotherly Love to enjoin the Mayor from preventing its production resulted in failure, the courts upholding him. It seems, therefore, a gratuitous outrage that this same play in another form should be allowed in New York. Apparently there is no provision of law to cover it, since it is not indecent. But some step must be taken promptly to extend the law so as to empower the Police Commissioner or the courts to control a revolting performance of this kind.

Globe, Mar. 8-15

No photoplay ever received the enthusiastic critical notices accorded "The Birth of a Nation." The D. W. Griffith film spectacle "went over" with a bang.

German Revue
Mar. 7-15

Grant und Lee bei Appomatox in „The Birth of a Nation", (Liberty-Theater.)

Brooklyn Eagle Mar. 7-15

Speaking of motion pictures, it seems to us that publishers of school books, especially histories, have as much to fear from the "movies" as dramatic producers. The educational possibilities of such films as "The Birth of a Nation," particularly those scenes showing incidents of the Civil War, with the assassination of Lincoln, are practically unlimited. They make history live. There is every reason to believe that D. W. Griffith, the producer, could make George Washington mean more to the youth of the land than a legend and a steel engraving.

It is unfortunate that Mr. Griffith's new art should suffer, as it does in this work, by having such a sensational and unwholesome appeal as that in "The Clansman," upon which the film is founded.

Eve. Post, Mar. 9-15

D. W. Griffith's remarkable series of pictures, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Liberty Theatre are shown twice every day, and bid fair to have a long run.

Morn. Telegraph, Mar. 9-15

THE GREATEST SENSATION.

Words Aptly Applied to "The Birth of a Nation" at Liberty Theatre.

A sensation of sensations is "The Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty Theatre. This phenomenal film production by D. W. Griffith is at once educational, prodigal and thrilling.

There has never been produced in this country anything that has even remotely resembled this extraordinary spectacular offering.

From STANDARD UNION
Address: Brooklyn, N. Y.
Date MAR 8 1915

"The Birth of a Nation," the new picture spectacle at the Liberty, Manhattan, is attracting widespread attention.

Times, Mar. 7-15

Thomas Dixon's novel "The Clansman" forms the basis of "The Birth of a Nation," a feature film projected in the Liberty Theatre last week. The picture traces African slavery from the arrival of the first slaves through the civil war period. It includes many fine views from the standpoint of photography, those showing the nocturnal gatherings of the Ku-Klux Klan being unusually effective.

Mail, Mar. 8-15

THE FILMS AND FILM FOLK

by "WID"

I understand Mr. Griffith has made some changes in the "Birth of a Nation," assembling since the opening night, which he feels, with the proper projection, makes the film much better. The projection was certainly too fast in many places on the opening night, but that point was understood and taken into consideration by most of those present. On the opening night I made a little bet the film would run over four months at the Liberty and I can see myself smoking those cigars now.

Gov...

Eve. Press, Mar. 9-15

Motion Pictures.

A railroad drama in five parts, "Mals G" is being shown in the Liberty Theatre, in addition to other pictures. The programme changed on Thursday.

"Birth of a Nation" is in its second week in the Liberty Theatre, where it continues to please large audiences.

News and Views

By FREDERICK JAMES SMITH.

No photoplay ever received the enthusiastic critical notices accorded "The Birth of a Nation." The D. W. Griffith film spectacle "went over" with a bang.

INTERNATIONAL FILMS

"Birth of a Nation" Liberty Theatre Event

On Wednesday night, at the Liberty Theatre, D. W. Griffith presented for the first time in New York a photographic spectacle entitled the "Birth of a Nation." The story upon which the work is based is Thomas Dixon's novel and play, "The Clansman."

Mr. Griffith has been known heretofore as the foremost producer of motion picture successes in houses devoted to this style of entertainment. His present production is a step forward which will demonstrate the marvelous scope and artistic values of the camera play as a work of dramatic appeal. There are no established standards by which his newest production can be gauged. The producer devoted eight months to its making and employed 18,000 people and 3,000 horses to get the needed effects. A music score has been written by Joseph Briel. The accompaniment will be played by an orchestra of forty musicians.

The story begins in the seventeenth century with the coming of African slaves to North America. Its further progress is closely related to varied phases of the slavery question and its bearing upon the history of the United States. In the wake of the abolition movement comes the Civil War, with its terrific battles and the toll of death and broken hearts; Sherman's march to the sea; the burning of Atlanta; the downfall of Petersburg; Lee's surrender to Grant at Appomattox; the assassination of Abraham Lincoln; the ordeal of the reconstruction period; the Ku Klux Klan's part in the problem, and the establishment of peace in the end.

Recd. Mar. 24, 1915
White Plains, N.Y.

From CALL
Address: New York City
Date MAR 7 - 1915

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" HAS MANY SCENES PORTRAYED UPON THE LARGEST PLAN EVER CONCEIVED AND EXECUTED IN MOVIES.

Est

In the Liberty Theater, D. W. Griffith is presenting for the first time in New York a photographic spectacle entitled "The Birth of a Nation." The story upon which the work is based is Thomas Dixon's novel and play, "The Clansman."

Griffith has been known heretofore as the foremost producer of motion picture successes in houses devoted to this style of entertainment. There are no established standards by which his newest production can be gauged. The producer devoted eight months to its making. He employed the services of 18,000 people and 3,000 horses to get the needed effects. A complete score has been written for the presentation by Joseph Carl Briel. The accompaniment is being played by an orchestra of forty musicians.

The story begins in the seventeenth century with the coming of African slaves to North America. Its further progress is closely related to varied phases of the slavery question and its bearing upon the history of the United States. In the wake of the abolition movement comes the Civil War, with its terrific battles and the toll of death and broken hearts; Sherman's march to the sea; the burning of Atlanta; the downfall of Petersburg; Lee's surrender to Grant at Appomattox; the assassination of Abraham Lincoln; the ordeal of the Reconstruction period; the Ku-Klux; the establishment of peace. These scenes are all portrayed upon the largest plan ever conceived and executed by any artist in the world.

CONCORD (N. H.) MONITOR
MARCH 16, 1915

The G. W. Griffith feature motion picture, "The Birth of a Nation," was shown in New York at prices up to $2.00 and it did business in one week to the amount of $14,000.

Bulletin. San Francisco
mar 17, 1915 cal

From SUN
Address: Baltimore, Md.
Date MAR 7 - 1915

18,000 PEOPLE IN FILM OF FIRST $2 "MOVIE"

Miles Of Trenches Dug For War Scenes And Real Cannon Fired In "Birth Of A Nation."

1884

THE realism of war was carried to such an extent in the making of David W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" that a regularly organized hospital corps of surgeons and nurses accompanied the "troops." This photoplay, based on Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," was presented at Liberty Theatre New York, last Wednesday night at regular theatre prices—the first movie-play ever stages at $2 per seat.

In making it 18,000 men and 3,000 horses were engaged in a march of over 50 miles of rough country representing the scenes of the Battle of Petersburg, the Appomattox campaign, and (in reconstruction days) the North and South Carolina raids of the clansmen. Camps had to be pitched nightly, commissariat supplied and wells dug. Trenches extended for miles.

Cannon were loaded not with pyrotechnic powder, but with actual shells. Each shell cost $80, so a round of artillery fire was expensive.

The "war" was directed, as modern war is directed, by field telephone. "General Griffith's headquarters was in a high tower overlooking the scene of action. A network of telephones connected him with his 50 subdirectors in various parts of the field. It took three-quarters of a day "to set" each scene. The placing of the troops was a complicated matter that had to be all worked out to suit the camera requirements, say, for six or eight hours previous to the film taking. The completed picture of 12,000 feet of Civil War and other historical film cost the producers several hundred thousand dollars, and those who have seen the show are not surprised at the great expense incurred.

"The Birth of a Nation" is the most pretentious moving picture ever attempted. As finally assembled it runs 13,500 feet in length, or over a thousand feet longer than "Cabiria," up to this time the most pretentious moving-picture ever made.

From NORTH AMERICAN
Address: Philadelphia, Pa.
Date MAR 7 - 1915

Something heretofore never attempted on so great a scale in motion pictures was the production recently at the Liberty Theater of D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation." The story is based on Thomas Dixon's novel and play, "The Clansman." According to all reports, this film spectacle is the greatest and largest ever produced. At any rate, it took eight months to prepare, and the services in one capacity or another of some 18,000 persons and 3000 horses were required to obtain the needed effect. The story begins in the seventeenth century with the bringing of African slaves to North America. Its further progress is closely related to varied phases of slavery and its bearing upon the history of the United States. In the wake of the abolition movement comes the civil war, with its battles and the toll of death and broken hearts; Sherman's march to the sea, the burning of Atlanta, the downfall of Petersburg, Lee's surrender to Grant at Appomattox, the assassination of Abraham Lincoln, the ordeal of the reconstruction period, the Ku-Klux Klan, the establishment of everlasting peace in the end. The accompaniment was played by an orchestra of forty pieces.—New York Sun.

From REVIEW
Address: New York City
Date MAR 7 1915

Establish

„The Birth of a Nation."

Im Liberty-Teater, an derselben Stelle, an der vor neun Jahren die dramatische Version des berühmten Thomas Dixon'schen Romans „The Clansman" sich vergeblich durchzusetzen versuchte, wird jetzt unter dem Titel „The Birth of a Nation" ein Filmdrama gewaltigem Erfolge gezeigt, das dem Inhalt desselben Dixon'schen Romans von D. W. Griffith aufgebaut ist, aber in weit auffallenderer Weise die Sklaven-Emancipation, den Kampf zwischen Süden und Norden und die Verschmelzung beider zu einer gewaltigen Nation, der amerikanischen, behandelt. Das abendfüllende Lichtspieldrama bringt Szenerie an ungeahnter Großartigkeit und [illegible]

FROM "THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

CHICAGO (Ill.) HERALD
MARCH 17, 1915

SEEN on the by Cara

"Birth of Nation" New Star in Crown of D. W. Griffith

NOT only David W. Griffith but the whole film world has scored in the presentation of "The Birth of a Nation," taken from "The Clansman," Thomas Dixon's novel and play.

The play scored because experienced theatrical men scoffed at the idea that any movie could ever do business at $2 a seat. "The Birth of a Nation" is running at the Liberty Theater and drawing capacity houses.

Every one, including those who belong within the inner film circle and those who do not, has expected that Griffith, called the Belasco of motion pictures, would be the first man to bring the photoplay up to the stage standard.

It took eight months of hard work to produce this masterpiece. It cost $500,000, it is said. In that time 18,000 men, women and children and 3,000 horses were used in the production.

Griffith shows that slaves before the war were well housed and fed and kindly treated. The South's trials during the reconstruction period and the Kuklux Klan are brought into the story with interesting detail.

The production is spectacular and splendid and carries the suspense that Griffith gives to all his masterpieces.

Lincoln is shown signing the first call for volunteers. The surrender of Lee to Grant at Appomattox and Lincoln's assassination are all given in an impressive manner.

The acting, the photography and all are said to be even finer than in "Cabiria," up to now considered the acme of film excellence.

Both Mr. Dixon and Mr. Griffith responded to (I almost said curtain calls) screen calls and gave short impromptu speeches.

Mr. Dixon said he considered Mr. Griffith's screen version of "The Clansman" to be vbetter than either the book or the play." Mr. Griffith thanked the audience for their appreciation and thus the first night of the first movie went on as merrily as a stage hit.

SAN FRANCISCO (Cal.) CALL & POST
MARCH 21, 1915

"SMAN" FILM
STAY 5TH WEEK

Griffith's twelve reel motion
"The Clansman," now is in at the Alcazar The-afternoon the North
Piedmont, N. C.
Austin ago, pany
Dix and

Date

Established:

Tele. Telegram, Mar 9-15

Moving Pictures.

AT the Liberty Theatre "The Birth of a Nation," one of the greatest film dramas ever presented, has caught the breathless attention of big audiences.

From EVENING SUN
Address: New York City
Date MAR 8 1915

The Griffith masterpiece, the photoplay spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," is doing the biggest business that has ever been known at the Liberty Theatre. This is true in spite of the fact that this playhouse has housed several strong attractions in the past.

Globe, Mar. 8-1915

"BIRTH OF A NATION."

The opening of D. W. Griffith's photographic spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Liberty Theatre on Wednesday night proved the stirring event of the season. It looks as if this marvellous picture has settled down for the most memorable engagement ever devoted to this branch of art in the history of the New York stage. Much was expected of the picture, but none in the audience was prepared for such a revelation. The magnitude of the production, its bewildering detail, the dramatic possibilities it unfolded, and above all other things, the wonderful message of peace it conveyed were elements of the greatest surprise. The engagement at the Liberty Theatre is for two daily presentations, afternoon and evening, including Sundays.

From STANDARD UNION
Address: Brooklyn, N. Y.
Date MAR 7 - 1915

Manhattan Theatres

LIBERTY, MANHATTAN.—The great photographic spectacle, called "The Birth of a Nation," has made a great hit at the Liberty Theatre, Manhattan, being declared by all who have seen it to be the greatest and grandest thing ever thrown on a screen in Greater New York. Although on less than a week it is already being exhibited to capacity audiences. The play is based upon Thomas Dixon's novel "The Clansman," and 18,000 people as well as 3,000 horses were required to secure some of the desired effects.

Evening Post, Mar. 6-15

WOULD STOP "BIRTH OF A NATION" FILM

ADVANCEMENT ASSOCIATION FEARS DISTURBANCES.

Spectacle Portrays Conditions that Are a Libel on Their Race, Negroes Complain — Contend that Moving Picture of Civil War, Reconstruction and Ku Klux Klan Days Misrepresents Colored People — Fear May Cause Disorder.

Campaign for the suppression of a motion-picture spectacle, "The Nation," the drama of Civil War production, and Ku Klux Klan days, based upon Thomas Dixon's novel, "The Clansman," which opens at Liberty Theatre on Wednesday night, has been undertaken by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. Evidence that the film is causing among the negroes of the city it is feared may grow into disturbances if the film continues to be shown, is the basis of the Association. Officials explained to-day at headquarters, 70 Fifth Avenue, that they had been coming to them that action be taken to stop it, and that the protests arise from resentment against the character of the negro in the story of the nation of the violence of the Ku Klux Klan. If their opposition is successful, these officers say, the negroes feel that the stage play is a libel upon their race, that it represents the negro as a brutal and ignorant brute and treacherous criminal. The officials of the Association position is backed by the National Board, which has repeated consideration present for the South. ... have ... contended ... Percy ... it ...

... afternoon, ... National Board reversed their sub-committee ... The portions objected to ... in which a negro ... a white girl until she ... herself by leaping from ... scene in which a mulatto ... a forced marriage with ... through his political influence ... franchise, seized her and ... from the room, and a scene in ... were shown drinking in a ... representative of the Association ... to Arthur Woods, Police Commissioner, and he called the matter ... of Chief Magistrate McAdoo ... warned the owners against the ... of the film and called a hearing ... Wednesday noon. Deputy Commissioner Dunham and Inspector Harris, at this hearing, expressed ... of the Police Department that ... might cause rioting. Ephraim ... Deputy Commissioner of Licenses ... also approached on the question ... whether the film could be stopped under the law on decency.

At the Magistrate's hearing, the attorney for the owners said that changes had been made in the film, to meet objections, and requested that the police and Association officials see it in its new form and consider whether it was now acceptable. This was agreed upon, and no move was made to prevent the performances.

The film as changed, however, did not meet the approval of the association of the officials of the National Board of Censorship who attended the performance. The play, "The Clansman," caused trouble when it was ... Philadelphia; and was stopped by the courts as a menace to public peace, inciting to riot. That there is ... such performances is maintained by the Association also, on the ground that ... presenting "Uncle Tom's Cabin" ... South recently, it has been ... the name be changed to ...

Eve. Post, Mar. 9-15

A weakness of the National Board of Censorship of moving pictures is clearly brought out by the production in this city, despite its disapproval, of the film play which is based on Thomas Dixon's noxious novel, "The Clansman." A considerable portion of this film play is contrary to good morals, if not a direct incitement to crime. It is a deliberate effort to arouse racial prejudice and to injure a large class of our citizens. Fortunately, 80 per cent. of the moving-picture houses are glad to abide by the decision of the National Board; but the managers of this enterprise place dollars above all else, and so are continuing to produce the play. "The Clansman," it will be remembered, was ordered out of a number of theatres, notably in Philadelphia by order of the Mayor, when produced in its dramatized form. An effort in the City of Brotherly Love to enjoin the Mayor from preventing its production resulted in failure, the courts upholding him. It seems, therefore, a gratuitous outrage that this same play in another form should be allowed in New York. Apparently there is no provision of law to cover it, since it is not indecent. But some step must be taken promptly to extend the law so as to empower the Police Commissioner or the courts to control a revolting performance of this kind.

Globe, Mar. 8-15

No photoplay ever received the enthusiastic critical notices accorded "The Birth of a Nation." The D. W. Griffith film spectacle "went over" with a bang.

German Revue
Mar. 7-15

Grant und Lee bei Appomatox in „The Birth of a Nation", (Liberty-Theater.)

Eve. Post, Mar. 9-15

D. W. Griffith's remarkable series of pictures, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Liberty Theatre are shown twice every day, and bid fair to have a long run.

Morn. Telegraph, Mar. 9-15

THE GREATEST SENSATION.

Words Aptly Applied to "The Birth of a Nation" at Liberty Theatre.

A sensation of sensations is "The Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty Theatre. This phenomenal film production by D. W. Griffith is at once educational, prodigal and thrilling.

There has never been produced in this country anything that has even remotely resembled this extraordinary spectacular offering.

From STANDARD UNION
Address: Brooklyn, N. Y.
Date MAR 8 1915

"The Birth of a Nation," the new picture spectacle at the Liberty, Manhattan, is attracting widespread attention.

Times, Mar. 7-15

Thomas Dixon's novel "The Clansman" forms the basis of "The Birth of a Nation," a feature film projected in the Liberty Theatre last week. The picture traces African slavery from the arrival of the first slaves through the civil war period. It includes many fine views from the standpoint of photography, those showing the nocturnal gatherings of the Ku-Klux Klan being unusually effective.

Mail, Mar. 8-15

THE FILMS AND FILM FOLK

by "WID"

I understand Mr. Griffith has made some changes in the "Birth of a Nation," assembling since the opening night, which he feels, with the proper projection, makes the film much better. The projection was certainly too fast in many places on the opening night, but that point was understood and taken into consideration by most of those present. On the opening night I made a little bet the film would run over four months at the Liberty and I can see myself smoking those cigars now.

Brooklyn Eagle, Mar. 7-15

News and Views

By FREDERICK JAMES SMITH.

No photoplay ever received the enthusiastic critical notices accorded "The Birth of a Nation." The D. W. Griffith film spectacle "went over" with a bang.

Speaking of motion pictures, it seems to us that publishers of school books, especially histories, have as much to fear from the "movies" as dramatic producers. The educational possibilities of such films as "The Birth of a Nation," particularly those scenes showing incidents of the Civil War, with the assassination of Lincoln, are practically unlimited. They make history live. There is every reason to believe that D. W. Griffith, the producer, could make George Washington mean more to the youth of the land than a legend and a steel engraving.

It is unfortunate that Mr. Griffith's new art should suffer, as it does in this work, by having such a sensational and unwholesome appeal as that in "The Clansman," upon which the film is founded.

Eve. Post, Mar. 9-15

Motion Pictures.

A railroad drama in five parts, "Nails O" is being shown in the Liberty Theatre, in addition to other pictures. The programme changed on Thursday. "Birth of a Nation" is in its second week in the Liberty Theatre, where it continues to please large audiences.

THE Ku-Klux Klan plays a large part in the story of "The Birth of a Nation." Its operations and its means of working out its ends are shown with wonderful brilliancy in the film that is being shown at the Liberty Theatre.

THE poverty that played such a prominent part in the affairs of the South immediately after the war is brought out in a wonderful way in "The Birth of a Nation," now being shown at the Liberty Theatre. The sensational interest that these pictures have caused has been epoch-making.

VARIETY
New York City
MAR 12 1915

"The Birth of a Nation" (Liberty) (2nd Week). First picture to be presented at a $2 top scale. Opened very strong last week. The box seats were to have been the only $2 seats in the house, but the sale was so big the wonderful send off the picture got in the papers the greater part of the lower floor was scaled at $2 for the night performances.

SUN-MAR. 10-15

...ON THE SCREEN.

...ment at the Vitagraph ... Notes of the Films.

... "The Juggernaut," a dra... feature film that is showing ... the Vitagraph Theatre, is ... motion pictures that ... house. There are four ... making ...

... Griffith's production of "The ... of a Nation" at the Liberty Th... ... proved a large drawing ca... ... of the stirring events of the ... war is now beginning its second ...

STAR, MAR. 10-15

THAT $100,000 DIRECTOR

D. W. GRIFFITH,
who is said to be the highest-salaried stage director in the world, and who is responsible for the production of "The Birth of a Nation," now running at the Liberty Theatre, New York.

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" AND "THE BELASCO OF MOVING PICTURES"

THE last objection of the last foe of motion pictures will die, never to be resurrected, if that last foe will see "The Birth of a Nation."

For three hours it holds enthralled its audiences. It makes appeal to the highest brow and the warmest heart. It stimulates thought. It stirs emotion to its most unaccustomed depths. The first half reaches the heights of sublimity, and strikes the chords of beauty. The second is magnificence of mechanics, a torrent of breathless action. Throughout all flows streamlike the motif of a story that never disappears nor can be forgotten. "The Birth of a Nation" is a marvel of coherence and execution. By this, his greatest work, David W. Griffith has proven his generalship in handling masses of men and women, has written himself in our memories as a genius. There is no one to deny him the title of the David Belasco of moving pictures.

The admiration and curiosity of his first audience, at the private view on Monday, drew him before the curtain. It saw a tall, well-favored man of athlete resemblance, manifestly unprepared for the demand for sight of him, simple and direct in his utterances.

"I thank you," he said. "The approval of such an audience—I know everybody says that, but it is an extraordinary audience—means more to me than I can tell you."

Emotion, quickly restrained, testified to his sincerity. With a boyish "I'm not here to talk" he disappeared.

He won his title of "The Belasco of the moving pictures" by the poetry in his nature, the attention to details, the tender touches that reach the deepest humanity in us. Yet is a tremendous virility manifest in his handling of the largest numbers of 12,000 persons before a camera. By his work in massing armies he has disclosed himself as a Napoleon of the screen, a Napoleon far whom we hope no Waterloo awaits.

Yes, I'm a fan for good moving pictures. Also am ...

Lube, MAR 11-15

... Birth of a Nation" has ... the astounding record of ex... ... grudged compliments ... managers. The suc... ... ads about as welcome ... managers of the "legit" as ... man submarine in the English ... But this one has had the ... effect of compelling admira... ... on all sides. Actors, managers, ... can be heard all over the ... bursting into spasms of en... ... An attraction that can even ... treasurers into leaving their ... in order to see it has got ... something quite extraordinary.

...ld, Elmira N.Y. Mar. 6-15

... performance of "The Birth ... Nation," was given at the Liberty ... Monday afternoon, and if mo... ... pictures have a right to intrude ... dramatic reviews, certainly this is ... It was, indeed, the most studen... ... and brilliant motion picture of ... production that has been seen. ... built around the several books ... Dixon, notably "The Clans... ... first part had been ... afternoon ... that ... such vividness the play began to ... on interest. Indeed, the battle ... in the first part were excellent, ... was the development of the pro... ... of the Ku Klux Klan and its ... night rides that had the audience ... out of their seats most of the ...

... may well believe that 3,000 per... were engaged in its preparation. ... thing so stupendous has been seen ... the screen save "Cabiria," and as ... derful as was that picture, it did ... hold the historical interest to ... Americans as the present offering, ... which represents vividly the assassina... ... of Lincoln and other historical ... including the famous surren... ... of Lee to Grant.

There may be the same criticism ... ics involved that was thrown ... "The Clansman" was ... ... aside from that ...

VIRGINIAN PILOT
Address NORFOLK, VA.
Date MAR 7 1915

NEW YORK THEATRICAL GO...
Reviewed by DAVID ROBINSON

New York, March 6.—Under the title of "The Peasant Girl," a new three-act operetta was introduced on Monday at the Forty-fourth Street theatre. Part of the music of this novelty was written by Oskar Nadbal, the Bohemian composer. Part was due to the invention of his brother-Bohemian, Rudolf Friml. One of the big features of the performance was the gypsy ballet, which fairly dazed one by its glitter and mad movement.

The photo drama "The Birth of a Nation" opened on Wednesday night at the Liberty theatre. It is a red-blooded tale of true American spirit, love and romance, mid historic scenes. This photo drama is founded on Thomas Dixon's novel and play, includes 18,000 people, 3,000 horses, took eight months in making, and cost $500,000.

"Fads and Fancies" has reached New ward Knoblauch's ... knowledged masterpiece ... in which Francis Starr ... the Belasco theatre. ... well as many other crit... call one of the greatest ... American dramatic liter... Lauch is considered the ... of American playwright... into his work more lite... perhaps any other Ame... the stage at the pres...

"The Adventure of L... presented on Monday ... Elliott's theatre with ... Terry and Montague L... treated here by Virginia ... Sothern when first the ... at the Lyceum in 1898. ... In this age of ...

RECORD
From Address
Date MAR 6 - 1915

Establi...

AMUSEMENTS

Another Double Bill at Nesbitt

Beginning to-day, for three days the Nesbitt offers another double bill of more than ordinary interest. Daniel Frohman presents John Emerson in "The Bachelor's Romance," a beautiful love story made famous by Sol Smith Russell in his palmy days. It tells how a young girl finds her way to the old bachelor's heart despite his attempts to have her marry some one near her own age, and it abounds in clean, wholesome humor that is delicious. All the beauties of the scenic surroundings which go much to make the Paramount Pictures so effective are used in the production.

"Judith of Bethuliah," a Biograph four-reeler, is shown in connection with the above and in itself is a picture that has won the greatest praise all over the United States. D. W. Griffith, the producer, is considered the greatest man in the business in handling big subjects and just now is presenting in New York his great motion play "The Birth of a Nation" to crowded houses. "Judith" deals with biblical times and the tragedy thousands of people engaged in war scenes that are ... in the city in which ... and surrounding ...

Attractive [illegible] for [illegible] Managers' Prophecies Contrary—New Marvel of [illegible] Moving Picture Screens.

By Louis V. De Foe.

THE unexpected popularity already received by three plays written for the purpose of reflecting to the theatre some of the excitement and dangers—and the scene of the romance—of the war in Europe is only another evidence that the rule of "no rule" is always present to follow when dramatic producers are attempting to gauge in advance the probable tastes of their public.

In the early months of the season, in fact until only a few weeks ago, an impression prevailed in the Broadway offices that the horrors of the conflict as described daily in the press reports would dispel all interest in plays which sought to make the war a topic for dramatic entertainment. It was even believed that war plays at this time would incur positive resentment. The ill-success of "Wars of the World," the best of the Hippodrome spectacles, went far to substantiate this theory.

As usual, the prophets in the theatrical profession were wrong. There have been large audiences nightly for both "The White Feather" and "Inside the Lines," which promise now to remain in their respective theatres until the season ends, and the third of the group, Marion Craig Wentworth's "War Brides," artistically far the superior of the others, has proved to be the most successful playlet that vaudeville has ever offered. It even marks Mme. Nazimova's regeneration as an emotional actress—her abilities having latterly been wasted entirely on theatrical claptrap.

Reference has not been made on this page heretofore to Earl Derr Biggers's war play, "Inside the Lines." The fact that its probabilities are violently strained does not weigh seriously against it, since it is avowedly a melodrama. It is only necessary that its exaggerations appeal to the imagination of its audiences, and in this respect it reasonably succeeds.

* * *

Having demonstrated in "Seven Keys to Baldpate," which George M. Cohan dramatized, that audiences will tolerate being deceived until the last curtain as to the motives and character of the hero of a play, Mr. Biggers adopted the same expedient in his new war melodrama. There is every reason to believe that Capt. Woodhouse is a German spy plotting to explode the mines in the harbor at Gibraltar until the belated moment comes when he is disclosed to be a loyal Englishman engaged in an effort to capture other spies whose loyalty the audience has not suspected.

The expedient does not increase the interest of the play. It demonstrates, rather, that the old rule of admitting audiences into the secrets of a character's motives, secrets in which the other characters in the play do not share, is generally the safest one. Not one person in ten probably goes to the Longacre Theatre without a general knowledge of the story of "Inside the Lines," and upon them the element of surprise is lost.

Unlike the British Secret Service officer in "The White Feather," Capt. Woodhouse, in "Inside the Lines," does not develop into a man of action until the moment the play's climax is reached. Until then he has been a passive character, and melodrama demands of its heroes that they be up and doing.

There are, however, other qualities that are strongly in favor of Mr. Biggers's play. It also proves that mimic war is not now repugnant to taste in the theatre.

No phase of warfare in melodrama appeals so strongly to imagination and romance as the stealthy exploits of spies. William Gillette was well aware of their dramatic possibilities when he wrote "Secret Service," which held its audiences in greater suspense than Bronson Howard created by any of the graphic episodes of "Shenandoah."

Of plays inspired by the struggle between the allies and the Germans both on land and sea there is destined soon to be a nauseating oversupply. But the war must be studied in perspective before a really big play on its subject is written. It is significant that years elapsed before the true spirit of our Civil War was expressed in terms of drama.

* * *

"The Birth of a Nation" is not too extravagant in its pretensions when at the Liberty Theatre it enters boldly into competition with the spoken drama. This production on the screen by D. W. Griffith is the most ambitious and successful attempt yet made in this country to visualize a novel in motion pictures. The absence of the spoken word makes the photographic play infinitely preferable to the dramatic version of "The Clansman," produced on the same stage about ten years ago, since in the pictures there is everything to delight the eye and nothing to offend the ear.

How great are the possibilities of this new art—Mr. Griffith has brought his production well within the field of art—is shown by his success not only in picturing scenes which are extended over great areas, but also in reproducing historical incidents. The battle scenes of the Civil War which are depicted are thrillingly life-like and such episodes as the assassination of President Lincoln at Ford's Theatre in Washington have graphic value and impressiveness that cannot be underestimated.

The difficulties of the regular stage manager seem dwarfed by the perplexities which Mr. Griffith met and solved in making his battle pictures. His stage must have covered several square miles in area and his actors numbered into the thousands. It is said that he directed their movements from his position beside the camera by a system of telephones extending to every part of the field. However true this may be, he contrived to secure just the right effect of spontaneous action among the great units of men under his command.

One fault to be found with this picture spectacle is that it is reeled off too rapidly. The lightning speed at which horses and men move in the battle scenes is somewhat destructive to illusion. If there is too much of "The Birth of the Nation" to be crowded into the time allotted for its exhibition, the repellent episode of the attack upon a young white girl by a negro could be cut out, with the result of greatly benefiting the whole.

As for the novel of "The Clansman," its selection by Mr. Griffith as a Brooklyn Times- Mar. 14-15

NEWS OF THE THEATRES

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION," which was given its first public presentation at the Liberty Theatre, in Manhattan, last night, must be conceded to be the most pretentious photo-drama ever shown in this city, and its production surely registered a long step forward and upward in the development of the moving picture. The work is also the first of its class to be altogether American. The theme is slavery, and the plot is that of the novel, "The Clansman," by Thomas Dixon, jr., which stirred such vigorous discussion a few years ago.

An idea of the magnitude of the thing may be gathered from the statement of D. W. Griffith that two years time and 18,000 actors were required for the photographing of the scenes. There are twelve reels of film used, in two sections. Thomas Dixon, the author, in a brief address before the screen last night, gave all the credit for the production to Mr. Griffith, and the latter, when compelled to satisfy calls from the spectators, expressed pleasure at the reception given the work, and advocated the freeing of motion photography from narrow censorship.

The first part of the drama shows the beginning of the Civil War, with a [illegible] scene, in which regiments of infantry clash, and cavalry charge, wheel [illegible] charge again, through the lurid smoke. President Lincoln is shown later [illegible] Cabinet, in Washington, and then there comes the tragedy at Ford's Theatre, for which a duplicate of the playhouse was built, in order that every detail might be accurate.

Street scenes in the town [illegible] Piedmont, in the days of the Ku Klux Klan were introduced in the second part of the drama, and there were thrills a-plenty there. Mob scenes of [illegible] proportions were shown as the plot swept through the dark days of Reconstruction, and finally out of the chaos came order and justice triumphant.

[illegible] Hopeful of [illegible] Lid Without [illegible] of the Miner Lithograph Co.—Shakespeare's Tri-Centenary of 1916.

By RENNOLD WOLF.

IN the way of a decidedly new departure Ned Wayburn, for years identified with musical plays, is to enter the field of the so-called legitimate by producing on his own account a farce devoid of chorus and dancing numbers.

The piece is based upon Paul Gavault's French play, "Ma Tante d'Honfleur." The present version, called "My Aunt," is the work of Sydney Blow and Douglas Hoare, and was produced at the Vaudeville Theatre, London. Three companies are still presenting the piece in the English provinces.

Rehearsals of "My Aunt" will begin on March 22, and the out-of-town premiere will take place on April 15. The cast is now being engaged.

In Arnold Daly's Company.

Two members of the cast were engaged yesterday by Arnold Daly for his revival of "You Never Can Tell" at the Garrick Theatre. Anne Sutherland is to act the role of Mrs. Clandon and George Giddens will be seen as William, the waiter.

They Forget Their Hats.

One of the several phenomena connected with the enormous success of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty Theatre is the desertion of hats by patrons. Since the opening performance no less than four hats have been found under the seats, and Theodore Mitchell, the publicity and society man, is hopeful that he will not have to rely this Spring upon the Miner Lithograph Company for his annual straw covering.

Patrons frequently leave gloves, umbrellas and hand baggage behind in a theatre, but until the arrival of "The Birth of a Nation" they have unanimously remembered to take their hats.

From WORLD

Address: New York City

Date MAR 1[illegible] 1915

"COMMERCIALIZING RACE PREJUDICE."

To the Editor of The World:

"The Birth of a Nation," a photoplay based on Thomas Dixon's "Clansman," will, I understand, occupy the screens in twenty-three moving-picture theatres in the United States before journeying to Europe.

The purpose of this exhibition plainly is to create and intensify prejudice against the colored race. Of course the pictured story of the reconstruction period, or so much of it as Rev. Mr. Dixon has found useful for his purpose, is greatly exaggerated. For the truth of history will show that the chief actors and beneficiaries in the saturnalia of corruption which cursed the South during the reconstruction period were white men of Northern and Southern birth, who used the negro as a cat's-paw to pull their chestnuts out of the fire. Rev. Mr. Dixon, if he knows anything about reconstruction, knows that the negroes of that period in the Southern States were not the Warwicks in statecraft that his pictures show them to be. If, as he contends in his "Clansman," they were the master minds in politics in the South, his race must change places with the black or colored race.

The reaction which is bound to follow Rev. Dixon's latest scheme to widen the breach between the races in this country will be greater and more harmful in its effects than he perhaps now realizes. He is a Southern man, an able man intellectually. He would be a greater man if he possessed more of the spirit of Jesus and less or none of the spirit of the prince of darkness.

JOHN EDWARD BRUCE.

Yonkers, March 8.

Herald, Mar. 12-15

WOULD STOP FILM DRAMA.

To the Editor of the Herald:—

Will you not, with your powerful influence, come to the help of those who are trying to stop the production in New York of that pernicious moving picture show "The Birth of a Nation"? The fact that it has been disapproved by the National Board of Censorship should be enough in itself to condemn it. The fact that it stirs up race prejudice and sectional feeling, which the nation has so long tried to live down, should be enough to turn away all self-respecting persons from in any way countenancing it. ELIJAH B. STRONG.

The Chalet, Shelter Is. L. I., March 10, 1915.

OBJECT TO PICTURE PLAY.

Friends of Negroes Summon "The Birth of a Nation" Producers.

Opposition on the part of persons interested in the uplift of the negroes to the moving picture play "The Birth of a Nation," which is now being produced at the Liberty Theatre, crystallized yesterday when W. D. Griffith and Harry Aitkin, producers of the play, were summoned to the Jefferson Market police court.

It is the contention of the board of directors of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the complainants, that the play will stir race hatred and is a public nuisance. Magistrate House selected next Monday as the time for a hearing in the West Farms police Court, to which he is transferred from the Jefferson Market court. Martin Littleton will represent the defendants and W. J. Osborn the association.

Among the members of the board of directors who oppose the production are Dr. John H. Holmes, Oswald Garrison Villard, Dr. J. E. Spingarn of Columbia, Paul Kennedy, Charles H. Studin and Arthur B. Spingarn.

"The play will stir race hatred, prejudice and disorder," said Mr. Villard yesterday. "The producers were given an opportunity to withdraw the play peaceably but did not do so, so the association has taken this step. It is a moving picture version of the objectionable play "The Clansman," which was stopped in many cities."

From DRAMATIC MIRROR

Address: New York City

Date Mar. 10-15 MAR [illegible]

UNCULTIVATED GROUND

We may be asking for something that would not be profitable from a box-office standpoint, so we won't say it in a very loud tone. But doesn't it seem that, with the success that is being accorded the slapstick and slightly less slapsticky farce, there is room for distinctive work on the screen in refined comedy, for comedy characterizations that would call for real acting, comedy plots that could withstand severe scrutiny? This is not an attempt to decry the slapstick and near-so; we enjoy it. But between the extremes of drama and exaggerated comedy there should be profit in the medium path. There would at least be opportunity for originality—and this same can hardly be said for the slapstick, which is resurrecting the bits of comedy business of the past quarter-century.

We believe the screen has the authors, players, and directors capable of successfully producing the refined comedy. There are some who have sought this uncultivated field with some success, and there are many more who would welcome the opportunity if the "powers behind the throne" would say the word.

It seems to us that quite a few New York newspaper men fell worfully in handling the opening of "The Birth of a Nation." They wandered on with a lot of detail about months of work, [illegible] men, and umpteen [illegible] employed, while forgetting [illegible] and gulps that the picture fail to wring from [illegible] Perhaps this stress on the [illegible] side and neglect of the picture's triumph, the artistic, is due to the dancers' own tactical error in [illegible] the programme with illustrations [illegible] concerning the making of the picture.

EVENING POST

New York City

MAR 1 2 [illegible]

Rabbi Wise on Race Prejudice.

Rabbi Wise will speak on Sunday morning at Carnegie Hall on Race Prejudice and Race Assassination, with special reference to the motion-picture play, "The Birth of a Nation."

NEW YORK REVIEW, SATURDAY, MARCH 6, 1915.

From CALL
Address: San Francisco, Cal.
Date MAR 8 1915

"THE CLANSMAN" STARTS 2D WEEK

The second big week of D. W. Griffith's latest motion picture, "The Birth of a Nation," commences at the Alcazar with performances this afternoon. It is now running this afternoon. It is now acknowledged by the local press and public alike that never before in the history of motion pictures has such a thrilling, all absorbing and magnificent production been offered in this city. It would be a difficult task even for the imagination to conceive anything such as a more dramatic or interesting story than this foremost picture which was produced in this country by D. W. Griffith, the accomplished David Belasco of filmdom.

"The Clansman" presents a remarkable mixture of romance and comedy against historic scenes. There are shown the decisive battles of the civil war, Sherman's famous march to the sea, burning of Atlanta; Lee's surrender at Appomattox; what it cost women, wives, sisters and sweethearts, the assassination of President Lincoln, the formation and rise of the famous Ku Klux Klan, and, finally, the coming of the prince of peace. There are more than 18,000 people in this wonderful film production and more than 3000 horses are used. Eight months were consumed in the making of the picture, which cost a little more than $500,000. There is a large symphony concert orchestra, a large chorus of jubilee singers and some wonderful stage pictures, depicting the life of the old South before the war.

From NEWS Bee
Address TOLEDO, OHIO.
MAR 6 - 1915

There's a movie show on in New York to see which you must give $1.50. Those who have seen it say it's worth every cent of the dollar. The show is "Birth of a Nation." It was produced first on Monday evening at the Liberty Theater.

The best seats are in boxes along the front of the balcony. The house was remodeled to provide these.

It is in recognition of the fact that motion pictures are to be seen to best from the front rows of a balcony in most theaters.

"Birth of a Nation" is a dramatization of Thomas Dixon's novel, "The Clansman." It starts in the 18th century with the bringing of the first negro slaves to America. Its story is closely related to the bearing of slavery on the history of the United States.

The civil war is pictured in Sherman's march to the sea, burning of Atlanta, surrender of Lee at Appomattox and assassination of President Lincoln.

LOS ANGELES (Cal.) TIMES
MARCH 12, 1915

Review Portrait—Tours.
No. 22. David W. Griffith.

REGISTER, "DEEP THOUGHT"—Looking back on the old Biograph days, Mr. Griffith, even THEN, we knew it was "in you," as the saying goes. They used to do some grinning, behind your back, as Little People MUST do and ALWAYS WILL, until the end of time, but the very things they laughed at, made you famous.

REGISTER, "THE PASSING OF TIME"—Those days of struggle and study and grind to follow....every successful man pays the inevitable toll. We know of them. We have watched you patch your big dramas together, bit by bit, out in the fields, along swamps and orchards, in drowsy little country villages....under the shimmering studio glass, when even the very camera seemed to sweat. It was always the unconventional you strove for—the deft and elusive things other Directors never thought of—never deemed worth while. And whether you took a Big Scene through the pickets of a village fence or from the topmost bough of a pine tree, months later, when your critics saw these pictures on the screen, they said, half to themselves: "Griffith IS great! I thought that was bug-house at the time, but it sure looks bully now."

REGISTER, "LINEAGE"—When the clicking and your megaphone and its strict, sure commands, drifting battle smoke pours up from the glade where two thousand soldiers in tattered gray uniforms are snarling at one another under the pall of billowing dust, then, Mr. Griffith, we KNOW, from the very pose and manner of you, that your Father's blood is burning in your veins. You are almost living over again some of that fine Father's grim battles. Back swings memory, to the heat and glory of that bitter strife. General Griffith is commanding a brigade again. The South's heart-aches are cut deep into the lines of his face as they all follow the flag to immortal glory. And, as we saw the Son, silhouetted against the South Car'lina sky only a little while ago, directing the army scattered over miles around, History seemed to be repeating itself, shorn of the horror and the bloodshed.

REGISTER, "ACTION"—We managed to keep pretty closely upon your busy, industrious trail, during those days of panoramic wonder, Mr. Griffith. Nor shall we ever forget that eventful misty morning when you and your picturesque followers began to unfold a reconstructed Civil War amidst sublimely peaceful surroundings. South Carolina had set her stage for you. Her historic earth bared green breast to three thousand men on horseback, who went galloping madly before the eye of the all-seeing camera. Where there had been quiet a moment before every tree-plumed crest and every bright meadow and every sunny slope suddenly vomited smoke. Whirling white festoons of it clustered above historic ground, made beautifully sacred by Time and the memories of lives sacrificed. Cannon leered from the shelter of massed foliage....charging horses beat the roads into a dry foam of red dust....a seemingly endless stream of men in shabby grey and torn blue eddied and whipped and whirlpooled across the broad acres, now lost from sight in trees and bushes....now lurching out from cover, eighteen thousand strong....always intensely serious....always more a part of that great bitter drama of the Past, than of any make-believe battle, set to words on a sheaf of typewritten foolscap. Over the drab breastworks, a scurrying, scratching, screaming melee of humanity fought....an hour later, we saw them, still in their mussed-up uniforms, Yanks and Rebels, as they munched swiss cheese sandwiches under the trees or gulped down soda pop in the very breatworks across which they had savagely cut their way.

REGISTER, "PATIENCE"—And always, Mr. Griffith, you played "Daddy" to "The Bunch." Despite the fact that, as you bustled hereand there, followed by batteries of cameras and autos and helpers and staggering under a load of infinite detail that would crush down fifty ordinary Directors, you found time to nod pleasantly to the chap whose arm had been cut, in one of the sharp bits of action, or to call to Miss Marsh, who is resting in the shade of a big spruce: "Don't let 'em throw that dust in your eyes, Miss Marsh....it's getting sort of rough here, now."

It seems to be a blessing that goes with Bigness—this desire to do little things well—to do little favors—to temper necessary sharpness with little lovable words. And all through the big battles you fought down there in Carolina, eighteen thousand of us felt a sense of security in your presence. Hat pulled down over eyes, norfolk coat as trim and as trig as the kind the soldiers wore, keen, investigating, inquisitive, relentless eyes covering a whole county that was your temporary stage, there was always, as we saw you, a certain undeniable majesty about you, Mr. Griffith. Perhaps it was the SURENESS of you—the CERTAINTY....the gritting of the teeth and the sweep of an excited arm as you fairly MADE things come true that were impossible....perhaps it was your rather sombre and unassuming modesty at the close of the day, when you sat out on the veranda and watched the moon come up over those purple Carolina hills. Whatever it was, New York, seated comfortably in it's plush chair at The Liberty, will never know how gigantic that man's job was down there. Twenty clicking cameras could only register the EASY part; 140,000 feet of film were taken in all....140,000 feet of YUO, Mr. Griffith. Kentucky is PROUD of you, SUH....proud....the entire COUNTRY is. You've put personality into an inanimate thing—into the Movie Camera. You've made it TALK.

We find ourself sneaking quitely in these afternoons and watching. There ....that cluster of a thousand Johnny Rebs, foot-sore, dusty, unconquerable, is breaking from cover once more.... the shells are bursting overhead. Hell breaks loose among the Carolina hills ....pandemonium, and we can hear a determined little man cry: "Action boys—go now! That's it....FIRE a volley....CAMERA!"

W. LIVINGSTON LARNED.

BULLETIN
San Francisco, C
MAR

AT THE ALCAZAR

"THE CLANSMAN," or "The Birth of a Nation," Griffith's motion picture being shown twice daily at the Alcazar Theater, is recognized as the masterpiece in moving pictures. It includes the most spectacular battle ever enacted and among other things shown are the light in the old South before the war; the parade of Thadeus Stevens, the great Commoner, the assassination of President Lincoln, the formation of the famous Ku Klux Klan; 18,000 soldiers in action; dipole; cavalry charges; bayonet attacks; the struggle between the North and South, and finally the reconstruction period.

The record of attendance at the Alcazar Theater is being broken, and it is now estimated that over people have witnessed this stupendous production up to date. "The Clansman" will continue for a second week, beginning Monday afternoon. There are two performances daily, one at 2 and the other at 8 p. m.

Mar. 13-15

NOW PLAYING AT THE

LIBERTY THEATRE—NEW YORK

Evenings at 8.05 Sharp - 25c - 50c - 75c - $1
Matinees at 2.10 Sharp - - - 25c and 50c

House Remodelled according to scientific adjustment of focal requirements. — The Loge Seats will be $2 at night and $1 at Matinee Performances.

The Mightiest Spectacle Ever Produced!

D. W. GRIFFITH'S Colossal Production Which Will Startle the World!

A Red-Blooded Tale of True American Spirit.

Love and Romance 'Midst Historic Scenes

Comedy which relieves the Thrill of Adventure.

Gripping Heart Interest and Soul-Stirring Emotions.

THE Birth OF A Nation

Too Great for Comparisons.

Conceived, Inspired and Created in America.

The Expression of Genius in a new Realm of Art.

A Composition of National Figures with the Universe as its Background.

See This Masterpiece—Rich in Historic Value

The Most Realistic and Stupendous View of Stirring Events in the Development of our Country

Founded on Thomas Dixon's Famous Novel and Play

The Clansman

SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA OF 40

SEATS NOW

18,000 People
3,000 Horses
8 Months
In the Making.
Cost
$500,000.00

In writing to advertisers please mention MOTOGRAPHY

From CLIPPER
Address: New York City
Date MAR 13 1

D. W. GRIFFITH SPEAKS AGAINST CENSORSHIIP LAW PENDING AT ALBANY—LEAGUE FOR POLITICAL EDUCATION HOLDS MEETING AT CORT THEATRE AND DENOUNCES MITCHELL BILL.

The League for Political Education held an enthusiastic meeting afternoon of March 3 at the Cort Theatre, New Iork, on which occasion the subject of film censorship was discussed in all of its varied phases. Norman Hapgood, editor of Harper's Weekly, in speaking of the restrictive bill that is now pending in the Legislature at Albany, which was introduced by Assemblyman Mitchell recently, declared that public morals are elastic and cannot be determined by law, and that the co-operation now in effect between the film manufacturers and the National Board of Censorship was an ideal example of democracy.

Mr. Hapgood cited the censor movement in England as an illustration of what he termed ridiculous interference, and asserted that the establishment of a New York State Board of Official Censors for motion pictures would create an undesirable form of autocratic government, greatly to be deplored.

The Rev. Chas. S. MacFarland, general secretary of the Churches of Christ, in America, was another who spoke strongly against the pending measure. Dr. MacFarland told of the movement that is rapidly growing to install motion picture outfits in the various churches of all denominations throughout the country, and said that it seemed regrettable that a part of the people showed a marked tendency to resort to legal measures in the regulation of moral questions and a disposition to speedily forget the moral question at stake.

John Collier, former chairman of the National Board of Censorship, offered plenty of facts and figures, showing the expediency and efficiency of the National Board.

Regarding the recent decision of the U. S. Supreme Court in the case of the Ohio and Kansas official censor boards, Mr. Collier declared that the doctrine of free speech, to his mind, was in danger.

In this relation Mr. Collier said that he feared the imminent possibility of magazines and newspapers being placed in the same catalogue as pictures and muzzled by restrictive laws in the free expression of opinion.

D. W. Griffith, genius who is responsible for the masterly film conception, "The Birth of a Nation," now playing to packed houses at the Liberty, New York, was the last speaker of the afternoon. Mr. Griffith, who went even further than his predecessors and condemned all censorship, said in part:

"All art has its origin in a vision. Whether the final expression of the idea shall take the form of sculpture, painting, music or the written word, it was first a vision. Therefore, the motion picture, which is an expression of that vision, should properly take its place among the arts.

"And I firmly believe, as many great thinkers have told me, that the motion picture is the greatest force for the molding of public thought that we have to-day. If that is so, the motion picture should not be hampered by censorial restrictions.

"Public sentiment would not permit the showing of films which are intrinsically evil any more than it will countenance the running of plays which transgress the bounds of decency too far. Why, then, should photoplays be subject to the whims of a few people who are empowered to act according to their own dictates, and from whose decisions the manufacturer has absolutely no appeal?

"If, however, we must have some form of supervision I cannot conceive of a better from than that which we already have in the National Board of Censorshop."

"The manufacturer will not invest money in great films when he knows that they will be torn apart by the ignorant people whom political factors have placed in power. He knows that Ohio will object to one thing, Pennsylvania to another, Cincinnati to something else, and that by the time his film has been shown in a few States he will have nothing left."

Continuing, Mr. Griffith advocated the making of one sort of photoplay for children and another for adults only. The great producer conceded the necessity for close supervision in the sort of films to be shown children.

"Local censorship," said Mr. Griffith, during the course of his address, "is the greatest evil with which the motion picture makes has to contend."

TRIBUNE MAR 14-15

The fact that the D. W. Griffith film, "The Birth of a Nation," now credited with a remarkably successful engagement at the Liberty Theatre, is playing twice daily to a $2 scale of admission will hardly be a welcome piece of news to the theatrical managers on Broadway. After such an example of the moneymaking power of spectacular feature films offering a peg of uplift upon which to hang sensation, nothing short of a deluge of similar photo dramas can be expected in the immediate future.

From BULLETIN
Address: San Francisco, Cal
Date MAR 8

MAIL-MAR. 13-15

[illegible] of the real film folk are delighted over the fact that they are "selling out" at every performance at "The Birth of a Nation," with an advance sale extending many weeks ahead. That means more opportunities for the big things to be done in the future. I want to see Ralph Ince turned loose on one great big theme with no limit as to the possible expenditure or the time to make it.

$2 Movie Big Success

D. W. Griffith's astonishing film production, "The Birth of a Nation," has proven one of the sensations of years in New York theatricals. When it was announced a motion picture production was to be given at $2 scale of prices in the Liberty skeptics predicted certain failure. Such interest has been manifested in the production and such flattering comment devoted to it, all signs point to it making a record in metropolitan stage history.

Courrier de Etats-Mar. 14-15

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

Un gros succès

L'étonnant spectacle de M. D. W. Griffith, "The Birth of a Nation" ("La naissance d'une nation"), fait sensation dans le monde théâtral new-yorkais.

Quand on annonça qu'un spectacle cinématographique allait être donné au Liberty Theatre et que le prix des places serait de deux dollars, les sceptiques prédirent l'insuccès d'une telle innovation. Depuis la représentation d'ouverture, il est impossible de trouver une place vide et de nombreuses personnes ont dû être refusées.

Le succès est tel qu'il fera époque dans l'histoire théâtrale de New-York.

From Province
Address Vancouver, B. C.
Date MAR 6 - 1915

President Sees "The Clansman."

David W. Griffith's production, "The Birth of a Nation," was last week shown to President Wilson in the East Room of the White House. The producer came on from the coast especially to attend to the details of the presentation. On Wednesday [illegible]

"THE CLANSMAN" TO PLAY SECOND WEEK

The second week of D. W. Griffith's motion picture, "The Clansman," or "The Birth of the Nation," will commence at the Alcazar this afternoon. Two performances are given daily, one in the afternoon at 2:15 o'clock and the other at 8 in the evening.

All last week there were thousands of people, local and Exposition visitors, who attempted to gain admission to the Alcazar to witness this twelve-reel production, but the management was forced to turn hundreds of them away, the capacity of the theatre being sold out at all times. Consequently they decided to keep the picture for a second week in order to give those who were disappointed an opportunity to witness it.

In "The Clansman" there are [illegible] the decisive battles of the Civil War, Sherman's march to the sea, the burning of Atlanta, Lee's surrender at Appomattox, the assassination of President Lincoln, the [illegible] of the famous Ku Klux Klan, as well as the coming of the freedmen [illegible]

"The Birth of a Nation"

The D. W. Griffith Feature Film Company Makes Its Debut With a Most Sensational and Spectacular Production, Dealing with the Civil War and the Period of Reconstruction.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

THE two outstanding features of Griffith's remarkable production, "The Birth of a Nation," are its controversial spirit (especially obvious in the titles), and the splendor and magnificence of its spectacles. Based in the main on "The Clansman," it breathes the spirit of that well-known book. "The Clansman" was a special plea for the South in the forum of history. The screen-adaptation has made the plea far more passionate and I might say partisan than the book or the play. It is impossible to give the reader a good idea of this production without sketching at least briefly the views and sentiments expressed and sharply emphasized and reiterated by the distinguished author. The very introduction tells us that the South never had a fair record made of its trials in the Reconstruction Period. We are told both in pictures and in titles that African slaves were brought to this country by Northern traders who sold them to the South. Puritan divines blessed the traffic, but when slave trading was no longer profitable to the North the "traders of the seventeenth century became the abolitionists of the nineteenth century."

We next see a typical Northern congregation assembled to hear a sermon. About the platform from which the preacher addresses his audience stands a group of colored children. The preacher takes a young colored boy and passes with him through the congregation. A motherly looking old lady stretches out her arms in sympathy toward the child of the black race, but immediately repulses him with every manifestation of disgust caused by the odor which we must assume the boy carries around with him. Much is then said in titles about "state sovereignty" and we are reminded of what we read in school of Southern statesmen like Calhoun and Toombs and Northern statesmen like Vallandigham.

Allegorical Scene Illustrating the Horrors of War (Griffith).

Mr. Griffith then unfolds a picture of conditions in the South before the Civil War, showing both in titles and pictures that the slaves had easy hours, plenty of time for recreation, comfortable quarters and kind masters. Here a strange and puzzling character is introduced in the person of a man said "to have risen to great prominence in the House of Representatives in 1860." This man, who plays a very prominent part all through the production is called "Austin Stoneman." The titles make it plain that this is a fictitious name. Stoneman has a daughter who is never allowed to enter his library. The reason for this must be found in the illicit relations between Stoneman and a mulatto woman. The latter is "insulted" by Charles Sumner. She works herself into a fury of passion. Stoneman enters to find her with part of her upper body exposed. The scene ends with Stoneman kissing the mulatto and with this title: "Thus the fatal weakness of one man blights the nation." The man called Stoneman bears a striking facial and physical resemblance to the man who succeeded Lincoln in the presidential chair. The description of him in the titles forbid the belief that he is identical with President Andrew Johnson. He is an altogether mystical and apocryphal personage whose identity remains veiled to the very end.

It would be difficult to overpraise the spectacular part of these reels. Mr. Griffith has given us a sample of what he can do in staging military spectacles in his wonderful picture of "the Battle," released in the summer of 1911. Here he surpasses himself. The march of Sherman from Atlanta to the sea made the audience gasp with wonder and admiration. Nothing more impressive has ever been seen on the screen and I have to refer to "Cabiria" for a standard of comparison. Nor are the war spectacles the only impressive spectacular features. Two of the most wonderful pictures ever seen on the screen are Lincoln, signing the first call for volunteers and the surrender of Lee to Grant at Appomatox. It may be safely asserted that a finer impersonation of Lincoln has never been witnessed on any screen or on any stage. The audience was deeply stirred by the inspired portrayal of Lincoln and when it became known that the artist who had given the portrayal was present the audience gave him an impromptu ovation between the first and second part. He lived up to the best of Lincoln traditions both in appearance and in action. The assassination of the martyred president is shown in full detail on the screen. It was a task full of difficulties and one misstep might have proved fatal. The great tragedy was "staged o'er" in the most irreproachable and touching manner.

It must be mentioned too that Mr. Griffith has again shown himself a master in creating and prolonging suspense to the agonizing point. His favorite method of chasing pursued and pursuer through one room after another is still effective and always has the desired effect on the audience. When speaking of the spectacular features of "The Birth of a Nation," I must not forget his treatment of the Ku-Klux Klan. The weird and mystical garb of these defenders of "Aryan race supremacy" has given the director splendid opportunities which he utilized to fullest. When these "crusaders of the South" are seen mounted on superb horses, dashing furiously through field and forest and river to rescue innocent maidens from brutal assault or to punish "wicked Africans" the audience never fails to respond but applauds while the spectacle lasts.

It is scarcely necessary to say that the photography is exceptionally fine in a production to which Griffith lends his name. He shows a good deal of his renowned skill in working "close-ups," creating many tense and thrilling situations. The acting is such as might have been expected with a director of the type and power of Griffith. He has the art of bending his instruments to his uses. They work in strictest obedience to his orders and as a result the Griffith idea is always transferred to the screen with a negligible loss of power and directness. Mr. Walthall's performance was particularly fine. This gifted actor invariably succeeds in merging his personality into his part. He might at times have shown a little trace of fatigue and the hardship of soldiering. It seemed somewhat improbable that a soldier could look so trim and spick and span after what the little Colonel passed through. [illegible] and Silas Lynch were well taken [illegible] "southron" was a piece of very clever characterization. Not enough praise can be given to the settings, exterior and interior. Mr. Griffith is justly famous [illegible] in these things.

The audience which [illegible] the private exhibition in the Liberty Theater was [illegible] friendly. It was significant that on more than one occasion during the showing of the films there were hisses [illegible] with the applause. These hisses were not of course directed against the artistic quality of the film. They were evoked by the disguised appeal to race prejudices. The tendency of the second part is to inflame race hatred. The negroes are shown as horrible brutes, given over to beastly excesses, defiant and criminal in their attitude toward the whites and lusting after white women. Some of the details are simply monstrous and repulsive. The film [illegible] roused the deepest and bitterest of the white

---

CHRONICLE
Address: San Francisco, Cal.
Date Mar 8 1915

"The Clansman" Opens for Second Week at Alcazar

The second big week of the motion picture, "The Clansman," or "The Birth of a Nation," will commence at the Alcazar Theater this afternoon. The performances are given daily at 2:15 in the afternoon, the picture, one at 8:15 in the evening.

From EVENING NEWS
Address: Newark, N. J.
Date MAR 12 1915

"The Birth of a Nation." Very impressive picture drama based on Thomas Dixon's novel, "The Clansman." Vivid reproduction of events during the Civil War and the [illegible] period. Instructive and interesting [illegible]

From Examiner
Address San Francisco, Cal.
Date [illegible] 1915

"The Clansman" at Alcazar.

"The Clansman," or "The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's motion picture, now being shown twice daily at the Alcazar Theatre, is the world's masterpiece in moving pictures. It was amplified from the novel of Thomas Dixon Jr. and was produced at a cost of more than $100,000.

It includes some of the most spectacular battle scenes ever pictured. Among other features are life in the old South, before the war; the private history of Thaddeus Stevens; the assassination of President Lincoln, the formation of the famous Kukluxx Klan, artillery duels, cavalry charges, bayonet attacks, the struggle between the North and the South and finally the reconstruction period.

All immediate bookings at the Alcazar have been canceled in order to allow "The Clansman" to continue for a second week, beginning to-morrow afternoon. There are two performances daily, one at 2 p. m. and the other at 8 p. m. The cast of principals is a brilliant one, headed as it is by Lillian Gish and Henry Walthall, with [illegible] Blackburn in the [illegible] of President Lincoln.

From BILLBOARD
Address Cincinnati, Ohio
Date MAR 12 1915

Hats are off to D. W. Griffith for the greatest production yet seen on the screen. The Birth of a Nation had the audience applauding continuously. More words could describe the enthusiasm.

DISPATCH
Pittsburgh, Pa.
MAR 7

FIELD
Address TORONTO, CAN.
MAR 7 - 1915

Californian: D. W. Griffith's latest presentation for the screen is now showing in New York City, and is called "The Birth of Nations," founded on Thomas Dixon's well known novel, "The Clansman." It is said to be a wonderful success.

ished: London, 1881; New York, 18

NEW YORK LETTER

SALARY OF $500,000 PER.

D. W. Griffith, the man who has just "The Birth of a Nation" on the [illegible] in town. He is the highest-priced the moving picture game, his salary $500,000 a year. "The Birth of [illegible] is the greatest picture ever produced [illegible] than, it is so good that he [illegible] to give up $a, the [illegible] the picture. It took eight [illegible] the film product[illegible] against the black to the highest pitch, suggests as a remedy of the racial question the transportation of the negroes to Liberia, which Mr. Griffith assures us was Lincoln's idea.

Scene from "The Birth of a Nation" (Griffith).

Whatever fault might be found with the argumentative spirit found in both the titles and the pictures there can be no question that the appeal to the imagination will carry the picture a good way toward popular success. In the South, of course, where memories of Reconstruction horrors are still vivid, the picture will have an immense vogue. It is altogether probable that its many fine points will outweigh its disadvantages in every other section of the country.

Griffith Film Scores

"The Birth of a Nation" Is Enthusiastically Received by Capacity Audience at the Liberty Theater.

D. W. GRIFFITH'S much-heralded "The Birth of a Nation," founded on Thomas Dixon's story, "The Clansman," had its initial public presentation in New York at the Liberty Theatre on March third, before a capacity audience, including many listed in the Who's Who of filmdom and a large number of men and women prominent in literary and society circles. No picture presented in New York has been viewed by more exacting spectators and few, if any, have elicited such spontaneous and frequent applause.

D. W. Griffith.

At the close of the first of the two acts into which the production is divided, Mr. Dixon responded to calls for a speech. He said that he considered the picture superior to his book and likewise to his play, staged eight years ago. He declared that no one save the son of a soldier and a Southerner could have made such a picture, and introduced Mr. Griffith as the greatest director in the world.

Mr. Griffith stepped just far enough beyond the wings to be visible from all parts of the house. In a few concise sentences, delivered clearly and with dignity, he said that his aim was to place pictures on a par with the spoken word as a medium for artistic expression appealing to thinking people. He voiced the conviction that important advances are being made in that direction and thanked the audience for the reception being given "The Birth of a Nation."

The first general showing of approval came early in the picture with the depiction of thickly peopled street scenes in a Southern village previous to the war. Then, with the spectacles of towns burning at night, and a succession of battles, some of which were fought by the light of bon-fires, the applause was nearly incessant for a full half hour. In the second act it was evident that the audience felt the grip of the story and sympathized with the work of the Ku Klux Klan battling against negro domination. The dramatic points of the story scored, as did a number of comedy incidents. The audience was quickly moved from suspense to laughter and back again to suspense.

In showing the film, the stage at the Liberty Theatre appeared merely as a black background on which the screen was placed. Mr. Griffith, it is said, refused all suggestions for scenic decorations, holding that attention should not be distracted from the picture. The music on Wednesday evening, supplied by an orchestra, with the occasional singing of popular melodies by a chorus, was well in keeping with the action of the screen and particularly in keeping in the battle scenes. It was composed by Joseph Carl Briel. To lend an appropriate touch to the surroundings as people entered the theater, were men in the uniforms of Confederate soldiers, while the girl ushers were clothed after the fashion of young ladies in the South of 186[illegible].

The dramatic critics of all of the New York daily papers attended the premiere and in almost every instance the picture was reported at length and in glowing terms. H. E. Aitken and Edwin Thanhouser headed the delegation of Mutual officers, directors and actors present, and there was a liberal representation of men prominent in the artistic and business departments of other companies. The demand for seats so far exceeded the supply that hundreds of people were turned away at the box office and behind the loge chairs the line was three deep throughout the evening. As a popular attraction, "The Birth of a Nation" looks like a sensational success.

Telegram
Clarksburg, W. Va.
MAR 7 1915

STUPENDOUS

Is Griffith's Photodrama Based on Dixon's Celebrated Novel.

Something hertofore never attempted on so great a scale in motion pictures is D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation," which has just been put on in the Liberty theater, in New York. The story is based on Thomas Dixon's novel and play "The Clansman."

According to all reports this film spectacle is the greatest and largest ever produced. At any rate it took eight months to prepare, and the services in one capacity or another of some 18,000 persons and 3,000 horses were required to obtain the needed effect.

The story begins in the seventeenth century with the bringing of African slaves to North America. Its further progress is closely related to varied phases of slavery and its bearing upon the history of the United States.

NEW YORK DRAMATIC NEWS

A STUPENDOUS FILM DRAMA.

The Birth of a Nation a Powerful Study with Imposing Scenes.

Col. Ben Cameron	Henry Walthall
Margaret Cameron	Miriam Cooper
Flora	Mae Marsh
Mrs. Cameron	Josephine Crowell
Dr. Cameron	Spottiswoode Aiken
Wade Cameron	J. A. Beringer
Duke Cameron	John French
Mammy	Jennie Lee
Hon. Austin Stoneman	Ralph Lewis
Elsie	Lillian Gish
Phil	Elmer Clifton
Ted	Robert Harron
Jeff	Wallace Reed
Lydia Brown	Mary Alden
Silas Lynch	George Seigmann
Gus	Walter Long
Abraham Lincoln	Joseph Henabery
John Wilkes Booth	Raoul Walsh
Gen. U. S. Grant	Donald Crisp
Gen. Robert E. Lee	Howard Gaye

As we entered the Liberty Theatre the other night pretty girls in antebellum costumes greeted us. They were the ushers. Young men attired in Civil War uniforms assisted, and there were uniformed sentries all over the house. This at once put us into the atmosphere of war times, and we were all full of expectations.

The Birth of a Nation is one of the most imposing film dramas ever presented. It is a gigantic production, based on "The Clansman," and shows by means of a narrative threaded with romance the reconstruction of the Southern States, dating from the time of their secession.

This pictured period of the Civil War following the nation's change from 1860 to 1872 is exceedingly well done, and all the great national events were reproduced in a marvelous manner.

The purpose of the display is to stress the message for universal peace which is contained in the various views. Great care has been taken not to glorify battle and to emphasize the "note of terror and desolation which is the real truth of war." Our impression was that the spectacle will win popularity chiefly because of its tremendous thrilling war scenes, and the following exciting raids of the Ku Klux Klansmen. In addition, a pretty love romance is woven into the story which makes us follow it with the keenest interest.

There are many scenes that are simply wonderful in their beauty. Mr. Griffith successfully shows a mimic war scene that transcends reality. Reproducing roughly the trenches on the hills around Petersburg, Mr. Griffith shows a panorama seemingly miles long in which the Confederate soldiers leap from their trenches in a long serried line and charge the Union breastworks, overrunning the first, smashing their way into the second, and ending in defeat.

Another memory picture is that of the night battle, with its flashes of rifle, gun and shell. It is actual night photography, and the first ever successfully done. The burning of Atlanta is another night scene employing a great host of performers. The panorama of Sherman's march to the sea, with its river of men flowing down the Southern valleys, is a beautiful view.

The narrative running through the various scenes is one of romance. North and South, girls, soldiers, sweethearts, with all the trimmings, are presented in the most compelling fashion. These scenes, as well as the views of vast assemblies, are obtained in a manner little short of marvelous. The cast of principal actors appears to have been admirably selected, and their playing was most natural.

The assassination of Lincoln, and of Lee's surrender to Grant were remarkable illustrations. The interior of Ford's Theatre, Washington, as it was in 1865, was built in facsimile, even to the smallest detail, and with a rare cunning Mr. Griffith so placed his camera as to show at once the great audience and the stage, with the play, Our American Cousin, going on.

For the Appomattox scene the cottage room in which the surrender was signed was reproduced, even to the furniture. Grant and Lee, too, were lifelike.

In the part of the picture taken from "The Clansman," the gathering of the spectral crusaders and their ride to the rescue of the white girl who is held prisoner by the negro Lieutenant-Governor of South Carolina, and by a mob of black militia, ending in a mad charge of the sheeted horsemen into, among and literally over the panic-stricken negro soldiers, made the great spectacular and dramatic appeals of the story come simultaneously to their climaxes. A battle between white refugees in a cotton field cabin, and a leap by a young girl off a hundred foot precipice to death were made real, as only one or two producers can make them. The many other scenes were almost without exception beautiful, touching or fittingly dramatic. Thos. Dixon spoke with feeling when he said Mr. Griffith was a wonder. He is certainly a master, head and shoulders above all of them in the screen world.

Henry B. Walthall plays the Confederate colonel, who later leads the Ku Klux Klan. Mae Marsh, a young actress who is on her way to a glorious future, is the "little sister," and one who captivates all beholders. She has magnetism and charm. The beauty of Lillian Gish, no less than her excellent acting, aids in the sympathetic appeal of the Northern sweetheart of the Southern colonel. The other roles, from those of Senator down to those of darky field hands, are all in capable hands.

All told, the affair is a great achievement for Mr. Griffith, and it is certain to appeal to every one who cares for spectacular drama and thrills submitted in a charming fashion.

—DISPATCH

Pittsburgh, Pa.

MAR 7 - 1915

POST
HARTFORD, CONN.
MAR 6 - 1915

A private performance of "The Birth of a Nation" was given at the Liberty theater Monday afternoon, and if motion pictures have a right to intrude on dramatic reviews, certainly this is one. It was, indeed, the most stupendous and brilliant motion pictures of native production that has been seen. It was built around the several books of Thomas Dixon, notably "The Clansman," and after the first part had been shown, and the story got into that epoch of which Mr. Dixon has written, with such vividness, the play began to take on interest. Indeed, the battle scenes in the first part were excellent, but it was the development of the progress of the Ku-Klux-Klan and its midnight rides that had the audience fairly out of their seats most of the time.

We may well believe that 3,000 persons were engaged in its preparation. Nothing so stupendous has been seen on the screen save "Cabiria," and as wonderful as was that picture, it did not hold the historical interest to Americans as the present offering, which represents vividly the assassination of Lincoln and other historical events, including the famous surrender of Lee to Grant.

There may be the same question of politics involved that was threshed out when "The Clansman" was first presented.

Capital
DES MOINES, IOWA
MAR 6 1915

A New Movie Thriller.

A private performance of "The Birth of a Nation" was given at the Liberty theater Monday afternoon, and if motion pictures have a right to intrude on dramatic reviews, certainly this is one. It was, indeed, the most stupendous and brilliant motion picture of native production that has been seen. It was built around the several books of Thomas Dixon, notably "The Clansman," and after the first part had been shown, and the story got into that epoch of which Mr. Dixon has written with such vividness, the play began to take on interest. Indeed, the battle scenes in the first part were excellent, but it was the development of the progress of the Ku Klux Klan and its midnight rides that had the audience fairly out of their seats most of the time.

We may well believe that 3,000 persons were engaged in its preparation. Nothing so stupendous has been seen on the screen save "Cabiria," and as wonderful as was that picture, it did not hold the historical interest to Americans as the present offering, which represents vividly the assassination of Lincoln and other historical events, including the famous surrender of Lee to Grant.

There may be the same question of politics involved that was threshed out when "The Clansman" was first presented.

---

trons of this theater.

Klaw & Erlanger Enter Field

Klaw & Erlanger, the well-known theatrical firm, are to enter the motion picture field, making big features which will first be booked in the largest Klaw & Erlanger theaters throughout the country before being shown in the smaller theaters. Percy L. Walters, who is now general manager of the General Film Company, will head the new distributing organization. It is said that David W. Griffith's production, "The Birth of a Nation," which is now running at the Liberty theater, New York, at regular first-class theater prices, will be shown at the Klaw & E. theaters. It was not stated however, that the Griffith [illegible] handled by the [illegible]

NOW PLAYING

LIBERTY THEATRE

(NEW YORK CITY)

Nights and Saturday Matinee Prices from 25c. to $2.00
Other Matinees 25c, 50c and $1.00. Two Performances Daily
INCLUDING SUNDAYS

HOUSE REMODELED ACCORDING TO SCIENTIFIC ADJUSTMENT OF FOCAL REQUIREMENTS

THE MIGHTIEST SPECTACLE EVER PRODUCED!

D. W. GRIFFITH'S Picture Production Which Will Startle The World!

A RED-BLOODED TALE OF TRUE AMERICAN SPIRIT.

LOVE & ROMANCE 'MIDST HISTORIC SCENES.

COMEDY WHICH RELIEVES THE THRILL OF ADVENTURE.

GRIPPING HEART INTEREST AND SOUL-STIRRING EMOTIONS.

SEE THIS MASTERPIECE

THE BIRTH OF A NATION

TOO GREAT FOR COMPARISONS.

CONCEIVED, INSPIRED AND CREATED IN AMERICA.

THE EXPRESSION OF GENIUS IN A NEW REALM OF ART.

A COMPOSITION OF NATIONAL FIGURES WITH THE UNIVERSE AS ITS BACKGROUND.

RICH IN HISTORIC VALUE

THE MOST REALISTIC AND STUPENDOUS VIEW OF STIRRING EVENTS IN THE DEVELOPMENT OF OUR COUNTRY

FOUNDED ON THOMAS DIXON'S FAMOUS NOVEL AND PLAY

THE CLANSMAN

SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA OF 40

SEATS NOW

18,000 PEOPLE
3,000 HORSES
8 MONTHS
IN THE MAKING
COST
$500,000.00

Better to read dirty advertisements than to miss the one YOU need.

DISPATCH
Pittsburgh, Pa.
MAR 7 - 1915

REV. THOMAS W. DIXON'S more or less grotesque play, "The Clansman," has been put in photo play form and had its premier in New York the past week under the title of "The Birth of a Nation." It is an elaborate bit of work required eight months to pose, and 18,000 people were used for the spectacle. It was put on at the Liberty Theater after extensive advertising, with best seats $1 each. The consensus of opinion among New York critics is that the photo drama is technically perfect and wonderfully true as a whole, but that the great Objections that were entered against "The Clansman" as a drama, will exist regarding the film product. The Rev. Mr. Dixon is a fanatic on the Negro question, "problem," as he calls it, and he has used the stage to create race prejudice in this country. In this new venture he has outdone all previous efforts, and the result is many artistic. But the point remains, to conservative citizens, it is wrong, and it might have been better if the ex-clergyman had utilized his talents in some different direction.

POST DISPATCH
St. Louis, Mo.

"BIRTH OF A NATION," SCORES BIG HIT AS MOVIE PRODUCTION

Play Showing Death of Lincoln Is Said to Be Greatest Thing Attempted Yet on Films.

NEW YORK, March 6.—Narrative photography took a long stride forward Wednesday night when "The Birth of a Nation," which is a version of Thomas Dixon's novel, "The Clansman," was publicly exhibited for the first time at the Liberty Theater.

The audience closely resembled a first night gathering at an important dramatic event.

Two series of episodes required nearly three hours to unfold. The first represented the historical incidents of Sherman's march to the sea, and the burning of Atlanta. The second pictured the assassination of President Lincoln at Ford's Theater. This vivid representation had a curious effect upon the audience. As the pictures were unreeled those present sat in subdued silence but, when the tension ended, they broke forth in prolonged applause.

Other scenes included the fall of Petersburg, Lee's surrender at Appomatox, the upbuilding of the Ku Klux Klan, and incidents in the South during the reconstruction period after the Civil War. "Cabiria," the most remarkable picture play shown in this country up to this time, is insignificant compared with this new venture in movieism.

The entire production is on a scale that will give moving picture enthusiasts a new chance to marvel.

EVENING WORLD
New York City

"BIRTH OF A NATION" TICKETS ARE GUARDED.

When the manager of David W. Griffith's motion picture drama, "The Birth of a Nation," discovered that speculators were buying the cheaper seats and selling them at a large advance, he gave orders that no 50-cent or 75-cent tickets be sold until an hour before the performance. It is stated that no seats are knowingly sold to brokers. If the purchaser of rear balcony or gallery seats has to wait until 1 o'clock afternoons and 7 o'clock evenings, he has the satisfaction of realizing that the speculators cannot get there ahead of him.

Brklyn Times Mar. 13 1915

"The Birth of a Nation."

D. W. Griffith's Astonishing production, "The Birth of a Nation," has created the sensation of years in New York theatricals. When it was announced that a motion-picture production was to be given at the regular $2 scale of prices in the Liberty, skeptics predicted certain failure for so daring an innovation. There has not been a vacant seat in the house since the opening performance, and such enormous crowds have been turned away at every presentation that another theatre could have been filled. Such interest has been manifested in the production and such flattering comment has been devoted to it that all signs point to it making a record which will mark an epoch in metropolitan stage history.

TIMES
SEATTLE, WASH.
MAR 13 1915

Mutual Five-Act Films.

D. W. Griffith, the Mutual's chief director who has been kept getting "The Birth of a Nation" in readiness for its New York opening, will likely make a quick return to Los Angeles the first of the week. Before attempting another picture of the size and length of the "Nation" he will stage some of the four and five-part features the Mutual has lined up for future production.

TOWN TOPICS
New York City
MAR 11 1915

THOMAS DIXON'S "The Clansman," in its elaborated form, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Liberty Theatre, owes a great deal of its popularity to a direct appeal to the emotions. Especially is this so during the reconstruction period of the South, when the topic of miscegenation is treated in a most poignant manner. The film is undoubtedly spectacular, the battle scenes being without precedent in the history of the camera.

The Owl.

NOW PLAYING AT THE

LIBERTY THEATRE—NEW YORK

Evenings at 8.05 Sharp - 25c - 50c - 75c - $1
Matinees at 2.10 Sharp - - - 25c and 50c

House Remodelled according to scientific adjustment of focal requirements. — The Loge Seats will be $2 at night and $1 at Matinee Performances.

The Mightiest Spectacle Ever Produced!

D. W. GRIFFITH'S Colossal Production Which Will Startle the World!

A Red-Blooded Tale of True American Spirit.

Love and Romance 'Midst Historic Scenes

Comedy which relieves the Thrill of Adventure.

Gripping Heart Interest and Soul-Stirring Emotions.

THE Birth OF A Nation

Too Great for Comparisons.

Conceived, Inspired and Created in America.

The Expression of Genius in a new Realm of Art.

A Composition of National Figures with the Universe as its Background.

See This Masterpiece—Rich in Historic Value

The Most Realistic and Stupendous View of Stirring Events in the Development of our Country

Founded on Thomas Dixon's Famous Novel and Play

The Clansman

SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA OF 40

SEATS NOW

18,000 People
3,000 Horses
8 Months
In the Making.
Cost
$500,000.00

In writing to advertisers please mention MOTOGRAPHY

CHRONICLE
San Francisco, Cal.
MAR 7 1915

ALCAZAR

"THE CLANSMAN," or "The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's startling motion picture, now being shown twice daily at the Alcazar Theater, is said to be the [illegible] masterpiece in moving pictures. It was amplified from the novel by Thomas Dixon Jr. and produced by D. W. Griffith. It was produced at a cost of over $500,000 and required seven months to complete. It includes the greatest battle scenes ever acted before the camera. The private history of Thaddeus Stevens, the great commoner; the assassination of President Lincoln, the formation of the Kuklux Klan, soldiers in action, artillery duels, cavalry charges, bayonet attacks, the struggle between the North and the South and finally the reconstruction period, all are shown. The National Board of Censors paid "The Clansman" this glowing tribute:

"Artistically, historically and morally, it is a step forward—ahead of the greatest that has ever been done before in this new art."

The record of attendance at the Alcazar Theater is being broken daily. It is estimated that over 25,000 persons have already witnessed this stupendous production. All immediate bookings at the Alcazar have been canceled in order to allow "The Clansman" to continue for a second week, beginning tomorrow afternoon. There are two performances daily, one at 2 P. M. and the other at [illegible] P. M.

DEMOCRAT
Waterbury, Conn.
MAR 6 - 1915

David W. Griffiths' latest spectacle production, "The Birth of a Nation," founded upon "The Clansman," opened its New York engagement Wednesday night at the Liberty theater. The run will be at a price scale similar to that charged at the legitimate theaters. "The Birth of a Nation" has proven a sensation in Los Angeles, where it is playing at Clune's auditorium. Though coast house seats 3,000, speculators have reaped a harvest on the sale of seats. Prices at the Auditorium have run from $1.50 down, and fee for the Angel City. Newspapers tell of speculators asking $5 and over for single admissions. Griffith devoted eight years to the production of the feature that has proven so sensational. Ten thousand people and 3,000 horses are said to have been used to obtain the desired effects. For the New York engagement a complete score has been written by Joseph Diehl, and the accompaniment is played by an orchestra of 40. The story begins in the seventeenth century with the coming of the slaves to North America. Its progress is closely related to the phases of the slavery question and its bearing upon the life of the United States. In the story of the abolition movement and the civil war with its terrible [illegible] Sherman's march to the sea, the burning of Atlanta, the fall of Petersburg, Lee's surrender [illegible]

From NEWS DANBURY, CONN.
Address
Date MAR 4 1915

That much discussed motion picture "The Birth of a Nation" that has had Broadway talking for several weeks as the pioneer "two dollar 'movie'," had its first public performance last night in the Liberty theatre, New York. Judging from the enthusiasm it aroused and the close attention that a large audience gave to it, "The Birth of a Nation" more than fulfilled its promises. It is really a film version of Thomas Dixon's novel "The Clansman." Experienced theatrical men in last night's audience said that a new epoch in motion pictures is reached in "The Birth of a Nation."

1884

TRIBUNE
JOHNSTON, PA.
MAR 6 - 1915

David W. Griffith's production of "The Birth of a Nation," was last week shown to President Wilson in the east room of the White House. Griffith came on from the coast especially to attend to the details of the presentation. The picture opens its New York engagement this week at the Liberty Theater.

From Telegram
Address Portland, Oregon
Date Mar 11 1915

There has been released in New York this week a film called "The Birth of a Nation," which is being shown at $1, with box seats $2. It is based on "The Clansman." Eight months were consumed in making the picture. 18,000 people were engaged, 3000 horses were used and the cost is said to be $500,000. An orchestra of 40 pieces works while the film is [illegible]

1884

Examiner
LOS ANGELES, CAL.
MAR 10 1915

Theodore Mitchell is helping D. W. Griffith in putting over "The Birth of a Nation" in New York, and has done the job.

Mr. Mitchell states that the success of the photo-drama is the most terrific thing of the kind ever known in the town; it will run for months.

"Mitch" has also succeeded in selling his Sandbox Theater, though the threat of being mortgaged into [illegible] standing of marbleized [illegible] Washington Square Players [illegible] twice a week, and [illegible] the rest [illegible]

Telegram
Salt Lake City
MAR 7 - 1915

DIXON'S CLANSMAN' PRODUCED IN 'MOVIES'

"The Birth of a Nation" opened at the Liberty theater, New York, on Wednesday night. It is based upon the familiar novel and play, "The Clansman," by Thomas Dixon, and its performances before the camera is said to have employed 18,000 persons and 3000 horses, and to have taken eight months in the making.

The claim is made that its appeal is for the average theatergoer, and not merely for those who frequent motion picture houses in search of a few minutes' diversion. New York film devotees have seen stirring photoplays, such as "Quo Vadis" and "Cabiria," but those have been of foreign manufacture. "The Birth of a Nation" will prove whether the American product of photoplays can equal or surpass the work of his European brother. Aside from the interest in the film spectacle itself—and it is said to represent on a scale never before attempted in motion pictures here events of the greatest importance in American history—the performance of "The Birth of a Nation" promises to be of unusual importance.

NOW PLAYING

LIBERTY THEATRE

(NEW YORK CITY)

Nights and Saturday Matinee Prices from 25c. to $2.00
Other Matinees 25c, 50c and $1.00. Two Performances Daily
INCLUDING SUNDAYS

HOUSE REMODELED ACCORDING TO SCIENTIFIC ADJUSTMENT OF FOCAL REQUIREMENTS

THE MIGHTIEST SPECTACLE EVER PRODUCED!

D. W. GRIFFITH'S Picture Production Which Will Startle The World!

A RED-BLOODED TALE OF TRUE AMERICAN SPIRIT.

LOVE & ROMANCE 'MIDST HISTORIC SCENES.

COMEDY WHICH RELIEVES THE THRILL OF ADVENTURE.

GRIPPING HEART INTEREST AND SOUL-STIRRING EMOTIONS.

SEE THIS MASTERPIECE

THE BIRTH OF A NATION

TOO GREAT FOR COMPARISONS.

CONCEIVED, INSPIRED AND CREATED IN AMERICA.

THE EXPRESSION OF GENIUS IN A NEW REALM OF ART.

A COMPOSITION OF NATIONAL FIGURES WITH THE UNIVERSE AS ITS BACKGROUND.

RICH IN HISTORIC VALUE

THE MOST REALISTIC AND STUPENDOUS VIEW OF STIRRING EVENTS IN THE DEVELOPMENT OF OUR COUNTRY

FOUNDED ON THOMAS DIXON'S FAMOUS NOVEL AND PLAY

THE CLANSMAN

SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA OF 40

SEATS NOW

18,000 PEOPLE
3,000 HORSES
8 MONTHS
IN THE MAKING
COST
$500,000.00

Better to read these advertisements than to miss the YOU need.

DISPATCH
Pittsburgh, Pa.
MAR 7 - 1915

REV. THOMAS W. DIXON'S more or less grueseque play, "The Clansman," has been put in photo-play form and had its premier in New York the past week under the title of "The Birth of a Nation." It is an elaborate bit of work required eight months to pose, and 8000 people were used for the spectacle alone. It was put on at the Liberty Theatre after extensive advertising, with best seats at $2 each. The consensus of opinion among New York critics is that the photo-drama is mechanically perfect and wonderfully real as a whole, but that the objections that were entered against "The Clansman" as a drama, will exist regarding this film product. The Rev. Mr. Dixon is a fanatic on the Negro question, or "problem," as he calls it, and has used the stage to create race prejudice in this country. In this new venture he has outdone all previous efforts, and the result is many artistic. But the point is made, to conservative citizens, that it is misleading, and it might have been made if the clergyman had utilized his talents in a different direction.

POST DISPATCH
St. Louis, Mo.

"BIRTH OF A NATION," SCORES BIG HIT AS MOVIE PRODUCTION

Play Showing Death of Lincoln Is Said to Be Greatest Thing Attempted Yet on Films.

NEW YORK, March 6.—Narrative photography took a long stride forward Wednesday night when "The Birth of a Nation," which is a version of Thomas Dixon's novel, "The Clansman," was publicly exhibited for the first time at the Liberty Theater.

The audience closely resembled a first night gathering at an important dramatic event.

Two series of episodes required nearly three hours to unfold. The first represented the historical incidents of Sherman's march to the sea, and the burning of Atlanta. The second pictured the assassination of President Lincoln at Ford's Theater. This vivid representation had a curious effect upon the audience. As the pictures were unreeled those present sat in subdued silence but, when the tension ended, they broke forth in prolonged applause.

Other scenes included the fall of Petersburg, Lee's surrender at Appomatox, the uprisings of the Ku Klux Klan, and incidents in the South during the reconstruction period after the Civil War. "Cabiria," the most remarkable picture play shown in this country up to this time, is insignificant compared with this new venture in moviedom.

The entire production is on a scale that will give moving picture enthusiasts a new chance to marvel.

EVENING WORLD
New York City

"BIRTH OF A NATION" TICKETS ARE GUARDED.

When the manager of David W. Griffith's motion picture drama, "The Birth of a Nation," discovered that speculators were buying the cheaper seats and selling them at a large advance, he gave orders that no 50-cent or 75-cent tickets be sold until an hour before the performance. It is stated that no seats are knowingly sold to brokers. If the purchaser of rear balcony or gallery seats has to wait until 1 o'clock afternoons and 7 o'clock evenings, he has the satisfaction of realizing that the speculators cannot get there ahead of him.

Belvp. Times Mar. 13 1915

"The Birth of a Nation."

D. W. Griffith's astonishing production, "The Birth of a Nation," has proved the sensation of years in New York theatricals. When it was announced that a motion-picture production was to be given at the regular $2 scale of prices in the Liberty, skeptics predicted certain failure for so daring an innovation. There has not been a vacant seat in the house since the opening performance, and such enormous crowds have been turned away at every presentation that another theatre could have been filled. Such interest has been manifested in the production and such flattering comment has been devoted to it that it signs point to it making a record which will mark an epoch in metropolitan stage history.

TIMES
SEATTLE, WASH.
MAR 13 1915

Mutual Five-Reel Plays.

D. W. Griffith, the Mutual's chief director who has been kept getting "The Birth of a Nation" in readiness for its New York opening, will likely make a quick return to Los Angeles the first of the week. Before attempting another picture of the same length of the "Nation" he will stage some of the four and five-reel features the Mutual has lined up for future production.

TOWN TOPICS
New York City
MAR 11 1915

THOMAS DIXON'S "The Clansman," in its elaborated form, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Liberty Theatre, owes a great deal of its popularity to a direct appeal to the emotions. Especially is this so during the reconstruction period of the South, when the topic of miscegenation is treated in a most poignant manner. The film is undoubtedly spectacular, the battle scenes being without precedent in the history of the camera.

The Oval.

NOW PLAYING AT THE

LIBERTY THEATRE—NEW YORK

Evenings at 8.05 Sharp - 25c - 50c - 75c - $1
Matinees at 2.10 Sharp - - - 25c and 50c

House Remodelled according to scientific adjustment of focal requirements. — The Loge Seats will be $2 at night and $1 at Matinee Performances.

The Mightiest Spectacle Ever Produced!

D. W. GRIFFITH'S Colossal Production Which Will Startle the World!

A Red-Blooded Tale of True American Spirit.

Love and Romance 'Midst Historic Scenes

Comedy which relieves the Thrill of Adventure.

Gripping Heart Interest and Soul-Stirring Emotions.

THE Birth OF A Nation

Too Great for Comparisons.

Conceived, Inspired and Created in America.

The Expression of Genius in a new Realm of Art.

A Composition of National Figures with the Universe as its Background.

See This Masterpiece—Rich in Historic Value

The Most Realistic and Stupendous View of Stirring Events in the Development of our Country

Founded on Thomas Dixon's Famous Novel and Play

The Clansman

SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA OF 40

SEATS NOW

18,000 People
3,000 Horses
8 Months
In the Making.
Cost
$500,000.00

In writing to advertisers please mention MOTOGRAPHY

CHRONICLE
San Francisco, Cal.
MAR 7 1915

ALCAZAR

THE CLANSMAN," or "The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's startling motion picture, now being shown twice daily at the Alcazar Theater, is said to be the masterpiece in moving pictures. It was amplified from the novel by Thomas Dixon Jr. and produced by D. W. Griffith. It was produced at a cost of over $500,000 and took seven months to complete. It is the greatest battle scenes ever acted before the camera. The private history of Thaddeus Stevens, the great commoner; the assassination of President Lincoln, the formation of the Kuklux Klan, soldiers in actual artillery duels, cavalry charges, bayonet attacks, the struggle between the North and the South and finally the reconstruction period, all are shown. The National Board of Censors paid "The Clansman" this glowing tribute:

"Artistically, historically and morally, it is a step forward—above the greatest that has ever been seen before in this new art."

The record of attendance at the Alcazar Theater is being broken. It is estimated that over 35,000 persons have already witnessed this stupendous production. All immediate bookings at the Alcazar have been canceled in order to allow "The Clansman" to continue for a second week, beginning tomorrow afternoon. There are two performances daily, one at 2 P. M. and the other at 8 P. M.

WILLIAM SIGN IN "THE CLANSMAN" ALCAZAR (MOTION PICTURES)

Telegram
Salt Lake City
MAR 7 - 1915

DIXON'S CLANSMAN' PRODUCED IN 'MOVIES'

"The Birth of a Nation" opened at the Liberty theater, New York, on Wednesday night. It is based upon the familiar novel and play, "The Clansman," by Thomas Dixon, and its performances before the camera is said to have employed 18,000 persons and 3000 horses, and to have taken eight months in the making.

The claim is made that its appeal is for the average theatergoer, and not merely for those who frequent motion picture houses in search of a few minutes' diversion. New York film critics have seen stirring photoplays, such as "Quo Vadis" and "Cabiria," but those have been of foreign manufacture. "The Birth of a Nation" will prove whether the American product of photoplays can equal or surpass the work of his European brother. As from the interest in the film spectacle itself—and it is said to represent on a scale never before attempted in motion pictures here events of the greatest importance in American history—the performance of "The Birth of a Nation" promises to be of unusual importance.

DEMOCRAT
Waterbury, Conn.
MAR 6 - 1915

David W. Griffith's latest spectacular production, "The Birth of a Nation," founded upon "The Clansman," opened its New York engagement Wednesday night at the Liberty theater. The run will be at a price scale similar to that charged at the legitimate theaters. "The Birth of a Nation" has proven a sensation in Los Angeles, where it is playing at Clune's auditorium. Though the coast house seats 3,000, speculators have reaped a harvest on the sale of seats. Prices at the Auditorium have run from $1.50 down, and fee for the Angel City. Newspapers tell of speculators getting $5 and over for single admissions. Griffith devoted eight months to the production of the feature, which has proven so sensational. Twenty thousand people and 3,000 horses are said to have been used to obtain desired effects. For the New York engagement a complete score has been written by Joseph Carl, and the accompaniment will be played by an orchestra of 40. The story begins in the seventeenth century with the coming of the slaves to North America. Its progress is closely related to the various phases of the slavery question and its bearing upon the history of the United States. In the scene of the abolition movement, Sherman's March to the Sea, the burning of Atlanta, the battle of Petersburg, Lee's surrender, Appomattox, Lincoln's assassination, the Ku Klux Klan, the Reconstruction period, the Civil War with its terrible battles, the story is said to be one of great power and intensity.

From NEWS DANBURY, CONN.
Address
Date MAR 4 1915

That much discussed motion picture "The Birth of a Nation" that has had Broadway talking for several weeks as the pioneer "two dollar 'movie'," had its first public performance last night in the Liberty theatre, New York. Judging from the enthusiasm it aroused and the close attention that a large audience gave to it, "The Birth of a Nation" more than fulfilled its promises. It is really a film version of Thomas Dixon's novel "The Clansman." Experienced theatrical men in last night's audience said that a new epoch in motion pictures is reached in "The Birth of a Nation."

1884

From Telegram
Address Portland, Oregon
Date Mar 11 1915

There has been released in New York this week a film called "The Birth of a Nation," which is being shown at $1, with box seats $2. It is based on "The Clansman." Eight months were consumed in making the picture. 18,000 people were engaged, 3000 horses were used and the cost is said to be $500,000. An orchestra of 40 pieces works while the film is flashed.

1884

TRIBUNE
JOHNSTON, PA.
MAR 6 - 1915

David W. Griffith's production of "The Birth of a Nation," was last week shown to President Wilson in the east room of the White House. Griffith came on from the coast especially to attend to the details of the presentation. The picture opens its New York engagement this week at the Liberty Theater.

Examiner
LOS ANGELES, CAL.
MAR 10 1915

Theodore Mitchell is helping D. W. Griffith in putting over "The Birth of a Nation" in New York and has done the job.

Mr. Mitchell states that the success of the photo-drama "is the most terrific thing of the kind ever known in the towns; it will run for months."

"Mitch" has also succeeded in pulling his Bandbox Theater through the threat of being mortgaged [illegible] Washington [illegible] playing [illegible] twice a [illegible] the rest [illegible]

TIMES
Brooklyn, N. Y.
MAR 13 1915

Get Can Stage Drama" With Success, Says $250,000 Producer the employment of several thousand [illegible]. First of all, in the matter of money, a quarter of a million was required, and for the big battle scenes as many as 14,000 men were drawn into action on one day. How did I handle them? By telephone. Standing behind the battery of cameras, I gave my orders, and they were carried out in a way that can be compared only to clockwork. The hill-top on which I stood commanded a view of five miles, and this distance is revealed by the camera. That part of the work was comparatively easy."

"And the hard part?"

"That was a question of individuals," answered Mr. Griffith. "The great problems were the association of Lincoln and the surrender of Lee. There are at least eighteen records of the shooting of Lincoln, all differing in time and many of them conflicting in detail. All this, of course, was a matter of research. But it was necessary to have an actor who looked like Lincoln, and I tried one after another. Lee presented the same difficulty, and there were at least twenty Grants before the picture could be made convincing. The rest was simply a question of management—stage management, if you care to call it that. I began with the so-called 'love interest' scenes and then worked my way to the battle field.

A great many were hurt, but fortunately no one was killed. To guard against catastrophes militiamen were used in the battle scenes. Although protests were made, I decided to show the death of the white girl because of its tragic appeal. In my opinion the plays seen at Broadway theatres season after season show too much of the tragic side of life. We see it every day after day. It is the comic phase, not the comedies, that drew Joseph Robertson gets more [illegible] per week—two dollars"—and [illegible] Mr. Griffith indulged in a [illegible] for playing Hamlet, and I would gladly give one hundred dollars to [illegible] to see the actor like Richard Mansfield in 'Peer Gynt.' In other words, I don't believe the public generally wants to go to the theatre to weep. There is no doubt in my mind that a large part of it is ready and willing to go to the theatre to see life in its tragic, inevitable reality. I shall therefore continue to make the motion picture drama an epic. I like the word," he added with a smile, "to keep others from calling it a 'movie.' And the demand for seats, both here and in Los Angeles, where 'The Birth of a Nation' is in its sixth week, proves that the motion picture drama on a big scale can more than hold its own as a 'two-dollar attraction.'

"The fact is, we simply find ourselves obliged to fight off speculators. There is every indication that the big motion picture play is just beginning to make its influence felt."

"The Birth of a Naiton" an Epic—at $2 Per View.

By Charles Darnton.

[illegible] In a word you have mo[illegible] pictures as David W. Griffith sees them in "The Birth of a Nation," at the Liberty Theatre. [illegible] of course, is a matter of taste. [illegible] Griffith isn't sternly opposed [illegible] the box office. He simply maintains [illegible] poetry and the box office [illegible] something in common.

[illegible] as I caught it. As [illegible] Griffith, he was like a big boy [illegible] over a red apple. Why [illegible] make the most of him[illegible] of all he has moved the [illegible] picture into the two-dollar [illegible] entertainment, and accordingly [illegible] Broadway a new run for its [illegible]. His start is best told in his [illegible]

[illegible] by writing moving picture [illegible] for which I received the magnificent sum of $15."

[illegible] your moving picture [illegible] find encouragement in [illegible] worker, Mr. Griffith. Be[illegible] with the universal [illegible], he served as an actor. [illegible] so far as to act Nance [illegible] Ibsen plays "on the road." [illegible] of this re retains a sense [illegible]. He laughed as he said:

[illegible] has more to learn from [illegible] picture than the moving [illegible] learn from him. In other [illegible] teaches him how to act nat[illegible] When he is called upon to [illegible] bucket of water he actually [illegible] the task instead of standing [illegible] and talking about it. He [illegible] with a real well in a real way, [illegible] a real result. Not since [illegible] Herne have I known an [illegible] talk and act like a human [illegible]

[illegible] at this sweeping [illegible] Mr. Griffith to add: [illegible] will Hodge and John [illegible] wish to be unfair, [illegible] he raised his eyebrows as [illegible] he had been an actor [illegible] in a modest way he spoke [illegible] as a motion picture "pre[illegible]" he said, "the motion [illegible] its appeal through [illegible] grass, the sway[illegible] rippling water. Here [illegible] of its fascination.

"The Birth [illegible] showing it, wrote [illegible] picture plays. [illegible] Dixon's novel, 'The Passeur.' I [illegible] reproduction [illegible] other works [illegible] War and the [illegible] easily to [illegible] instructive and [illegible]

CALL
San Francisco, Cal.
MAR 1[illegible] 1915

Alcazar

The novel, "The Clansman," written by Thomas Dixon Jr., was successful because it had big dramatic moments that gripped the emotions of its readers with never flagging interest, but the motion picture, "The Clansman" or "The Birth of a Nation," which D. W. Griffith has amplified from the novel, is so far beyond the latter that there is absolutely no comparison. Nothing like the success of the startling film play now being shown at the Alcazar Theatre twice daily has ever been seen at that playhouse. Last week this production was shown to President Wilson and the members of his cabinet at the White House.

Sun, Mar. 13-1915

A FILM OF RACE HATE.

A Moving Picture Play Which Stirs Prejudice Against the Negro.

To the Editor of The Sun—Sir: I wish most earnestly to protest against the continued presentation of the moving picture called "The Birth of a Nation," which is a dramatic form of "The Clansman," a sensational and prejudiced version of reconstruction days. We are appalled at the results of sectionalism and race pride in Europe and are urging that every race and nation have a chance for its own free development, yet we are fostering the same pride, hatred and injustice in our own country.

In Richmond a few months ago I saw the pathetic memorials of the brave men and women who championed the "lost cause." We do not wonder at their sensitiveness, but the war was over fifty years ago and it is at this time a crime against our civilization to stir up prejudice and ill will here in the North.

The race against which such plays as this are directed is already handicapped on every side. The National Board of Censors has condemned the film. By all that is American let us condemn it too. Remember that the negro is the only one of our immigrant population who did not come here of his own accord, but "received a pressing invitation." Let us give him a square deal.

Bertha Kinstler.

New York, March 11.

"The Birth of a Nation."

D. W. Griffith's astonishing production, "The Birth of a Nation," has proved the sensation of years in New York theatricals. When it was announced that a motion-picture production was to be given at the regular $2 scale of prices in the Liberty, skeptics predicted certain failure for so daring an innovation. There has not been a vacant seat in the house since the opening performance, and such enormous crowds have been turned away at every presentation that another theatre could have been filled. Such interest has been manifested in the production and such flattering comment has been devoted to it that all signs point to it making a record which will mark an epoch in metropolitan stage history.

MAIL, MAR. 13-15

Love and War Side by Side Film Wizard's Sermon Against Human Hatred

David Griffith, with eyes of a dreamer and chin of a doer, one of the few men who shun platitudes about hard work and success, and he ought to know, because he's one of the best-known humans on this planet.

Beauty is the secret of his rise to fame, the kind of beauty that the whole world loves, but he throws a few ugly realities of life into his screen dramas just to show by contrast virtue and truth in all their glory.

By ZOE BECKLEY.

SOMEBODY recently mentioned the five most popular men in the world to-day as follows: T. R., Albert of Belgium, President Wilson, G. Bernard Shaw—and D. W. Griffith. At the moment the first four were inaccessible, so we could not learn from them the secret of their prominence, nor how it feels to be classed. David Wark Griffith, however, was found upstairs in a storeroom of the Liberty Theatre, in which he officiated the other night at "The Birth of a Nation," and was cornered for interrogation.

Seven years ago, if you had stood at the heart of the world where Broadway crosses Forty-second street, and asked ten thousand passers-by "Who's David Griffith?" probably every one of them would have replied, "Never heard of him."

Disgrace Not to Know Him.

Stand there to-day and ask the first person who comes along, and he will say, "Wowie! Don't you know Griffith? That's his show right down there."

Young Mr. Griffith (he is still in his early thirties) looked honest-and-truly uncomfortable when we asked him please tell us what makes a man great in his line; what makes him stand out from the crowd and be hailed as a "world's most popular."

According to tradition, David Griffith should have drawn a chest-expanding, nostril-dilating breath and replied, "Work, madam! Hard, hard work! That's the secret of all success."

Instead of which he slung one black-and-white checked leg over the other, twirled a gigantic silver ring round and round his finger, looked out the window to the stream of humans in the street and said, "I dunno; how should I know?"

Beauty Is the Secret.

"Oh, come, come," said we. "You are called the greatest moving picture producer in the world, even by people who don't need to say it. They talk of your $300,000 income. They relate how nobody ever dreamed such stunts could be done on the screen. They prophesy that your spectacle will do more to secure world peace than any [illegible] How did you get to your pinnacle—hard work?" we prompted.

"No," said the contrary gentleman; "hard work is only a small part of making a big production. Beauty's the answer. Beauty's my fetish. I don't care what anyone says to the contrary, beauty is what every human being is searching for. In every one's heart is love and tenderness and the honest wish to be good. Beauty is the one road to righteousness."

"But look at your terrific battle scenes; are they beautiful?"

"Truth has its own beauty," replied Mr. Griffith in his nice Louisville, Ky., voice. "War is hideous, but it can be made the background for beauty—beauty of idea.

"We must have contrasts. We must have enough ugliness to bring out beauty. We must have enough w[illegible] flung before the eyes to drive home the blessedness of peace and love.

Even War Has Its Beauty.

"In this play we have so many [illegible] that not one incident of war or [illegible] Lainy is without its companion picture showing the evil results, [illegible] punishment, the suffering that is bound to ensue. In all but the [illegible] scenes we have striven for [illegible] beauty, both visual and spiritual.

"But war cannot be ended by making it comfortable, or by glamorizing it over with talk of glory and patriotism. Or by mere words of praise.

"The hell of it has got to be [illegible] before its inhumanness, its monstrousness, its wastefulness, its [illegible] ness can be realized by the men and women of our nation.

"Our own war is too far in the past to have its horrors vividly pictured in the public mind to-day. By making this spectacle of how the war grew, raged, tore homes and families and hearts to pieces, and of how its construction came slowly through ashes and blood and tears, we show in the only telling way possible the wickedness of war.

"The young men of to-day must [illegible] for themselves what war means, that it is not all a fanfare of trumpets, a flying of the colors, a [illegible] encounter of flashing bayonets [illegible] leads to glorious victory.

"They must be shown that it is part glory to nine parts slime, filth and nasty murder. How can a normal mind hold the empty idea of patriotism worth the misery [illegible] the fellow-man he strikes at [illegible] the woman he leaves at home?

"Then the only beauty of war is its revoltingness, which teaches us to hate hate and love love!" asked [illegible]

How Wars Will End.

"Precisely," answered this [illegible] cut young man, the upper half of whose face is all dreaminess and the lower half all firmness and practicality.

"War's peace, as we have shown, is death. War's beauty is its [illegible] insight, showing us that war's IDEA is wrong, and why. When it is learned by enough people that we be stronghearted and [illegible] enough to refuse to fight like [illegible] and madmen."

Remembering that I had [illegible] woman in the audience at "Birth of a Nation's" opening say, "This has softened my [illegible] never saw the south's side of [illegible] sented before; my bitterness [illegible] gone," I accounted it to [illegible] Griffith.

"If only ten persons feel that," he answered, "I'm repaid [illegible] fort. There is beauty!"

GLOBE MAR. 13-1915

"Of course, this does not apply to things like 'The Birth of a Nation.' That is so exceptional that nothing could hurt its profits. Griffith is the one man in the business who is head and shoulders above the rest of them. Anything he touches is pretty sure to be good."

THE BIRTH OF A NATION" SUMMIT OF PICTURE ART

Griffith Blends Spectacle, History and Drama with Hand of a Master in His Latest Screen Production

Presented by David W. Griffith at the Liberty Theater March 3. Twelve-Reel Historical Drama Founded on Thomas Dixon's Story, "The Clansman." Adaptation Prepared by D. W. Griffith and Frank E. Woods. Produced Under the Direction of D. W. Griffith. Photography by G. W. Bitzer.

Colonel Ben Cameron ..... Henry Walthall
Margaret Cameron, the elder sister, ... Miriam Cooper
Flora, the pet sister ..... Mae Marsh
Mrs. Cameron ..... Josephine Crowell
Tod Cameron ..... Spottiswoode Aiken
Wade Cameron, the second son, ... J. A. Berlinger
Duke Cameron, the youngest son ..... John French
Mammy, their faithful old servant, ... Jennie Lee
Hon. Austin Stoneman, Leader of the House, ... Ralph Lewis
Elsie, his daughter ..... Lillian Gish
Phil, his elder son ..... Elmer Clifton
Lt. Stoneman, his younger son ..... Robert Harron
Jeff, the Village Smithy ..... Wallace Reid
Lydia Brown, Stoneman's mulatto housekeeper, ... Mary Alden
Silas Lynch, mulatto lieutenant governor ..... George Siegmann
Gus, a renegade negro ..... Walter Long
Abraham Lincoln ..... Joseph Henabery
John Wilkes Booth ..... Raoul Walsh
General U. S. Grant ..... Donald Crisp
General Robert E. Lee ..... Howard Gaye

The scoffers came to see "Cabiria," and left overwhelmed with admiration, but still half convinced. It is a triumph of pictorial art, they said, but its appeal is solely to the eye, and we have long granted that province to the motion picture.

They came again to see "The Birth of a Nation." But this time found tongues stilled, minds stunned, as the last scene faded from the screen. Here was drama that wrung tears from a far from impressionable audience, spectacle worthy of epic glories, a treatment of human problems that has furnished seed for endless discussion. And it is a motion picture.

One is sorely tempted to seek safety in platitudes when setting out to review "The Birth of a Nation." The pen falters in vain search for means of expression, and collapses with "The greatest picture ever produced." But this humdrum truth tells only half of the story. It means compassion, and Griffith's greatest triumph in "The Birth of a Nation" is in a field in which he is a pioneer. We may compare the stupendous battle scenes with the spectacular "Cabiria," the intense dramatic passages with moments in a half score of productions, but with its selection and treatment of a vital theme the past offers nothing for comparison.

This is the summit of Griffith's achievement—he has created thought and discussion. Perhaps he may not have moulded that thought to his own ideas, the discussion may more often be disagreement, but that is the penalty of grappling with throbbing themes. You may not approve of the reopening of old sores to furnish a present-day thesis, but Griffith has presented his justification, for you to accept or reject, in the introductory subtitle. "The viewpoint of the South on the great events of the Civil War and the Reconstruction period has never been impartially presented in the pages of history."

That presentment Griffith sets out to give. He chose "The Clansman" for his text, but dug deeper for his foundation. The Stonemans of the North, and the Cameron of Piedmont, N. C., furnish the personal element. Austin Stoneman is a power in Washington; his children, Phil, Tod and Elsie are friendly with the Cameron. The song visit to Piedmont serves to introduce us to the placid beauties of the South of 1860. A few deft touches paint it a contented and carefree South. Then we are whirled into the vortex of the Civil War, and from here on Griffith minglers spectacle and story with the hand of a genius, his eyes set always on the creation of a single impression—that ever mounting, bordering on admiration, for the South of the Reconstruction period, the South of the Ku Klux Klan. His means to the end are twofold, firstly, a portrayal of the bitterness engendered by the Civil War and the heavy hand of desolation it laid upon the South; second, the painting, in broad, scarlet strokes, of the negro granted equality, and the attempt of the radicals of the North to "crush the White South under the heels of the Black South."

The war scenes present the Griffith technique on a broader scale than it has ever been seen. In that showing the burning of Atlanta we look from an eminence across a plain dotted with the figures of the fleeing populace and harassing troops. Tearful women, clinging to their helpless children, and wounded, stumbling soldiers in gray pass before us. The high note is sounded with a masterpiece of double exposure when the flaming city is shown above the panic-stricken flight.

It is difficult to hope that any war scenes will soon surpass those showing the Petersburg battle. For miles away the perspective discloses twisting lines of opposing trenches, cannon and rifle belch, and now and again serried lines of blue or gray surge forth to the charge. Awe-inspiring panoramas are followed by nerve-gripping close-up views of hand-to-hand fighting. The bombardment by night and Sherman's march to the sea are only two of the many other war views that deserve more lengthy mention than is possible here.

But Griffith has his purpose in view, and lest you be carried away by the martial aspect of the conflict, he craftily interposes views of the real sufferers, the "folks at home." From a pulse-quickening charge you are transported to a heart-torn mother learning of the death of her sons. The portrayal of war is undoubtedly one of the strongest of arguments for universal peace, though that is a by-product of the picture and not its underlying motive.

The close of the war finds Ben Cameron returning to a Piedmont that is in ruins. But the South is indomitable and sets out hopefully to rebuild a shattered empire. Then the fanatical mind of Booth removes the South's greatest friend. The scene showing the assassination of Lincoln is a masterpiece of screen technique and historical accuracy. It is real enough to shock.

The showing of events up to this tragedy has taken close to six thousand feet of film. As presented at the Liberty Theater this forms the first act. The second half deals more particularly with "The Clansman" and its terrible story of the suffering of the Reconstruction. Carpetbaggers flood the South, and under the leadership of Stoneman they plan political domination through the control of the enfranchised negro. Little instances of negro aggression, mounting in importance, lead up to the producer's commanding justification for the Ku Klux. Flora, Ben's younger sister, is forced to suicide by jumping from a cliff to escape the attack of a crazed negro. The Ku Klux, organized by Ben Cameron, as the result of an inspiration most cleverly shown, avenges her. A night is chosen to disarm the negroes.

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION'S" [illegible] FORD'S THEATER ON THE FATEFUL NIGHT OF [illegible] 14, 1865.

We are now approaching scenes that, in their swift outpouring of action, surcharged with excitement, reach the pinnacle of intensity. The [illegible] to the Ku Klux is a night of terror for Piedmont. While they overrun the stricken town, terrorizing the whites, the Ku Klux members are gathering at a distant point for the supreme effort. Ben Cameron and his family have been forced to flee, pursued by a howling pack of negroes. Elsie Stoneman seeks aid from Silas Lynch, a mulatto leader of the blacks. His [illegible] a proposal of marriage for her indignantly rejected, he met with silence and solitary imprisonment while preparations are made for an enforced wedding. Flashes take us from the scene to various other parts of the hidden town, then to the Cameron [illegible] in a cabin surrounded by armed negroes, and finally to the Ku Klux Klan. The spectral figures gathering in the shadowed woods. Word is brought of the peril and the mad race to the rescue begun. There we see hundreds upon hundreds of the white-robed figures, as they stretch out in pale relief against the night darkness.

The pitch is heightened by every device of the Griffithian art until the climax, with the conflict in the streets of Piedmont, the rescue of Elsie and [illegible] of the Cameronns, and the day dawns and the Ku Klux triumphant parade.

The love story of the main characters is [illegible] and here the picture could well end. But "even Homer nods" and trite [illegible] passages are dragged in to [illegible] peace moral. They seem [illegible] with the wonders that [illegible] in their application to [illegible] every other respect is de[illegible] the hand of a master crafts[illegible]

[illegible] such as only Griffith can [illegible] Walthall's work is at all times [illegible] His moment of agony on [illegible] that will not be easily [illegible] from the memory. Mae Marsh surpasses the finest properties of her admirers as Flora Cameron. Her every move is carefully planned acting, yet so clever is the art that it is not acting. But why attempt to give due credit to such a cast? Lillian Gish, George Siegman, Ralph Lewis, Josephine Crowell, Spottiswoode Aiken, Mary Alden, Jennie Lee, one and all, principals and minor characters, down even to the extras, seem to be players of ability. Miriam Cooper's work causes surprising disagreement. There are those who praise her expression, others who criticise the over-stress of placidity.

But the hand of Griffith overshadows all. Telling his story fearlessly and masterfully, at times he cuts deep beneath the skin, till one must question the brutality while praising the art. Times are when he seems more the skillful lawyer than the impartial historian, but never is he a boresome pleader. If there is to be a greater picture than "The Birth of a Nation," may we live to [illegible]

W.

HENRY WALTHALL AS BEN CAMERON, LEADER OF THE KU KLUX KLAN, AS THEY GATHER IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

Eve. Sun. Mar. 13-1915.

LIBERTY—D. W. Griffith's astonishing production, "The Birth of a Nation," has proved the sensation of years in New York theatricals. When it was announced that a motion picture production was to be given at the regular theatre scale of prices in the Liberty, skeptics predicted certain failure for so daring an innovation. There has not been a vacant seat in the house since the opening performance and such enormous crowds have been turned away at every presentation that another theatre could have been filled. Such interest has been manifested in the production, and such flattering comment has been devoted to it that all signs point to it making a record which will mark an epoch in metropolitan stage history.

[illegible] - Mar 13-15

[illegible] Griffith's production of "The [illegible] Nation," at the [illegible]

N. Y. Commercial Mar 13 1915

D. W. Griffith's astonishing production "The Birth of a Nation" has proven a sensation in New York theatricals. When it was anuounced that a motion picture production was to be given at the regular $2 scale of prices in the Liberty, skeptics predicted certain failure. There has not been a vacent seat in the house since the opening performance and crowds have been turned away at every presentation. Such interest has been manifested in the production that all signs point to its making a record in Metropolitan stage history.

Journal of Commerce MAR 13 1915

MOTION PICTURE NOTES.

D. W. Griffith's striking film, "The Birth of a Nation," has proven the greatest picture sensation of the year. When it was announced that $2 was to be the price for seats at a motion picture, theatrical managers laughed, but there has hardly been a vacant seat in the house since [illegible] follows: [illegible] fully report: [illegible] circus that used to thrill the billboard-gazers [illegible] announcement of "1000 Performers 10[illegible]

Globe Mar 13 15

"Birth of a Nation" [illegible] the Liberty Theatre [illegible] a Breaker of Records

Henry Walthall
as "The Little Colonel."

D. W. Griffith's production "The Birth of a Nation" has proven the sensation of years in New York theatricals. When it was announced that a motion picture production was to be given at the regular $2 scale of prices in the Liberty, skeptics predicted certain failure for so daring an innovation.

There has not been a vacant seat in the house since the opening performance, and such enormous crowds have been turned away at every presentation that another theatre could have been filled.

Such interest has been manifested in the production and such flattering comment has been devoted to it that all signs point to it making a record which will mark an epoch in metropolitan stage history.

Moving Picture News and Views

By FREDERICK JAMES SMITH.

"The Birth of a Nation" is doing a smashing business at the Liberty. Now that the master photoplay is safely over, D. W. Griffith is going back to the coast shortly.

Eve. Journal, Mar. [illegible]

SUN-MAR. 14-15

Ideas and Actions

RISKING HIS LIFE ON AN 85-MILE'S AN HOUR RACING CAR TO GET THE FAMOUS RIDE OF THE CLANSMEN

mattox surrender, of the President's assassination at Ford's Theatre, of the ride of the Ku Klux Klan which saved the Piedmont region of South Carolina from the carpetbagger regime. One curious observer calculates that there are 200,000 details in the whole picture. No one is pre-

AMUSEMENTS.

D. W. Griffith's astonishing production, "The Birth of a Nation," has proven the sensation of years in New York theatricals. When it was announced that a motion picture production was to be given at the regular $2 scale of prices in the Liberty skeptics predicted certain failure for so daring an innovation.

From SUN

Address: Baltimore, Md.

Date MAR 14 1915

CHEER KU KLUX KLAN

Southerners will be surprised to hear that one of the features in "The Birth of a Nation" that the big New York audience never fails to cheer is the dash of the Ku Klux Klan across the films. It was feared that this play was so strongly pro-Southern that it would not take with Northern audiences, but the largest crowds ever seen in the Liberty Theatre have paid their $1 to $2 to see it.

Estab 184

From POST

Address Washington, D. C.

Date 1915

HERALD

Washington, D. C.

MAR 11 1915

There's an interesting man in town. Here's proving it. His salary is $200,000 a year. He earns it. He won't talk about it.

D. W. Griffith, the foremost producer of moving pictures, blew into town to be on hand for the picture, "The Birth of a Nation," and incidentally introduced New York to the habit of parting with two whole dollars for a moving picture show.

The new film runs 13,600 feet or more and is a thousand feet longer than "Cabiria,"—up to this time the most pretentious picture. For many of the scenes the actual setting is more than five miles in length and one village was constructed and afterward destroyed.

Established

Sketches of Little Old New York by O. McIntyre

NEW YORK, March 9.—If Vernon Castle doesn't behave some rough man is going to strike him on the wrist so hard that he will have to buy a new watch.

William Morris, it seems, is not convinced that the Castles are the best dancers in The White Light Zone. He has said so openly and even dared them to meet Samya and Albert, a pair dancing on The New York Roof. Vernon replied on pink paper that he suspected Morris was just trying to get advertising and he simply wouldn't be a party to such a rude scheme — so there! He invited Morris to come over to his theatre and see the S. R. O. sign out nightly.

"But don't come yourself says the note saucily, "because I'll have you ejected." Morris replied with some carefully selected back talk and with the letter sent a small wooden goat which seemed appropriate for the occasion.

There's an interesting man in town. His salary is $200,000 a year. He earns it. He will not talk about it.

D. W. Griffith, the foremost producer of moving pictures, blew into town to be on hand for the picture, "The Birth of a Nation"—and incidentally introduce to New York the habit of parting with two whole dollars for a moving picture show.

The new film runs 13,600-feet, or more than a thousand feet longer than "Cabiria" up to this time the most pretentious picture. For many of the scenes the actual setting is more than five miles in length and one village was constructed and after-[illegible] destroyed.

From STAATSZEITUNG

Address: New York City.

Date MAR 14 1915

Wandelbilder.

D. W. Griffith's sensationell großartige Wandelbilderserie "The Birth of a Nation", nach Thomas Dixon's berühmter Erzählung "The Clansman", ist als Kolossal-Attraktion zweimal täglich, mit einem Symphonie-Orchester von 40 Mann, im Liberty [illegible]

DOINGS IN FILMDOM.

Motion Pictures on View During the Current Week.

D. W. Griffith's big spectacular film drama, "The Birth of a Nation," after the novel and play "The Clansman," by Thomas Dixon, is still the supreme moving picture attraction of the city and it is drawing almost capacity audiences twice daily to the Liberty Theatre, where it is now showing. It is a stirring drama of civil war days, with many historical events shown in minute detail, and there is a pleasing vein of romance and adventure which runs through the film.

AMERICAN, MAR. 14-15

. . .

Day by day, the picture plays (so called) are growing more like dramas. The authors of such shows as "Hypocrites," "The Juggernaut," and "The Birth of a Nation," are trying to construct plays besides telling stories. New forms of entertainment like the "movies" need an entirely new technique. It is still imperfect. But it has passed beyond its infancy.

The writer of these lines is not ashamed to say that of all the recent "plays" which he has seen, none has in some ways seemed more wondrously effective to him than the Griffith-Dixon acted story at the Liberty.

In a less ambitious, but appealing fashion "The Juggernaut" is also most effective. So is the near-play "Hypocrites"—which is almost if not quite real drama.

It is worth noting that the impression made by these "movies" is enhanced by the artful use of music.

The haunting Southern themes in the great Griffith show especially, are helpful. They create "atmosphere" and "mood" and various other things summed up in German by "Stimmung."

. . .

From LEADER

Address: Cleveland, Ohio

Date MAR 6 1915

. . .

"The Birth of a Nation," said to be the biggest motion picture ever shown, has just commenced its sojourn in New York. It is derived from Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," and begins away back when slaves were being imported to the American South from Africa and comes down to the scenes following the close of the Civil war. Thousands of persons were engaged in the making of the film, which took eight months. There are great troupes of soldiers, slaves and battles galore, with a faithful reproduction of historical scenes, as for instance the assassination of Lincoln, and the result seems to be the last word in camera dramaturgy. Prices range from twenty-five cents to $2 and big business is reported.

Est 188

From STANDARD UNION

Address: Brooklyn, N. Y.

Date MAR 14 1915

LIBERTY, MANHATTAN—D. W. Griffith's astonishing production, "The Birth of a Nation," has proven the sensation of years in Manhattan theatricals. When it was announced that a motion picture production was to be given at the regular $2 scale of prices in the Liberty, skeptics predicted certain failure for so daring an innovation. There has not been a vacant seat in the house since the opening performance and such enormous crowds have been turned away at every presentation that another theatre could have been filled. Such interest has been manifested in the production and such flattering comment has been devoted to it that all signs point to it making a record which will mark an epoch in metropolitan stage history.

Estab

RECORD

GREENSBORO, N. C.

MAR 16 1915

"THE MOUNTAIN RAT."

Today at the Piedmont.

Another picture, the product of the labors of the master producer, David W. Griffith, the man that produced "The Birth of a Nation," at the Piedmont today.

Press

Griffith Talks of Movies of Future

D. W. GRIFFITH, producer of "The Birth of a Nation," the great moving picture spectacle which he says is but the pioneer in the progress of the silent drama.

is rather difficult to get at David Wark Griffith, the young Kentuckian who produced "The Birth Nation." Just try to interview after a performance and you'll to wait until six elderly ladies been told by him, each one six that he's delighted to have met He's so pleased to have her sug- n about the assassination of Lin- ncoln. If she were there on that rable night—— n there is another person who see him. It's some one who lived old Cameron home in South a. So far there are forty appli- for this honor. To get at him in eatre is out of the question. Mr. h suggested going somewhere for that he knows anything about e frankly confesses. No Ken- n would ever own up to so soft eachment, even if he were a con- r in the matter. Mr. Griffith s knowledge even of his na- drink, the julep. If one knows ing about him already—for in- that his father was a Jacob Griffith, a brevet brigadier gen- the Confederate army and a lose friend of "Little Joe" , he'll tell a little more about lly. For instance, if you hap- to know that his grandmother hirley Carter of Virginia and er an Oglesby of Georgia, and him in a corner he'll own up father just happened to select e a name. There's a long k of it which he swears no- erested in hearing—how a and her in Colonial times be- to—since you already know it— sh family of noble birth. Bay- as the family name. Then his got in a church and civil row and and was exiled, and was so h his family and the King and y generally on that side of the t he swore the name shouldn't h him. Instead he chose Grif- Griffith it has been since.

n in the Direst of Poverty.

the beginning was the be- f most young sons who had the Confederate war. They poor. David Griffith takes ide in how poor he has been. luck has turned and there s in sight he solemnly ob- t he doesn't believe in luck. matter of working eighteen " he says. And that after n in the game a great . How did he start?

a play. It was called "The e Girl." James K. Hackett t and everybody concerned rupt. While he was writing and studying the art of hand, he became interested pictures. As a side line he rice for $15 and $25, and hese. It was during this he invented about every- rn there is about moving He trained the best-known biggest motion picture con- company. Mary Pickford these.

been easy and profitable the start by any means. ture impresario has all d uncertainties a regular . For instance, the night a Nation" was produced was cold with fear that ork was going to count He had put his time and art into it and as yet had ertainty out. Even when claimed it greater than wasn't sure. He wasn't utely that it was going the line reaching to ue assembling before the declares: "Nobody can fool the moving picture public. Your actors have got to be the real thing. In this picture every Northerner or Southerner of good birth has been portrayed by actors who not only have breeding, but birth. There is no faking an aristocrat. You can make up a villain or a strong-arm man, or any of the others, but to play ladies and gentlemen you must get ladies and gentlemen. I have done this. The 'little colonel,' the hero and lover of the Northern girl, is Henry Walthall, grandson of General Walthall of Mississippi. The girls chosen to play the daughters of Dr. Cameron of South Carolina, are to the manner born.

"There was very much more to do before the photographs began to be taken than afterward," he said. "I had five historians digging for months before I started to select the cast. It is not generally known that General Grant himself threatened to take up the sword again—the second time in defense of the South, when he found that the promises he had made to Lee were not kept, when the rule of the carpet-bag politicians was at its height.

"In the scene in Ford's Theatre in Washington I have incorporated bits I found in a girl's diary kept during that time. She told of being at the theatre on the memorable night and how she and several of her friends noticed Booth and commented on his good looks. This is shown on the film as the murderer makes his way to the President's box. It went to infinite pains to get everything right in detail. It is known that Lincoln felt a premonition of evil; that he got up and put on his cloak, he was suddenly so cold before the fatal shot was fired. The great difficulty about the piece was getting a good likeness of Lincoln. I had forty photographs to work from, but no two of them looked alike."

Films to Supplant Books.

Mr. Griffiths thinks that the art of the moving picture will in time do away with books of history. "What child ever recalls the battles drilled into its head with their tiresome dates?" he asked. "But what child that ever saw this film would hesitate a moment in retracing the Civil War, what led to it, and to what it led—the birth of a new nation.

"In time I believe moving pictures will replace all plays. On the stage one can get only great moments, the high lights. On the screen we see the gradual development, the little things that crystallize into the big issues. 'The Birth of a Nation' is the most ambitious thing so far that has been attempted. 'Cabiria' was a magnificent spectacle; but it lacked drama. In our play are woven all the great primitive appeals that go to make drama. Love and hate, lust and revenge, pity and lack of it, brother against brother—all the great elemental emotions of mankind are woven into it.

"There will be bigger spectacles than this produced. The motion field is all that is left to the soldier of fortune, to the picturesque adventurer. Once we had the Eldorado of the West, and the forty-niners rushed to it. My father was among them. Now if one wants a real thrill one must enlist in this business. All the daring deeds that are done are for the most part done before the camera. True, there's Europe and her war," he agreed, "but that is a sort of family affair and pretty hard to get in. One can't get in at all with a camera. And the modern historian has to have a camera. It is the instrument with which history is beginning to be written. In time it will be used exclusively in place of typewriters. We may not live to see it, but one of these days each house will be supported by pillars," he indicated a fluted gold pillar that supports the Venus-y roof of the tea room at the "Knickerbocker"—that open as receptables of films. When one wants to refresh one's mind about a historical incident there won't be anybody trekking to an encyclopedia to read what happened on such and such occasion; instead some one will rise and turn on the screen and a story that needs no words will be flashed before the crowd. By that time, I assure you, the motion picture will be as familiar to everybody, its operation, as putting another record on a phonograph is today."

LIBERTY.

D. W. Griffith's photo production, "The Birth of a Nation," has proved a sensation in New York. There has not been a vacant seat in the Liberty Theatre since the opening performance and enormous crowds have been turned away at every presentation. Such interest has been manifested in the production that all signs point to it having a record run.

From TRIBUNE

Address: Chicago, Ill.

Date MAR 20 1915

Mayor's Wife Censors "The Birth of a Nation."

Griffith's filming of "The Clansman," called "The Birth of a Nation," which has aroused discussion wherever shown, and over which the national board of censorship is now engaged in a lively row, will be shown in Chicago without a foot of film slashed and without the municipal board of censors having inspected it.

Mrs. Carter Harrison, herself a scenario writer, and Charles Fitzmorris, the mayor's secretary, had the film shown them. Later Mr. Fitzmorris told Maj. Funkhouser it was O. K. and an official indorsement directed by the mayor's secretary assured its presentment without censorial mutilation. Its managers are said to be planning to show it at the Illinois this summer at $2 prices.

From HERALD

Address: Washington, D. C.

Date MAR 14 1915

THEATRE TALK FROM NEW YO

By JAMES S. METCAL

New York, March 13.—This is where the movies score. From both the financial and dramatic point of view the most important amusement production, not only of the current week but for weeks past, is a moving picture. It is not only playing in a regular theater usually devoted to regular theatrical attractions but it is asking and getting regular theatrical prices—two dollars for orchestra chairs and the other seats in the house on the same basis. That this could be done by any moving picture was scouted by the theatrical managers and the ticket speculators paid absolutely no attention to the new venture. Now that the Liberty Theater is twice daily and Sundays holding bigger audiences than ever before in its history and with a big advance sale, the speculators are kicking themselves for their lack of foresight and trying to get even by selling the 25-cent gallery tickets to the unwary at a dollar on the assurance that they are the best seats in the house, an assurance the more readily accepted as no one in New York ever heard of moving pictures being shown at regular theater prices.

Biggest of the Movies.

This exceptional attraction is called "The Birth of a Nation" and is to some extent founded on Thomas Dixon's Ku Klux story "The Clansman." A large part of its appeal to all kinds of people is due primarily to the tremendous events in comparatively recent American history with which it deals, and almost as much to the fact that it is produced by D. W. Griffiths, who has been in the moving picture business since its very beginning and who knows how to utilize every one of its resources to affect the public.

On a thread of primitive romance, not important to the experienced theatergoer but dear to the heart of the movie fan, are strung tremendous battle scenes reproduced from the civil war, a remarkable showing of Ford's Theater with its audience and performance the evening Lincoln was assassinated, the assassination itself in vivid depiction and, most exciting of all, thrilling episodes during the period of negro domination in the Southern States and its final wiping out by the mysterious Ku Klux Klan. For real dramatic interest, and its drama is so intense that it brings the audiences to their feet as no theatrical play has in many, many years, we are given in absolute action the great story of the contest between the races, with the whites fighting for the honor of their women and their very lives, ranged on one side and on the other the negroes drunk with their new power and urged on by self-seeking politicians of the vilest sort.

Effect on Audiences.

It is a curious fact that although the film runs continuously with an eight-minute intermission, for practically three hours, which is longer than the acting time of a more than usually long drama, the audience does not for a moment lose interest and is in a condition of thrill during most of the performance. The great majority of the spectators leave the theater in a state of mental, emotional and physical limpness. This is true of experienced playgoers and those who rarely see moving pictures quite as much as of the regular fans.

In the view of the theatergoers even the careful production has all the characteristic defects of the moving picture. Producers of picture-plays are strenuous in maintaining that their methods are correct and that a study of the moving picture public has shown them that when they try to approach the conventions of the theatrical stage their spectators lose interest in the story that is being unfolded. Therefore they insist on the unnatural speed of the moving characters, upon the interruption in scenes, the quick alternation backward and forward of disconnected episodes and the apparent repetition of things that have been seen before. All these are in a way annoying to the regular theatergoer and, if he is not mistaken in his understanding of himself, diminish rather than enhance his interest.

The secret of the whole thing probably lies in the fact that the largest part of the moving picture public has been educated and developed by moving pictures. It has not been taken from the theaters but has been created mostly by the pictures themselves. It compares the pictures it sees not with any other way of telling a story but only with pictures it has seen. Therefore the producers may be right in their viewpoint that they know what their public wants and that it would be a mistake to try to make their methods conform to the requirements of any other kind of intelligence.

Mar. 16-15

Pictures.

drama film called is the principal fea- way Theatre. Thurs- will be changed. Nation" continues to ly, including Sundays, atre.

From CITIZEN

Address: Brooklyn, N. Y.

Date MAR 14 1915

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

Has Proven a Sensation in New York Theatricals.

D. W. Griffith's astonishing production, "The Birth of a Nation," has proves the sensation of years in New York theatricals. We [illegible] "The Birth of a Nation," now ment at the Liberty Theatre, admission will hardly be a managers on Broadway. After power of spectacu[illegible]

rk, 188

HGUS

ALBANY, N. Y.

persons and 3,[illegible] produce the vast tacular effects desired. This outdoes even 654 dicus that used to fill the billboard-gaz- nouncement of 1000 Performers 10

From FREE PRESS
MILWAUKEE, WIS.
Address
Date MAR 11 1915

INTOLERABLE.

We are glad to note that at least one New York newspaper has the understanding and the courage to protest editorially against the outrage of the moving picture spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation." We quote from the New York Evening Post:

A weakness of the national board of censorship of moving pictures is clearly brought out by the production in this city, despite its disapproval, of the film play which is based on Thomas Dixon's noxious novel, "The Clansman." A considerable portion of this film play is contrary to good morals, if not a direct incitement to crime. It is a deliberate effort to arouse racial prejudice and to inflame a large class of our citizens. Fortunately, 35 per cent of the moving picture houses are guided in little by the decision of the national board; but the manager of this enterprise place dollars above all else, and so are continuing to produce the play. "The Clansman," it will be remembered, was ordered out of a number of theaters, notably in Philadelphia by order of the mayor, when produced in the dramatized form. An effort in the City of Brotherly Love to enjoin the mayor from preventing the production resulted in failure, the courts upholding him. It seems, therefore, a scandalous outrage that this same play in another form should be allowed in New York. Apparently there is no provision of law to cover it, since it is not indecent. But some step must be taken promptly to extend the law so as to empower the police commissioner or the courts to control a revolting performance of this kind.

The fact that this film represents the "last word" in motion picture production, surpassing, it is said, even "Cabiria" and "Neptune's Daughter," makes its menace all the more potent. And just as its sponsors have exhausted the resources of production to lure the public into the acceptance of their dangerous thesis of race antagonism, so have they harnessed up all the patriotic associations of this anniversary year to add propulsive power to their hateful doctrine.

Thus, in the very year when our black fellow citizens are straining every nerve to accomplish an adequate exposition of their progress during their brief half century of freedom, certain white men of southern blood are so lost to all considerations of humanity, civilization and national well-being as to set in motion a powerful pictorial argument in favor of considering the negro a primitive brute, amenable only to threat and violence.

Can the press that only a few weeks since was celebrating "the great emancipator" stand idly by while this [illegible] offense is committed, an offense rendered trebly hateful because it skulks behind his gracious name?

From EAGLE
Address: Brooklyn, N. Y.
Date MAR 14

D. W. Griffith's remarkable production, "The Birth of a Nation," is proving the motion picture sensation of the year at the Liberty Theater.

N. Y. AMERICAN—MAR 14 15

D. W. Griffith's astonishing production, "The Birth of a Nation," has proven the sensation of years in New York theatricals. When it was announced that a motion picture production was to be given at the regular $2 scale of prices in the Liberty skeptics predicted certain failure for so daring an innovation.

From TRIBUNE
Address: New York City
Date MAR 14 1915

D. W. Griffith's production "The Birth of a Nation," has proven the sensation of years in New York theatricals. Such interest has been manifested in the production that all signs point to it making a record run.

From
Address: New York City
Date MAR 14 1915

„The Birth of a Nation".

Dr. Giffith's erstaunliches Film-Schauspiel „The Birth of a Nation" ist immer noch die Sensation von New York. Man hatte viel erwartet, als bekannt gegeben worden war, daß man $2 für einen Parkettsitz im Liberty für diese Novität verlangte. Und nun hat das Gebotene noch jede Erwartung übertroffen. Wie gut, wie interessant und wie packend die Wirkung des gewaltigen Film-Schauspieles ist, kann man daraus erkennen, daß trotz der hohen Preise jede Vorstellung ausverkauft war.

Mae Marsh und Henry Walthal in „Birth of a Nation" (Liberty).

Published:

"BIRTH OF A NATION" AROUSES THE IRE OF NEGROES' FRIENDS

The first active step in the opposition of those who are interested in negro welfare to "The Birth of a Nation," which is enjoying a successful run at the Liberty Theatre, was taken on Thursday, when D. W. Griffith, the producer of the film, and Harry Aitken, president of the Mutual Film Corporation, were summoned to the Jefferson Market Court.

It is the contention of the board of directors of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the complainants, that the play will stir race hatred and is, therefore, a public nuisance. Magistrate House selected Monday as the time for a hearing in the West Farms Police Court, to which he is transferred from the Jefferson Market Court. Martin Littleton will represent the defendants, and W. J. Osborn the association.

Among the members of the board of directors who oppose the production are Dr. John H. Holmes, Oswald Garrison Villard, Dr. J. E. Spingarn of Columbia, Paul Kennedy, Charles H. Studin and Arthur B. Spingarn.

"The play will stir race hatred, prejudice and disorder," said Mr. Villard on Thursday. "The producers were given an opportunity to withdraw the play peaceably, but did not do so, so the association has taken this step. It is a moving picture version of the play, 'The Clansman,' which was stopped in many cities."

"The Birth of a Nation" Rothapfel [illegible] motion picture [illegible] the greatest [illegible] W. Griffith [illegible]

Erstaunliches Rotoffel-Attraction zweimal täglich mit einem [illegible] Liberty [illegible]

Another [illegible] labors of [illegible] W. Griffith

[illegible] Theatrical History

[illegible] indeed, yet Mr. Griffith [illegible] quietly and says: "I'm glad every [illegible] the film."

"[illegible] pictures," he [illegible] interview [illegible] are, of course, [illegible] the technical [illegible] does not [illegible] the acting, the [illegible] effects that he will [illegible] individuals." [illegible]

"Does the little country girl look like the little country girls he has seen? When she comes to the city and is unable to get [illegible] does she act like she in her position [illegible]? When the villain pursues her, does he do it as a villain would? And, most important of all, when the hero sees her and says, 'I love you,' and she says, 'And I love you, too,' do they act as human beings in love are supposed to act? These are the questions with which he will concern himself.

"In this connection, I think there is less overacting on the screen than on the stage. There was a time when motion picture actors and actresses attempted the Continental method of expression by means of pantomime. But it didn't go with an American public. They had to stop it, and now I try to make everybody do everything as naturally as they can. That, after all, is to be the test of a photo-play. Is it natural from beginning to end?

No Pantomime in It.

"Legitimate actors and actresses making a film often think it is a question of pantomime. They soon find they are wrong. There's no pantomime in it. Deprived of the power of the voice many are unable to express themselves as adequately as they should.

"With a very few exceptions, I think that the player from the legitimate, no matter how capable he or she be on the stage, is not able to compete with the experienced screen actress. Take Mae Marsh, for example. What legitimate actress could take her place in 'The Birth of a Nation'? Again, who could play Apple Pie Molly in 'Home, Sweet Home,' follow that with the half-witted sister in 'The Escape' and that with her present role? I believe very few could get away with it, make each role a creation and, above all, a natural one."

"Now, as some one once remarked, history repeats itself. Therefore, a true rendition of an historical theme is likely to seem natural to the people of to-day or of to-morrow. Therefore, after casting about for a subject, I chose 'The Birth of a Nation' for our theme.

"Pursuing our idea, 'Seeing a Motion Picture,' and taking 'The Birth of a Nation' for our analysis from the standpoint of the theatregoer, we come to a point about which there has been some discussion on the part of a few wilfully unfamiliar with the facts, or otherwise. It is whether or not the picture tells the truth.

"I feel sure that it does, and my view is supported by the great majority of those who have seen it, among them Senators, writers, students of history, all men and women who should know whereof they speak. Some who lived in the period it represents.

"Mr. Dixon's novel, 'The Clansman,' upon which the latter part of the picture is based, has never been seriously questioned. Yet to be on the safe side I have toned it down considerably. I have done everything in my power to show that the money of a generous North was misused by a few to gain power for themselves, a common sequel to a war, and that the negro is not to blame for what happened. I put in subtitles to that effect till I was tired of reading them.

"In fact, in the picture, it is through the efforts of the two faithful old slaves that the white family is saved. I think that no one can honestly believe I have attacked any section of the country or any people in making 'The Birth of a Nation.'

"But the people of the United States and of the world should know the truth about the reconstruction period. The schoolbooks used throughout the country are lamentably one-sided. The antithesis to 'Uncle Tom's Cabin' has never been given to us before. The story is true to history and therefore it is natural.

"Now we come to the acting. Is it up to the standard or above that set by films that have gone before. Opinion seems to be unanimous that it is the latter. Naturally, I think so, but I'm leaving it to others.

Hard to Pick Particular Stars.

"Many critics have said that in a cast of such excellence it is without impossible to pick those who shine above the others. Some have thought Henry Walthall deserving of the greatest praise. At any rate, none have said the acting was unnatural.

"If the theatregoer agrees he will pay the players what I believe to be the highest compliment. 'Their work is never artificial,' he will say.

"Now we come to the production in general, taking into account the lighting effects and the scenes, the acting and the story. Does it thrill the audience? Does it hold them throughout its length and send them home still trembling? If so the man who asks 'How to use a motion picture' may consider it a good one.

"Four years since 'The Birth of a Nation' opened the entire audience has jumped to its feet and shouted out loud. Therefore the critic may admit that the motion picture can and does interest and thrill an intelligent audience.

"I have been criticised for my use of the flash-back. After seeing 'The Birth of a Nation' I think the man who has seen many films or the man who has seen none is willing to learn [illegible] do so [illegible] A [illegible] flash-back that the film owes its punch.

"The quadruple climax, with the scene jumping from place to place and situation to situation, and the Ku Klux Klan riding like the wind to the rescue will seem more thrilling both to the 'fan' and the man who has never given himself an opportunity to become one than will any other part of the picture. The flash-back is responsible.

"And is the flash-back natural? More so than many a theatric device. What on earth was Dickens's 'We left Oliver Twist seated by the fire' but a flash-back? The idea is not new. I didn't originate it, as I've been accused of doing."

That is the keynote of Mr. Griffith's character. According to him, he has never originated anything. The fact remains that he makes use of things in the production of photo-plays that no one else ever thought of appropriating. But he doesn't even say that.

Instead he says, "So and so can be done. I'd better do it before somebody else does."

Here he loses sight of the fact that he's "three or four jumps ahead of every one else," and that he's gaining at every step.

[illegible] Theatrical Historian

[illegible] Everywhere.

[illegible] Theatre [illegible] an exhibitor [illegible] producer agrees [illegible] goes [illegible] of a Na[illegible] [illegible] will [illegible]

[illegible] five miles in [illegible] was constructed and after [illegible] 40 more to [illegible]

[illegible] Turan's heriloeter [illegible]

Morning Telegraph Mar. 16 - 15

CROWDS AT THE LIBERTY.

The "Birth of a Nation" Honors Great Audiences.

D. W. Griffith's astonishing production "The Birth of a Nation," has proven the sensation of years in New York theatricals. When it was announced that a motion picture production was to be given at the regular $2 scale of prices in the Liberty, skeptics predicted certain failure for so daring an innovation.

There has not been a vacant seat in the house since the opening performance, and such enormous crowds have been turned away at every presentation that another theatre could have been filled.

From EVENING TELEGRAM
Address: Philadelphia, Pa.
Date MAR 1 2 1915

"MOVIE" SHOW FREE FOR LEGISLATORS

State Exhibitors' League Will Display Films to Demonstrate What Public Approves.

OPPOSING CENSORSHIP

HARRISBURG, March 12.—The Motion Picture Exhibitors' League will display films before the members of the Legislature.

The exhibition will be given when the censorship repeal bill introduced by Mr. Stein, Pittsburgh, will be discussed at a public hearing before the House Committee on Judiciary General, to show the natural upward moral tendency of the silent drama. It will support the contention that the blood-and-thunder and the suggestive theme are disappearing from the screen. It will be argued that public demand is responsible for this, and not the censor, and that there is no need of censorship.

The league aims to demonstrate to the lawmakers that the demand is for films of plays which have been successful on the legitimate stage, and for clean, bright plays which originate with the screen. The movie men will assert that this trend is due to public sentiment.

Several speakers will point out that the great mass of the patrons of the movies do not as a rule patronize the expensive drama, but nevertheless desire to see plays which have been acted at the high class theatres.

"The attempt of the State censor of films to prejudice the minds of the legislators will be counteracted, and the utter recklessness and inadequacy of censorship will be shown them when we have the opportunity of presenting our side of the case," J. H. Zerbey, of Reading, president of the league, said today.

"The patron of the moving picture theatre wants to see bright, clean plays, preferably motion picture versions of those successful on the legitimate stage or of popular novels," he continued. "The patrons want to see well-known players in these film plays. Such players are not going to tarnish their fame by appearing in questionable film plays, any more than the motion picture theatre proprietor is going to endanger his patronage by presenting objectionable films. These are reasons why the screen will censor itself."

Some of the motion picture men who saw the exhibition given by Censor Breitinger to the legislators are at a loss to understand why he showed in these scraps of films which he claimed to have cut out of various photoplays some scenes which are still being shown in this State.

One of the films which Mr. Breitinger showed the legislators and which he declared was the highest development of motion picture production was "The Birth of a Nation," the moving picture dramatization of Rev. Thomas Dixon's novel, "The Clansman." This film play was produced by D. W. Griffith, who is known as the "Balasco of the Movies."

At a recent meeting of the League for Political Education in New York City, Mr. Griffith expressed his belief in the inadequacy and futility of censorship of moving pictures, except those intended for children. He said that plays for adults should be censored only as books, magazines, newspapers and stage plays are censored—by public opinion. "What will do in Cincinnati may be thrown out in Philadelphia," and Chicago may not tolerate what passes on Philadelphia, he said. "Los Angeles may not tolerate a film that San Francisco allows. The result is that we could never produce plays that would satisfy all."

From EVENING TELEGRAM
Address: New York City.
Date MAR 1 6 1915

AT the Liberty Theatre "The Birth of a Nation," with its absorbing story, its enormous cast and its gigantic spectacular effects, is the sensation.

SUN, MAR. 16-15

S ON THE FILMS.

Wynne Matthison in "The nor's Lady" at the Strand.

Wynne Matthison in a picturization of David Belasco's production of "The Governor's Lady" was seen at the Strand Theatre yesterday as the leading attraction of the bill. There were other comedy features and the excellent Strand musical programme.

"Sunshine Molly," with Lois Weber, is the first half of this week's attraction at the Broadway Theatre. It is a strong story of the oil fields of California and proved interesting to a large audience. The balance of the programme included popular and classical selections from the orchestra.

Among the picture plays that continue without change are D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty Theatre, still drawing capacity crowds.

N.Y. Tribune, MAR. 15-15

Fomenting Race Prejudice.

To the Editor of The Tribune.

Sir: I wish emphatically to protest through your valuable paper against the production at the Liberty Theatre of the moving picture called "The Birth of a Nation."

Certainly this play is most degrading to the colored race and tends to enhance prejudice and hatred, which have already increased alarmingly during the last few years.

The National Board of Censorship has disapproved of these pictures, and this disapproval should have the support of all lovers of fair play and justice to 10,000,000 of colored people.

MARY JANE REVIER.
Flushing, N. Y., March 11, 1915.

The success of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty has inspired other film producers to enter the two-dollar theatres. Jesse L. Lasky, of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, arrived yesterday from his California studios, with the announcement that he was preparing a gigantic special production to book as first class legitimate drama.

Times, MAR. 14-15

"The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's spectacular film being shown in the Liberty Theatre, has proved one of the surprises of the season. At prices ranging from $2 down the large playhouse has been packed at every performance. Whatever one may think of the wisdom of dealing with the negro problem as baldly as it is done in this picture, there can be no doubt of its excellence from a purely spectacular and pictorial viewpoint.

SUN
New York City
MAR 1 5 1915

DR. WISE SEES EVIL IN FILM

Opposes "The Birth of a Nation" at Liberty Theatre.

Dr. Stephen S. Wise of the Free Synagogue spoke yesterday against the presentation of the film spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," now at the Liberty Theatre.

Dr. Wise said the pictures stirred hatred between the negro and the white man.

Evening Telegram, MAR. 15-15

FILM PLAY A CRIME AGAINST TWO RACES

RABBI WISE DENOUNCES "THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

Charges Producers with Coining Into Money Race Prejudice and Every Unholy Instinct and That They Seek to Barter Peace and Unity of a Nation to Enrich Themselves—Voluntary Censorship a Failure, Unless It Suppresses Film.

"Race Prejudice and Race Assassination" was the subject of a sermon yesterday by the Rev. Stephen S. Wise, rabbi of the Free Synagogue. Rabbi Wise spoke earnestly against permitting the continuance of the moving-picture play "The Birth of a Nation," the film dramatization of Thomas Dixon's book, "The Clansman." He charged the producers with shameful misrepresentation in calling the production a peace play, when in reality it was a play of hate. They sought to coin money from race prejudice and bitterness under the pretence of picturing a nation's rebirth, but all that was ennobling in the struggle of a people was omitted, Rabbi Wise said. His sermon was in part as follows:

"When the story of which this film-play is a dramatization appeared in print, it seemed as if it could not be worse. Later the story was dramatized to the dismay of every lover of peace and fair play in the nation. Now, piling horror upon horror, the thing is so done in film form that everything loathsome in the original book is emphasized. All faith in the honesty of purpose that may have been imagined by some men to lie back of the book is shattered, as one witnesses the film-play and notes that no possibility of evil suggestion against the negro race has been left unutilized.

A PLAY OF HATE.

"The play dares to call itself a play of peace. It is not a peace play, but a war play; it is a hate play; it is a play which presents and glorifies every war passion. True, the film shows some consequences of war in the slaying of men, in the ravaging of a land, in the destruction of homes, but to the unthinking it is a panegyric of the hell of war. Again, this play is not only in its implications to the unthinking an attempt to glorify war, but utterly damnable is its deliberate resurrecting of all the embittering memories of the Reconstruction days. All the hatreds of the war-days and the after-war years, not only as against the negro, but as between white and white, are revived.

"Most serious of all is the circumstance that this play constitutes a deliberate attempt to deepen and justify within the hearts of men the more or less instinctive prejudices which it is the business of an enlightened democracy ceaselessly to challenge and to combat. If but the author and the producers had the courage to declare that of which I accuse them, of designing to foster hate and to intensify prejudice, to make it impossible for two races to live side by side in this republic upon the basis of peace and good-will, one could almost respect their frankness and courage and not be moved to despise them for their cowardice as one loathes them for their shame.

"The general effect of the play is to present the negro of a generation ago as a foul and murderous beast. Therefore I call this play a crime against two races. The men who are responsible for it are coining prejudice and bitterness and every unholy instinct of men into money. If I shall again be told, as I have been told, that I do not understand the Anglo-Saxon spirit by those ready to capitalize every latent race prejudice, I answer that the Anglo-Saxon spirit was of Washington and Lincoln, and is not of the Tillmans and the Vardamans and the Bleases and the Dixons. It is the author and producers who do not know the Anglo-Saxon spirit nor rightly honor it, for they are its traducers and betrayers. They are bartering the peace and unity of a nation in order that they may enrich themselves.

"I charge the man answerable for the crime of this play with seeking to poison the wells of our American civilization, with seeking to slay the soul of a race, not only with doing infinite damage and hurt to American life, but with doing it consciously, deliberately, malignly. Night after night and day after day there are thousands of people to be found in a theatre of New York who are paying money for what is nominally a form of amusement and entertainment. They are paying for a play inflicting grievous damage upon the structure of our Republic. These producers are inciting to hatred and ultimately, it may be, to riot and murder. They will coin money out of it, and fatten upon the unspeakable hurt done to one people and upon the shame of another people who silently and even with approval witness the moral betrayal and spiritual assassination of a race.

"If thirty or forty years ago Europe had set her face like flint against the initial causes which inevitably brought about the campaigns that ultimately evented in war, the war that now is upon us need never have been fought. The time to protest is not when race assassination has come to pass. The time to do that is now, when an attempt is deliberately made to foment it. It may become too late; and if too late and we have been silent, the blood will be upon our own heads, for we shall have suffered the soul of our city and our nation to be poisoned day by day by the fatal and ineradicable poisoning of race prejudice and race assassination.

"While the presentation of this play is an utter condemnation of the men responsible therefor, sadder still and infinitely more degrading is the circumstance that it should be tolerated in our community. For New York has fallen low in its tastes and ideals alike, to endure this insult to its intelligence and this mental poisoning of its spirit. If this community is not to write itself down as bereft of the dignity of self-respect, it will insist through the courts that the presentation of this play be discontinued at once. Assuming that such discontinuance cannot be effected, then the decent elements of our citizenship should unite upon a policy which would keep such theatres empty as produce morally damaging plays, not only while such plays are in process of presentation, but long after the plays have gone and been succeeded by other and more neutral species of idiocy.

"The whole question of censorship is inevitably raised in connection with the presentation of this play. 'If 'The Birth of a Nation' can be presented, then voluntary censorship has proved inadequate and we must have a censorship that shall be authoritative, and to which it would be possible to make appeal upon the broadly ethical and human grounds upon which our protest against this film-horror is based. If this play can continue to be produced in the despite of voluntary censorship, then that censorship has hopelessly failed.

"I have been informed that the voluntary Board of Censorship insists upon certain changes being made which have been made, but no censorship could substantially change the play, for there is good reason that it could not be shown without being ended. For it is not only in spots; it is abhorrent in its entirety, from beginning to end. The birth, and rebirth of a nation, which the author purports to give in the film-play, has nothing of the industry, of the toil, of the sobriety, of the capacity for self-sacrifice, of the passion for education of the negro race. It singles out one or two lamentable things that have happened within the life of the race as the result of the waywardness of a handful of its members; things which, it must in truth be added, are not more terrible than what is happening in every civilized nation to-day in Europe."

oBe, MAR. 15-15

Birth of a Nation" is doing a ...g business at the Liberty. ...hat the master photoplay is ...ever, D. W. Griffith is going ... the coast shortly.

Dispatch, Pittsburg, Pa. Mar. 16-15

FORGET THEIR HATS.

One of the several phenomena connected with the enormous success of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty Theater is the desertion of hats by patrons. Since the opening performance no less than four hats have been found under the seats, and Theodore Mitchell, the publicity man, is hopeful that he will not have to rely this spring upon the Miner Lithograph Company for his annual straw covering. Patrons frequently leave gloves, umbrellas and hand baggage behind in a theater, but until the arrival of "The Birth of a Nation" they have unanimously remembered to take their hats.

Herald, Mar. 17

...Birth of a Nation," produced by ...Griffith, continues as the attraction ...Liberty Theatre. It is one of the ...ular motion pictures ever pre... a Broadway theatre.

Tribune Mar. 14-15

...e D. W. Griffith film, "The Birth of a Nation," now ...rkably successful engagement at the Liberty Theatre, ...ily to a $2 scale of admission will hardly be a ...s to the theatrical managers on Broadway. After ...e money-making power of spectacu...

Outlook, New York City, Mar. 17-15 face upon the tourist even in midwinter.

And still the wonder grows as regards the "movies." A new motion-picture play, "The Birth of a Nation," has, it is reported, required the services in one capacity or another of 18,000 persons and 3,000 horses to produce the vast spectacular effects desired. This outdoes even the 654

...ll the billboard-gazer with ...of 1000 Performers 10...

Herald, Syracuse, N. Y., Mar.

D. W. Griffith, the Mutual's chief director, who has been East getting "The Birth of a Nation" in readiness for its New York opening, will likely make a quick return to the Coast the first of the week. Before attempting another picture of the size and length of the "Nation" he will stage some of the four and five-part features the [illegible] CARICA-[illegible] of Negro Race."

[illegible] Seems to Have Gathered [illegible] Vicious and Grotesque Indi-[illegible] to Show Them as Repre-[illegible]tatives of Entire Race, Says [illegible] of Hull House After Seeing "The Birth of a Nation" Moving Picture Drama

[illegible] caricature of the negro [illegible] in the way in which Miss Jane [illegible], of Hull House, Chicago, express-[illegible] opinion to-day of the motion-pic-[illegible] drama, "The Birth of a Nation," [illegible] being shown in New York, in which [illegible] a story of Reconstruction days and [illegible] Klux Klan violence in the South fol-[illegible] the Civil War. After having seen [illegible] film, Miss Addams softened no terms [illegible] her condemnation of it.

The producer seems to have followed [illegible] principle of gathering the most [illegible] and grotesque individuals he [illegible] find among colored people, and [illegible] them as representatives of the [illegible] about the entire race," she said in [illegible] her impressions of the play. [illegible] is both unjust and untrue. The same [illegible] could be followed to smirch the [illegible] of any race. For instance, it [illegible] be easy enough to go about the [illegible] of a city and bring together some [illegible] criminals and degenerates, and [illegible] pictures of them purporting to show [illegible] character of the white race. It [illegible] no more be the truth about the white race than this is about the black.

AN ANACHRONISM.

"One of the most unfortunate things [illegible] this film is that it appeals to race [illegible] upon the basis of conditions [illegible] a century ago, which have noth-[illegible] to do with the facts we have to con-[illegible] to-day. Even then it does not tell [illegible] whole truth. It is claimed that the [illegible] is historical; but history is easy to [illegible]. It is undoubtedly true that some [illegible] the elements of the plot are based on [illegible] events, but they are only a part of [illegible] picture. You can use history to dem-[illegible]strate anything, when you take certain [illegible] its facts and emphasize them to the [illegible] of the rest.

"Nobody denies that in the haste and [illegible] of the period after the Civil [illegible] the men in control of politics did [illegible] tyrannical and shortsighted things; [illegible] made a great many mistakes. The [illegible] from the North, who [illegible] and influenced the negroes [illegible] the interests of the whites un-[illegible] did a great deal of harm; [illegible] to present the tendency they repre-[illegible] as the only one is as unfair to [illegible] North as to claim that all Southern-[illegible] to oppress the negroes would [illegible]. Then the film shows a [illegible] scene in a Southern Legisla-[illegible] which the election of a majority [illegible] has been obtained by defraud-[illegible] of their votes. Negro legis-[illegible] shown taking off their shoes [illegible], drinking whiskey from [illegible] making speeches, acting in [illegible] uncouth ways. It is laugh-[illegible] to the whole truth.

[illegible] there is the impression that is [illegible] of the Ku Klux Klan—perfectly [illegible] us. The Klan takes the place of [illegible] Melodrama hero, always doing the [illegible] thing and rescuing the heroine in [illegible] nick. There are the revolting scenes [illegible] the pursuit of one white girl, which [illegible] feeling against the negro; and then [illegible] follows a second similar scene of [illegible]apted forced marriage between a [illegible]erful mulatto politician—there may [illegible] been such vicious individuals as this [illegible] is shown to be, but they were cer-[illegible]inly exceptions—and a white girl. Of [illegible]urse, the Klan breaks in just in time [illegible] prevent the success of the design. At [illegible]ry turn the Klan is made to appeal to [illegible] enthusiasm of the spectator as the [illegible]ic defender of a victimized people. [illegible] of the outrageous, vicious, misguid-[illegible]outrages, which it certainly commit-[illegible]ure shown. I am not interested in [illegible] blame for those outrages on the [illegible] who made up the Klan. It was nat-[illegible] in the heat of the times they [illegible] just as did the men of [illegible]. I am simply contending that [illegible] of it is not the whole [illegible]

[illegible] Of course they [illegible] contempt for the [illegible] only as despicable [illegible] brutes.

"It is certainly to be hoped that such a film can be suppressed. As an appeal to race prejudice, it is full of danger."

"Do you recall any portions of the play that you found particularly objection-able?" Miss Addams was asked.

"No; it was rather the whole tone of the second part," was the reply. "Of course, there are the unpleasant epi-sodes in which white girls figure; but the evil is rather in the dominant attitude of mind toward the negro. As I have said, it seems to me an attempt to make him appear worse than childish and brutal and vicious—actually grotesque and primitive and contemptible."

"How far did you observe that this at-titude of mind influenced the spectators?"

"It is hard to tell, of course. Certain-ly I felt that they were made to feel a prejudice against negroes; some show-ed approval in applause when the hero refuses to shake hands with the mulatto politician, and they were roused to the point of clapping enthusiastically, be-fore the end of the pictures, whenever the Ku Klux Klan appeared. That was the noticeable thing about the play—the success of the glorification of the activities of the Ku Klux Klan, con-trasted with the base and elemental char-acter of the negroes, misrepresented in the ludicrously perverted scenes of plan-tation life. The production is the most subtle form of untruth—a half-truth."

JOURNAL
Lafayette, Ind.
MAR 13 1915

• • •

I can give you a lot of other news about the movies if you care to read it. I'll take a chance. The most inter-esting event among all recent mo-tion picture productions promises to be "The Birth of a Nation," a photographic version of Thomas Dix-on's novel, "The Clansman." The claim is made that 18,000 people and 3,000 horses were employed to get the needed effects before the cameras. A special musical accompaniment to the feature has also been composed. The story, which follows the novel, begins with the first arrival of slaves in North America, and traces the slavery question with its bearing upon the history of the United States. Great episodes of the civil war, Sher-man's march to the sea, the burning of Atlanta, the fall of Petersburg, Lee's surrender at Appomattox, and the assassination of President Lincoln are among the sensational happenings. Then will follow the depredations of the Ku-Klux clan and lastly, the es-tablishment of national peace.

BULLETIN
San Francisco, Cal.

AT THE ALCAZAR

"THE CLANSMAN," or "The Birth of the Nation," the startling film play now being shown at the Alcazar Theater, is the last word in motion pictures and its appeal is far reaching. "The Clans-man," aside from wonderful dramatic, romantic and historical story, depicts the greatest war scenes laid in the days of the famous Civil War, that have ever been attempted in the picture play. The success of this wonderful offering at the Alcazar has never been paralleled in the his-tory of photoplays, and hundreds of people are turned away at every per-formance, unable to gain admission. Consequently the management will continue the film play for a third week, commencing Monday afternoon. There are two performances daily, one at 2:15 in the afternoon and the other at 8:15 in the evening. There are twelve big reels and the perform-ance lasts three hours. The stage setting, the symphony orchestra and the big chorus of jubilee singers are all features of the attraction.

MUSIC TRADES.
New York City
MAR 13 1915

Joseph Carl Breil, the composer, whose "Song of the Soul" is still remembered in publishing circles, has supplied the musical portion of the great moving picture spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," now playing at the Liberty Theatre, and is leading the large forty-piece orchestra with that production.

CLIPPER
New York City
MAR 13 1915

THEODORE MITCHELL put over some great advance press work for D. W. Griffith's sensational spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which bids fair to break box office records at the Liberty Theatre, New York.

D. W. GRIFFITH,

THE GENIUS RESPONSIBLE FOR THE PRODUCTION OF THE REMARKABLE FILM CREATION, "THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

The opening of D. W. Griffith's photo-graphic spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Liberty Theatre, New York, Wednes-day night, March 3, proved a stirring event of the season. It looks as if this marvelous picture has settled down for the most memor-able engagement ever devoted to this branch of art in the history of the New York stage. Much was expected of the picture, but none in the theatre was prepared for such a revelation. The magnitude of the produc-tion, its bewildering detail, the dramatic possibilities it unfolded and, above all other things, the wonderful message of peace it conveyed were elements of the greatest sur-prise. The demonstration of war's futility and the trials and suffering inflicted by blind hatred when passions are aroused in these mighty conflicts carried the most im-pelling lesson of the kind that has ever been encountered in the theatre.

The engagement at the Liberty Theatre is for two daily presentations, afternoon and evening, including Sundays.

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

Liberty (Klaw & Erlanger, mgrs.)—The most wonderfully constructed, most artistic-ally photographed, most realistically acted and elaborately produced spectacle that has yet been shown on a moving picture screen seems like superlative praise, when applied to D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation," the master photodrama in twelve reels, which was shown for the first time in New York last Wednesday evening, yet the foregoing description is only faint commendation when one stops to compare this epoch-making fea-ture film with others of the most pretentious sort that have gone before.

The story, based on Thos. Dixon's book, "The Clansman," was treated in an intensely dramatic fashion by the producer, and the tale simply throbs with heart interest, while the spectator is overwhelmed by the magni-tude of the spectacular effects, terrific battle scenes, stirring ensembles, superior blending of light and color schemes, and subtle mas-tery of the art of that most elusive phan-tom "screen technique," as evidenced by the king wizard of all motion picture directors. Atmospherically realistic, superbly acted and correct in most minute details, "The Birth of a Nation" will go down in photoplay his-tory as an achievement that may be equalled, possibly surpassed, but never forgotten.

Aside from the artistic value of "The Birth of a Nation," the picture, now in its second week at the Liberty, bids fair to break all previous records as a drawing at-traction for the branch of the amusement industry it so pre-eminently represents.

Below are a few facts relative to the creating of such a stupendous spectacle as "The Birth of a Nation." A casual perusal will show the infinite care, unremitting toil and herculean effort, not to mention the thousands of dollars expended in the making of the greatest triumph of the photodramatic art produced to date.

Mr. Griffith was eight months making the entire production. During that time he em-ployed a small army of men and women to get the desired results.

Over eighteen authorities were consulted to get the proper atmosphere into the scenes in which President Abraham Lincoln appears. The great majority of these authorities agreed that as near as the time of the assas-sination could be set was 10.13. This cal-culation is based upon the most authentic reports of the hour that John Wilkes Booth entered Ford's Theatre on the fatal night.

It was a brilliant Spring night in Wash-ington, but historians record that just before the shooting the temperature fell quite a bit. This detail is covered in the picture, when you note President Lincoln change his posi-tion in the box and slip a warm cape over his shoulders.

Another detail in the Ford's Theatre scenes fixes definitely the facts of the actual shoot-ing. Contrary to current opinion, the presi-dent was not shot from the stage. The pic-ture shows the action as it has authentic-ally been reported by a majority of the au-thoritative writers on the subject.

The portions of Ford's Theatre shown in the story are exact reproductions of the sur-roundings on the night the president was assassinated. The actual distances were faithfully followed in the scene, even to the twelve foot leap which Booth made from the box after firing the fatal shot.

In the great battle scenes, which are given in the earlier portions of the production, Mr. Griffith employed many novel appliances to get his effects. For the first time in making motion pictures he utilized the telephone most extensively. Imagine a stage director handling thousands upon thousands of players in one scene and directing them by telephone.

This was done by laying underground wires to all parts of the battlefields. The director had a switchboard of ten wires directly in front of him, and in this way kept in touch with every part of the big conflicts.

The great battle scenes were also the first ever taken by a motion picture camera at night. The scenes showing the escape of the refugees from Atlanta, the bonfire effects in Piedmont, and the great red battle effects were all realized by night photography. Elaborate preparations for these were se-cretly laid and several inventions were made on the ground to accomplish the desired end. Patented illuminators were distributed over an area of two miles to get one midnight battle scene.

An amusing incident happened while one of the great battle scenes was being phot-graphed at night. Mr. Griffith kept his plans so carefully concealed that it was not known what he intended doing. The night the big fight came off many citizens miles away from the actual scene telephoned into the newspapers, and the following morning several papers appeared with stories of a mysterious naval engagement the night be-fore, in which the long, thunderous roll of heavy cannonading had been distinctly heard by citizens miles inland from the sea.

The novelty of midnight photography is carried to a striking point in one of the vast pictures. Here under the glare of the giant illuminators and bursting bombs one can see a line of trenches stretching over a territory of more than three miles.

In the meeting of Generals Grant and Lee at Appomattox, a historic incident is revealed. When General Robt. E. Lee wanted to make some marginal notes on the papers of the final surrender, he asked for a pencil, and to the surprise of the numerous generals as-sembled it was found that not a person in the company owned one. Finally an officer in General Lee's staff found a pocket ink stand in his kit and it was with ink from this that the historic document was written. It will also be noted that General Grant and several of his staff were not expecting the surrender, and were present in private uni-forms.

Twenty-five thousand yards of material were used to make the costumes for the women in the spectacle. There were over four hundred different kinds of dresses and gowns made. It took five months to make the costumes. Twelve thousand yards of white material was used in the costumes for the Ku Klux Klan. Twenty dressmakers worked eight hours a day for four months on these.

In one of the scenes, Elsie Stoneman wears a sealskin dolman that was purchased in an antique shop. It is over one hundred years old. In another scene Margaret Cameron wears a grey ruffle dress of the war period. It required one hundred and fifty yards of material to make the ruffles in this costume.

Every costume in the production was passed upon by Mr. Griffith before it was admitted to the picture. In every instance photographic tests were made to see if the colors harmonized with the scene before the picture was taken. Over one thousand changes were ordered before the right scheme was hit upon.

All artillery effects of the battle scenes were loaned by the Ordnance Department of the U. S. Army for use in the picture. Every piece of field ordnance shown saw actual usage in the Civil War.

The Petersburg battle scene was laid out upon plans made by West Point engineers, copied directly from the maps of the actual battlefield in the War Department, at Wash-ington. Numerous veterans who fought in that campaign were on the directing tower with Mr. Griffith, and furnished him with personal recollections of the contest while the picture was being made.

In all scenes showing official groupings, such as President Lincoln's rooms and the meetings between Grant and Lee, the furni-ture used in the pictures is an exact replica of that used on the days in question. It re-quired weeks and months of research to verify every small detail.

Lee.

OREGONIAN
Portland, Ore.
Mar. 14

Beginning next week, the Liberty Theater will be turned over to motion pictures, and for the first time in the history of the "movies" reserved seats, war prices, from $1 down, will be charged. The producing is D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation," pro-duced from the novel, "The Clans-man," by Rev. Thomas Dixon. It is stated that [illegible] people were em-ployed in this spectacle. What [illegible] manager, however, [illegible] Playhouse will [illegible] three. [illegible]

Herald, Mar

Variety

It may not be great art, but it's great [illegible] which a theatrical manager [illegible] feature, "The Birth of a Nation," at the [illegible] part production by D. W. Griffith, founded on Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," and its reception by the public, has been a leading [illegible] versation in theatrical circles ever since it was first shown.

Motion pictures at regular theatre prices were looked upon when the film was first announced as an impossible proposition, but before last week was two days old the railing that had divided the orchestra portion of the floor into two sections, the forward part of which had brought $1½ seat, was removed, and the scale of $2 now applies to the whole floor. Probably not more than three or four theatres in New York could show last night a bigger week's total than the Liberty. Proving again that in the theatrical business you never can tell, especially when the "movies" are involved.

The motion picture theatres happily have been almost entirely free from the incubus that for years has afflicted the legitimate houses and has alienated the affections of thousands of theatregoers, at least temporarily. But strangely enough, the very success of this big motion picture production has been the means of directing the attention of the traffickers in tickets to a new and virgin field. Persons have already begun to come to the HERALD office to say that they have gone to the Liberty within a few minutes of the start of a performance, to find that all the tickets have been sold out of the box office. But speculators from convenient doorways have offered plenty of tickets at from twenty-five to fifty per cent advance on the regular price.

Here is a situation, in the opinion of wise heads in the theatrical business, that deserves careful thought. The feature film appears to be demanded by the devotees of the motion picture houses. The tendency is for more elaborate and spectacular productions, especially for theatres in the big cities. With the rapid advance in the business all along the line, it is not beyond expectation to see many theatres presenting films at regular theatre prices. In five or ten years will theatregoers in New York be told at the box offices that there are no good seats left for a hit and have to go to Smith's or Brown's agency in the hotels and pay fifty cents more for them? Those who have the best interests of the theatre at heart say that now is the time to eliminate the speculator from the motion picture theatres completely.

* * * * *

IT is said that more than 250,000 feet of motion picture film was used in "The Birth of a Nation." What, then, became of 238,000? It is related of D. W. Griffith that when he at last had completed his photography he assembled the film in one room, surrounded himself with several stenographers who made notes as he talked, and, armed with a pair of scissors, started to eliminate all the film except what could actually be shown in two and three-quarters hours.

Writing a play by scissors is something new, but not new to Mr. Griffith, who staged the entire production without a single note or sketch of a scenario to guide himself.

VARIETY

New York City

MAR 1 2 1915

GRIFFITH'S $2 FEATURE FILM SENSATION OF PICTURE TRADE

"Birth of a Nation" at Liberty, New York, Will do $14,000 at Box Office This Week. Theatre Seats 1,200. Capacity Crowds Thronging House Twice Daily. Griffith Co. Renting Theatre. First Week's Advertising Bill $12,000.

GRIFFITH'S $2 FEATURE FILM.

The enormous initial success of the D. W. Griffith feature film, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Liberty theatre, New York, is now the sensation of the picture trade. The film, in 12 reels, is playing twice daily at the Liberty at a $2 admission scale. The house seats 1,200. It is almost a certainty the picture will draw not less than $14,000 this week.

The D. W. Griffith Corporation is said to be operating the feature, having rented the Liberty at $1,250 weekly. The theatre management, according to report, could not lease the house to Griffith on any terms but a rental guarantee. The same picture under the title of "The Clansman" has been drawing capacity in Los Angeles and San Francisco for the past five or six weeks. It opened at the Liberty here March 1.

The advertising outlay for the Griffith feature in Greater New York reached $12,000 its first week, but will probably be materially reduced, when it is said the feature will show at an expense account of about $4,500 weekly, including rent. The advertising matter was made so attractive it was copied in style by the last Sunday announcements for the opening of the new Klaw and Erlanger revue, "Fads and Fancies," at the Knickerbocker.

The Liberty, since the feature opened, has been drawing business away from the surrounding theatres in the neighborhood that charge $2 for legit productions. The "$2 picture" is said to have started many of the legitimate theatrical producers in a serious train of thought.

The comment in the New York dailies was illuminating, for a moving picture, but the viewers of the feature have been its best advertisers. Seldom has anyone seen the Liberty attraction without expressing a desire to go again.

The "Nation" film is at the Liberty for an indefinite engagement. From the drawing strength developed, it is said along Broadway the film may remain there over the summer, as it could profitably show with receipts dropping as low as $6,000 weekly.

A flood of lengthy reeled feature films is expected shortly to appear. For a long while features have been held down to six reels at the most, with four or five reels favored. The unexpected success of the Griffith film is apt to result in revolutionary ideas in picture making.

STAR

New York City

MAR 17 1915

No note of the Westerner's usual plaint that the metropolis is "cold" is heard in David W. Griffiths' after the production remarks.

"New York is the squarest, fairest, most encouraging community in this country," he told me while surrounded by hillocks of clippings favorable to his big work, "The Birth of a Nation."

THE BIRTH OF A NATION.

Col. Ben Cameron.....Henry Walthall
Margaret Cameron, elder sister.Miriam Cooper
Flora, pet sister.....Mae Marsh
Mrs. Cameron.....Josephine Crowell
Dr. Cameron.....Spottiswoode Aiken
Wade Cameron, second son....J. A. Beringer
Duke Cameron, youngest son....John French
Mammy, old servant.....Jennie Lee
Hon. Austin Stoneman, Leader of House, Ralph Lewis
Elsie, his daughter.....Lillian Gish
Phil, his elder son.....Elmer Clifton
Tod, younger son.....Robert Harron
Jeff, blacksmith.....Wallace Reed
Lydia Brown, Stoneman's mulatto housekeeper.....Mary Alden
Silas Lynch, mulatto Lieutenant-Governor, George Seigmann
Gus, renegade negro.....Walter Long
Abraham Lincoln.....Joseph Henabery
John Wilkes Booth.....Raoul Walsh
Gen. U. S. Grant.....Donald Crisp
Gen. Robert E. Lee.....Howard Gaye

"The Birth of a Nation" is the main title David Wark Griffith, the director-in-chief of the Mutual Film Corporation, gave to his picturized version of Thomas Dixon's story of the South, "The Clansman." It received its first New York public presentation in the Liberty theatre, New York, March 3. The daily newspaper reviewers pronounced it as the last word in picture making. That its enormity and elaborateness made such an impression naturally resulted in the press comparing it with that Italian massive film production, "Cabiria" and saying without hesitancy that "The Birth of a Nation" overshadowed the foreign film spectacle. In the picturization of "The Clansman" Mr. Griffith has set such a pace it will take a long time before one will come along that can top it in point of production, acting, photography and direction. Every bit of the film was laid, played and made in America. One may find some flaws in the general running of the picture, but they are so small and insignificant that the bigness and greatness of the entire film production itself completely crowds out any little defects that might be singled out. The story of the Dixon novel, "The Clansman," is pretty well known. The Camerons of the south and the Stonemans of the north and Silas Lynch, the mulatto Lieutenant-Governor, the Civil War, the opening and finish of the Civil War, the scenes attendant upon the assassination of Abraham Lincoln, the period of carpet-bagging days and union reconstruction following Lee's surrender, the terrorizing of the southern whites by the newly freed blacks and the rise of the Ku Klux Klan that later overpowers the negroes and gives the white men the authority rightfully theirs, all these including some wonderfully well staged battle scenes taken at night are realistically, graphically and most superbly depicted by the camera. Griffith knows the value of striking, gripping and melodramatic anti-climaxes and also is fully cognizant of the importance of having several big "punches" instead of one for camera visualization. Building up photoplay action and "posing" a picture which would look well reproduced in colors is a natural instinct with Griffith and he's one director who knows how to get action typified intensely. In "The Birth of a Nation" Griffith took his time and thereby builded well. Thousands of feet of celluloid were used and some six months or so he and his co-directors worked day and night to shape the story into a thrilling, dramatic wordless play that would not pass out overnight in the minds of the millions who are bound to see this picture before it has been laid away to rest. The battle scenes are wonderfully conceived and show two armies in such natural fighting array it is almost unbelievable that one is looking at a picture, staged by one whose only purpose was to make it get away from the usual stagey phoniness so apparent in numerous picture battle plays. And the departure of the soldiers was splendidly arranged. Then the death of the famous martyred president was so deftly and ably handled no one can find any fault. Of course there are many who will aver that Griffith should have shown the subsequent death of the assassin, John Wilkes Booth, but as he had an arch-villain in the shape of the renegade, Gus, later to deal with severely it was best he stick closer to the story at hand. This same Gus, fiendish and with the lust of the beast in his eye, gives mad chase to the pet sister of "Little Colonel" Ben Cameron and she jumps to her death from a high cliff rather than permit herself be touched alive by that brute in human form. This was also nicely cameraed. Then comes the reconstruction period following a camera scene of Grant and Lee ending the war at Appomatox. Harassing scenes showing the persecution of the whites with the Camerons more than getting their share and with Ben Cameron organizing the white-robed Ku Klux Klan which later gives the picture one of the biggest moments of its entire version when it rides down the blacks and later saves a small band of whites about to be massacred alive. Here the renegade Gus is killed. Griffith picturized an allegorical conception at the end showing what universal peace meant to the nation. Some may not care for it, but in the church neighborhoods and where the staunchest of the peace advocates live it will go with a hurrah. There are something like 12,000 feet of film, but the program says it's all there in two acts. There is an intermission just preceding the stirring days of the carpet-baggery action. Griffith struck it right when he adapted the Dixon story for the film. He knew the south and he knew just what kind of a picture would please all white classes. Some places the censors are going to find fault. That's a persistent way some censors have. That scene of the lashing on the back of the old negro will undoubtedly come in for a full share of criticism. The scene of the "black congress" and the negro removing his shoe may be censured but it's drawn from reported facts. But no matter what the censors censor there will be plenty of film action and interest left to make it the biggest demanded film production of the present century. It's worth seeing anywhere. Many will see it twice, yea thrice and still obtain much satisfaction and entertainment. It's there with a multiple of thrills. Of the acting company, Henry Walthal made a manly, straightforward character of the "Little Colonel" and handled his big scenes most effectively. Mae Marsh as the pet sister did some remarkable work as the little girl who loved the south and loved her brother. In fact her work was little short of a revelation to many. Ralph Lewis was splendid as the leader of the House who helped Silas Lynch rise to power. George Siegman got all there could be gotten out of this despicable character of Lynch. Walter Long made Gus, the renegade negro, a hated, much despised type, his acting and makeup being complete. Mary Alden, Lillian Gish, Robert Harron, Jennie Lee and Miriam Cooper deserve mention for their excellent work. The other minor characters were satisfactorily portrayed. Donald Crisp had a good makeup as Grant while Joseph Henabery "posed" most acceptably as Lincoln. It may not be amiss to pass away from critical comment for the moment to say that as D. W. Griffith, the world's best film director, is and has been responsible for so many of the innovations in picture making, doing more to make filming an art than any one person, so D. W. Griffith has been the first to bring a "$2 picture" to the box office of a "$2 theatre." When it was first reported about this "Griffith feature" would retail to the public at a $2 scale, the picture people shrugged their shoulders, said "50 cents at the most" and let it go at that. But as so many opinions of pictures and their possibilities have gone wrong, so, it appears, is the belief that there can not be a $2 picture as erroneous as many of the others. But it is fitting that Mr. Griffith should have so far progressed and advanced in the art he did so much to foster and improve until he became the first director of a successful film that can compete in $2 theatres with $2 stage productions. That is the concise picture record of a few years, within ten at the most, and for feature pictures, even less. "Cabiria" was an admittedly big film production, a spectacle or series of spectacles that held no general interest through the fault of the maker or director. It drew in certain territory and even then in a desultory manner. But "A Birth of a Nation" has universal appeal to America at least, and the superbness of this production will gain recognition anywhere, with the story carrying, though perhaps to lesser human interest extent in foreign lands than at home, where the subject is more thoroughly understood. "A Birth of a Nation" is said to have cost $300,000. This is rather a high estimate, but other than the money the film represents, its returns are going to be certain. Not alone is this film playing at a $2 scale in a theatre where an orchestra and operator besides the house staff are the principal necessary force, as against a stage production that might have a salary list of from $4,000 to $8,500 weekly, according to the piece, but "A Birth of a Nation" can give as many performances a week as the house wishes it to, and in this particular instance will not give less than 14, two shows daily. The stage production in a $2 theatre would give eight performances as a rule, perhaps nine and with a holiday intervening, ten. While the Liberty is advertising the Griffith film up to one dollar "with loge seats $2," the scale is practically a two-dollar one, made so by the demand for seats. "A Birth of a Nation is a great epoch in picture making; it's great for pictures and it's great for the name and fame of David Wark Griffith. When a man like Griffith in a new field can do what he has done, he may as well be hailed while he is living.

Mark.

LEADER

Cleveland, Ohio

Date MAR 17 1915

The motion picture, "The Birth of a Nation," is the theatrical sensation of New York at prices ranging from $2 down.

[illegible] decision of the National [illegible] membership, after repeated [illegible] against the film [illegible] form. The association [illegible] serious [illegible] the attention of Co[illegible] Adoo, who warned [illegible]

From LIFE

Address: New York City

Date

News of the Trade

THE power of suggestion of the motion picture—and especially the Griffith product—is boundless. If you don't believe it, ask "Wen" Milligan, whose persuasive eloquence has lured many a recalcitrant advertiser to buy space in the Billboard, and he'll tell you. "Wen's" silver tongue, however, didn't always stand him in good stead. Fifteen years ago he was one of the most ardent admirers of a little rosy-cheeked lassie up in Stamford, Conn. Later, when "Wen" acquired long pants and the young lady blossomed into a lovely young woman, he continued to pay devoted court. But somehow, he couldn't quite gain her consent to enter into the contract he wanted. Indeed, it is rumored that he had a rival, upon whom the lady looked with some favor, and the thought made "Wen" desperate. He pleaded, argued, cajoled, but all in vain. His arguments were good, but not good enough, although couched in accents that would have put the pen into the hand of the most flint-hearted dollars and cents advertiser in the film business, while he signed a year's contract. But the young lady still hesitated.

Then it happened that "Wen" invited her to attend the opening performance of The Birth of a Nation, the marvellous Griffith photoplay, at the Liberty Theater. She came, saw and was conquered. The magic of the spectacle and the glamour of the tender romance of the "Little Colonel" and his Northern sweetheart had a compelling effect. "Wen's" advertising experience served him in good stead. He realized that the psychological or "sign here" moment had arrived. "Will you marry me tomorrow?—answer yes, or no," he whispered, or words to that effect. Evidently, the reply was not in the negative, for on the day following the opening of The Birth of a Nation, "Wen" was married to Miss Mildred Schultz of Stamford and New York by Dr. Wolfkin of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, while "Bill" Barry, head of the Nicholas Power advertising department, acted as best man.

Much activity is going on in the factory of the American Photoplayer Company, West 45th Street, New York City, where, in addition to their regular style Fotoplayer, they are contemplating getting out several recently style instruments. A number of orders have recently been received for the [illegible] Fotoplayer; among them is one [illegible] 40 Fotoplayer, which has been [illegible] Odeon Theater, 145th Street [illegible] York City.

Times, Mar. 17, 1915

The official and formal approval by the National Board of Censorship of D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation," was mailed by Secretary J. D. McGuire yesterday to all the Board's correspondents and allied censorship bodies throughout the country. This disposes of the incorrect reports, which certain persons sought to exploit widely, that the Board had disapproved of the play. The moral effect of the production is characterized by the censor as good; the educational, artistic and entertainment values are termed by them excellent. As a further comment it is added: "Educationally, dramatically and artistically this should prove a great step forward in motion-picture production."

NEARLY RIOT AT "CLANSMAN"

Young Colored Man in Organization at Theatre Loudly Protests Against Play.

A commotion was created in the Liberty Theatre last Friday evening when Mr. Cleveland G. Allen, in a colored delegation, hissed some of the scenes in "The Birth of a Nation." Allen, who was a member of the party openly protested against this hypocrisy by denouncing the pictures in a loud tone. The demonstration created great confusion in the theatre. It looked for a time as if trouble of a serious nature might result.

Citizen, Mar. 17-15

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

Approved and Praised by National Board of Censorship.

The official and formal approval by the National Board of Censorship of D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" was mailed out by Secretary J. D. McGuire yesterday to all the Board's correspondents and allied censorship bodies throughout the country. This disposes of the incorrect reports, which certain persons sought to exploit widely, that the Board had disapproved of the play.

The moral effect of the production is characterized by the censor as good; the education, artistic and entertainment values are termed by them excellent. As a further comment, it is added: "Educationally, dramatically and artistically this should prove a great step forward in motion picture production."

STAR

New York City

MAR 17 1915

SCENE IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

This is one of the remarkable scenes now stirring audiences to wild enthusiasm in the splendid D. W. Griffith photoplay at the Liberty

CALL

San Francisco, Cal.

MAR - 6 1915

Alcazar

"The Clansman," or "The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's startling motion picture, being shown at 2 and 8 o'clock daily at the Alcazar Theater, was amplified from a novel of Thomas Dixon, Jr. It ranks as the greatest moving picture ever staged at the Alcazar, and it was produced at a cost of over $500,000 and required seven months to complete. It includes great and spectacular battle scenes and among other features shown are the light in the old South, before the war; the private history of Thaddeus Stevens, the great Commoner; the assassination of President Lincoln; the formation of the famous Ku Klux Klan; twenty-five soldiers in action; artillery duels, cavalry charges; bayonet attacks; the struggle between the North and South and finally the reconstruction period. The national board of censors paid "The Clansman" this tribute: "Artistically, historically and morally, it is a step forward—ahead of the greatest that has ever been taken before in this new art." One of the foremost newspaper editors in New York, where "The Clansman" is now running at the Strand Theater, the largest theater in the world devoted to motion pictures, wrote: "Our most powerful newspaper editorials are vapid when compared to such drama, in picture form, as 'The Clansman.'"

The record of attendance at the Alcazar Theater is being broken daily, and it is now estimated that over 25,000 people have witnessed this stupendous production up to date. All immediate bookings at the Alcazar have been canceled in order to allow "The Clansman" to continue for a second week, beginning Monday afternoon. The cast of principals is headed by Lillian Gish and Henry Walthal, with Joseph Hannaberry in the role of President Lincoln. There are 10,000 people in the production.

Evening Post, Mar. 17-15

"Birth of a Nation" Passed Censors.

J. J. McCarthy, general manager of the moving-picture production called "The Birth of a Nation," made public to-day the report of the National Board of Censorship, which said that the moral effect of the play was "good," and appraised its other values as "excellent." The Evening Post's objection to the production is not based on the ground of morality, in the popular sense of that word, but on the fact that the play fosters race prejudice and is unfair to the negroes of the United States.

Tribune, Mar. 17, 1915

The correct widely circulated reports that the National Board of Censorship of motion pictures had disapproved the D. W. Griffith spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," the management yesterday stated that the special report of the board had stated: "Educationally, dramatically and artistically, this should prove a great step forward in motion picture production."

Herald, Mar. 17-15

"BIRTH OF A NATION" APPROVED.

National Censors Find Film Play's Moral Effect Good.

The National Board of Censorship has given its approval on D. W. Griffith's production in motion pictures of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty Theatre, which has caused so much adverse and favorable comment since it began its run in this city. The board finds the educational, entertainment and artistic value of the film "excellent" and its moral effect "good." The board went on record by saying that "educationally, dramatically and artistically this should prove a great step forward in motion picture productions."

Journal of Commerce, Mar. 18-15

The National Board of Censorship of moving pictures has approved the moral effect of "The Birth of a Nation," now at the Liberty Theatre, as "good" and has appraised its other values as "excellent." The report says: "Educationally, dramatically and artistically this should prove a great step forward in motion picture production."

DRAMATIC MIRROR

New York City

MAR 17 1915

BIG LASKY FILM

Jesse Lasky Promises Spectacle That Will Rival Best of Screen Productions

Jesse L. Lasky, president of the Lasky Feature Play Company, returned to New York last week from a prolonged stay at the Lasky California studios and announced that preparations [illegible] was at the California plant for the production of a spectacular picture, [illegible] scale rivaling "The Birth of a Nation." Mr. Lasky would not volunteer any information of the production other than to say that it would be of a magnitude [illegible] attempted.

When Mr. Lasky was asked [illegible] he smiling replied that it was [illegible] released at [illegible]

"The production of which I speak will be [illegible] provided with [illegible] extraordinary [illegible] and design in every [illegible] and [illegible] the [illegible] take dollar [illegible] The only difficulty to do [illegible] than the [illegible] ever done [illegible] but [illegible] without [illegible] difficulty."

Citizen, Mar. 17-15

The official and formal approval by the National Board of Censorship of D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" was mailed out by Secretary J. D. McGuire yesterday to all the Board's correspondents and allied censorship bodies throughout the country. This disposes of the incorrect reports, which certain persons sought to exploit widely, that the board had disapproved of the play. The moral effect of the production is characterized by the censor as good; the educational, artistic, and entertainment values are termed by them excellent. As a matter of comment, it is added: "Educationally, dramatically and artistically this should prove a great step forward in motion picture production."

Chicago Tribune, Mar. 17-15

"Birth of Nation" New Star In Crown of D. W. Griffith

NOT only David W. Griffith but the whole film world has scored in the presentation of "The Birth of a Nation," taken from "The Clansman," Thomas Dixon's novel and play.

The play scored because experienced theatrical men scoffed at the idea that any movie could ever do business at $2 a seat. "The Birth of a Nation" is running at the Liberty Theater and drawing capacity houses.

Every one, including those who belong within the inner film circle and those who do not, has expected that Griffith, called the Belasco of motion pictures, would be the first man to bring the photoplay up to the stage standard.

It took eight months of hard work to produce this masterpiece. It cost $500,000, it is said. In that time 18,000 men, women and children and 3,000 horses were used in the production.

Griffith shows that slaves before the war were well housed and fed and kindly treated. The South's trials during the reconstruction period and the Kuklux Klan are brought into the story with interesting detail.

The production is spectacular and splendid and carries the suspense that Griffith gives to all his masterpieces.

Lincoln is shown signing the first call for volunteers. The surrender of Lee to Grant at Appomattox and Lincoln's assassination are all given in an impressive manner.

The acting, the photography and all are said to be even finer than in "Cabiria," up to now considered the acme of film excellence.

Both Mr. Dixon and Mr. Griffith responded to (I almost said curtain calls) screen calls and gave short impromptu speeches.

Mr. Dixon said he considered Mr. Griffith's screen version of "The Clansman" to be [illegible] than either the book or the play of the great moving [illegible] the audience "The Birth of a Nation," now playing [illegible] and thus the [illegible] leading the large forty-[illegible] week production.

Commercial, Mar. 17, 1915

The National Board of Censorship has given its approval on D. W. Griffith's production in motion pictures of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty Theatre, which has caused so much adverse and favorable comment since it began its run in this city. The board finds the educational, entertainment and artistic value of the film "excellent" and its moral effect "good." The board went on record by saying that "educationally, dramatically and artistically this should prove a great step forward in motion picture productions."

Press, Mar. 17-1915

D. W. G.'S "BIRTH OF A NATION"

National Board of Censorship Approves Film Spectacle.

The various published reports that the New York censors had disapproved D. W. Griffith's historical spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," now running in the Liberty Theatre, have been disproved by the action of the National Board of Censorship of motion pictures which, through its general and special committees, has approved the moral effect of the picture as good and appraised its other values as excellent. The official and formal approval of the board was mailed yesterday to all its correspondents and allied censorship bodies throughout [illegible]

"The official report of the board on the film states that "educationally, dramatically and artistically this should prove a great step forward in motion picture production." [illegible] exhibitor [illegible] producer.

Los Angeles Tribune, Mar. 17, 1915

Griffith Photoplay Has Captured New York

D. W. Griffith's remarkable photoplay, The Clansman, is having as remarkable a success in New York, where it is showing at a $2 scale in the Liberty theater, as it is enjoying in Clune's auditorium here, where it is in its sixth week. Of the showing in the metropolis the New York Globe's dramatic editor says:

"The Birth of a Nation has achieved the astounding record of extracting ungrudged compliments from even rival managers. The success of a film is about as welcome among the managers of the 'legit' as a German submarine in the English channel. But this one has had the unique effect of compelling admiration from all sides. Actors, managers, authors can be heard all over the place bursting into spasms of enthusiasm. An attraction that can even inveigle treasurers into leaving their box offices in order to see it has got to be something quite extraordinary."

[illegible] the ground [illegible] patented illuma[illegible] an area of two [illegible] battle scene.

An amusing in[illegible] of the great battle s[illegible]

DRAMA

WHEN the events portrayed in "The Birth of a Nation" occurred there were no moving pictures. And if there had been, "The Birth of a Nation" could never have been shown more than once. Even half a century later, these really remarkable and apparently faithful reproductions of long past events in our national history are seized upon by some persons, who do not find trouble enough in the present, as an excuse to stir up the animosities of another era.

Real Northerners and real Southerners who are real Americans and who recognize that the Civil War has passed into history can witness and discuss the vivid reproduction of scenes in our great national tragedy without rancor and even with emotions of thankfulness that we have survived the ordeal. It is far from a bad thing that these vivid pictures of what the war meant and of the problems that confronted the defeated South should be thus presented to the present generation. They are an argument for peace and an explanation of errors that have been regarded as crimes.

AMONG THE CENTAURS

"HELP! STOP ME! I'M RUNNING AWAY!"

"The Birth of a Nation" has been severely criticized as an injustice to the negro. The pictures emphasize the conditions existing when white politicians found it to their interest to incite the lower class negroes to the worst that was in them, but they also use the less dramatic material found in those of the race who were not carried outside their better natures by the mad spirit of the time. The things most objected to have the corroboration of history. The error of the pictures is not in exaggerating the evils of negro domination so much as in showing the Ku Klux Klan only in its best aspects before it was used by unscrupulous men for outrages even worse than those it was organized to suppress.

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" is the biggest thing in the moving picture line that has been done in this country. Some of the imported films have been as impressive in their respective lines, but they were foreign in subject and foreign in treatment. This one deals entirely with American scenes and American characters, the period being that of the Civil War and the time of reconstruction that followed.

At the same time, "The Birth of a Nation" also emphasizes the imperfections of the moving picture in its present stage of development. These defects are not so much the physical side as in the way the pictures are used to tell a dramatic story. There is need of a genius in the moving picture business to show the producers and manufacturers that tricks in the manipulation of the films do not enhance but destroy interest. The constant shifting of scenes, the intrusion of things that are not essential, the prolongation of action that may be remarkable from the picture-maker's point of view but not in the dramatic sense, repetitions of the same action, all these things are to be reprehended.

The story of the picture is based on Mr. Tom Dixon's "The Clansman." No one who cares for the history of our country should miss seeing this stirring exhibition.

TIMES

NEW YORK

MAR 13 1915

R. MARCUS ON A POINT F PERSONAL PRIVILEGE

ake City Film Magnate Takes Issue With Times for mething Times Didn't Say; Which Introduces a Little Arithmetic Without Changing Matters.

BY RICHARD MILTON.

IES a letter from M. Marcus, president of the Notable Film mpany at Salt Lake City, taking exceptions to an article in is column two weeks ago in which the showing of "The Birth Nation" in New York at $2 admission price was told, together little comment concerning the showing of big feature produc- Denver at 5 cents. He says we were wrong, that we knew reof we spoke. To quote a part of his letter:

our dope is all wrong. Denver never will see this picture at I saw it under the name of 'The Clansman' in Los Angeles, hey put it on at prices ranging from 25 cents to $1, and it is owing in the Auditorium theater, a house seating 4,000, and selling at a premium. As a matter of fact, scalpers are sell- ets as high as $2.50. The subject consists of twelve reels, so see it would take three hours to run the show."

• • •

THER or not "The Birth of the Nation" ever is shown in enver, or whether it will be shown, if it is, at 5 cents or $2, t concern the writer of this column, and if his recollection is statement to the effect that it was at all probable the produc- uld come to Denver at the prevailing prices was made. The at the picture was exhibited in New York at $2 admission as told merely to show to what height the photoplay game has d and to draw a comparison between the institution from the or's standpoint in Denver and in other cities. It was stated er big feature productions, and possibly it was said other pro- s of perhaps as great importance and worth—which statement rected on—have been shown here at 5 cents and still are t price. Attention was called to "The Wolf," "The s Caesar" and others as examples.

ous, if the fact that the subject consists of twelve being shown here for 5 cents, maybe it might be Julius Caesar," you remember, was in six reels, and nts, and twice six reels is twelve and twice 5 cents w, Mr. Marcus agrees with us that Denver is the ture city in America.

• • •

e of a four-part production March 22, the Mutual will have inaugurated what Manager Lustig of declares is one of the most important undertakings in several years. By the combination of Mutual, and New York film companies' interests what are tual Master pictures are to be produced at a cost of negative production alone. Which means, it is of special attractions unsurpassed heretofore in the lmost famous actors and actresses will be featured such celebrities as Robert Edeson, Henry Wood- Bessie Barriscale and others of like fame being ion will be under the direction of the great- also D. W. Griffith, the man who put across Thomas H. Ince and Mack Sennett being

Journal of Commerce March 20-1915

MOTION PICTURE NOTES

The phenomenal success of D. W. Griffith's great film spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Liberty Theatre, is one of the features of the present theatrical season. This study in motion pictures has done much to elevate the art and has set film entertainments on a par with the best the stage offers. Even with the $2 scale of prices, the house is sold out at every performance.

Express

MAR 13 1915

"The Birth of a Nation"

The last objection of the last foe of motion pictures will die, never to be resurrected, if that last foe will see "The Birth of a Nation."

For three hours it holds enthralled its audiences. It makes appeal to the highest brow and the warmest heart. It stimulates thought. It stirs emotion to its most unaccustomed depths. The first half reaches the heights of sublimity, and strikes the chords of beauty. The second is magnificence of mechanics, a torrent of breathless action. Throughout all flows streamlike the motif of a story that never disappears nor can be forgotten. "The Birth of a Nation" is a marvel of coherence and execution. By this, his greatest work, David W. Griffith has proven his generalship in handling masses of men and women, has written himself in our memories as a genius. There is no one to deny him the title of the David Belasco of moving pictures.

The admiration and curiosity of his first audience, at the private view on Monday, drew him before the curtain. It saw a tall, well-favored man of athlete resemblance, manifestly unprepared for the demand for sight of him, simple and direct in his utterances.

He won his title of "The Belasco of the moving pictures" by the poetry in his nature, the attention to details, the tender touches that reach the deepest humanity in us. Yet is a tremendous virility manifest in his handling of the largest numbers of 18,000 persons before a camera. By his work in massing armies he has disclosed himself as a Napoleon of the screen, a Napoleon for whom we hope no Waterloo awaits.

ADVOCATE

ATLANTIC CITY, N J

Mar. 13-1915

PHOTO-PLAY A LIBEL ON COLORED RACE

"Birth of Nation," Now Running, Misrepresents Our People Organized Movement to Suppress It

New York City, March 6th.—A campaign for the suppression of the new motion picture spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," the drama of Civil War, Reconstruction and Ku-Klux Klan days in the South, based upon Thomas Dixon's novel, "The Clansman," which opened in the Liberty Theatre on Wednesday night, has been undertaken by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. Evidence that the film is causing unrest among the Negroes of the city, which it is feared may grow into open disturbances if the film continues to be presented, is the basis of the association's action. Officials explained today at the headquarters, 70 Fifth avenue, that Negroes had been coming to them to demand that action be taken to stop the film, and that the protests arise from an intense resentment against the characterization of the Negro in the story, in the justification of the violence of the Ku-Klux Klan. If their opposition to the film is not successful these officers said, they fear for the results.

The Negroes feel that the story of the picture-play is a libel upon their race, in that it represents the Negro as either a primitive and ignorant being, or a vicious and treacherous criminal, according to the officials of the association. Their opposition is based on the decision of the National Board of Censorship, after repeated representations, against the film in its present form. The association officers who [illegible] expressed condemnation of it as an injustice to Negroes. Rabbi Wise and the Rev. Dr. Perry Stickney Grant are to preach against it tomorrow. In addition, the association is pushing an attempt to get legal action to stop the film.

Caused Trouble in West

The fight to stop the film was begun after its release in Los Angeles, when a representative of the association there sent word that it was causing trouble among the Negroes. It had already been viewed by a subcommittee of the National Board of Censorship, and passed; but officers of the association took the question up with Dr. F. C. Howe, chairman of the board, and gained a decision for a review by the central body. This took place Monday afternoon, and after it the National Board reversed the decision of their subcommittee by a vote of 10 to 4. The portions objected to were a section in which a Negro was shown chasing a white girl until she was forced to save herself by leaping from a cliff, another scene in which a mulatto, attempting a forced marriage with a white girl through his political influence under Negro franchise, seized her and carried her from the room, and a scene in which Negroes were shown drinking in a saloon.

A representative of the association went to Arthur Woods, Police Commissioner, and he called the matter to the attention of Chief Magistrate McAdoo, who warned the owners against [illegible] of the film and called a hearing for Wednesday noon. Deputy Police Commissioner Dunham and Inspector Morris, at this hearing, expressed the fear of the Police Department that the film might cause rioting. Ephraim Kaufman, Deputy Commissioner of Licenses, was also approached on the question of whether the film could be stopped under the law against indecency.

Changes Did Not Satisfy

At the Magistrate's [illegible] attorney for the owners said the changes had been made in the film to meet objections, and requested the police and association officials to see it in its new form and consider whether it was not acceptable. This was agreed upon, and no move was made to prevent the first performance.

The film as changed, however, did not meet the approval of the association or of the officials of the National Board of Censorship, who attended the first night performance. The play, "The Clansman," caused trouble when it was produced in Philadelphia and stopped by the courts as a menace to public safety and incitement to riot. There is danger in such a play as this, it is maintained by the association, because on the ground that it is perennial "Uncle Tom's Cabin" in the South. Recently it has been insisted that the name be changed to "The Traitor." It is claimed that Legree be represented as a white man, and that the [illegible] treatment [illegible] slaves.

[illegible] stirred about the

"The Birth of a Nation" a Masterpiece

BY MABEL CONDON

WHEN David W. Griffith produced "The Birth of a Nation," he not only engaged in the telling of history but in the making of it. For his thirteen-reel film adaptation of Thomas Dixon's story "The Clansman," is abundant in spectacle, rich in story and human in the telling. It grips with its strength and its heart-breaks, it awes with its overwhelming bigness and with the subtle appeal of just the little things which, because they are so little yet so finished, are remembered with the big. The "little Colonel" making his last charge, and the little sister who in honor of her brother's home-coming dots with coal soot the cotton-trimming of her shabby and only gown and names the result "southern ermine," are received, one with applause, the other with a silence that bespeaks a heart-sympathy with the South in the days of its pathetic poverty. And the applause and the silence are equally forceful.

The film is divided into two acts. The battles comprise the strength of the first while the story-interest and the spectacle furnished by the work of the Ku Klux Klan carries the second act to a big climax. But praiseworthy to the point of being a foremost feature of the film, is the impersonation of President Lincoln, his attitude of love and mercy toward the seceded states, and afterward, when the tired North and exhausted South have met in peace, and the big-hearted President has stated that his treatment of the Southern states shall be "as though they had never been away," then comes the fatal night at the Ford Theater. And the assassination of Lincoln is portrayed according to history and the say-so of eye-witnesses.

President Lincoln entering his private box at Ford's theater.

It is as impressive a scene as play or story has ever accomplished. The setting is exactly that of the Ford theater, the play is on, the hour about 10:13. A sudden chilliness in the theater is bespoken when the President draws a cape about his shoulders. His body-guard, to get a view of the stage, leaves unguarded the door to the President's box. John Wilkes Booth slips into the vacated place of guard, opens the door into the box, aims at the President who is stooping forward watching the stage, and fires. As those of his box reach the President, Booth rushes past them, leaps to the rail and jumps to the stage, escaping by the rear.

Allegory showing the reign of permanent peace in "The Birth of a Nation."

The father of the "little Colonel" reading the fatal news the following morning, voices the sentiment of the South in the words, "Our best friend is dead—what will become of us now?" The uprising of the negroes, and the depredations resulting which inspire the formation of the Ku Klux Klan, is the answer as given in scenes of power and action.

The film tells the story of the South as the South would tell it, so the sub-titles, at the beginning of the picture, inform us. They state that northern men sold the negroes into the South, then, when the South had taking over the selling as well as the buying, the North, after a lapse of two centuries, decried slavery. Throughout the film, the histories used as reference during the picture's making are named.

Historical group representing many characters in "The Birth of a Nation."

LESLIE'S WEEKLY.
New York City
MAR 18 1915

A STUPENDOUS FILM PRODUCTION
Surrender of Lee to Grant at Appomattox as depicted in the new film play, "The Birth of a Nation," a new version of Dixon's "The Clansman," now appearing at the Liberty Theatre. This production marks the advent of twenty-dollar film plays and its career will be watched with interest in dramatic circles.

STAR
LINCOLN, NEB.
MAR 14 1915

Two Dollar Movie Show Arrives.

The pioneer two dollar moving picture show has come to town. They are getting two greenbacks per seat in parts of the Liberty theatre, for the elaborate picture, "The Birth of a Nation," based on Thomas Dixon Novel, "The Clansman."

It is impossible to see "The Birth of a Nation" without getting superlative. The work which must have been done in staging it is staggering. But it is difficult to suppress the feeling that a less factional play might better have been selected for the first movie play to cosmet on a level with the regular drama. There were near riots in many places several years ago when this story of the South in the days of reconstruction and expose of the Klux Klan was represented as a play.

Other pretentious and elaborate motion picture dramas have been shown in Broadway in the legitimate theatres for runs of considerable length. "Quo Vadis"? "Cabiria" and "Last days of Pompeii" are a few that came from foreign producers, and "Neptune's Daughter" that had a run in the Globe theatre, was an example of American workmanship. "The Birth of a Nation," is American in story, in scenes and in production.

Thomas Dixon author of "The Clansman," spoke before the first audience and gave full credit for the extraordinary production to the director, D. W. Griffith who stepped before the curtain (or should one say screen?) also and made a few remarks about freeing motion pictures from the curb of censorship. Brings Genesis Back.

Reported that "The Birth of a Nation" will bring the [illegible]

EXAMINER
San Francisco, Cal.
MAR 14 1915

"The Clansman" at Alcazar.

"THE CLANSMAN," written by Thomas Dixon Jr., was successful as a novel because it had dramatic moments that gripped the emotions of its readers, but the motion picture, "The Clansman," or "The Birth of the Nation," which that wizard of the picture-play, D. W. Griffith, has amplified from the novel, is so far beyond the novel that there is little comparison.

Last week this great production was shown to President Wilson and the members of his Cabinet at the White House in Washington. The east room was used for the presentation, under the personal direction of Griffith. The President and the members of his Cabinet expressed their unbounded admiration for the wonderful achievement of the Belasco of the film world. "The Clansman," in addition to its wonderful dramatic romantic and historical story, depicts the greatest of war scenes of the days of the Civil War. Owing to the great demand, the Alcazar will continue this startling film-play for a third week, commencing Monday afternoon, March 15. There are two performances daily, one at 2:15 in the afternoon and the other at 8:15 o'clock in the evening. There are twelve big reels and the performance lasts three hours. The stage settings, the symphony orchestra and the big chorus of jubilee singers are all features of this wonderful attraction.

TRIBUNE
Terre Haute, Ind.
MAR 15 1915

In order to secure a New York theatre for his film production of "The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith had to post a substantial guarantee. It is said he pays $1,250 per week in advance for the use of the Lyric theatre without any service. However, the takings for the first week were in the neighborhood of $14,000. "The Birth of a Nation" is a twelve-reel film. The top price of admission at the Lyric is two dollars. Yes, two dollars! Hard to realize, isn't it, in a community where ten cents is considered too much money for the best films turned out by Vitagraph, the Lubin and the Fox studios, and fifteen cents is regarded as an extortion. But there will come a time when we will have to pay the price for real film features of 12 reels with the cheaper [illegible] contemplated. The portions said to be objectionable in the second of the two parts in which crazed negros are shown about to attack white girls. Maybe when "The Birth of a Nation" finds its way to the five and ten cents picture shows such censorship will be necessary. Experienced theatrical men in last night's audience said that a new epoch in motion pictures is reached in "The Birth of a Nation."

---

The picture is divided into two parts of six reels each. The first sketches the beginning of the civil war, shows a great battle scene in which hundreds of men acted before the camera and hundreds of horses took part in the cavalry (charge). President Lincoln picturesquely portrayed by Joseph Henabery, was applauded. His cabinet was pictured, while one of the most dramatic scenes was the assasination of the war time President in Ford's theatre, a programme note asserting that every detail of the historic playhouse had been observed in the building of a special theatre for picture purposes.

Mr. Griffith has been a progressive from the first in his invention of motion picture effects. In the second part was some excellent cinema photography, street scenes in the supposed towns of Piedmont were vividly portrayed. One may doubt the statement that eighteen thousand actors took part in the making of the drama, but the mobs of rioters, the soldiers in the field and the hundreds of Klux Klan members, who dashed through the woods, across streams and up hillsides would lead one to think so.

The playing of the different parts was more or less subjugated to the ensemble, although Lillian Gish as the heroine; Henry Walthall, as the hero; George Seigmann, as the mulatto villian, and Miss Miriam Cooper and Mae Marsh were good.

Mar. 20-15

The southern scenes could be taken for no others. The atmosphere is realistically southern and especially fine are the street scenes. The home of the Camerons, the eldest son of which becomes the "little Colonel," is pillared and large. It suggests the hospitality of the dwellers, which is instanced in the visit of the sons of the Hon. Austin Stoneman, a northern statesman who is credited with exceptional power in the Capitol. He is a heavy-faced, club-footed personage whom men fear and obey and whom his daughter loves, though there is a part of his life in which she does not share; that part devoted to his mulatto house-keeper. And into the house where the mulatto rules, the daughter is never allowed to venture.

The Stoneman boys, visiting the Camerons, bring with them a photograph of their sister, Lillian. With it the eldest Cameron falls in love and Phil Stoneman learns to love Margaret Cameron. Their visit has scarcely terminated, when the negro question precipitates war.

The three Cameron boys and two Stoneman boys, enlist on respective sides. Ben, the eldest Cameron is named the "little Colonel." He alone is left of the three Camerons, and Phil, of the Stonemans. Four years of fighting is depicted in the various battles, fought in valley and on mountain-sides. Never before have such battles been waged in front of a motion picture camera. They cover miles of distance and the action in the background is as apparent, though of necessity less distinct, as that at closer range.

The close of the war brings the "little Colonel" back to a home where poverty has made for shabbiness and scant food. He has spent some weeks in a northern hospital where he met Elsie Stoneman, the girl of his dreams. His little pet sister, in her southern-ermine trimmed and much-worn frock is a sad contrast to the girl of northern means. The north meanwhile has become dangerous to the health of Austin Stoneman and he comes south with his daughter, choosing the city in which the Camerons live.

Stoneman has urged the doctrine that the negro is equal in all ways to the white man and has made a protege of Silas Lynch, a mulatto. Lynch has already incensed the negroes against the white people and many of the homes and women of the latter race have been desecrated by them. The "little Colonel" groups some men about him and they form the Ku Klux Klan for the defense of their homes and their women. The Klansmen's garb is a white flowing garment embellished with the emblem of the order and having a white head-dress. By working on the superstition of the negro, the band becomes a power and metes out punishment by night to negro offenders.

One day the little sister goes alone to the spring. She is followed by Gus, a negro. Terrorized, she runs from him, finds herself on the edge of a high cliff and threatens to jump if he follows. He follows and the "little Colonel," making a frantic search for his little sister, finds her bruised body on the rocks below the cliff. She dies and the Ku Klux Klan deals out punishment to Gus that night.

Raiding is begun by the negroes, and intense suspense is sustained as the colored mobs are shown in their work of destruction while the Ku Klux Klan grows, group by group and finally sweeps down upon the raiders, a spectacle inspiring and over-mastering.

Stoneman experiences the result of his teaching in Lynch's decision to marry Elsie. It is only the triumph of the Ku Klux Klan that effects her liberation from the negro. Happier days follow when Elsie and the "little Colonel" see, in contrast to the allegory of war, that of peace; when the negro has been relegated to Liberia, which solution to the race question is said to have been that of President Lincoln.

All the fine, though minor things, which went into the making of "The Birth of a Nation," are too numerous for mention. They deserve tribute, nevertheless. And of the cast, Henry Walthall as the "little Colonel" and Mae Marsh as the little sister, will be remembered for their splendid playing. G. W. Bitzer, cameraman, had a large share in the success of this big Griffith film, which had its opening at the Liberty theater, New York, March 3, before an attendance representative of many of the biggest interests of the film industry.

At the close of part one, Thomas Dixon appeared on the stage and in his introduction of David W. Griffith, stated that the film told the story better than either his book or the play. Mr. Griffith's few words were modestly expressive of his aim in adapting "The Clansman" and of his great thanks to his audience for their reception of his film.

DAVID W. GRIFFITH

No one in the cinematograph world has more reason to blink from the strong glare of publicity focussed upon him than David W. Griffith, whose latest picture, "The Birth of a Nation," has proved such a spectacular success. Griffith's history is a very interesting one. Seven years ago he was a stranded actor. Eventually he secured a position in a studio in New York as an extra actor. He demonstrated his ability, became a regular actor and when the director fell sick it fell to Griffith to take his place. The picture was a winner and he has been a director ever since. Griffith can be compared to that great master of stagecraft, Augustine Daly, in having ability to discern latent talent and to develop it. Some of the most prominent film stars, such as Mary Pickford, Blanche Sweet, Marion Leonard, Mack Sennett, Mae Marsh, Florence Lawrence, Flo La Badie, Mabel Normand and many others were "developed" by Griffith. He started with the Biograph, but left that company in 1913 to go with the Reliance and Majestic organizations, with which he is now aligned. His salary is said to be $100,000 a year.

CLIPPING FROM PITTSBURG DISPATCH APRIL 26, 1915

From Examiner

Address San Francisco, Cal.

Date MAR 9 1915

'Clansman' Stays Another Week

Established:

New Photo Star Shines in Film

LILLIAN GISH

In "The Clansman" at the Alcazar.

Lillian Gish, Latest Discovery of D. W. Griffith, Wins Alcazar Audiences.

D. W. GRIFFITH'S motion picture production of "The Clansman," based on Thomas Dixon's novel of that name, but which in the big film version is more adequately explained by its subtitle of "The Birth of the Nation," continues its extraordinary success at the Alcazar Theatre, where its engagement has been prolonged another week.

One of the most of notable picture artists who appear in the Clansman and whose work attracts applause as hearty as that given to popular-speaking favorites, is Lillian Gish, one of the latest discoveries of Griffith, who is known as the David Belasco of the motion picture drama.

Miss Gish plays the part of the daughter of the great commoner, whose pride and ambition nearly wreck the republic, and her beauty and charm form attractive features of the production.

CALL

San Francisco, Cal.

APR 24 1915

Cort

Clansman, or the Birth of the ... starts on the second week of ... engagement at the Cort Theater ... It takes three hours to ... the twelve reels of "The ..."

Introduction of old Southern ... by a chorus and the playing of ... music by the augmented orc... is a feature. There is a ... at 3 o'clock every day, in ... to the evening performances. "Clansman" presents the prob... race conditions and it also ... to the mind the ravages of ... deals specifically with the ... civil war and the recon... period. The organization ... Ku Klux Klan and its motives ...

...y-five thousand people took ... the making of "The Clans... ...se horses were employed, and ...onths were required to stage ...uction. The result represents ...nditure of $500,000.

Henry W. Savage's musical ...sonas ... Cort next week ...

Lillian Gish in The Clansman Cort

Lincoln in Movies Proving a Real Rival of Legitimate

"Birth of a Nation" Packs Liberty Theater Twice Daily—Charges for Highest Class Production—"Fads and Fancies" Typical Girls and Music Show

NEW YORK, March 11.—This is where the movies, from only the standpoint of [illegible] amusement, [illegible] of the current week, is a moving picture. It is not only playing in a [illegible] usually devoted to [illegible] theatrical attractions but it is [illegible] charging regular theatrical prices—five dollars for orchestra stalls and the other seats in the house on the same basis. That this could be done by any moving picture was scouted by the theatrical managers, and the ticket speculators paid absolutely no attention to the new venture.

Now that the Liberty theater is twice daily and Sundays holding bigger audiences than ever before in its history and with a big advance sale, the speculators are kicking themselves for their lack of foresight and trying to get even by selling the 25 best gallery tickets to the unwary at a dollar on the assurance that they are the best seats in the house, an assurance the more readily accepted as no one in New York ever heard of moving pictures being shown at regular theater prices.

This exceptional attraction is called "The Birth of a Nation" and is to some extent founded on Thomas Dixon's Ku Klux story "The Clansman." A large part of its appeal to all kinds of people is due primarily to the tremendous events in comparatively recent American history with which it deals, and almost as much to the fact that it is produced by D. W. Griffiths who has been in the moving picture business since its very beginning and who knows how to utilize every one of its resources to affect the public.

Proves a Thriller.

On a thread of primitive romance, not important to the experienced theatergoer but dear to the heart of the movie fan, are strung tremendous battle scenes reproduced from the Civil War, a remarkable showing of Ford's theater with its audience and performance the evening Lincoln was assassinated, the assassination itself in vivid reflection and, most exciting of all, thrilling episodes during the period of negro domination in the Southern States and its final wiping out by the mysterious Ku Klux Klan.

For real dramatic interest, and its drama is so intense that it brings the audiences to their feet as no theatrical play has in many, many years, we are given in absolute action the great story of the contest between the races with the whites fighting for the honor of their women and their very lives, ranged on one side and on the other the negroes drunk with their new power and urged on by self-seeking politicians of the vilest sort.

More than eight months were consumed in preparatory work before the pictures were ready to show. Thousands of men, women and horses were employed, to say nothing of the costumes, weapons and ammunition that had to be provided. A special theater was built, its interior an exact reproduction of Ford's, in measurements, decorations, and arrangements of the boxes, seats and stage. Right here it is proper to say that it must be a very hardened theatergoer and a very small American who does not feel a thrill when Abraham Lincoln enters his box and bows in kindly recognition of the audience that rises to greet him.

True to Life.

The battle scenes, pictured in clear mountain air, are wonders of photographic accomplishment entirely outside of their material bigness and their effective details of men engaged in what it is hard to believe is not the actual fighting of war. There are some of us who are thoroughly familiar with the happenings of this time, some by personal knowledge and others by close contact with those who had participated in them. The more one knows the more one is impressed by the fidelity of the pictures to the things and people they represent and their historical accuracy.

Any one who was alive and of understanding and remembering age at the time of Lincoln's assassination must feel, as he sees the scenes in Ford's theater on that memorable night brought to his sight in these pictures, that he is seeing the tragedy [illegible] as it happened. Southerners [illegible] in session the negro legislature of South Carolina presided over [illegible] lieutenant governor, [illegible] the negro [illegible] with [illegible]

RECORD

m _____

ress COLUMBIA, S. C.

te MAR 14 1915

In a recent issue of one of the best known trade journals in the industry, it was stated that the director, who attempted to produce a picture with a script in his hand, was seriously handicapped. Under the heading "Producing Without a Scenario," the writer contended that to do so was for the average director to court disaster. The writer qualified his statement somewhat, however, by saying that exceptions were made to this rule in the cases of those whom he described as coming under the class of "genfuses."

This admission, of course, greatly modifies the main contention made in the article. As a matter of fact, a very big percentage of the greatest motion picture directors use a script hardly at all, at least after they have begun production. It is a rare thing, for instance, to see D. W. Griffith, director-general of the Reliance-Majestic forces, producing with a manuscript close at hand. It is said that Mr. Griffith produced his 12-reel classic, "The Birth of a Nation," without handling a script at all. Thomas H. Ince, the wizard of the New York Motion Picture corporation, also seldom uses a scenario after he has commenced to create a photoplay, while Mack Sennett, the master-craftsman in the field of film comedy, never uses a script at all, when constructing one of his famous Keystones. In fact, such a thing as a Keystone scenario, probably doesn't exist. And like Topsy, each of the popular Sennett productions, "jest growed."

Both Mr. Griffith and Mr. Ince, when making preparations for a new production, familiarize themselves with the theme, creating new business as the plot develops under their hands. This is one reason, why their pictures are pre-eminently original and unusual. Geniuses are prone to set their own standard and make their own rules.

The Bayside Review & Long Island Times March 17, 1915

LIBERTY, MANHATTAN.

D. W. Griffith's astonishing production, "The Birth of a Nation," has proven the sensation of years in Manhattan theatricals. When it was announced that a motion picture production was to be given at the regular $2 scale of prices in the Liberty, skeptics predicted certain failure for so daring an innovation. There has not been a vacant seat in the house since the opening performance. Such interest has been manifested in the production and such flattering comment has been devoted to it that all signs point to it making a record which will mark an epoch in metropolitan stage history.

BEHIND THE SCREEN

CONDUCTED BY ED. H. ROBINS

LAST Sunday I announced that my next article, published today, would be devoted to a discussion of Canadian motion-picture authors. As this is to be an elaborate story of especial interest to Canadians, who are at this time vitally interested in anything all-Canadian, I have been obliged to postpone my writing upon this subject this week because of lack of time in collecting all necessary material with which this article will deal. It is too important a subject to deal gently with and too much credit is due these Canadians for exceptional ability in writing photo-plays that catch the public fancy. When one realizes that in far-away England the products of the brains of this Dominion are now being shown to thousands of loyal Britons a feeling of pride must fill the hearts of all Canadians. So this is the reason for my taking another week to secure more thoroly the necessary data for a proper presentation of this subject. I trust my readers will, therefore, pardon my writing upon another matter, leaving the Canadian authors for my next contribution.

An Unusual Event

An unusual event is taking place in New York City at the present time, so unusual in fact that I consider it of importance for lengthy mention here. At the Liberty Theatre, on 42nd street, in the American metropolis, there is a photoplay feature being presented to enthusiastic audiences which has set a new standard for all screen productions. It is everything that the producers have claimed for it. It is stupendous, colossal, ambitious. Over 18,000 people were employed in its making and nearly 140,000 feet of negative film used in photographing the story. Over six months' time was found necessary for its proper taking and an entire city was built so that adequate settings could be secured. The police of Los Angeles, near which city all the scenes were made, prohibited the exhibition of this photoplay on the ground that it was too sensational and might cause race riots or something akin to such a condition. Now in New York it is creating more talk than any American feature has ever secured.

Two Dollars for Orchestra Seats

Such a success is this new photoplay that its managers have made the price of admission $2 for an orchestra chair, and what is more to the point the picture devotees are paying this price without a murmur. Imagine that! A theatre that until a year ago housed only stars and plays of the first magnitude now charging and receiving for a picture on the screen the same figure that theatre-goers were wont to pay for the best on the legitimate stage. But such is an absolute fact. Only once before in the history of moving pictures has any such a price been asked and that was for the Durbar spectacle. For this release $1.50 was the price for a few rows in the orchestra, which was later reduced because of lack of patronage.

An Extraordinary Occasion

Something out of the ordinary must cause such a situation. That something is found in the person of David W. Griffiths. He is the man who made such a thing possible. He succeeded when others failed. This wizard of the photoplay already has done work to uplift the picture drama than any other man in this field of amusement. The tutor of Mary Pickford and other clever artists; the man who first introduced what is now known as the "close-up" has once again proven his right to be acclaimed the foremost producer of moving pictures. And no one is more pleased than the writer. I have seen him directing picture-making when he was the mainstay of the Biograph Company. I know how careful he is regarding detail; to what lengths he would go to secure an effect that other directors would pass by with only a passing thought. He is the Belasco of the movies and I can pay him no greater compliment than to compare him to the theatrical producer to which I owe so much, and for whom I have such a profound admiration.

"The Birth of Nations"

The name of this photoplay is "The Birth of Nations." It is founded on the Rev. Mr. Thomas A. Dixon's widely-read story, "The Clansman." But it goes beyond Mr. Dixon's story. It begins with the Indians, and proceeds thru the slave period. This story was first secured by the Kinemacolor Company for moving-picture purposes, but a disagreement between that company and the author caused the contract to be declared void. Mr. Griffiths had faith in it, secured the rights for the company and now, after months of tedious labor, presents it to the public at the highest prices ever asked for a photoplay. He was allowed to use his own discretion as to expenditures and the fact that he took about 140,000 feet of negative and then culled it to 12,000 feet, is proof positive that money was not considered.

The Longest Feature Play

This play is the longest feature film ever presented in this country. Its twelve reels are brimful of action. "Cabiria," another sensation, given in eight reels in this country, was shown as twelve in Europe. Four reels were eliminated when this photoplay was presented in New York because the management claimed no audience would sit thru a feature of such a length. Griffiths has proven the fallacy of this idea. His masterpiece is playing to crowded houses and his venture marks a new epoch in the feature business of the world. The moving-picture industry can well be proud of this genius.

Public Ledger, Phila. Mar. 28, 1915

$5 MOVIES COMING SOON, IS PROPHECY OF FILM WIZARD

Photo-drama Still in "Swaddling Clothes," Says D. W. Griffith, Producer of Mammoth Spectacles.

David W. Griffith, who is today the biggest figure in the moving-picture world, believes that the "movies" are still in their infancy.

"I predict," said Mr. Griffith, "that a moving picture will be made within three or four years for which the entrance money will be $5 and $6 a seat. It is easy to predict that."

As the creator who is stalking ahead of the procession, Mr. Griffith has done more subtle things, more delicate things and more gigantic things on the screen than any other man.

While he is a producer without a rival and a generalissimo of mimic forces whose work has never been equaled, he is also a thinker who ponders the new problems of filmland, a triumphant Columbus of the screen.

"It is foolish to think that the moving picture has reached its climax of development," said he in the course of an interview. "We have the moving-picture theatre as well built and as well run as any other theatre; we have the moving-picture show that brings $2 a seat; we have the foremost actors and the foremost writers of the world working for us. So people are prone to think we have gone the limit and there is nothing [illegible] But I tell you that [illegible]

Would you mind predicting something about the maturity of this promising infant?" was suggested.

He smiled that courteous, humorous, knowing smile of the Southerner (his father was a Kentucky Colonel, brevetted Brigadier General of Volunteers by the Confederate States of America).

"I am not a dreamer in the sense that I see fantastic things unlikely of realization," he explained. "I haven't dreamed an impossible thing in seven years—since I started in pictures. That is the beauty of this work. It makes dreams come true."

High Prices to Speculators

Mr. Griffith then predicted the five-dollar movie.

"But will the public pay $5 a seat merely to see a picture?" he was asked.

"They are already doing it—to ticket speculators. When I first proposed asking $2 a seat for my new film not a single man in the theatrical business could be found to say I was making a sound business move. Regular theatres on all sides were cutting prices, not advancing them, and 50 cents a seat had always heretofore been considered a record price for the best films.

"The public is quick to see values. If they are willing to pay 5 cents to see a picture that costs $500 to produce and 50 cents to see a picture that costs $50,000 to produce, they are willing to pay $2 to see one that costs half a million to produce.

"And when we can put on a picture that will cost $3,000,000 to produce the public will be willing to pay $5 a seat for it."

"Where are you going to get the money and how are you going to spend it?" was asked.

"If you had asked me a year ago where we could get the money I would have believed it would be impossible," replied Mr. Griffith, "for up to that time an investment of $60,000 was considered utterly daring for a picture; but the days of little things in the pictures are gone by forever. When I started in the business only seven years ago a producer who spent $500 on a picture was considered very extravagant. Not today. We spend that much on a single scene that runs less than a minute, and then often throw it away because it doesn't fit or is not just right."

THE DRAMATIC STAGE

ROBERT GRAU

Intimate and Important Revelations Appertaining to the Larger and Finer Phases of the Business

David W. Griffith's pictorial cycle had two premiers this week, one on Monday afternoon for the press, while the general public saw The Birth of a Nation on Wednesday evening. Ever since the Liberty Theater has been practically sold out twice daily. One may see at any hour of the day a long line approaching the box-office, purchasing seats days in advance. In the balcony and gallery particularly the capacity has been tested, thus proving that the masses will pay "theater prices" to see a hotoplay.

No previous film production has ever been exploited with such total disregard of expense. Never in the history of the theater has such an advertising campaign been attempted. The late J. M. Hill's exploitation of Denman Thompson, wherein he spent $10,000 in the New York dailies in one issue, no longer holds the record, for at least $25,000 was spent by the Mutual Film Corporation before the opening.

At the private showing it was observed that not one person left his or her seat until the final reel had been completed. For two hours and forty minutes an audience representing the best brains of the metropolis sat under the spell Griffith had woven. In the foyers during the one short intermission the predominating opinion expressed was that this Griffith effort created an epoch of greater significance than either Quo Vadis or Cabiria.

But in the second part of The Birth of a Nation the daring nature of this pictorial recital caused not a few eminent writers to shake their heads ominously. Said one:

"As recently as ten years ago this picture would have created a race war, twenty years ago it would never have been presented a second time, but today I wonder only at the intrepidity of the entire undertaking. If the films are not censored in part, if the public is permitted to see it as shown here today, even if in America snags are encountered the final result will be the greatest financial success in film history."

At the conclusion of the tense performance on the screen there gathered in the rear of the orchestra a group of stars and musicians from the Metropolitan Opera House. The discussion became so animated that a crowd soon gathered to listen to what was as heated an argument as even grnd opera singers of foreign characteristics can indulge in. "Griffith is the Toscanini of motion pictures," remarked one of the prima donnas of the opera house.

Immediately came a ponderous figure to the fore gesticulating wildly: "Bah," says he, "Griffith is more than a genius. He is to be compared with no mere man When Toscanini can make men and women sing without voices, when he can make them live a story in two hours and a half, like this one today, then, and not before, will he be entitled to rank as the 'Griffith of Grand Opera.'"

After such a poignant disposition of the merits of the two masters there came a babble in several languages simultaneously. Griffith must have heard it all, for he was but a step away.

CLIPPER
New York City
MAR 20 1915

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION," A GENUINE BOX OFFICE SENSATION AS WELL AS ARTISTIC SUCCESS.

D. W. Griffith's astonishing production, "The Birth of a Nation," has proven the sensation of years in New York theatricals. When it was announced that a motion picture production was to be given at the regular $2 scale of prices in the Liberty, skeptics predicted certain failure for so daring an innovation. There has not been a vacant seat in the house since the opening performance, and such enormous crowds have been turned away at every presentation that another theatre could have been filled. Such interest has been manifested in the production and such flattering comment has been devoted to it that all signs point to it making a record which will mark an epoch in metropolitan stage history."

Eve World, Mar. 20-15

The relation of the stage to the book has been proved in the great success of D. W. Griffith's motion picture production, "The Birth of a Nation." Ever since this story was unfolded at the Liberty Theatre the libraries have been besieged with applications for books of romantic and historic interest bearing upon this subject.

For the first half of the week the Eighty-first Street Theatre will show Hazel Dawn in the film play, "The Love Route." On Thursday the bill will change to Wallace Eddinger in the screen farce, "A Gentleman of Leisure."

CALL
New York City
MAR 20 1915

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" TRIAL SET FOR WEDNESDAY

For the fourth time, the hearing of charges brought by the National Association for the Advancement of the Colored People against "The Birth of a Nation" film was postponed yesterday. The case had been set for trial before Magistrate House in the Jefferson Market Court at 3 p.m. It was adjourned by agreement between the attorneys of both sides to next Wednesday afternoon at 2 o'clock.

Attorney Martin W. Littleton, representing the defense, and Attorney James W. Osborne, chief of counsel for the plaintiffs, are both engaged in other cases.

Eve. Sun - Mar. 20-15

LIBERTY—The phenomenal success of D. W. Griffith's photographic spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," continues the talk of New York and the country at large. This study in motion pictures has done more to elevate its branch of art than all the things that went before and has set this form of entertainment upon a par with the best the stage offers. It is said the offering continues at the Liberty to the biggest business of any regular $2 attraction now playing New York.

Press, Mar. 20-15

LIBERTY.

The phenomenal success of D. W. Griffith's photographic spectacle "The Birth of a Nation" in the Liberty Theatre continues to be the talk of New York. This motion picture has a [illegible] this form of entertainment upon a par with the best the stage offers.

Eve. Mail, Mar. 20-15

D. W. GRIFFITH.

$2 Movie Is Popular.

The success of D. W. Griffith's photographic spectacle "The Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty Theatre continues. This study in motion pictures has done much to elevate its branch of art. The offering continues at the Liberty to the biggest business of any regular $2 attraction now playing New York.

Journal of Commerce, Mar. 20-15

MOTION PICTURE NOTES.

The phenomenal success of D. W. Griffith's great photo-spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Liberty Theatre, is one of the features of the present theatrical season. This study in motion pictures has done much to elevate the art and has set this entertainment on a par with the best the stage offers. Even with the $2 scale of prices, the house is sold out at every performance.

Courrier de Etats-Unis, Mar. 21-1915

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

Le grand succès du Liberty Theatre

Le succès prodigieux du spectacle photographique "The Birth of a Nation" de D. W. Griffith, au Liberty Theatre, continue à être le sujet de toutes les conversations à New-York et dans ses villes environnantes. Ce remarquable chef-d'œuvre cinématographique a fait davantage pour élever le niveau de l'art du cinéma plus que toute autre production de ce genre jusqu'à ce jour.

La vente des billets à 2 dollars se poursuit très forte au Liberty Theatre.

Commercial, Mar. 20-15

The phenomenal success of D. W. Griffith's photographic spectacle "The Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty Theatre continues the talk of New York and the country at large. This study in motion pictures has done more to elevate its branch of art than all the things that went before and has set this form of entertainment upon a par with the best the stage offers. The offering continues at the Liberty to as big a business as $2 attraction now playing New York.

Mar. 21-15

[illegible] Nation," D. W. [illegible]

STAATSZEITUNG
New York City.
MAR 21 1915

Wandelbilder.

D. W. Griffith's sensationell großartige Wandelbilderserie "The Birth of a Nation", nach Thomas Dixon's berühmter Erzählung "The Clansman", ist ein Riesenfaal-Attraktion zweifel[illegible] mit einem Symphonie-Orchester von 40 Mann, im Liberty Theater zu sehen. 18,000 Personen und 3000 Pferde sind in dieser glänzenden Serie zu sehen.

[illegible]
New York City
MAR 21 1915

Der phänomenale Erfolg des großartigen Lichtspieldramas „The Birth of a Nation", das D. W. Griffith jetzt täglich im Liberty Theater vorführt, hat Denen Recht gegeben, die in dieser Filmproduction einer neuen Aufführung der kinematographischen Kunst erblickten, die sich damit auf gleiche Stufe mit den in den zwei Dollar Sänlern gespielten „realistischen" dramatischen Kunst stellt. „The Birth of a Nation" bleibt auf dem Programm des Liberty Theaters.

STANDARD UNION
Brooklyn, N. Y.
MAR 1

Manhattan Theatres

LIBERTY, MANHATTAN.—The phenomenal success of D. W. Griffith's photographic spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Liberty Theatre, Manhattan, continues the talk of Greater New York. This study in motion pictures has done more to elevate its branch of art than all the things that went before, and has set this form of entertainment upon a par with the best the stage offers. The offering continues at the Liberty to the biggest business of any regular $2 attraction now playing in Manhattan.

EAGLE
Brooklyn, N. Y.
21 1915

The success of D. W. Griffith's photographic spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Liberty Theater, continues the talk of Broadway.

BILLBOARD
Cincinnati, O.
MAR 20 1915

GRIFFITH FILM GOING STRONG

New York, March 11.—The opening of D. W. Griffith's photographic spectacle, The Birth of a Nation, at the Liberty Theater, proved the stirring event of the season. It looks as if this marvelous picture has settled down for the most memorable engagement ever devoted to this branch of art in the history of the New York stage. Much was expected of the picture, but none in the audience was prepared for such a revelation. The magnitude of the production, its bewildering detail, the dramatic possibilities it unfolded, and, above all other things, the wonderful message of peace it conveyed were elements of the greatest surprise. The demonstration of war's futility and the trials and suffering inflicted by blind hatred when passions are aroused in these mighty conflicts carried the most impelling lesson of the kind that has ever been encountered in the theater. The engagement at the Liberty Theater is for two daily presentations afternoon and evening, including Sundays.

TIMES
Brooklyn, N. Y.
MAR 20 1915

"The Birth of a Nation."

The phenomenal success of D. W. Griffith's photographic spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty Theatre continues to be the talk of the town. This study in motion pictures has set this form of entertainment upon a par with the best the stage offers. The offering continues at the Liberty to as big business as any $2 attraction.

JOURNAL
LINCOLN, NEB.
MAR 14 1915

New York Theaters.

NEW YORK, March 10.—This is where the movies score. From both the financial and dramatic point of view the most important amusement production, not only of the current week but for weeks past, is a moving picture. It is not only playing in a regular theater usually devoted to regular theatrical attractions, but it is asking and getting regular theatrical prices—two dollars for orchestra chairs and the other seats in the house on the same basis. That this could be done by any moving picture was scouted by the theatrical managers, and the ticket speculators paid absolutely no attention to the new venture. Now that the Liberty theater is twice daily and Sundays holding bigger audiences than ever before in its history and with a big advance sale, the speculators are kicking themselves for their lack of foresight and trying to get even by selling the twenty-five cent gallery tickets to the unwary at a dollar on the assurance that they are the best seats in the house, an assurance the more readily accepted as no one in New York ever heard of moving pictures being shown at regular theater prices.

Biggest of the Movies.

This exceptional attraction is called "The Birth of a Nation," and is to some extent founded on Thomas Dixon's Ku Klux story, "The Clansman." A large part of its appeal to all kinds of people is due primarily to the tremendous events in comparatively recent American history with which it deals, and almost as much to the fact that it is produced by D. W. Griffiths, who has been in the moving picture business since its very beginning and who knows how to utilize every one of its resources to affect the public.

On a thread of primitive romance, not important to the experienced theater-goer but dear to the heart of the movie fan, are strung tremendous battle scenes reproduced from the civil war, a remarkable showing of Ford's theater with its audience and performance the evening Lincoln was assassinated and, most exciting of all, thrilling episodes during the period of negro domination in the southern states and its final wiping out by the mysterious Ku Klux Klan. For real dramatic interest, and its drama is so intense that it brings the audiences to their feet as no theatrical play has in many, many years, we are given in absolute action the great story of the contest between the races with the whites fighting for the honor of their women and their very lives, ranged on one side and on the other the negroes drunk with their new power and urged on by self-seeking politicians of the vilest sort.

Remarkable Set of Films.

More than eight months were consumed in preparatory work before the pictures were ready to show. Thousands of men, women and horses were employed, to say nothing of the costumes, weapons and ammunition that had to be provided. A special theater was built, its interior an exact reproduction of Ford's, in measurements, decorations and arrangement of the boxes, seats and stage. Right here it is proper to say that it must be a very hardened theatergoer and a very small American who does not feel a thrill when Abraham Lincoln enters his box and bows in kindly recognition of the audience that rises to greet him.

The battle scenes, pictured in clear mountain air, are wonders of photographic accomplishment entirely outside of their material bigness and their effective details of men engaged in what it is hard to believe is not the actual fighting of war. There are some of us who are thoroughly familiar with the happenings of this time, some by personal knowledge and others by close contact with those who had participated in them. The more one knows the more one is impressed by the fidelity of the pictures to the things and people they represent and their historical accuracy.

Any one who was alive and of understanding and remembering age at the time of Lincoln's assassination must feel, as he sees the scenes in Ford's theater on that memorable night brought to his sight in pictures, that he is seeing the tragedy exactly as it happened. Southerners who saw in session the negro legislature of South Carolina, presided over by a negro lieutenant governor, and its membership largely made up of ignorant field hands, say that the pictures of episodes depicted are in no way exaggerated. The Ku Klux Klan is shown only in its picturesqueness and in its creditable accomplishments, so not so much can be claimed for accuracy in this respect, although the feature of course adds much to the [illegible] of the picture play [illegible] dramatic interest.

Effect on Audiences.

It is a curious fact that although the film runs continuously with an eight minute intermission, for practically three hours, which is longer than the acting time of a more than usually strong drama, the audience does not for a moment lose interest and is in a condition of thrill during most of the performance. The great majority of the spectators leave the theater in a state of mental, emotional and physical limpness. This is true of experienced playgoers and those who rarely see moving pictures quite as much as of the regular fans.

In the view of the theatergoers even the careful production has all the characteristic defects of the moving picture. Producers of picture plays are strenuous in maintaining that their methods are correct and that a study of the moving picture public has shown them that when they try to approach the conventions of the theatrical stage their spectators lose interest in the story that is being unfolded. Therefore they insist on the unnatural speed of the moving characters, upon the interruption in scenes, the quick alternation backward and forward of disconnected episodes and the apparent repetition of things that have been seen before. All these are in a way annoying to the regular theatergoer and, if he is not mistaken in his understanding of himself, diminish rather than embrace his interest.

The secret of the whole thing probably lies in the fact that the large part of the moving picture public has been educated and developed by moving pictures. It has not been taken from the theaters, but has been created mostly by the pictures themselves. It compares the pictures not with any other way of telling a story, but only with pictures it has seen. Therefore the producers may be right in their view point that they know what their public wants and that it would be a mistake to make their methods conform to the requirements of any other kind of intelligence.

The moving picture to be successful must be a showman in the sense of studying the public and finding out what it wants. He must also be a photographic mechanician able to advise the mechanical photographic effects that the moving picture audiences insist upon having. He must be, too, something of a psychologist to study and learn how to excite and hold the attention of the human mind of average caliber. With all this equipment he is not a dramatist in the sense of the theater and his best and most startling accomplishments will not continuously hold the attention of the playgoer whose intelligence will not be conquered by the eye alone even with the aid of his own imagination and the sound supplied by an orchestra and a chorus of voices.

These statements may seem to do what has been said of the honored and hated by "The Birth of a Nation" among playgoers. On the contrary, they simply confirm the fact that this production is a wonderful exception because to all the ordinary attractions of the moving picture it adds a new way of beholding and knowing some historical events in which we are all interested. Take them away of course them from fiction and "The Birth of a Nation" would be simply the best moving picture better done than usual and therefore attractive to the moving picture public. Take away the artificial romance and the north [illegible] for holding interest and this film would still interest the [illegible] American, although it would [illegible] and probably not be very highly regarded by the movie fan. However "The Birth of a Nation" seems to have been produced by a genius to [illegible] all kinds and conditions of Americans the proof of which is shown by the enormous business in which there is likely to be no falling off until it is overtaken by the [illegible]

CHRONICLE
San Francisco, Cal.
MAR 14 1915

ALCAZAR

IN ITS novel form "The Clansman," by Thomas Dixon, [illegible] a great success, and in dramatic presentation it was [illegible] sensational in its appeal. [illegible] named for D. W. Griffith's motion picture production [illegible] from the plot its [illegible] picturesque possibilities. "The Clansman" now [illegible] at the Alcazar in the form of a motion picture photoplay [illegible] ing like it has heretofore been [illegible] and it will be long [illegible] production of such [illegible] realism is attempted.

Aside from the grip of story, "The Clansman" [illegible] the [illegible] and [illegible] for holding interest [illegible]

STAR
LINCOLN, NEB.
MAR 14 1915

LILLIAN GISH
"THE BIRTH OF A NATION", LIBERTY.

BROOKLYN (N. Y.) EAGLE
Date ..... MAR 14 1915

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

Begins Its Fifth Week at Liberty Theatre To-Night.

D. W. Griffith's production in motion photography, "The Birth of a Nation," starts its fifth week of success at the Liberty Theatre with two performances Sunday afternoon and night. The artistic scope and the astonishing details of this work, in which the master hand of Griffith is apparent at every turn, have impressed New York theatregoers as nothing the season has provided to date.

The great battle scenes, the historic incidents of the war, the assassination of President Lincoln and the wonderful runs of the Ku Klux Klans are the high points of interest in the most absorbing drama of the decade. The comprehensive and atmospheric manner in which the thrilling theme is presented and the enlargement of this appeal in the musical accompaniment, the big orchestral effects, so severly made a vital part of the story, [illegible] points of the most impressive kind.

NEWS
BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
MAR 14 1915

"The Birth of a Nation" Great.

D. W. Griffith apparently has achieved a masterpiece in his last great film, "The Birth of a Nation," if one may judge by the praise heaped upon this picture by the metropolitan critics. All of them, the professional reviewers of the drama, who reviewed the first sight of the big film, stated most naively they were baffled for comparisons. "The Birth of a Nation" was big enough to require their opinions, but they had paid so little attention to the movies they had nothing on which to base judgment.

The picture is an excellent example of how a subject may grow of itself. Mr. Griffith started off to make a five or six-reel adaptation of "The Clansman." He ended by producing 14,000 feet of film, which he cut to 12,000, divided it into twelve reels, and called it "The Birth of a Nation." From the landing of the slaves in the present era of American history the picture carries one, and woven through it is a romance that holds the interest, aside from the historical value. Stupendous as to be the favorite word of the in writing of the production.

[illegible] time when Bunny is away from [illegible] man, the greatest achiever [illegible] are making in the motion pic[illegible] world. Stars are coming forward [illegible] photoplays while other pro[illegible] in filmdom are dependent to [illegible] of the b[illegible] on the art and the [illegible] here it is [illegible] ureefulness of the [illegible] has been required [illegible] be a very [illegible] the making of [illegible] very small [illegible] bear his name, [illegible] required [illegible] on the name [illegible] important player to com[illegible] [illegible]'s attention. Griffith's wor[illegible] producers along and throughout [illegible] there is a stir among the mo[illegible] men for something to rival [illegible] "The Avenging Conscience," [illegible] striking still, his "The Birth [illegible] Nation." The latter production is [illegible] to represent the very last [illegible] in motion picture effectiveness [illegible] New York and Los Angeles, the [illegible] cities that thus far have been [illegible] to see the film, success has [illegible] phenomenal. The daring experi[illegible] of presenting the production at [illegible] the best seats, was tried in [illegible] York when the film was first [illegible] there several weeks ago. The [illegible] success of the picture un[illegible] the conditions, was astounding. [illegible] since the opening of the attrac[illegible] the theatre has been crowded with [illegible] and the weekly receipts are [illegible] to reach $14,000. When it is re[illegible] that big [illegible] considered to be doing well with [illegible] of $10,000 a week, the significance of the hit made by "The Birth of a Nation" may be felt. The question that naturally arises is as to the [illegible] of the motion picture feature [illegible] there be a new scale of prices for [illegible] pictures everywhere and will [illegible] come as a logical sequence, a re[illegible] great number of the patrons of [illegible] playhouse who have been [illegible] and completely satisfied [illegible]

RECORD
Philadelphia, Pa.
MAR 28 1915

[illegible] PICTURE CENSORSHIP

[illegible] Record Herald

[illegible] Governor.

[illegible] good, artistic and clean [illegible] not fear censorship [illegible] kind of pictures is not [illegible] by the motion pic[illegible] [illegible] want to go on record [illegible] in my opinion our own [illegible] State Board of Censors is [illegible] in censoring [illegible] think is doing [illegible] producers, exhibitors and [illegible] by eliminating what [illegible] features occur in pic[illegible] [illegible] interested in two of the [illegible] pictures surrounding this [illegible] "The Spoilers" and [illegible] I consider that the [illegible] these pictures were [illegible] absolutely fair and can [illegible] been censored, in [illegible] movie interested, except in [illegible] presentation at the Opera [illegible] War," and such as "The [illegible] set with equally fair [illegible] instance an incident [illegible] certain comedy picture [illegible] at before deciding to [illegible] Opera House. After [illegible] I ordered my opera[illegible] [illegible] four scenes which to [illegible] somewhat objectionable [illegible] that in the picture I had [illegible] the eliminations [illegible] the Pennsylvania [illegible] Censors had not been [illegible] were to be after I had [illegible] a coincidence that the [illegible] I had ordered my operator [illegible] the scenes which the [illegible] State Board of Censors [illegible] eliminated. This seems to [illegible] prove the theory that their judg[illegible] on pictures is most fair."

[illegible] Souther[illegible] been a[illegible] Theate[illegible] trayed [illegible] witness[illegible] It [illegible] ever ac[illegible] Ford t[illegible] A sudd[illegible] P[illegible] [illegible] good, artistic and clean [illegible] not fear censorship [illegible] kind of pictures is not [illegible] by the motion pic[illegible] [illegible] want to go on record [illegible] in my opinion our own [illegible] State Board of Censors is [illegible] in censoring [illegible] think is doing [illegible] producers, exhibitors and [illegible] by eliminating what [illegible] features occur in pic[illegible] [illegible] interested in two of the [illegible] pictures surrounding this [illegible] "The Spoilers" and [illegible] I consider that the [illegible] these pictures were [illegible] absolutely fair and can [illegible] been censored, in [illegible] movie interested, except in [illegible] presentation at the Opera [illegible] War," and such as "The [illegible] set with equally fair [illegible] instance an incident [illegible] certain comedy picture [illegible] at before deciding to [illegible] Opera House. After [illegible] I ordered my opera[illegible] [illegible] four scenes which to [illegible] somewhat objectionable [illegible] that in the picture I had [illegible] the eliminations [illegible] the Pennsylvania [illegible] Censors had not been [illegible] were to be after I had [illegible] a coincidence that the [illegible] I had ordered my operator [illegible] the scenes which the [illegible] State Board of Censors [illegible] eliminated. This seems to [illegible] prove the theory that their judg[illegible] on pictures is most fair."

Oppose Federal Censorship.

There is general antipathy on the part of both producers and exhibitors of motion pictures against the passage of a bill providing for a Federal Board of Censors. Local exhibitors are adverse to the bill and J. S. Swen, manager of the Chestnut Street Opera House, expressed his views on the subject yesterday as follows:—

"I am strongly against any national board of censors. The present so-called National Board of Censors is in my

INTERNATIONAL FILMS

PUBLIC

CHICAGO, ILL.

MAR 19 1915

The National Association for the advancement of colored people is endeavoring to suppress the play entitled "The Birth of a Nation." A summons was issued against the owner and producer by the magistrate's court. The charge is "maintaining a public nuisance on the ground of endangering the safety of the public and offending public morals."

VARIETY

New York City

MAR 19 1915

At the Liberty where the gigantic picture of "The Birth of a Nation" is exhibited, the girl ushers are dressed in the 1870 style. They look very sweet in the grey ruffled frocks and when seating the audience, upon returning the coupon, drop a curtsy. The men attendants are garbed in the army uniforms of the North and South. No play ever produced has the gripping power of this picture. All the women were crying, and not a few men.

Singers, with voices and who have had much experience, perform back of the curtain during the showing of Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation."

It is also said that Lasky has commenced work on a nine-reel feature that will cost at the lowest estimate $100,000 for the production. The feature has not been named, nor will it be according to the story, until nearly ready for release. The 9-reeler is expected to compete and compare with "The Birth of a Nation."

Chicago Tribune. Sun. Jan. 28, 1915

Effect on the Spoken Drama

What will happen to the regular when its prices are being cut ours are advancing?"

regular theatre," he continued, of course, always exist, but not re, as now. The pictures will eliminate from the regular theatre spectacular features of produc- Plays will never again appeal to blic for their scenery or their of actors and supernumeraries. have replaced all that.

only plays that the public will see in the regular theatre will intimate, quiet plays thta can be in one or two settings within lls, and in which the setting is tant, while the drama will be subjective. Objective drama, the melodrama, will be entirely ab- the pictures."

of the written and spoken word o vital to true drama? Do you kill that, too?

e contrary, we intend to vitalize hane of the drama is verbosity. n't produce any picture without rds. In one of my pictures we the screen over 7000 words, in are at least four pages from Wilson's history of the United That is more words than are e average short story.

re coming to pay more and ntion to the words we use on The art of writing for the developing almost as rapidly of acting for them. And the great rewards to be gained there by a writer will be a powerful incentive for him to learn to tell his story more crisply, more tellingly, more alluringly, than he ever could, even in the best spoken drama."

Education by "Movies"

"The time will come, and in less than ten years," he went on, "when the children in the public schools will be taught practically everything by moving pictures. Certainly they will never be obliged to read history again."

While now his annual salary is reputed to be $100,000, Griffith at one time was so hard up that he clutched desperately at the chance to earn $15 a week as extra man in "pictures." To say that he almost single-handed revolutionized the moving picture business is only to repeat what many of its students and historians have said before. He introduced naturalistic acting and he began, in a small way, the development of handling crowds that has led to the half-million-dollar picture with 18,000 people and 1500 horses.

Many of the big stars of the pictures, from Mary Pickford to Blanche Sweet, were "discovered" by Griffith, and a large number of the best directors have learned their trade under him.

Washington Post, Mar. 21-1915

RE is much speculation as to the possibility of a summer at- ction at the Belasco. With both the syndicate theaters con- ing their activities through the late spring and possibly far weather, it would be strange if the Shuberts were to neglect rtunity of keeping their attractive playhouse open also, for the square theater, with its beautiful park surroundings and its detached situation is ideally situated for summer amusements, especially with its exclusive feature—a big windswept roof garden. The installation of one additional elevator would add immeasurably to the attractiveness of this open-air adjunct.

But what character of amusement could be offered without impinging upon a crowded field, with musical comedy organizations at the National and the Columbia and with a well-established dramatic company at Poli's? The answer is obvious—a big feature film. And the h is the sensation of the hour is D. W. Griffith's production, th of a Nation," which, according to authentic reports, played s of $14,000 on its opening week in New York, larger than the f any other attraction in the metropolis with the exception of musical shows.

ducers of "The Birth of a Nation" have already secured the Illinois Theater, Chicago, for an all-summer run; also one -dollar theaters (said to be the magnificent Forrest) in Philadelphia and one of the big Boston houses. [illegible] the Belasco is

"The Birth of a Nation"

At the Liberty

Our readers will appreciate some interesting news about the "Birth of a Nation," the epoch-making feature film which is now in its third week at the Liberty.

Mr. Griffith was eight months making the entire production. During that time he employed a small army of men and women to get the desired results.

Over eighteen authorities were consulted to get the proper atmosphere into the scenes in which President Lincoln appears. The great majority of these authorities agreed that as near as the time of the assassination could be set was 10.13. This calculation is based upon the most authentic reports of the hour that John Wilkes Booth entered Ford's Theatre on the fatal night.

It was a brilliant spring night in Washington, but historians record that just before the shooting the temperature fell quite a bit. This detail is covered in the picture, when you note President Lincoln change his position in the box and slip a warm cape over his shoulders.

Another detail in the Ford's Theatre scenes fixes definitely the facts of the actual shooting. Contrary to current opinion, the President was not shot from the stage. The picture shows the action as it has authentically been reported by a majority of the authoritative writers on the subject.

The portions of Ford's Theatre shown in the story are exact reproductions of the surroundings on the night the President was assassinated. The actual distances were faithfully followed in the scene, even to the twelve foot leap which Booth made from the box after firing the fatal shot.

In the great battle scenes, which are given in the earlier portions of the production, Mr. Griffith employed many novel appliances to get his effects. For the first time in making motion pictures he utilized the telephone most extensively. Imagine a stage director handling thousands upon thousands of players in one scene and directing them by telephone. This was done by laying underground wires to all parts of the battlefield. The director had a switchboard of ten wires directly in front of him, and in this way kept in touch with every part of the big conflicts.

The great battle scenes were also the first ever taken by a motion picture camera at night. The scenes showing the escape of the refugees from Atlanta, the bonfire effects in Piedmont, and the great red battle effects were all realized by night photography. Elaborate preparations for these were secretly laid and several inventions were made on the ground to accomplish the desired end. Patented illuminators were distributed over an area of two miles to get one midnight battle scene.

An amusing incident happened while one of the great battle scenes was being photographed at night. Mr. Griffith kept his plans so carefully concealed that it was not known what he intended doing. The night the big fight came off many citizens miles away from the actual scene telephoned into the newspapers, and the following morning several papers appeared with stories of a mysterious naval engagement the night before, in which the long, thunderous roll of heavy cannonading had been distinctly heard by citizens miles inland from the sea.

The novelty of midnight photography is carried to a striking point in one of the vast pictures. Here under the glare of the giant illuminators and bursting bombs one can see a line of trenches stretching over a territory of more than three miles.

In the meeting of Generals Grant and Lee at Appomattox a historic incident is revealed. When General Robt. E. Lee wanted to make some marginal notes on the papers of the final surrender, he asked for a pencil, and to the surprise of the numerous generals assembled it was found that not a person in the company owned one. Finally an officer in General Lee's staff found a pocket ink stand in his kit, and it was with ink from this that the historic document was written. It will also be noted that General Grant and several of his staff were not expecting the surrender, and were present in private uniforms.

Twenty-five thousand yards of material were used to make the costumes for the women in the spectacle. There were over four hundred different kinds of dresses and gowns made. It took five months to make the costumes. Twelve thousand yards of white material was used in the costumes for the Ku Klux Klan. Twenty dressmakers worked eight hours a day for four months on these.

In one of the scenes Elsie Stoneman wears a seal-skin dolman that was purchased in an antique shop. It is over one hundred years old. In another scene Margaret Cameron wears a gray ruffle dress of the war period. It required one hundred and fifty yards of material to make the ruffles in this costume.

Every costume in the production was passed upon by Mr. Griffith before it was admitted to the picture. In every instance photographic tests were made to see if the colors harmonized with the scene before the picture was taken. Over one thousand changes were ordered before the right scheme was hit upon.

All artillery effects of the battle scenes were loaned by the Ordnance Department of the U. S. Army for use in the picture. Every piece of field ordnance shown saw actual usage in the Civil War.

The Petersburg battle scene was laid out upon plans made by West Point engineers, copied directly from the maps of the actual battlefield in the War Department, at Washington. Numerous veterans who fought in that campaign were on the directing tower with Mr. Griffith, and furnished him with personal recollections of the contest while the picture was being made.

In all scenes showing official groupings, such as President Lincoln's rooms and the meetings between Grant and Lee, the furniture used in the picture is an exact replica of that used on the days in question. It required weeks and months of research to verify every small detail.

CALL

San Francisco, Cal.

MAR 18 1915

"Clansman" Film at Alcazar Popular

D. W. Griffith has framed an epical photodrama, "The Clansman," or "The Birth of a Nation," now running at the Alcazar Theater, which pictures the era previous to the war, the war time, and the "reconstruction" epoch.

Griffith has interwoven with the history of the nation a history of individuals and a love story of ardent nature.

The romance begins before the fatal shot on Sumter; it blooms as President Lincoln is forced to cast the die of combat; it suffers and survives with the destruction of Atlanta and it smiles and is really confident during the assault and reduction of Petersburg. Then the horror of the "reconstruction" period comes; while the men and women of the South are delivered shackled and bereft to the maddened carnage of the black man, this lovely romance steadfastly moves forward and comes to a florescence as the awful drama of the ages ends in a magnificent allegory of peace, serenity and progress.

"The Clansman" is the only photodrama ever shown in the White House, by request of the President, and it was made by the aid of friendly assistance from government officials, historians and literary men.

JOURNAL

SIOUX CITY, IOWA

MAR 21 1915

110

MOTION PICTURES

The National theater, which has been closed for several weeks during the progress of litigation, will be opened today, under the management of Joe Marshall. When the theater first began its career, motion pictures were the attractions. Then a change was made to vaudeville. Back to the "movies" will be the new policy, and today "The Avenging Conscience," one of the noted D. W. Griffith features, will be the program. This picture has been viewed by critics who ordinarily devote themselves to things of the legitimate stage, and their praise of the artistry of the director has been unanimous. Blanche Sweet, widely known to picture fans, and Henry B. Walthall, both of whom appeared in Grif- [illegible] "The Birth of a Nation," are in the principal [illegible] ing roles of "The Avenging Con[illegible]. The policy of the National, [illegible] shall announced, will be to [illegible] pictures only. "The Aven[illegible] will be presented [illegible] follow[illegible]

Examiner

San Francisco, Cal.

MAR 9 1915

"THE CLANSMAN" AT ALCAZAR.

Mae Marsh, the young and celebrated motion picture actress, who has the role of Florence Cameron in D. W. Griffith's photo play, "The Clansman," or "The Birth of the Nation," now running at the Alcazar Theatre, owes her position in the motion picture world to the fact that she possesses a perfectly shaped forehead.

When she started in motion pictures three years ago, at the age of 16, she was painfully thin.

Griffith, however, immediately observed the perfect contour of her forehead. Overlooking her apparent deficiencies, he gave her a tryout as an "extra." Griffith was right, however, for Miss Marsh has come to be conceded as one of the foremost emotional actresses in silent drama.

BROOKLYN, (N. Y.) TIMES

May 20, 1915

"The Birth of a Nation."

D. W. Griffith's [illegible] motion photography of "The Birth of a Nation" starts its fifth week of unprecedented success at the Liberty Theatre with two performances Sunday afternoon and night. The artistic scope and the astonishing details of this work, in which the master hand of Griffith is apparent at every turn, have impressed New York theatregoers as nothing the season has provided to date. The great battle scenes, the historic incidents of the war, the assassination of President Lincoln and the wonderful runs of the Ku Klux Klans are the high points of interest in the most absorbing drama of the decade. The comprehensive and atmospheric manner in which the thrilling theme is presented and the enlargement of the appeal in the musical accompaniment of the orchestral effects, so cleverly made a vital part of the story, are all points of the most impressive kind.

CITIZEN

Brooklyn, N. Y.

[illegible] 1915

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

Begins Its Fifth Week at Liberty Theatre To-Night.

D. W. Griffith's production in motion photography, "The Birth of a Nation," starts its fifth week of success at the Liberty Theatre with two performances [illegible] day afternoon and night. The [illegible] scope and the astonishing details [illegible] in which the master hand of [illegible] every turn [illegible] have impressed [illegible] theatregoers [illegible] to work out [illegible] will achieve [illegible] with the prices [illegible] by the "movie" [illegible] larger. One [illegible] yet—is said to [illegible] $600 a week for [illegible] man in a new [illegible] the terms, of [illegible] her. [illegible] what the outlay [illegible] mighty ven- [illegible] ons of picture [illegible] n of a Nation" [illegible] dition that the [illegible] ss. In that case [illegible] wiped out, and [illegible] no salaries to [illegible] cers.

OUR PEACE AND PROGRESS

PEACE ALLEGORY IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION," A MOTION PICTURE PLAY SHOWING THE DEV

Press Mar. 21, 1915

Telegraph Mar. 21-1915

SUN

Baltimore, Md.

Herald, Mar. 21-1915

BIRTH OF A NATION."

MAR 21 1915

HARD TO FIND A LINCOLN

In preparing for "The Birth of a Nation," the first $2 moving picture, Director Griffith studied 20 applicants for the character of Lincoln before Joseph Henabery was selected. More than 50 photographs of Lincoln were found, and all varied in expression. Thomas Dixon's drama not only enjoys the distinction of being the first photoplay presented at regular theatre prices, but it was also the first [illegible] ever shown in the [illegible]

HERALD

Washington, D. C.

MAR 21 1915

21, 1915.

S SHOWN IN MOVIES

OF OUR COUNTRY AND BASED ON "THE CLANSMAN," THOMAS DIXON'S NOVEL.

American, Phila. Mar. 21-15

national board of censorship has placed veral on D. W. Griffith's production in pictures of "The Birth of a Nation."
ff finds the educational, entertainment istic value of the film "excellent" and l effect "good." The board went on y saying that "educationally, dramatand artistically, this should prove a ce forward in motion picture producpictures at the Liberty theater prices d upon which the "The Birth of a were first announced. An impossible t but hundreds were disappointed the railroad [illegible] the [illegible] of the day, crowded the [illegible]

POST

DENVER CO

MAR 21 1915

The enormous initial success of the D.
W. Griffith feature film, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Liberty theater, New York, is now the sensation of the picture trade. The film, in twelve reels, is playing [illegible] at the Liberty at [illegible]

Argus, Albany N.Y. Mar. 21-1915

Two Dollar Movie.

The two dollar movie is no longer a dream, for at the Liberty theatre "The Birth of a Nation," a moving picture entertainment, is drawing capacity audiences with two-dollar seats as the top price. Such little scenes of the Civil war are reincarnated in a thrilling fashion [illegible] their realism [illegible]

[illegible] theme is presented [illegible] of this appeal in [illegible]tainment of the big [illegible]verly made a vital [illegible] all further point
[illegible]

[illegible] and which the thrill-and the enlarge-the musical accomorchestral effects part of the story of the most [illegible]

WHAT [illegible] KNOW

[illegible] "Birth of a Nation."

The modern master of the revels—like David W. Griffith in his direction of "The Birth of a Nation" film spectacle at the Liberty—is required to be an encyclopedia of arts and sciences. Even then his resources may not serve, in which case he quickly hires brains. When "Judith of Bethulia" was being produced he put a professor of archæology to work at drawing all the dance positions and the intermediate imaginary positions of the figures in the fish dance on the Syriac tablets. Thus the dance to the fish god, after slumbering thousands of years, was revived in twentieth century America to please the patrons of a play.

"Similarly with 'The Birth of a Nation' the energetic Mr. Griffith," said his representative, "had four historians on his executive staff. They were grubbing in the libraries for the minute details of civil war battles, Sherman's march, the Appomattox surrender, the Lincoln tragedy in Ford's Theatre, while the director was out on the field turning their raw material into film. In the war drama he had to be strategist, master actor, judge and jury of costumes, building inspector, musical chief, professor of dancing, inventor of night photography, social director, artist and litterateur. Every kind of blunder must needs be avoided, without sacrificing the supreme art effect to be achieved. Of the 50,000 New Yorkers who have seen 'The Birth of a Nation' none has yet caught Griffith in serious historical error."

"Next to the battle scenes and the marvellous replica of Ford's Theatre on April 14, 1865, the director took the keenest interest in the pictures of Southern life and of the gayety and dance. The wizard of the film, himself an expert tangoer and trotter, it is said, can costume and stage any sort of dance of which there is printed or pictorial record. He is fertile in ideas related to Terpsichore. An amusing incident is told by his secretary. Griffith was once rehearsing a performer named Earle Fox for a ball scene. He was capering up and down the room, illustrating what he wanted, when he struck into some funny little steps.

"'There!' he said to the actor. 'Put your name to that, take it around the country and make it and yourself famous!' The player did as Griffith told him and the fox trot was born.

"Dancing is the best of all exercise," said Griffith in his quizzical, half serious fashion the other day, "the earliest of the arts and the latest, not sensual but sensuous. Did you ever stop to think that every conquering people has been a dancing people? If you would win life's battle, my son, why, dance!"

Which raphsody finished, he turned to the serious business of synchronizing an elaborate orchestral musical score with two hours and a half of pictures—a task which, strange to say, no other picture producer has yet been able to achieve. At this n[illegible] 'grand opera' he worked as enthusi[illegible]tically as at the history, the lo[illegible] romance or the dancing. But Griffi[illegible] has a passion for being right, and this characteristic of his is just as important a factor of his success as the poet's vision.

"The Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty Theatre—elaborate and impressive pictures produced at great cost and labor.

inter-
[illegible]th of a Chester-his own ious role moment of ture. "The second su-tox—namely, to work out
e will achieve

American, Phila. Mar. 21-1915

From month to month the prices paid for good actors by the "movie" managements grow larger. One actor—not a star as yet—is said to have been offered $600 a week for his services as leading man in a new film scheme. For stars the terms, of course, are vastly higher.

It matters little what the outlay may have been on such mighty ventures as the productions of picture shows like "The Birth of a Nation" or "Cabiria"—on condition that the show proves a success. In that case the first cost is soon wiped out, and after that there are no salaries to worry the producers.

Mar. 22, 1915

Cecil Chesterton, the British publicist who has been studying the race problem in this country, particularly in the South, was D. W. Griffith's guest at "The Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty just before sailing Saturday on the Ss. Ordona for Liverpool. Mr. Chesterton will be busy the next six months in presenting to Englishmen his own view of the race question which bulks large on account of the conspicuous role of the darker races in the world war. "With its vivid presentment of the handling of a particular race problem, the play should prove of vital interest to England which has many such problems to face at the close of the present war, and I venture to predict that the spectacle will achieve a great success abroad," said Mr. Chesterton.

N. Y. Tribune, Mar. 22-15

Cecil Chesterton, the British editor and lecturer, predicted before he returned to England that "The Birth of a Nation" would achieve a great success abroad.

"We in England know practically nothing of the reconstruction period of your history," he told D. W. Griffith, whose guest he was at the Liberty Theatre. The play presents facts it is useless to blink, especially the withdrawal of federal troops and the leaving the South to work out its own destiny. With its vivid presentment of the handling of a particular race problem, the spectacle should prove of vital interest to England, which will have many such problems to face at the close of the present war.

Morning Telegraph
March 22, 1915

Chesterton Discusses Photo-Play.

Cecil Chesterton, the British publicist who has been studying the inter-racial problem in this country, particularly in the South, was D. W. Griffith's guest at "The Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty Theatre just before sailing Saturday for Liverpool. "I was interested in every moment of 'The Birth of a Nation,'" said Mr. Chesterton on the eve of departure. "We in England know practically nothing of the Reconstruction period of your history. The play presents facts it is useless to blink, indeed emphasizes the second surrender in the struggle following the first surrender at Appomattox—namely, the withdrawal of the Federal troops and the leaving the South to work out its own destiny. We all know how Lee surrendered to Grant at Appomatox. Hardly any of us know how, twelve years later, Grant's successor in the Presidency surrendered to the ghost of Lee. With its vivid presentment of the handling of a particular race problem, the play should prove of vital interest to England, which has many such problems to face at the close of the present war, and I venture to predict that Mr. Griffith's spectacle will achieve a very great success abroad."

Sun, Mar. 22, 1915

Praises Griffith Film.

"With its vivid presentment of the handling of a particular race problem the play should prove of vital interest to England," said Cecil Chesterton yesterday in speaking of "The Birth of a Nation," the D. W. Griffith film spectacle at the Liberty Theatre. "I venture to predict," he continued, "that the film will achieve a very great success abroad."

Times, Mar. 22-15

Cecil Chesterton, the English publicist and lecturer, saw "The Birth of a Nation" in the Liberty Theatre before sailing for England Saturday on the Ordona. Mr. Chesterton is a student of the race question and for this reason was especially interested in the film.

Globe, Mar. 22, 1915

D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" goes right on drawing capacity business at the Liberty. It's in its fourth week.

Tribune, March 22

To the Editor of the Herald:—
On behalf of the A. M. E. Zion Church I write to enter my protest against the moving picture film entitled "The Birth of a Nation." It is revolting and degrading to my people and can only arouse race prejudice and sectionalism. I know that this film has been disapproved by the National Board of Censorship.

ALEXANDER WALTERS, Bishop.
New York City, March 18, 1915.

Chicago Herald, March 22, 1915

CECIL CHESTERTON, the British publicist, was D. W. Griffith's guest at "The Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty Theatre just before returning to England. "I was interested in every moment of 'The Birth of a Nation,'" said Mr. Chesterton on the eve of departure. "With its vivid presentment of the handling of a particular race problem the play should prove of vital interest to England, which has many such problems to face at the close of the present war, and I venture to predict that Mr. Griffith's spectacle will achieve a very great success abroad."

CITIZEN
Brooklyn, N. Y.

ENTERTAINS CHESTERTON.

Guest of Griffith at the Liberty Theatre.

Cecil Chesterton, the British publicist, who has been studying the interracial problem in this country, particularly in the South, was D. W. Griffith's guest at "The Birth of a Nation," at the Liberty Theatre, just before sailing Saturday on the steamship Ordun for Liverpool.

Mr. Chesterton will be busy the next six months in presenting to Englishmen his own view of the race question which bulks large on account of the conspicuous role of the darker races in the world war. Editor of "The New Witness," lecturer and leader writer, he wields a pen as trenchant and vigorous as that of his brother, Gilbert K. Chesterton.

"I was interested in every moment of 'The Birth of a Nation,'" said Cecil Chesterton on the eve of departure. "We in England know practically nothing of the reconstruction period of your history. The play presents facts it is useless to blink, indeed emphasizes the second surrender in the struggle following the first surrender at Appomattox—namely, the withdrawal of the Federal troops and the leaving of the South to work out its own destiny.

"We all know Lee surrendered to Grant at Appomattox. Hardly any of us know how twelve years later Grant's successor in the Presidency surrendered to the ghost of Lee. With its vivid presentment of the handling of a particular race problem, the play should prove of vital interest to England, which has many such problems to face at the close of the present war, and I venture to predict that Mr. Griffith's spectacle will achieve a very great success abroad."

CITIZEN
Brooklyn, N. Y.

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

Is Having Phenomenal Success at the Liberty Theatre.

The phenomenal success of D. W. Griffith's photographic spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Liberty Theatre continues the talk of New York. This study in motion pictures has done more to elevate its branch of art than all the things that went before and has set this form of entertainment upon a par with the best the stage offers.

The offering continues at the Liberty the biggest business, it is declared, regular $2 attraction now playing New York.

Brooklyn, N. Y.
MAR 22

Cecil Chesterton, the British publicist who has been studying the inter-racial problem in this country, particularly in the South, was D. W. Griffith's guest at "The Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty Theater just before sailing Saturday on the Ordona for Liverpool. Mr. Chesterton was enthusiastic in his praise of the spectacle, and predicts a big success for it in Europe.

EVENING GLOBE
New York City
MAR

D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" goes right on drawing capacity business at the Liberty. It's in its fourth week.

EVENING NEWS
Newark, N. J.

LIBERTY, 42d St., near 6th Ave.—"The Birth of a Nation." Very impressive picture drama, based on Thomas Dixon's novel, "The Clansman." Vivid reproductions of events during the Civil War and the reconstruction period. Instructive and intensely interesting.
LYRIC, 46th St., west of 7th Ave.—

RECORD HERALD
Chicago, Ill.
MAR 2 1 1915

Perpetuating War's Glories

MUST the glories of war, its plumed pomp and steel-tipped grandeur, depart from earth after peace extends its universal sway?

His majesty, Mars, must be disarmed and reduced to a milk diet, it is agreed. But now it is asked: Is it not possible that Mars may still delight the eye, his helmet and cuirass agleam, his plumes freshly curled, his shield polished, his spear filed blunt and bearing the pennon of peace among nations?

"Ay, ay," it is affirmed, "wars will still be waged when international courts of arbitration have abolished hate and bloodshed. There will still be war, glorious, soul-inspiring conflict. But it will be bloodless war, devoid of death, suffering and anguish. It will be war replete with superb and thrilling charges of horse and foot, war of melodramatic onslaughts, doughty defenses, blood-tingling clashes more tremendous than Waterloo, Balaklava, Gettysburg and Aix-la-Chappelle.

Wars of Peace.

"It will be war in which nobody will be hurt. War which will leave no widows desolate, no little ones fatherless and at the mercy of the wolf. It will be war in which thousands of warriors may withstand the battle's shock and live to tell the tale and eat a hearty dinner. It will be war——"

It will be MOVIE WAR, to make a short cut of it.

Moving picture corporations of great wealth will undertake the reproduction of all the vast and picturesque conflicts of history. Millions of dollars will be expended financing huge "campaigns," illustrating the bloody but spectacular crises in the legends and records of every race and nation. Men will don rich uniforms, armor and accoutrements, will gird themselves with weapons of destruction and march before the domineering gaze not of the ruthless conqueror but of the moving picture director. And whilst batteries of artillery utter blankshell broadsides more important batteries of motion cameras will [illegible]

Glenn Dillard Gunn, pianist, will give a recital next Sunday afternoon at the Pine Arts Theater. He will [illegible]

+ + +

The Apollo Club, announced to l[illegible] singers, Harrison M. Wild, conductor, will sing Bach's "Passion according to St. Matthew" at the A[illegible] auditorium next Sunday afternoon. T[illegible] soloists will be Miss Florence Hin[illegible] soprano; Miss Alma Beck, contralto; Nicholas Douty, tenor; Martin Schutz, bass, and Burton Thatcho[illegible] bass. Edgar A. Nelson, organist, at [illegible] the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, w[illegible] furnish the accompaniments.

m PRESS
dress: Philadelphia

REVERTING to the Op[illegible] Opera House, I [illegible] the lease under w[illegible] interests now control th[illegible] soon expire and there is a [illegible] it will pass under the [illegible] ment, becoming once m[illegible] of dramatic and musical [illegible] tions. And speaking fr[illegible] toplay business, New [illegible] aroused by the presentation [illegible] erty of "The Birth of a [illegible] spectacular film, which [illegible] a seat. This breaks all [illegible] prices of admission to a [illegible] a gigantic affair, I am [illegible] tary scenes of the Civil [illegible] 18,000 soldiers are seen on [illegible] in one grand panorama [illegible] part of "The Birth of a [illegible] founded on Thomas Dixon's [illegible] play, "The Clansman." [illegible] discussion has taken place [illegible] York over the [illegible] Klux Klan and the [illegible] presentation of the [illegible] in the former [illegible] South. As the [illegible] Sulzberger [illegible] performance [illegible] Philadelphia [illegible] members [illegible]

The World, Mar. 24-15

CENSORSHIP BOARD SPLITS ON DIXON'S "CLANSMAN" FILM

Chairman Howe Forbids Use of His Name as Approving Picture Play "The Birth of a Nation."

SAYS IT MIGHT CAUSE RACE RIOTS AND MURDER.

Would Be Bound to Arouse Hatred and Have Bad Influence, He Asserts.

Membership of the National Board of Censorship are divided over the presentation of the picture film, "The Birth of a Nation," the "movie" version of Thomas Dixon's novel, "The Clansman," it was learned last night.

Frederic C. Howe, United States Commissioner of Immigration, who is Chairman of the National Board, has forbidden the use of his name on the official formula, "Approved by the National Board of Censorship, Frederic C. Howe, Chairman," in connection with the picture.

The customary procedure of the board in passing upon films is for from five to ten of the one hundred odd members to view a picture, and if they recommend it members of the General Committee, of which there are twenty-four, pass upon it.

In the case of "The Birth of a Nation" it was recommended to the General Committee, and ten members passed upon it. Then other members of the committee saw it and protests began pouring in. The matter was put to a vote a second time and a majority decided that as it had been passed once it should be permitted to run.

Many Oppose Film.

But it was learned that a large minority felt the same as Mr. Howe did. Among those who are understood to have objected to the picture are Dr. J. P. Warbasse of Brooklyn, Mrs. Joseph M. Price, wife of the head of the Committee of One Hundred and Seven; Mrs. Howard Gans, J. K. Paulding and Dr. Lewis, head of the Prison Association. Mr. Howe said to a reporter for The World last night:

"I protested against the use of my name on the emblem in connection with the picture. I objected to the picture and asked W. D. McGuire, Secretary of the board, to see that my name was not used.

"My objection was personal. It was because the story is bound to arouse race hatred, which I think unjustified, and have a very bad effect. It is likely to lead to race troubles. I object to the scene of a brutal negro chasing a white girl. That is not a sufficiently frequent occurrence to justify the author's claim that it is the greatest film ever produced.

"I have always stood for the freest possible expression in motion pictures and the reason why I think interference should take place here is that it is an attack on a race that can in no way control its condition. It is born to it.

"If it were a labor or an industrial picture which portrayed a condition for which individual men were responsible and could be corrected, I should feel very differently.

Fears Race Riots.

"If the picture goes into the South I should think it would bring about race riots. Men might be killed as a result of it.

"It would have a bad effect on white people as well as upon black people. It is going to postpone the approach to a solution of the racial problem much longer. That is why I did not want my name to appear on it.

"I don't exactly approve of a censorship in a strict sense of the word. My theory of the board is an organization to fight where necessary to uphold public opinion."

Mr. Griffith, the producer of the film, has made public his views on a censorship several times. He is against a censorship of "movies" except those intended for children.

It has been said of "The Birth of a Nation" that there is everything to delight the eye and nothing to offend the ear. In the pictures of the story of racial hatred there are two series of episodes, the first representing Sherman's march to the sea and the burning of Atlanta, and the second the assassination of Lincoln, the actual details of the crime being shown.

It was said last night at the Liberty Theatre that the emblem of the National Board of Censorship had never been used with the picture, that when it was first produced [illegible] the emblem of the Pennsylvania State Board was used, but that a request that Mr. Howe's name not be used [illegible]

Sun, Mar. 24, 1915

[illegible] which is at once the most [illegible] of the picture plays shown, [illegible] "Birth of a Nation" shows [illegible] United States now stands at the head of picture production. [illegible]

Morning Telegraph, Mar. 23-15

THE TALK OF NEW YORK.

"Birth of a Nation" at Liberty Theatre Scores Great Success.

The phenomenal success of D. W. Griffith's photographic spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Liberty Theatre, continues the talk of New York and the country at large.

This study in motion pictures has done more to elevate its branch of art than all the things that went before and has set this form of entertainment upon a par with the best the stage offers.

Mail, Mar. 24, 1915

FEARS RIOTS FROM MOVIES

Chairman of Censors Board Opposed to Dixon's "The Birth of a Nation."

Fear of race riots has divided opinion among members of the National Board of Censorship as to the presentation of "The Birth of a Nation" now being shown on the screen at the Liberty Theatre. Frederick C. Howe, chairman of the board, has forbidden the use of his name as approving the film.

After a committee of ten had passed upon the production, which deals with civil war events, protests began to pour into the board. A second vote showed that a majority of the censors were in favor of continuing the film play.

"It is bound to cause race hatred," said Mr. Howe to-day. "I object to the scene of a brutal negro chasing a white girl. If the picture goes into the South, race riots will result and men might be killed."

STAR

New York City

MAR 24 1915

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" PASSED BY CENSOR.

D. W. Griffith's motion picture production, "The Birth of a Nation," now being shown at the Liberty Theatre, has been approved by the National Board of Censorship. The report says:

"Educationally, dramatically and artistically this should prove a great step forward in motion picture production."

POST

Washington, D. C.

MAR 28 1915

Eve. Post, Mar. 24-1915

HOWE OBJECTS TO THE CLANSMAN FILM

CHAIRMAN OF CENSORS CALLS PICTURE ATTACK ON A RACE.

National Board of Censorship, However, Passes the "Birth of a Nation" Motion Picture Play Over Protest of National Association for Advancement of Colored People—A Strong Minority of Board Had Suggested Many Changes.

That the National Board of Censorship is by no means unanimous in its official approval of the "Birth of a Nation," the picture film based on Thomas Dixon's novel, "The Clansman," has been learned from Frederic C. Howe, United States Commissioner of Immigration, who is chairman of the Board. Mr. Howe has forbidden the use of his name on the official formula, "Approved by the National Board of Censorship, Frederic C. Howe, Chairman," in connection with this film.

The history of the relations between the film and the National Board of Censorship is as follows: The picture was first shown to a committee consisting of ten members of the Board, and was approved by them on January 20. Later, upon protest from the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, Mr. Howe, as head of the Board, asked that the film be presented to the general committee. This committee passed the first part, subject to minor changes, and condemned the second part "because it was an unwarranted attack upon a race, and, specifically, because of certain incidents which it was felt might create race hatred and prejudice, and which constituted a reflection on ten million citizens."

On March 3, two days later, the general committee decided at a business meeting to reconsider the film, and set March 12 for this purpose. The committee reversed its first decision at this resubmission, and passed the film subject only to changes in two of the subtitles.

Mr. Howe opposed this new move, and it has been learned that a large minority of the Board are with him in his condemnation of the film. It is understood that the following, among others, disapproved of the picture: Dr. J. P. Warbasse, of Brooklyn; Mrs. Joseph M. Price, Mrs. Howard Gans, J. K. Paulding, and Dr. Lewis, head of the Prison Association. Mr. Howe said that his opposition was personal, and was based on the fact that the film was "an unwarranted attack on a race and productive of race hatred and prejudice" unless the objectionable features were removed.

In regard to his connection with the Censorship Board, Mr. Howe said:

"While I have been chairman of the National Board of Censorship for a good number of years, since I took this office as Commissioner of Immigration I have been only nominally connected with the Board, as I have not had the time to devote to it."

TIMES

Brooklyn, N. Y.

MAR 24 1915

Cecil Chesterton, the British publicist who has been studying the interracial problem in this country, was D. W Griffith's guest at "The Birth of a Nation," at the Liberty Theatre, just before sailing last Saturday. Mr. Chesterton will be busy the next six months in presenting to Englishmen his own view of the race question, which bulks large, on account of the conspicuous role of the darker races in the world war. "I was interested in every moment of 'The Birth of a Nation,'" said Mr. Chesterton, on the eve of departure. "The play presents facts it is useless to blink at; indeed, emphasizes the second surrender in the struggle following the first surrender at Appomattox—namely, the withdrawal of the Federal troops and the leaving the South to work out its own destiny. I venture to predict that Mr. Griffith's spectacle will achieve a very great success abroad."

When We Have 'Movie Books'

DAVID W. GRIFFITH, producer of "The Birth of a Nation," says: "In time I believe moving pictures will replace all plays. On the stage one can get only the great moments, the high lights. On the screen we see the gradual development, the little things that crystallize into the big issues. And the modern historian has to have a camera. It is the instrument with which history is beginning to be written. In time it will be used exclusively in place of typewriters.

"We may not live to see it, but one of these days each house will have pillars that open as receptacles of films. When one wants to refresh one's mind about a historical incident, there won't be anybody treking to an encyclopedia to read what happened on such-and-such an occasion; instead, some one will rise and turn on the screen, and a story that needs no words will be flashed before the crowd. By then, I am sure, the motion picture's operation will be as familiar to everybody as putting another record on a phonograph today."

Telegram

READING, Pa.

MAR 24 1915

The national board of censorship has placed its approval on D. W. Griffith's production in motion pictures of "The Birth of a Nation." The board finds the educational, entertainment and artistic [illegible] of the film "excellent" and its mere [illegible] The board went on record that "educationally [illegible]

WILKESBARRE (Pa.) RECORD

MARCH 23, 1915

Different — Answer to inquiry: Is "The Clansman" and the "Klu-Klux Klan" the same play? No. "The Clansman" is based upon the "Klu-Klux Klan." The moving picture production, "The Birth of a Nation," now being shown in New York, is the same as "The Clansman."

STANDARD UNION

Brooklyn, N. Y.

MAR 23 1915

LIBERTY, MANHATTAN—D. W. Griffith's production in motion photography of "The Birth of a Nation" starts its fifth week of unprecedented success at the Liberty Theatre, Manhattan, with two performances this afternoon and night. The artistic scope and the astonishing details of this work, in which the master hand of Griffith is apparent at every turn, have impressed New York theatregoers as nothing the season has provided to date. The great battle scenes, the historic incidents of the war, the assassination of President Lincoln and the wonderful runs of the Ku Klux Klans are the high points of interest in the most absorbing drama of the decade. The comprehensive and atmospheric manner in which the thrilling theme is presented, and the enlargement of this appeal by the musical accompaniment of the big orchestral effects, [illegible] are all further points of the most [illegible]

LETTERS AND ART

THE CIVIL WAR IN FILM

THE FAMOUS FILM, "Cabiria," the product of D'Annunzio's imagination, has taken the front rank in picture-production hitherto. But a newcomer that reproduces the American Civil War in scenes of grandiose splendor makes its predecessor, says the New York World, "seem almost insignificant by comparison." Narrative photography has in this work by D. W. Griffith, called "The Birth of a Nation," taken a long step forward. Indeed, The World gives Mr. Griffith the easy leadership of motion-picture impresari in this country. For those who are imprest by large numbers it is told that eight months were consumed in transferring the scenes of battle and social turbulence to the reels, and the services of 18,000 persons were employed in one capacity or another, to say nothing of 3,000 horses. Despite all this numerous personnel to stage-manage, it is recorded that the "emotional throb of the story could be followed without the slightest confusion." Hence the "great artistic value" of the production. These are the episodes covered:

"The story begins in the seventeenth century with the bringing of African slaves to North America. Its further progress is closely related to varied phases of slavery and its bearing upon the history of the United States.

"In the wake of the abolition movement comes the Civil War, with its battles and the toll of death and broken hearts; Sherman's march to the sea, the burning of Atlanta, the downfall of Petersburg, Lee's surrender to Grant at Appomattox, the assassination of Abraham Lincoln, the ordeal of the reconstruction period, the Kuklux Klan, the establishment of everlasting peace in the end.

"All of these historic scenes were given in detail. A drama of human conflicts shown with well-drawn characters linked history to romance. For there is plenty of romance and excitement in the play, which is participated in and woven about the adventures of a family of boys, one from the North and the other from the South, whose association is broken up by the Civil War."

The second part of the film, based upon a novel of Mr. Thomas Dixon called "The Clansman," is viewed by the New York Evening Post as "an appeal to race prejudice as subtle and malicious as any that has been made in New York." We are given the observations of its reviewer in these terms:

"People were moved to cheers, hisses, laughter and tears, apparently unconscious, and subdued by tense interest in the play; they clapped when the masked riders took vengeance on negroes, and they clapped when the hero refused to shake the hand of a mulatto who has risen by political intrigue to become lieutenant-governor. This remark, made by a typical New Yorker leaving the theater, characterizes the sentiment which was exprest in much of the comment: 'That show certainly does make you hate those blacks. And if it gets that effect on me, when I don't care anything about it, imagine what it would be in the South, with a man whose family was mixed up in it. It makes you feel as if you'd do the same thing.'

"That is the element which mars one of the most ambitious and successful picture-dramas which has yet been attempted; and it is an element which does not seem necessary to the effectiveness of the film. To show the fact that there were individual outrages which roused the Southern whites of the 60's to organized violence it does not appear necessary to characterize a race as either so vicious or so simple-minded that extermination or feudal control was the only method of managing them; and this is the conclusion of 'The Birth of a Nation.' The blame for much of the trouble is shown to have lain upon the unscrupulous or misguided white political leaders of the North, who went to excess in their power to institute radical measures for negro freedom and equality of right. Stoneman, known really under another name, the Congressional leader, who held the reins of influence after the assassination of Lincoln, is represented as the cause of reconstruction turbulence.

The war-scenes in the first half of the play have been photographed with striking realism. Troops charging, artillery trains galloping, flags waving, shells bursting over barricades, the flow of battle over a field miles in length, are shown in full detail; and immediately after the excitement of the charge there is the sight of trenches full of torn and tangled bodies. The truth of the horror of war is not forgotten in presenting its fascination. The assassination of Lincoln has also been well reproduced. The scene in the theater, with the play 'Our American Cousin,' going forward on the stage, is shown in careful accordance with the historical accounts of it.

The Rev. Thomas B. Gregory writes in the New York Evening Post a certificate of the verity of the scenes presented in this film-play. "As an educator," he says, "its value is well-nigh inconceivable, and its chief value in this direction lies in its truthfulness." He declares:

"That the story as told by the picture is true I am ready to swear on the Bible, the Koran, the Zend, and the other 'Holy Scriptures' put together.

"I know it is true, because I lived through the actual events themselves. I saw the real carpet-baggers, the real 'New Voters,' the real reconstruction statesmen, the real Kuklux

LINCOLN IN THE BOX AT FORD'S THEATER.

The film now reenacts the scene of Booth's attack on Lincoln. Successive scenes present the play on the stage, the audience, the presidential party, and the moment of the tragedy. If Booth had made this cautious descent, he might have saved his ankle assassination turbulence.

"The enormous losses of the war will have crippled the industrial efficiency of the chief European nations; in fact, hardly the survivors will be needed at home, and there will be greater opportunities of achievement at home.

LINCOLN AND STONEMAN.

Stoneman represents the politician responsible for the carpet-bagging policy that involved the South in its problems and tragedies of reconstruction.

NORTH CAROLINA ASSEMBLY, 1870.

TRIBUNE
Chicago, Ill.
MAR 28 1915

What Kitty's Seeing Around Los Angeles.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., March 22.—Griffith is the name they conjure with out here in Los Angeles. In any studio, among directors, his work is eagerly given credit as master craftsmanship.

"Griffith never commercialized his productions," said Tom Santschi of the Selig company.

"Griffith can put things across that nobody else ever could," said Burton King of Universal.

Directors look at his opportunities enviously.

"He will take a scene a hundred times if necessary, and if any detail doesn't suit perfectly nothing goes on until it does," explained Mr. Santschi. "It takes time and money to make the kind of pictures he does—and he has both."

Thomas Jefferson stalks about the Majestic studios silently, sleuthlikely—and then all at once some one in a character rôle looks up right into the eye of a round, watchlike affair that is really a "detectuff" kodak with which the venerable actor is amusing himself.

Los Angelesians may well paraphrase the London cab driver and declare "actors ain't no treat for me." Actors here are almost as thick as palm trees, and one is apt to meet them anywhere about.

The other evening at a popular cabaret café I saw Grace Cunard, Francis Ford, Ella Hall, Bob Leonard, Lee Moran, Eddie Lyons, Victoria Forde, J. Warren Kerrigan, Al Christie, and Laura Oakley, eating elbow to elbow and fox trotting shoulder to shoulder with other wanderers who chanced hither.

Hobart Bosworth, Gene Gautier, Adele Lane, and Wellington Playter are new Universal recruits.

And now it is formally, firmly, and officially announced by the Majestic company that Henry Walthall, who shifted over to the Balboa recently, is coming back to stay. His work in "The Avenging Conscience" and "The Birth of a Nation," which Chicagoans have not seen, makes it a matter of importance where he is. He is one of the preëminent picture men.

RECORD
s: Philadelphia, Pa.
MAR 28 1915

D. W. Griffith is a genius in photographic effects. His latest production, "The Birth of a Nation," is now the reigning success in New York.

SAN FRANCISCO (Cal.) CALL & POST
MARCH 22, 1915

Fourth Week of "Clansman" Film at Alcazar Opens

With the matinee today, the Alcazar will usher in the fourth week of D. W. Griffith's film play, "The Clansman." Two performances are given every day, one in the afternoon and the other in the evening. The length of the film play, twelve reels, and the fact that it takes three hours to present it, is the reason for limiting the number of daily performances. Henry Walthal's work as Young Ben Cameron is impressive. Mae Marsh is good as Flora Cameron. Lillian Gish, George Siegman, Ralph Lewis, Mary Alden, Josephine Crowell, Spottswoode Aiken, Jennie Lee, principals and minor characters down to the extras, seem to be players of ability.

EVEMENTS AND FUTURE MOTION PICTURES AS ART SCUSSED BY D. W. GRIFFITH

Authority on Cinematography Sees in Film ductions Great Educational Means and Advan- Over Spoken Drama For Conveying Ideas

Christian Science Monitor from New York Bureau

K—"Cinematography has tegral part of our social just beginning to discover es, and the time will come portance of the motion pic- be expressed in terms of ut in units of constructive elfare accomplished by its Griffith, the former play- actor, who has been more than any single individual, than any single group of in developing the motion s present status, made this a representative of The ience Monitor at the Hotel in the course of an inter- er two ago. While a man's apacities are not truly ex- dollar signs, yet it is inter- te in this instance that Mr. in receipt of a yearly re- that is considerably greater njoyed by the President of States. Because of the work omplished, because of the has introduced, because of holds he speaks with more n cinematography as an art any man in America today. ked what constituted the otion pictures.

the Film

hesitate to prophesy on an ject," he replied. "Yet in an an's vision may carry him, I t the motion picture is des- one of the greatest construc- nces in our national life. I y this because I am more in- this work than in any other, s I am identified with it, but an individual who now and to take stock of what the oing, and how it is doing it, ating the progress made. The ture industry, considered as ry, has suffered exceedingly t things because of the cir- attending its use, develop- present method of production. stages in the development of nd this is coming to be a true t as great a degree as is the f an art.

that the public opinion most held is that the picture in- essentially a cheap, inchoate commercial affair, and I know in opinion is about as far from it is possible to get. I am that there are cheap pic- some are inchoate, and that o born of commercial parents, imes are changing and the th the times. Five years ago at the motion picture situa- en contrast that with today. that Thomas Edison said he more geography in 15 minutes tion picture machine than a er could with globe and book and I'm sure he spoke truly. e token I think it possible ore of social betterment, hu- e, peace and character with ures than any other form of ure of such expression that idering motion pictures, we ember that as a means of pression it is a new thing we with. The spoken drama is the pyramids; men from the ays have written their Ideals form, but we have only had ort years of this new dramatic ke many other things, it began elty, developed into an amuse- nd is just now beginning to consideration from serious pro- have the interests of the world Sociology after all is merely a of getting a number of the thinking along the same lines, those lines are right lines, and hey have been trained sufficiently this, their mental educational s begin to externalize themselves ion. Specifically, I mean that if n show a man that there is a condition that ought to be overcome in a certain way, convince him of the necessity for overcoming it, show him how it should be done, and interest him to the point where he wants to do it, and then influence others in the same right direction, you have changed the whole mental outlook of those people, and when the moment comes for action, much of your preliminary work has been done.

m of Expression

"Perhaps the greatest difficulty confronting mankind is to get proper information and education into the human consciousness in the most attractive manner. The motion picture does that better than any similar method of which I know. I don't like the word 'educational pictures,' for they make the average person shy away just a little. People don't go to the theater to be educated, and if you hold that purpose out you've discounted much of your effort, but if you can entertain them—by which I mean hold their interest—and then give them specific object lessons, you have reached them."

Beauty Essential

Mr. Griffith is a firm believer in the need for beauty of expression, whether the work be spoken drama or picture drama, whether it be architecture or music, whether it be brickwork or carpentry. He is convinced that all human beings appreciate beauty, even though many of them may not recognize it as such.

"You cannot succeed in any enterprise unless you take beauty into consideration," he declared. "It is an important factor that must not be overlooked. Poetic instincts are not confined to poets; artistic impulses are not alone expressed by professional artists, but beauty is something that every one needs more of in the daily life. I place beauty high in the motion picture needs; it cannot be too highly estimated. Then high morality is vital, and here I believe I may be at variance with many producers, for I do not believe it is possible to set your artistic mark too high. Producers of pictures who 'play down' to the public are working on the wrong basis. The sum total of public appreciation is far higher than most people have any idea of. Five years ago I began to produce poetic works in the pictures. I did Browning's 'Pippa Passes,' and exhibitors all over the country wrote in to say how their audiences liked it; we've done many such things since then, and I know that you can't make the picture drama too good for the public; you can't climb too high for them; you can't set your artistic standard so high that they won't understand it.

"No man may say where the limit of usefulness in motion photography will be found, and personally I don't think any such limit exists. We hear much of the influence of a great novel, of a fine play, and soon we will begin to hear more of the influence of great pictures. I know of a case where a big cinematograph production is working for peace more strongly than any league that was ever formed. It is speaking to thousands nightly, and speaking in terms that cannot be misunderstood; it is driving home the need for peace; it is convincing thousands of men and women who have only thought of the glitter and panoply of war that is sheer illusion. That is a great reconstructive work."

Appeal of the Screen

To Mr. Griffith was mentioned the situation in New York where an ambitious picture production was drawing crowds nightly, and at prices equivalent to the best dramatic performances, and he was asked what the appeal was.

"I haven't worked it all out," he replied. "That it pulls is obvious; that a picture drama will frequently strike the most blasé individual, who may be left cold and unimpressed by the spoken drama I know to be true. It may be that we may weave a more cohesive story on the screen, but I believe the root lies far deeper. I believe that we are getting closer to the human consciousness by appealing to but one set of functions at a time. The spoken drama requires the use of two of these functions, sight [illegible] not always that [illegible] they should. I have spent much time in the theater, and it has been borne upon me that we seldom get a perfect stage picture. Take 'Romeo [illegible]' as an example. By [illegible] be said. [illegible] art is really good it will be appreciated, or appreciated fully; if bad it will be left alone, so that the question of what is art cannot to my mind be left in the hands of a few individuals with self-appointed capacity for authoritative discrimination, but must always be the expression of the people themselves. To me good art is always successful—commercially."

The point of writing for the picture drama was brought forward, and here Mr. Griffith expressed himself freely.

"Some day we may have people capable of writing picture drama as they now write stage drama," he observed. "That time is not yet. It will come, however, and a man's thoughts will express themselves adaptable to screen use. Now it is a sort of hybrid thought process that is founded on the spoken drama and warped into the unknown mazes of picture drama. The result is often chaotic and unsatisfactory. I may take another man's basic idea, but I must be permitted to develop it according to my own conceptions. That is my art, and it is one I do not seem capable of transmitting to some one else. Perhaps it only expresses my personal limitations, but whatever poetry there is in me must be worked out in actual practise; I must write it to my own standards.

"Words, after all, are a clumsy method of expressing thought. They [illegible] precision in many ways, and it is only another wonderful proof of the capacity of human kind to overcome obstacles to realize that there can be so much good thought expressed in words, or by their means. The human mind does not think in words; it thinks in ideas; it receives ideas, expresses ideas or their reflection, and if the initial idea is couched in words it must be translated back into ideas in the human mind and absorbed and understood in that form. If couched in the idea form, as in a picture, it is most easily understood so, and only when the idea requires to be reexpressed, as from one person to another, need the transmission be by words. Pictures speak all languages, understanding of emotion is not limited by forms of speech. The Japanese, the South American, the Indian, the Italian; all use the same functional sympathies and feelings, and the language is the same all over the world. Ideas pass current everywhere, and it is by means of ideas expressed that the motion picture reaches the understanding of the people. Let us hope these ideas will grow increasingly better until they have reconstructed the human consciousness. That is the future of the motion picture."

Mr. Griffith believes in his work, and believing in it as he does explains in great measure why he stands at the point of accomplishment he occupies.

Real Life, Mar. 20-19[illegible]

News of the Trade

THE Simplex Company placed two machines in the White House, Washington, D. C., when D. W. Griffith's film masterpiece, The Birth of a Nation, was shown there recently. It is reported that the President was very much pleased with the production. The projection of the picture was ideal, the picture being shown with wonderful clearness on the screen. President Wilson had in attendance only his immediate family and the Cabinet members and their families.

An interesting feature of the program was the fact that the operators were attired in evening dress.

Two Simplex machines are in use at the Liberty Theater, New York, where D. W. Griffith's wonderful photoplay, The Birth of a Nation, is now being shown to packed houses.

REPUBLIC - MAR. 20 - 1915

Brotherly Love

The Birth of a Nation, a motion picture drama in two acts, founded on Thomas Dixon's story, The Clansman. Presented at the Liberty Theatre, New York.

IF history bore no relation to life, this motion picture drama could well be reviewed and applauded as a spectacle. As a spectacle it is stupendous. It lasts three hours, represents a staggering investment of time and money, reproduces entire battle scenes and complex historic events, amazes even when it wearies by its attempt to encompass the Civil War. But since history does bear on social behavior, "The Birth of a Nation" cannot be reviewed simply as a spectacle. It is more than a spectacle. It is an interpretation, the Rev. Thomas Dixon's interpretation, of the relations of the North and South and their bearing on the negro.

Were the Rev. Thomas Dixon a representative white Southerner, no one could criticize him for giving his own version of the Civil War and the Reconstruction period that followed. If he possessed the typical Southern attitude, the paternalistic, it would be futile to read a lecture on it. Seen from afar, such an attitude might be deemed reactionary, but at any rate it is usually genial and humane and protective, and because it has experience back of it, it has to be met with some respect. But the attitude which Mr. Dixon possesses and the one for which he forges corroboration in history is a perversion due largely to his personal temperament. So far as I can judge from this film, as well as from my recollection of Mr. Dixon's books, his is the sort of disposition that foments a great deal of the trouble in civilization. Sometimes in the clinical laboratory the doctors are reputed to perform an operation on a dog so that he loses the power to restrain certain motor activities. If he is started running in a cage, the legend goes, he keeps on running incessantly, and nothing can stop him but to hit him on the head with a club. There is a quality about everything Mr. Dixon has done that reminds me of this abnormal dog. At a remote period of his existence it is possible that he possessed a rudimentary faculty of self-analysis. But before that faculty developed he crystallized in his prejudices, and forever it was stunted. Since that time, whenever he has been stimulated by any of the ordinary emotions, by religion or by patriotism or by sex, he has responded with a frantic intensity. Energetic by nature, the forces that impel him are doubly violent because of this lack of inhibition. Aware as a clergyman that such violence is excessive, he has learned in all his melodramas to give them a highly moral twang. If one of his heroes is about to do something peculiarly loathsome, Mr. Dixon thrusts a crucifix in his hand and has him roll his eyes to heaven. In this way the very basest impulses are given the sanction of godliness, and Mr. Dixon preserves his own respect and the respect of such people as go by the label and not by the rot-gut they consume.

In "The Birth of a Nation" Mr. Dixon protests sanctimoniously that his drama "is not meant to reflect in any way on any race or people of to-day." And then he proceeds to give to the negro a kind of malignity that is really a revelation of his own malignity.

Passing over the initial gibe at the negro's smell, we early come to a negrophile senator whose mistress is a mulatto. As conceived by Mr. Dixon and as acted in the film, this mulatto is not only a minister to the senator's lust but a woman of inordinate passion, pride and savagery. Gloating as she does over the promise of "negro [illegible] equality," she is soon partnered by a male mulatto of similar brute characteristics. Having established this triple alliance between the "uncrowned king," his diabolic colored mistress and his diabolic colored ally, Mr. Dixon shows the revolting processes by which the white South is crushed "under the heel of the black South." "Sowing the wind," he calls it. On the one hand we have "the poor bruised heart" of the white South, on the other "the new citizens inflamed by the growing sense of power." We see negroes shoving white men off the sidewalk, negroes quitting work to dance, negroes beating a crippled old white patriarch, negroes slinging up "faithful colored servants" and flogging them till they drop, negro courtesans guzzling champagne with the would-be head of the Black Empire, negroes "drunk with wine and power," negroes mocking their white master in chains, negroes "crazy with joy" and terrorizing all the white in South Carolina. We see the blacks flaunting placards demanding "equal marriage." We see the black leader demanding a "forced marriage" with an imprisoned and gagged white girl. And we see continually in the background the white Southerner in "agony of soul over the degradation and ruin of his people."

Encouraged by the black leader, we see Gus the renegade hover about another young white girl's home. To hoochy-coochy music we see the long pursuit of the innocent white girl by this lust-maddened negro, and we see her fling herself to death from a precipice, carrying her honor through "the opal gates of death."

Having painted this insanely apprehensive picture of an unbridled, bestial, horrible race, relieved only by a few touches of low comedy, "the grim reaping begins." We see the operations of the Ku Klux Klan, "the organization that saved the South from the anarchy of black rule." We see Federals and Confederates uniting in a Holy War "in defence of their Aryan birthright," whatever that [illegible] We see the negroes driven back, beaten, killed. The drama winds up with a suggestion of "Lincoln's solution"—back to Liberia—and then, if you please, with a figure representing Jesus Christ in "the halls of brotherly love."

My objection to this drama is based partly on the tenency of the pictures but mainly on the animus of the printed lines I have quoted. The effect of these lines is inforced by adroit quotations from Woodrow Wilson's repeated assurances of impartiality and goodwill. [illegible] arouse in the audience a strong sense of the evil possibilities of the negro and the extreme propriety and godliness of the Ku Klux Klan. So strong is this impression that the audience invariably applauds the refusal of the white [illegible] to shake hands with a negro, and under the circumstances it cannot be blamed. Mr. Dixon has identified the negro with cruelty, superstition, insolence and lust.

We know what a yellow journalist is. He is not yellow because he reports crimes of violence. He is yellow because he distorts them. In the region of history the Rev. Thomas Dixon corresponds to the yellow journalist. He is a clergyman, but he is a yellow clergyman. He is yellow because he recklessly distorts negro crimes, gives them a disproportionate place in life, and colors them dishonestly to inflame the ignorant and the credulous. And he is especially yellow, and quite disgustingly and contemptibly yellow, because his perversions are cunningly contrived to flatter the white man and provoke hatred and [illegible] the negro.

Whatever happened during Reconstruction [illegible] aggressively vicious and defamatory. [illegible] assassination. It degrades the censors [illegible] that white race that endures it.

...aron, Pa.
MAR 13 1915

Colored Folk Resent Movie Films Which Calumniate Race

the whites unquestionably did a great deal of harm; but to present the tendency they represented as the only one is as unfair to the North as to claim that all southerners wanted to express the negroes would be to the South. Then the film shows a ridiculous scene in a southern legislature, to which the election of a majority of negroes has been obtained by defrauding whites of their votes. Negro legislators are shown taking off their shoes at their desks, drinking whiskey from flasks while making speeches, acting in all sorts of uncouth ways. It is laughably false to the whole truth.

"Then there is the impression that is created of the Ku Klux Klan—perhaps ridiculous. The Klan takes the place of the melodrama here, always doing the noble thing and rescuing the heroine in distress. There are the revolting scenes of the pursuit of one white girl, which rouse feeling against the negro; and then there follows a second similar scene of attempted forced marriage between a powerful mulatto politician—there may have been such vicious individuals as this man is shown to be; but they were certainly exceptions—and a white girl. Of course, the Klan breaks in just in time to prevent the success of the design. At every turn the Klan is made to appeal to the enthusiasm of the spectator as the heroic defender of a victimized people. None of the outrageous, vicious, misguided outrages, which it certainly committed, are shown. I am not interested in loading blame for those outrages on the men who made up the Klan; it was natural that in the heat of the times they made mistakes, just as did the men of the North. I am simply contending that what this play tells of it is not the whole truth.

Of course the spectators applaud the Klan; it is not shown to them except to stir their sympathy. Of course they applaud slights and contempt for the negroes; they are shown only as despicable brutes.

"It is certainly to be hoped that such a film can be suppressed. As an appeal to race prejudice, it is full of danger."

"Do you recall any portions of the play that you found particularly objectionable?" she was asked.

"No; it was rather the whole tone of the second part," was the reply. "Of course, there are the unpleasant episodes in which white girls figure;; but the evil is rather in the dominant attitude of mind toward the negro. As I have said, it seems to me an attempt to make him appear worse than childish and brutal and vicious—actually grotesque and primitive and contemptible."

"How far did you observe that this attitude of mind influenced the spectators?"

"It is hard to tell, of course. Certainly I felt that they were made to feel a prejudice against negroes; some showed approval in applause when the hero refuses to shake hands with the mulatto politician, and they were roused to the point of clapping enthusiastically, before the end of the pictures, whenever the Ku Klux Klan appeared That was the noticeable thing about the play—the success of the glorification of the activities of the Ku Klux Klan, contrasted with the base and elemental character of the negroes, misrepresented in the ludicrously perverted scenes of plantation life. The production is the most subtle form of untruth—a half truth."

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People is now taking active steps to have the play suppressed and has issued a summons out of the magistrate's court against David W. Griffith and Mr. Aitken, the producer and owner of the film, to have them prosecuted for maintaining a public nuisance on the grounds of endangering the safety of the public and offending public decency.

ADVOCATE
ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.
MAR 20 1915

PRODUCERS OF BIRTH OF

...ands of Negroes Object to Picture Play.

...ic City, March 13.—Opposition ... part of persons interested in ... the negroes to the moving ... "The Birth of a Nation," ... produced at the ... crystallized yesterday ... Griffith and Harry Aitken, ... play, were summoned ... Market Police Court ... of the Board of ... of the National Association ... the Advancement of Colored People ... that the play will ... a public nuisance. ... House opened next Monday ... for a hearing in the West ... Police Court, to which he is ... from the Jefferson Market ... Martin Littleton will represent ... and W. J. Osborne the ... members of the Board of ... who oppose the production ... Holmes, Oswald Garrison ... J. E. Spingarn, of ... Kennedy, Charles H. ... H. Sprigman.

... been battered, ... said Mr. Villard ... protestors urge Aitken ... to withdraw the play ... and ... the film ... the ... Stoneman represents the ... which involved the South ...

...TORIAL
...Minneapolis, Minn.
MAR 14 1915

THE BIGGEST MOVIE YET SETS NEW YORK A-QUIVER

By JAMES S. METCALFE.

Correspondence of The Journal.

New York, March 10.

THIS is where the movies score. From both the financial and dramatic point of view the most important amusement production, not only of the current week but for weeks past, is a motion picture. It is not only playing in a regular theater usually devoted to regular theatrical attractions, but it is asking and getting regular theatrical prices—$2 for orchestra chairs and the other seats in the house on the same basis. That this could be done by any motion picture was scouted by the theatrical managers, and the ticket speculators paid absolutely no attention to the new venture. Now that the Liberty theater is twice daily and Sundays holding bigger audiences than ever before in its history and with a big advance sale, the speculators are kicking themselves for their lack of foresight and trying to get even by selling the 25-cent gallery tickets to the unwary at $1, on the assurance that they are the best seats in the house, an assurance the more readily accepted as no one in New York ever heard of motion pictures being shown at regular theater prices.

Biggest of the Movies.

This exceptional attraction is called "The Birth of a Nation" and is to some extent founded on Thomas Dixon's Ku Klux story "The Clansman." A large part of its appeal to all kinds of people is due primarily to the tremendous events in comparatively recent American history with which it deals, and almost as much to the fact that it is produced by D. W Griffiths, who has been in the motion picture business since its very beginning and who knows how to utilize every one of its resources.

On a thread of primitive romance, not important to the experienced theatergoer but dear to the heart of the movie fan, are strung tremendous battle scenes reproduced from the civil war, a remarkable showing of Ford's theater with its audience and performance the evening Lincoln was assassinated, the assassination itself in vivid depiction and, most exciting of all, thrilling episodes during the period of negro domination in the southern states and its final wiping out by the mysterious Ku Klux Klan. For real dramatic interest (and its drama is so intense that it brings the audiences to their feet as no theatrical play has in many, many years) we see in absolute action the great story of the contest between the races, with the whites fighting for the honor of their women and their very lives, ranged on one side and on the other negroes drunk with their new power and urged on by selfseeking politicians of the vilest sort.

Remarkable Set of Films.

More than eight months were consumed in preparatory work before the pictures were ready to show. Thousands of men, women and horses were employed, to say nothing of the costumes, weapons and ammunition that had to be provided. A special theater was built, its interior an exact reproduction of Ford's, in measurements, decorations and arrangement of the boxes, seats and stage. Right here it is proper to say that it must be a very hardened theatergoer and a very small American who does not feel a thrill when Abraham Lincoln enters his box and bows in kindly recognition of the audience that rises to greet him.

The battle scenes, pictured in clear mountain air, are wonders of photographic accomplishment entirely outside of their material bigness and their effective details of men engaged in what it is hard to believe is not the actual fighting of war. There are some of us who are thoroughly familiar with the happenings of this time, some by personal knowledge and others by close contact with those who had participated in them. The more one knows the more one is impressed by the fidelity of the pictures to the things and people they represent and their historical accuracy.

Anyone who was alive and of understanding and remembering age at the time of Lincoln's assassination must feel, as he sees the scenes in Ford's theater on that memorable night brought to his sight in these pictures that he is seeing the tragedy exactly as it happened. Southerners who saw in session the negro legislature of South Carolina, presided over by a negro lieutenant governor, and its membership largely made up of ignorant fieldhands say that the pictures of episodes depicted are in no way exaggerated. The Ku Klux Klan is shown only in its picturesqueness and in its creditable accomplishments, so not so much can be claimed for accuracy in this respect, although the feature, of course, adds much to the effectiveness of the picture play and its dramatic interest.

Effect on Audiences.

It is a curious fact that although the film runs continuously, with an eight minute intermission, for practically three hours, which is longer than the acting time of a more than usually long drama, the audience does not for a moment lose interest and is in a condition of thrill during most of the performance. The great majority of the spectators leave the theater in a state of mental, emotional and physical limpness. This is true of experienced playgoers and those who rarely see moving pictures quite as much as of the regular fans.

In the view of the theatergoers even the careful production has all the characteristic defects of the motion picture. Producers of picture-plays are strenuous in maintaining that their methods are correct and that a study of the motion picture public has shown them that when they try to approach the conventions of the theatrical stage their spectators lose interest in the story that is being unfolded. Therefore they insist on the unnatural speed of the moving characters, upon the interruption in scenes, the quick alternation backward and forward of disconnected episodes and the apparent repetition of things that have been seen before. All these are in a way annoying to the regular theatergoer and, if he is not mistaken in his understanding of himself, diminish rather than enhance his interest.

The secret of the whole thing probably lies in the fact that the largest part of the motion picture public has been educated and developed by motion pictures. It has not been taken from the theaters, but has been created mostly by the pictures themselves. It compares the pictures it sees not with any other way of telling a story, but only with pictures it has seen. Therefore the producers may be right in their viewpoint that they know what their public wants and that it would be a mistake to try to make their methods conform to the requirements of any other kind of intelligence.

The motion picture producer to be successful must be a showman in the sense of studying the public and finding out what it wants. He must also be a photographic mechanician, able to devise the photographic effects the motion picture audiences insist upon having. He must be, too, something of a psychologist to study and learn how to excite and to hold the attention of the human mind of average caliber. With all this equipment he is not a dramatist in the sense of the theater, and his best and most startling accomplishments cannot continuously hold the attention of the playgoer whose intelligence cannot be conquered by the eye alone, even with the aid of his own imagination and the sound supplied by an orchestra and a chorus of voices.

These statements may seem to deny what has been said of the interest created by "The Birth of a Nation," even among playgoers. On the contrary, they simply confirm the fact that this production is a wonderfully exceptional one, because to all the ordinary attractions of the motion picture it adds a new way of beholding and knowing great historical events in which we are all interested. Take them away or derive them from fiction and "The Birth of a Nation" would be simply the usual motion picture better done than usual and therefore attractive to the motion picture public. Take away the artificial romance and the movie tricks for holding interest and this film play would still interest the intelligent American, although it would perhaps and probably not be very highly regarded by the movie fan. However, "The Birth of a Nation" seems to have been produced by a genius to interest all kinds and conditions of Americans, the proof of which is shown by its enormous business.

...ERALD
LOUISVILLE KY.
MAR 14 1915

Two-Dollar Movie Show Arrives.

The pioneer two-dollar moving picture show has come to town. They are getting two greenbacks per seat in parts of the Liberty Theater for the elaborate picture, "The Birth of a Nation," based on Thomas Dixon's novel, "The Clansman."

It is impossible to see "The Birth of a Nation" without getting superlative. The work which must have been done in staging it is staggering. But it is difficult to suppress the feeling that a less factional play might better have been selected for the first movie play to compete on a level with the regular drama. There were near riots in many places several years ago when this story of the South in the days of reconstruction and expose of the Ku-Klux Klan was represented as a play.

Other pretentious and elaborate motion picture dramas have been showing in Broadway in the legitimate theaters for runs of considerable length. "Quo Vadis?" "Cabiria" and "Last Days of Pompeii" are a few that came from foreign producers, and "Neptune's Daughter," that had a run in the Globe Theater, was an example of American workmanship. "The Birth of a Nation" is American in story, in scenes and in production.

Thomas Dixon, author of "The Clansman," spoke before the first audience and gave full credit for the extraordinary production to the director, D. W. Griffith, who stepped before the curtain (or should one say "screen"?) also and made a few remarks about freeing motion pictures from the curb of censorship.

Work For Censors.

It was reported that "The Birth of a Nation," will being the owner's scissors to portions of the film. Lobby gossip had it that such action was contemplated. The portions said to be objectionable in the second of the two parts in which crazed negroes are shown about to assault white girls. Maybe when "The Birth of a Nation" finds its way to the five and ten cents picture shows such eliminating will be necessary. Meanwhile, the picture effects, some excellent scenes in the original were vividly [illegible] the statement [illegible] in the making of the film, of riots, the [illegible] hundreds of Ku-Klux [illegible] flashed there the [illegible] up hillsides [illegible]

The playing of [illegible] by Lillian Gish, as the heroine, [illegible] as the hero, [illegible] mulatto villain, and Miss Marie [illegible]

Playwrights [illegible]

A number of [illegible] were recently [illegible] their views on the [illegible] and some of [illegible] interesting [illegible] Sir Arthur [illegible] seldom goes to [illegible] that the help of [illegible] be a great gain [illegible] much. The [illegible] should follow [illegible] Rudyard Kipling [illegible] Kipling [illegible] skillful [illegible] time, but he [illegible] have to learn [illegible] for film work [illegible] white p[illegible] movie, and [illegible] a living man [illegible] that the [illegible] up hillsides [illegible]

LOS ANGELES EXAMINER
MARCH 28 1915

TIMES
N. Y. STAR, N. Y.
MAR 15 1915

Unjust Caricature

persons, both white and col-ve protested in strong terms a motion picture drama, "The t a Nation," now being shown York City, on the ground is a most unfair caricature of ored race, as well as of condi-the South during the Reconon period. Miss Jane Addams, House, whose opinion is ento respect and who is in a posi-be unprejudiced, in a recent w said of the play:

of the most unfortunate about this film is that it ap-race prejudice upon the basis itions of half a century ago, have nothing to do with the e have to consider today.
hen it does not tell the whole
It is claimed that the play is al; but history is easy to mis-is undoubtedly true that some elements of the plot are based tual events; but they are only a f the picture. You can use to demonstrate anything, you take certain of its facts phasize them to the exclusion rest.

body denies that in the haste fusion of the period after the ar, the men in control of poli-d very tyrannical and short-things and made a great istakes. The 'carpet-baggers' e North, who went in and in-the Negroes against the inof the Whites unquestionably eat deal of harm; but to pree tendency they represented only one is as unfair to the s to claim that all Southern-ted to oppress the Negroes e to the South. Then the ws a ridiculous scene in a legislature, to which the of a majority of Negroes has ained by defrauding whites votes. Negro legislators are king off their shoes at their rinking whisky from flasks king speeches, acting in all uncouth ways. It is laugh-to the whole truth.

there is the impression that of the Ku Klux Klan—per-diculous. The Klan takes of the melodrama hero, al-g the noble thing and res-heroine in distress. There evolting scenes of the pure white girl, which rouse ainst the Negro; and then ows a second similar scene pted forced marriage be-powerful mulatto politician ay have been such vicious s as this man is shown to ey were certainly exceptions white girl. Of course, the aks in just in time to pre-success of the design. At n the Klan is made to ap-he enthusiasm of the spec-he heroic defender of a vic-people. None of the out-vicious, misguided outrages, certainly committed, are
I am not interested in load-for those outrages on the made up the Klan; it was hat in the heat of the times e mistakes, just as did the he North. I am simply conthat what this play tells of the whole truth."

erson at all familiar with history knows that to de-Ku Klux Klan as a chivalnoble institution is mere
There was a certain ex-it in some sections, it may igated certain evils, but as a history was one of cruelty barity.

National Association for the ment of Colored People is ing active steps to have the ppressed and has issued a against the producer and the film to have them prose-r maintaining a public nui-the grounds of endangering y of the public and offending ecency.

GLOBE
Nashville, Tenn.
MAR 19 1915

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

The Censors Reverse Themselves—When Shown That The "Birth of the Nation" Was Harmful—Thousands of Dollars Invested—National Association Found Task Quite Difficult.

New York, Mar. 2, 1915.—The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People has scored a real triumph in New York in succeeding in getting the National Board of Censorship to reverse its approval of the moving picture film called "The Birth of a Nation" which is based on Thomas Dixon's "Clansman."

As soon as advised of the action of the Board of Censorship, at the suggestion of Mr. Paul Kennaday, a member of the Board of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, officers of the Association got in touch with the Police Commissioner through Mr. Oswald Garrison Villard, who has been advised by the Commissioner that the entire matter has been placed in the hands of Chief Magistrate McAdoo, and the owners of the film warned not to produce it. It has been extensively advertised for production beginning on the night of March 3 in the Liberty Theatre, Forty-second street, west of Broadway. One hundred thousand dollars has been invested in it. Its owners are Messrs. Aitken and Griffith. The latter is reported to be a Virginian. An advance performance of the production was given in Washington and it is said that Chief Justice White and President Wilson were present.

(Continued on Page 5.)

(Continued from Page 1.)

The reversal of the decision of the Board of Censorship to approve the film willp robably prevent its production in about eighty per cent of the theatres of this country since many cities have ordinances prohibiting the production of moving pictures when not approved by the National Board of Censorship, and even when there are not such prohibitive ordinances many theatres will not produce films unless they have the approval of the Censorship Board.

The National Association had a very difficult task to perform in suppressing this film since it had already been approved by the Censorship board of it through its Los Angeles branch where a duplicate film had been released and produced in spite of a protest of the branch. The reason given by the Police Department and the City Council for refusing to interfere was that the film had been approved by the National Board of Censorship.

When the National Association first appealed to the Board of Censorship over a week ago, there seemed to be little prospect of getting an unfavorable decision on this film in the limited time left before its advertised public production. The Association communicated with every member of the Board of Censorship and through the latter's courtesy an advance performance was arranged at the Liberty Theatre yesterday afternoon. All the members of the Board of Censorship were present and a small committee from the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People was in the audience. At the close of the performance the Board of Censorship met and unanimously voted to disapprove the film.

In connection with the difficulties that the National Association met in having this objectionable film censored, it is interesting to note the action taken in Atlanta, Ga., in regard to "Uncle Tom's Cabin," which has recently been produced there in moving pictures. To suit the Southern community the name of the production had to be changed to "Old Plantation Folks," and all disagreeable scenes cut out, such as whipping post. LaGrue is made almost a saint. In justifying this action Mrs. Joseph Morgan, of Atlanta, president of the Pioneers, says, "Nobody has any right to [illegible] such sectional prejudice by coloring such a play. The play recalls all the things we have been trying to forget."

[illegible] Moving Picture in Film
Production of "The Clansman."

The pioneer $3 [illegible] show has come to town. They are getting two greenbacks per seat in parts of the Liberty theater, for that elaborate picture, "The Birth of a Nation," based on Thomas Dixon's novel, "The Clansman."

It is impossible to see "The Birth of a Nation" without getting superlative. The work which must have been done in staging it is staggering. But it is difficult to suppress the feeling that a less factional play might better have been selected for the first movie play to cost on a level with the regular drama. There were near-riots in many places several years ago when this story of the South in the days of reconstruction and expose of the Klux Klan was represented as a play.

Other pretentious and elaborate motion picture dramas have been shown in Broadway in the legitimate theaters for runs of considerable length. "Quo Vadis," "Cabiria" and "Last Days of Pompeii" are a few that came from foreign producers, and "Neptune's Daughter," that had a run in the Globe theater, was an example of American workmanship. "The Birth of a Nation" is American in story, in scenes and in production.

Thomas Dixon, author of "The Clansman," spoke before the first audience and gave full credit for the extraordinary production to the director, D. W. Griffith, who stepped before the curtain (or should one say "screen?") also, and made a few remarks about freeing motion pictures from the curb of censorship.

It was reported that "The Birth of a Nation" will bring the censor's scissors to portions of the film. Lobby gossip had it that such action was contemplated. The portions said to be objectionable is the second of the two parts in which crazed negroes are shown about to attack white girls. Maybe when "The Birth of a Nation" finds its way to the 5 and 10-cent picture shows such censorship will be necessary. Experienced theatrical men in last night's audience said that a new epoch in motion pictures is reached in "The Birth of a Nation."

The picture is divided into two parts of six reels each. The first sketches the beginning of the Civil war, shows a great battle scene in which hundreds of men acted before the camera and hundreds of horses took part in the cavalry charge. President Lincoln, picturesquely portrayed by Joseph Henabery, was applauded. His cabinet was pictured, while one of the most dramatic scenes was the assassination of the wartime president in Ford's theater, a program note asserting that every detail of the historic playhouse had been observed in the building of a special theater for picture purposes.

Mr. Griffith has been a progressive from the first in his invention of motion picture effects. In the second part was some excellent cinema photography. Street scenes in the supposed town of Piedmont were vividly portrayed. One may doubt the statement that eighteen thousand actors took part in the making of the drama, but the mobs of rioters, the soldiers in the field and the hundreds of Kuklux Klan members, who dashed thru the woods, across streams and up hillsides would lead one to think so.

The playing of the different parts was more or less subjugated to the ensemble, altho Lillian Gish as the heroine, Henry Waithall as the hero, George Seigmann as the mulatto villian, and Misses Miriam Cooper and Mae Marsh were good.

New York Mail
Mar. 19, 1915

LIBERTY.—"Birth of a Nation," eighth week.

* * *

Another dramatic critic arises to declare that tricks—the cut-back, the close-up, the little human touches—hurt the motion picture.

"The film director," he says, "flushed with the realization that he could move about with a freedom unknown to the stage, has been so delighted with this liberty that he has indulged himself incontinently, without pausing to consider that he might be playing havoc with that precious element called tension."

There are two interesting contrasts—in film production—on Broadway at the present moment. "The Eternal City" is handled without screen tricks and in a thoroughly dramatic way. "The Birth of a Nation" is replete with the film trick. Indeed, it was produced by D. W. Griffith, the father of every one of the so-called tricks.

We maintain that the photodrama requires a certain distinct style of handling—in other words, that the trick is necessary to supplant dialogue in maintaining interest.

Surely "The Birth of a Nation" could not have greater tension. Disregarding every phase of the racial discussion it has aroused, and considering the story only as a scenario, we can't see where a producer could have obtained more vital results.

We're for the screen trick when it's used in the right way at the right

TRIBUNE
Chicago, Ill.
MAR 24 1915

FLICKERINGS from FILM LAND
by KITTY KELLY

Why Don't Chicago Managers Do This?

LOS ANGELES, Cal., March 23.—The success of a good picture isn't wholly in the hands of the maker. It must be well dressed by the displayer in order to have free opportunity to work on the susceptibilities of its audience.

One realizes this with especial keenness after a visit to Clune's theater, which is showing the latest Griffith masterpiece, "The Clansman; or, The Birth of a Nation." As a sample of exhibition de luxe it was highly satisfying from the observer's point of view, and judging from the fact that the system continues, equally so from the box office angle.

MISS LILLIAN GISH
IN "THE CLANSMAN"

This was the way of it: Pretty girls in quaint hoop skirts ushered one in. Then the lights blinked out and the curtain on the wings of southern melodies breathed by a large orchestra in coöperation with an emotion propelling pipe organ, rose slowly, revealing the white pillars of a colonial mansion, dimly seen at first in dawn's mistiness, waxing into the brightness of noontime, fading again into dusk, and finally disappearing from sight except for the yellow glow seeping out from a couple of lamp-lit windows.

music drives them on, and the picture just gets them going."

That is easy to believe. It was a nonchalant matinée audience I was in, awakened from its nonchalance to tears at the pathos of situations which Griffith drove home relentlessly, to storms of relieved applause at the mighty lines of the Ku Klux Klan riding to the rescue at the psychological moment.

The tenseness of situations compelled active sympathetic coöperation by the audience—but that is another story.

It wasn't polite, conventional applause, but the spontaneous, unrestrainable kind that sweeps a crowd along. Emotional sympathy ruled, and how much was due to the picture's self and how much to its setting is impossible to estimate. But while, of course, the picture is essential, this demonstration testifies to the essentialness, likewise of environment even for the inanimate celluloid. I wish we had a double of Clune's in Chicago.

The theater is a large auditorium for years devoted to something the same purpose as our Auditorium—a season of opera, concerts, and the like. For a year no wit has been given over to the presentation of big feature pictures with feature accompaniments.

"You think this way of showing pictures pays enough to recommend it?" I foolishly asked.

"I'll leave that to you to guess," chuckled Manager Brown. And then he rattled off a reel of figures in regard to record-breaking runs that left me plenty of material on which to base affirmative conclusions.

* *

SAN FRANCISCO (Cal.) CHRONICLE
MARCH 22, 1915

ALCAZAR

THE drawing powers of D. W. Griffith's photo-drama, "The Clansman," at the Alcazar show the slightest signs of abating. Indeed popularity seems to grow with every week. Four consecutive weeks have already made motion picture history at the Alcazar and "The Clansman" enters its fifth week today. This, however, will positively be the last week of "The Clansman" film.

RECORD
Philadelphia, Pa.
MAR 26 1915

A film scene in The Birth of a Nation shows a North Carolina assembly in 1870 with a majority of negroes. But is this the Crisis of Tillinghast on a partisan revenge? Florida Times-Union.

Globe, Mar. 26-15

Miss Marion Cooper in "Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty Theatre

Globe, Mar. 27-15

Mail, Mar. 27-15

Mae Marsh "The Birth of a Nation" Liberty.

Sun, Mar. 27-15

Mae Marsh, Whose Spirited Acting Adds Much to the Popularity of the Big Photo Play at the Liberty.

LIBERTY—D. W. Griffith's production in motion photography of "The Birth of a Nation" starts its fifth week with unprecedented success with two performances Sunday afternoon and night. The artistic scope and the astounding details of this work, in which the master hand of Griffith is apparent at every turn, have greatly impressed New York theatregoers. The great battle scenes, the historic incidents of the war, the assassination of President Lincoln and the wonderful runs of the Ku Klux Klans are the high points of interest in this great drama, the most absorbing drama [illegible] The comprehensive and [illegible] manner in which the thrilling [illegible] presented and the entire [illegible] of this appeal in the orchestral accompaniment, so cleverly [illegible] the vital part of the story, are all [illegible] other scenes of the most impressive [illegible]

Mar. 27-15 Eve. World

MAE MARSH IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" LIBERTY.

"Birth of Nation" Begins Fifth Week

D. W. Griffith's production in motion photography of "The Birth of a Nation" starts its fifth week at the Liberty Theatre with two performances Sunday afternoon and night.

The artistic scope and the astounding details of this work, in which the master hand of Griffith is apparent at every turn, have greatly impressed New York theatregoers. The great battle scenes, the historic incidents of the war, the assassination of President Lincoln and the wonderful runs of the Ku Klux Klans are the high points of interest in this great drama.

Mar. 27-15 Eve. World

"BIRTH OF A NATION" DRAWS BIG AUDIENCES.

D. W. Griffith's production in motion photography of "The Birth of a Nation" starts its fifth week at the Liberty Theatre with two performances Sunday afternoon and night. The artistic scope of this work has made a deep impression. The great battle scenes, the historic incidents of the war, the assassination of President Lincoln and the rides of the Ku Klux Klans are the high points of interest in the spectacle.

Billboard, Mar. 27-15

GRIFFITH'S [illegible]

Beulah Kennard charges [illegible] in The New York Sun that [illegible] Nation is "a film of race hat[illegible] WHAT is a slap at the peo[illegible] It is not, and nobody but [illegible] Mayor Harrison's [illegible] "What will be done [illegible] asked.

Motography, Mar. 27-15

[illegible] Holding [illegible] Out

[illegible] astonishi[illegible] proven the [illegible] When it [illegible]

DRAMATIC NEWS
New York City

MAR 27 1915

The phenomenal success of D. W. Griffith's photographic spectacle, The Birth of a Nation, at the Liberty Theatre continues the talk of New York and the country at large. This study in motion pictures has done more to elevate its branch of art than all the things that went before and has set this form of entertainment upon a par with the best the stage offers. The offering continues at the Liberty to the biggest business of any regular two-[illegible] attraction now playing New York.

From the Pacific Coast

THE SAN FRANCISCO STAGE

By Wm. M. Klinger.

SAN FRANCISCO.—D. W. Griffith's motion picture production of The Clansman, based on Thomas Dixon's novel of that name, continues its extraordinary success at the Alcazar Theatre, where it is now in its third week. One of the notable artists to appear in this production is Lillian Gish, one of the latest discoveries of Griffith, whose work attracts as hearty applause as that given to popular stage favorites.

New York City
MAR 26 1915

RACE QUESTION IN FEATURES.

As a result of D. W. Griffith's "Birth of a Nation" achieving such great publicity in New York through its showing at the Liberty theatre afternoon and evening and a follow-up by the Fox Film Corporation of a film version of "The Nigger," a negro sentiment has sprung up against the films.

"The Birth of a Nation" is "The Clansman" filmized. Thomas Dixon wrote it and as generally known the story tells of the brutal raping of a little girl by a renegade negro and the attempt of a mulatto to gain physical hold of a white woman of caste. These two story facts are skillfully presented by the Griffith film.

In "The Nigger," taken from Sheldon's play and novel, Fox has followed the script closely and there are "close up" views of a fiendish, mouth-frothing black about to take liberities with a white girl. Other scenes are reported as calculated to start racial prejudice against the negroes.

The National Association for the advancement of colored people is making every effort to stop the Griffith picture on the claim that it openly and flagrantly arouses race hatred and is therefore a public nuisance. The association has had Griffith and Harry Aitken, president of the Mutual Film Corporation, in court. The matter was carried over to this week, when a hearing is slated for the West Farms Police Court.

The association has engaged J. W. Osborn to represent its interests. Griffith and the Mutual will be represented by Martin Littleton.

The National Board of Censors recently passed the picture and in its approval said that "The Birth of a Nation" was both artistic and educational from its viewpoint.

Regarding "The Nigger" a quiet sentiment is on against the picture. The management of the Hippodrome had planned to exhibit it next Monday, following "The Heart of Maryland" presentation but has taken precaution and arranged for another feature in case "The Nigger" is called off before opening.

Whether anything comes of the agitation against the Griffith and Fox pictures, they are going to receive publicity that will mean bigger boxoffice receipts.

"The Birth of a Nation" has played to a trifle under $14,000 each week it has been at the Liberty. That is nearly the entire capacity of the theatre at the scale, for 14 performances. Four hundred and twenty seats sell at $2 each.

One of the men most actively engaged in the movement to eliminate that which is claimed to be directed against the welfare of the blacks is Oswald Garrison Villard, owner of the New York Evening Post. Villard (white) is a relative of Lloyd Garrison and for a long time has been working in behalf of the negro's mental advancement.

Though it is not generally known two big scenes were cut out of the Griffith picture. One was a love scene between Senator Stoneham (white) and his octoroon housekeeper, and the other a fist fight between a white man and a black.

Griffith is not one bit pleased with any sentiment against his picture which he claims is only a photoplay reproduction of what actually occurred and which is down in black and white in the pages of American history.

SAN FRANCISCO (Cal.) CHRONICLE
MARCH 23, 1915

Run of "The Clansman" Continues at Alcazar

The successor of D. W. Griffith's motion picture production, "The Clansman," is [illegible] has indeed the management of that playhouse to announce it for six more days and nights, beginning with the matinee this afternoon. The last performance will occur on Saturday night, April 3d.

A Defense of t

Moving Picture Censorsh

THE EDITOR OF THE EVENING
m: I cannot refrain from ex surprise and regret at the the criticisms directed agai ional Board of Censorship of tures, which have recently the Evening Post, and, as expressed the last paragraph of Mr. Hackett's iew of the film play, "The Birth of Nation," which appeared in the last e of the New Republic. I do not wish suggest that I favor the production such films as represented by the one rred to. I am concerned rather with more fundamental elements of probs connected with censorship; and my tive in writing arises from the feeling t the efforts of the Evening Post and attitude implied in Mr. Hackett's iew may result in far more serious sequences than the production of films this type.

n view of the fact that an effort is g directed by a certain group to-rd the abolition of the National rd, it seems quite pertinent to ask a questions concerning the nature of proposed agencies to be substituted.
he explicit, is it proposed to substi-
State boards or a Federal board? shall such boards be chosen? What ll be the number and the salaries of censors? What character of indiuals can be secured to serve in the acity of censors? If the "legal" board given a veto power, what shall be the of demarcation, separating the ac-table films from those not accept-
? Will the courts sustain a standard regards theme or subject which dif-in any material way from that now blished for the press and the thea-
?

is all very worthy and proper that should object to the production s of a type or character which, by r nature, tend to aggravate serious al questions, but I hold that it is wise unworthy and quite as improper us to demand of a voluntary or even egalized" Board of Censors that they and maintain a standard of censor-which exceeds in its rigidity the dards already established for the s or the theatre.

Mr. Hackett's review, he sa

New Picture News
March 27-15

OF A NATION" TURNS THEM AWAY

Griffith's astonishing production, irth of a Nation," has proven sation of years in New York ls. When it was announced that n picture production was to be t the regular two-dollar scale of n the Liberty, skeptics predicted failure for so daring an innovation.
has not been a vacant seat in the ince the opening performance, and normous crowds have been turned t every presentation that another could have been filled.
interest has been manifested in the ion and such flattering comment has voted to it that all signs point to ng a record which will mark an metropolitan stage history.

LIPPER
New York City

ITH'S PICTURE A BIG DRAW.

henomenal success of D. W. Griffith's phic spectacle "The Birth of a Na-the Liberty Theatre, continues the dy in motion pictures has done more te its branch of art than all the at went before and has set this form tainment upon a par with the best offers. The offering continues at rty, to the biggest business of any $2.00 attraction now playing New

JOURNAL
Boston, Mass.
MAR 26 1915

ations are under way to bring t famous of all the photo-plays, irth of a Nation," to Boston
nth. New York has been the to see it so far, and the only gagement planned for the sea-e one in Boston. It is the only picture play being presented r prices, up as high as $1, but d to be filling one of the big y houses twice a day. The story th the Civil War and days. In fact, it was "The Clansman," the novel writ-Thomas Dixon, who n Boston twenty years ago

Mar. 28-15

OTION PICTURES.

s to Be Seen in the Films
This Week.

moving pictures on view include:
rth of a Nation" at the [illegible] Nation." Is there a [illegible] Board of Censors? Is there a [illegible] Board of Censors? Is there a [illegible] Board of Censors?

The assassination of President Lincoln in Ford's Theater as pictured in Griffith's masterpiece, "The Birth of a Nation."

New York Press - Mar. 28-15

Eve. Telegram March 29-1915

At the Liberty Theatre "The Birth of a Nation," with its crowded scenes and its historic background, is now at the height of its success.

Times, Mar. 29 - 5

During the three weeks the spectacular picture, "The Birth of a Nation," has been shown in the Liberty Theatre it is said 2,138 offers of bookings or of purchase of territorial rights have been received by D. W. Griffith. Many of these were from foreign countries.

Tribune, Mar. 29-15

Another film record has been made at the Liberty Theatre, where "The Birth of a Nation" is settled for a long and prosperous engagement. During the first three weeks 2,138 offers of bookings or purchase of territorial rights for the spectacle were received by D. W. Griffith. None has been accepted.

Careful tally shows how widespread is the demand for "The Birth of a Nation." From Great Britain, Spain, Portugal, Italy, Switzerland, the Scandinavian countries, the Balkan States, Australia, India, China, Japan, South America, South Africa, Persia and Egypt the offers have come, as well as from twenty-six subjects of the warring nations on the Continent.

Telegraph, Mar. 29-1915

Offers for "The Birth of Nation."

During the first three weeks of "The Birth of a Nation" run at the Liberty Theatre, 2,138 offers of bookings or of cash purchase of territorial rights for the film spectacle were received by D. W. Griffith. Mr. Griffith's secretary kept the tally of tenders, which covers every part of the United States and every foreign land where pictures are shown. Among the offers were fourteen from British firms, four from Spain, two from Portugal, six from Italy, two from Switzerland, three from Scandinavian lands, twenty-six from subjects of the warring European powers, two from the Balkan States, six from Australia, four from India, five from China and Japan, eighteen from South American countries, two from South Africa, one from Persia and one from Egypt. The mails, messengers, telegraph, telephone, cables and even wireless were used by the contract seekers.

None of the offers has been accepted, and no negotiations about territory have been entered into. "The Birth of a Nation" will continue exclusively under its present management, all rumors of the disposal of the rights being utterly unfounded.

CLIPPING FROM Chronicle

Date Augusta Ga. 3-28-15

N.Y. Commercial Mar. 29-15

During the first three weeks of "The Birth of a Nation" run at the Liberty 2,138 offers of bookings or of cash purchase of territorial rights for the film spectacle were received. None of the offers has been accepted, and no negotiations about territory have been entered into. "The Birth of a Nation" will continue exclusively under its present management, all rumors of the disposal of the rights being unfounded.

Globe, Mar. 29-15

Flood of Offers for Griffith Film.

During the first three weeks of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty Theatre 2,138 offers to book the film spectacle or to buy territorial rights have been received by D. W. Griffith. These included offers from practically every civilized nation of the world. It is announced that none of the offers has been accepted.

STAGE HISTORY.

D. W. Griffith's astonishing production, "The Birth of a Nation," has proven the sensation in New York theatricals. When it was announced that a motion picture production was to be given at the regular $2 scale of prices in the Liberty, skeptics predicted certain failure for so daring an innovation.

There has not been a vacant seat in the house since the opening performance, and such enormous crowds have been turned away at every presentation that another theatre must have been filled.

Such interest has been manifested in the production and such favorable comment has been devoted to it that all signs point to it making a record which will mark an epoch in metropolitan stage history.

SAN FRANCISCO (Cal.) BULLETIN MARCH 28, 1915

Sixth Week

Press, Mar. 29 - 15

During the first three weeks of "The Birth of a Nation" in the Liberty Theatre the management has been overwhelmed with offers of bookings. Daniel W. Griffith announces that the production will [illegible] exclusively under its present management.

CITIZEN

Brooklyn, N. Y.

MAR 29 1915

During the first three weeks of "The Birth of a Nation" run at the Liberty Theatre, 2138 offers of bookings or of cash purchase of territorial rights for the film spectacle were received by D. W. Griffith. They come from every part of the United States and every foreign land where pictures are shown. None of the offers have been accepted. "The Birth of a Nation" will continue exclusively under its present management as a first-class theatrical production, all rumors of the disposal of the rights being utterly unfounded.

Eve. World Mar. 29-15

During the last three weeks of the [illegible] "The Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty, 2,138 offers of [illegible] purchase of territorial [illegible] film were [illegible] Many [illegible]

Post Mar. 28-15

Stoneman represents [illegible] this [illegible] involved [illegible]

[illegible] the patrons of [illegible] playhouse who have been finding [illegible] and completely satisfying [illegible]

HE INVENTED "SWITCH BACK" IN THE MOVIES"

D. W. Griffith, Revolutionist of the Photo Play, Expounds Theories and Explains Their Results.

HE is known in the world of motion pictures as the man who invented the "switch back." In the world of the theatre at the moment he is one of the most interesting figures on Broadway. He is the man who put the motion picture business on a $1 basis.

First he revolutionized the mechanics of the motion picture. Now he has revolutionized the policy of their exhibition. "He" is D. W Griffith.

D. W. Griffith presents "The Birth of a Nation." That was what the sign said outside the Liberty Theatre one night about four weeks ago, and about half-way through the exhibition of the picture Mr. Griffith, in a light gray business suit, stepped in front of the curtain and acknowledged the spectators' approval of his picture by making a brief plea for freedom in the picture houses.

You wouldn't know him on meeting him as the man who has contributed as much as any other individual in motion pictures to bringing the cinema to its present high standard. That is to say, the motion picture industry is still too young to have developed its own type. Now you can nearly always tell a physician when you see one; you seldom mistake an actor; the banker has a way that identifies him from his neighbor, the merchant. But the motion picture man is a man for a' that.

Yes, there usually is a mark that distinguishes the motion picture director and producer. His face is tanned by the sun of summer and winter, by long hours in the open air with his players and his photographers. On this account he is likely to possess that qualification so dear to the heart of the novelist, who describes it as "a breezy sort of manner."

Not Too Serious a Man.

Whatever he thinks about his work in motion pictures, D. W. Griffith doesn't take himself too seriously. That was the first impression I received from him in a brief conversation yesterday afternoon in his apartment in the Astor Hotel. It was brief, because Mr. Griffith is a busy man; it was not too serious because—he admits it himself—he is feeling pretty good about the success of "The Birth of a Nation."

If you must know his name in full, it is David Wark Griffith. Some of those who have appeared in motion pictures under his direction declare his middle name should be spelled "Work."

Mr. Griffith isn't a chance producer of motion pictures. He once was an actor and he wrote several plays before, one entitled "A Fool and a Girl" was produced eight years ago, with James K. Hackett and Miss Fanny Ward in the leading roles. "A Fool and a Girl" opened in Washington and closed in Baltimore and never came to Broadway. [illegible] was about this [illegible] made [illegible] turn [illegible] tion [illegible] was directing. This, as events proved, was the field for his best effort.

D.W. GRIFFITH AND HIS CHIEF CAMERA OPERATOR "BILLY" BITZER IN ACTION. WATCHING THEM ARE MISS BLANCHE SWEET AND MISS DOROTHY GISH.

Making a brief narrative of many incidents, Mr. Griffith in his producing faced a problem one day in the studio which he found impossible to meet by the ordinary methods. So he started to find new means. The result was the first "switch back" picture. The "switch back"—in case you do not already know—is the simple process in motion pictures by which the spectators are cut off from one scene and their attention directed t[illegible] ther in the midst of the action. In [illegible] words, the play [illegible] switch back far [illegible] read of incident [illegible] character or

It was a big thing in motion pictures, as by means of it the motion picture dramatist was able to elaborate on the simple story and begin to tell a longer, more complicated, subtle drama. Instead of one thread—that's the technical word—of incident, the "switch back" made it possible to have two. The result was that the possibilities of the photo drama increased just 100 per cent on the very day of the discovery.

This is what Mr. Griffith related yesterday in leading up to some facts about "The Birth of a Nation." In this extraordinary motion picture, for which the exhibitors are charging (and getting) regular theatre prices of $2 for orchestra seats in the Liberty Theatre, the "switchback" plays an important, in fact, all important, part.

"It's the first time a play of four different threads of plot has been presented in motion pictures," said Mr. Griffith. "Now let me tell you what that means. For the first time we have succeeded in pictures in doing what the novelist has been able to do—maintain and sustain an interest, not in one or two groups of characters and events, but in seven or more. It is not a simple proposition of making the picture twice as long as the ordinary feature play; it is not simply that it was twice as difficult to do. It is that we have been able to accomplish something entirely new in motion pictures and have been able to make a film that shows us unlimited possibilities for the future.

Must Preserve Balance.

"Most difficult of the problems which the 'four thread play' presents to the director and producer is that he must maintain, as his drama reaches its climaxes, equal suspense, equal joy, equal sorrow, or their opposite contrasts, in each and every thread as it develops. Switching back from the first lovers, the spectators must see the second lovers as far along in their affairs; or, switching from a scene of battle to a scene of persons, the second situation must be as tense as the battle scene. There is one thing you cannot do in motion pictures—you cannot let down in your play upon the emotion of the spectators."

Mr. Griffith went on to say he was a year in making preparations for "The Birth of a Nation." The play is based on Thomas Dixon's novel "The Clansman," although the story of "The Clansman" does not really begin until the second half of the picture. It is rather, as Mr. Griffith says, a motion picture play of the reconstruction period in the South.

"Some of the scenes were taken right down in the South," said Mr. Griffith. "It was there, for instance, that we obtained the scenes in the cotton fields. Most of the picture was taken in California. It was there that we built a theatre that was an exact duplicate of Ford's Theatre in Washington for the scene of the assassination of President Lincoln."

The actual taking of the photographs required about two months. When completed Mr. Griffith had about 140,000 feet of motion picture film. Then started the work of elimination. "The Birth of a Nation" was practically made with a pair of scissors, as the 140,000 feet of film finally was brought down to 13,800, which is the length of the film shown at the Liberty.

Defends His Play.

Mr. Griffith was told that there has been criticism in some quarters of the theme of the play, that the story of racial clashing is likely to awaken feeling at this time. His defence was characteristic. Said he:—

"In the first place, the film has been passed twice by the National Board of Censors. On that account I can say what I have long contended about motion picture censorship.

"I believe some proper and well regulated censorship of pictures is needed for the class of pictures which are exhibited in the smaller houses where the attractions change every day, where the man of the neighborhood takes his family in the evening to see a programme of which he knows nothing as to its subject. His only guarantee is the trademark on the films that the subjects are fit for his children to see. But—and this is where I am emphatic—the motion picture which constitutes an entire evening's entertainment, which comes into town with advance advertising telling about its subject, its authors and its [illegible] and draws its audience in competition with the legitimate theatre—that, I say, should not be subject to censorship by any board any more than the first class play with which it competes has to pass a censorship.

"With such a picture production the press and the public are the censors and let me tell you that the day is past here in New York and everywhere in the country when any motion picture play or legitimate play can draw an audience on the strength of its sensationalism or its risqué or perverted. The public doesn't want that kind of thing. But of the historical picture play that tells, showing the truth of war, say, the suffering of the wounded, the heartbreaks and the anguish of those at home, that picture has a right to command attention. Because, if we as a people don't know in all the years that have passed, how are we going to know how to treat in the future identical situations that we may face? I see for truth in motion pictures."

And he is.

PPING FROM NEW YORK MAIL
Variety 4-30-15
What Thomas H. Ince said when he viewed "The Clansman:
.....
What David Wark Griffith will say when he sees "The Sign of the Rose:
.....
Blank space indicates deletions by censor of words violatory to U. S. postal laws.

Variety
New York City
APR 2
NO "NATION" STATES RIGHTS.
There will be no state's rights sold for D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation," at least not just yet. Last week a former advance agent in behalf of a party of men made the Griffith concern a flat offer of $25,000 for the "Nation" rights for one state. The offer was declined.
Over in the general offices of the Griffith film, J. J. McCarthy, general manager, is getting ready to shoot out a raft of road outfits playing the picture.

Pictures and Views

[illegible] Commanding Offi-[illegible] New Governor," [illegible] Were Twenty-[illegible] Death of Arabby," [illegible] City," the famous [illegible] drama based [illegible] novel, opens at the [illegible] on April 12.

"The Birth of a Nation" is still [illegible] business at the [illegible] its fifth week is substan-[illegible] I watched the [illegible] afternoon and [illegible] with the mar-
[illegible] of D. W. Griffith.
[illegible] of Bethulia" has [illegible] to stand alone in [illegible] Perhaps it still [illegible] in my estimation.
[illegible] "The Birth of a [illegible] has greater popular appeal
[illegible] ever made. The [illegible] runs through the [illegible] days, through the actual [illegible] of the Rebellion, and through [illegible] period of the reconstruction
[illegible] has genuine grip. The [illegible] interesting.
[illegible] battle scenes splen-
[illegible] perspective, the de-[illegible] Ford's Theatre at the [illegible] of Lincoln's assassination is [illegible] and no more stirring [illegible] have been picturized than [illegible] when the masked white [illegible] riders charge through the [illegible] streets of a little southern [illegible] "The Birth of a Nation" has [illegible] than the whole past three [illegible] There are moments
[illegible] are theatrically obvious, incl-
[illegible] that dip deeply into past ran[illegible] scenes—is following Thomas
[illegible] story—that paint a too one[illegible] story of southern wrongs. Some [illegible] sub-titles are a bit florid. But [illegible] Birth of a Nation" stands alone
[illegible] interest.
[illegible] direction is masterly. Hundreds [illegible] little details—human touches—hold [illegible] interest. Big scenes are done
[illegible] big way. Griffith is past master [illegible] and detail. The effects of [illegible] and shade, the use of the "close[illegible] the tricks of double exposure, are [illegible] as only he can handle them.
[illegible] the acting. Henry Walthal plays [illegible] "Little Colonel" admirably. We've [illegible] considered Walthal the most ar-
[illegible] of our screen actors. Mary Al-
[illegible] makes the pretty mulatto girl a [illegible] picture. It is one of the best bits [illegible] of characterization the film has ever offered. Lillian Gish is pretty as the "Little Colonel's" sweetheart, and Mae Marsh plays her tomboyish sister most effectively.

See "The Birth of a Nation," and realize the possibilities of the photodrama.

* * *

A certain able theatrical critic, possibly unfamiliar with pictures, said in commenting upon the Griffith picture:

"Tricks in the manipulation of the films do not enhance but destroy interest. The constant shifting of scenes, the intrusion of things that are not essential, the prolongation of action that may be remarkable from the picture maker's point of view but not in the dramatic sense, repetitions of the same action, all these things are to be reprehended."

Most of these very points are part of the life of the photodrama. The constant varying of scenes opens a field for the film impossible to the drama. Again, following a character from scene to scene supplants dialogue. Everything must be clearly visualized to be understood. The "unessentials" noted by the critic are the simple things that endear the film to the masses. For instance, in "The Birth of a Nation" the camera reveals the characters sitting upon the steps of the old southern home, and then gradually shifts downward to the floor, showing some puppies at play. This is an "unessential" unnecessary technically to the advancement of the story, but it is vital in sustaining the interest. These little touches take the place of the bright lines of a play.

* * *

Morning Telegraph March 30-1915

NOW IN ITS FIFTH WEEK.

"Birth of a Nation" Continues to Draw at Liberty Theatre.

D. W. Griffith's production in motion photography of "The Birth of a Nation" has started its fifth week of unprecedented success at the Liberty Theatre.

The artistic scope and the astonishing details of this work, in which the master hand of Griffith is apparent at every turn, have impressed New York theatregoers as nothing the season has provided to date.

Evening Mail Mar. 30-1915

2,138 Offers for Movie.

New York's indorsement of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty Theatre has resulted in 2,138 offers of bookings or of cash purchase of territorial rights for the film spectacle. "The Birth of a Nation" will continue exclusively under its present management as a first-class theatrical production, playing the larger cities under the same conditions as a regular theatrical organization.

Press, Mar 30-1915

"The Birth of a Nation" continues to draw crowded houses to the Liberty Theatre, where it is now in its fifth week.

Telegram Mar. 30-15

At the Liberty Theatre "The Birth of a Nation," with its crowded scenes and big historic background, is now at the height of its success.

Sun Mar. 31-1915

D. W. Griffith's film spectacle "The Birth of a Nation" continues at the Liberty Theatre, where hundreds of persons are turned away daily.

STANDARD UNION

Brooklyn, N. Y.

~~31 1915~~

During the first three weeks of "The Birth of a Nation" run at the Liberty Theatre, Manhattan, 2,138 offers of bookings or of cash purchase of territorial rights for the film spectacle were received by D. W. Griffith. Mr. Griffith's secretary, John A. Barry, kept the tally of tenders which covers every part of the United States and every foreign land where pictures are shown. "The Birth of a Nation" will continue exclusively under its present management as a first-class theatrical production, all rumors of the disposal of the rights being utterly unfounded.

STAATSZEITUNG

New York City.

Mayor als Filmreiniger.

Mayor Mitchel hat gestern den Film „The Birth of a Nation", gegen den bekanntlich der Nationalverband zur Hebung der farbigen Rasse Opposition gemacht hat, als ein „großes Rassenvorurtheil" charakterisirt und angeordnet, daß der Vorführung des Films Einhalt geboten werde oder mindestens die anstößigen Szenen, in denen angeblich Neger als Barbaren gekennzeichnet werden, ausgemerzt werden. Das eigentliche Verhör über diese Angelegenheit wird am nächsten Donnerstag vor Polizeirichter McQuade im Jefferson Market Polizeigericht stattfinden. Vermuthlich wird die ganze Sache aber unter den Tisch fallen, da D. W. Griffith, der den Film produzirt, bis dahin die erforderlichen Aenderungen vorgenommen haben dürfte.

The Eve. Sun APR 2 1915

MANY "REPEATERS" AT "BIRTH OF A NATION"

Bronx Man One of Hundreds Who Revisit the Liberty.

Persons who return again and again to see more of the 200,000 details of the picture are common among the crowds that see "The Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty Theatre. Charles V. Halley of 756 East 175th street was in the long queue again yesterday after having seen the picture twice earlier in the run. Mr. Halley, who is prominent in Bronx realty affairs and whose son is a practising attorney in that borough, told a reporter some of the reasons why he is a "come back."

"I have felt special interest in Mr. Griffith's play because I had kin on both sides of the civil war. Three of my brothers fought for the North, one of them in Gen. Meagher's Irish Brigade. The other brother went to New Orleans, joined the Louisiana Tigers and fought four years for the confederacy. Thus having ties on both sides I am perhaps in a better position to speak. It seems to me that D. W. Griffith in this film depiction of civil war and reconstruction times has been fair both to the North and the South. I thought at first such a play might revive bitter memories, but as I got further realized its reconciling tendency. The people of both sections will be benefited by it. The establishment of the new nation and the message of lasting peace are the great predominating themes in it."

"Personally I cannot see," continued Mr. Halley, "why the Afro-Americans or their friends should object to the play. The facts recited are true history. I followed the reconstruction controversies closely, and to my mind Mr. Griffith is not in error. These events happened forty-five years ago. The negroes have made marked advances since those days, and no one identifies their present progressive status with the ignorance and lawlessness of that period. I consider the play so educative that I am taking my family to see it, for the younger generation should see and know the things that happened during the great crisis of American history."

Evening Sun, March 31-1915

GOES THRICE TO SEE SPECTACLE

Bronx Man One of Many Who Revisit "Birth of a Nation."

Persons who return again and again to see more of the 200,000 details of the picture are common among the crowds that see "The Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty Theatre. Charles V. Halley of 756 East 175th street was in the long queue again yesterday after having seen the picture twice earlier in the run. Mr. Halley, who is prominent in Bronx realty affairs and whose son is a practising attorney in that borough, told a reporter some of the reasons why he is a "come back."

"I have felt special interest in Mr. Griffith's play because I had kin on both sides of the civil war. Three of my brothers fought for the North, one of them in Gen. Meagher's Irish Brigade. The other brother went to New Orleans, joined the Louisiana Tigers and fought four years for the confederacy. Thus having ties on both sides I am perhaps in a better position to speak. It seems to me that D. W. Griffith in this film depiction of civil war and reconstruction times has been fair both to the North and the South. I thought at first such a play might revive bitter memories, but as I got further realized its reconciling tendency. The people of both sections will be benefited by it. The establishment of the new nation and the message of lasting peace are the great predominating themes in it."

"Personally I cannot see," continued Mr. Halley, "why the Afro-Americans or their friends should object to the play. The facts recited are true history. I followed the reconstruction controversies closely, and to my mind Mr. Griffith is not in error. These events happened forty-five years ago. The negroes have made marked advances since those days, and no one identifies their present progressive status with the ignorance and lawlessness of that period. I consider the play so educative that I am taking my family to see it, for the younger generation should see and know the things that happened during the great crisis of American history."

Stoneman repre[illegible]

Brooklyn Times

(o)

Martin W. Littleton, representing D. W. Griffith, owner of the photo play, "The Birth of a Nation," appeared before Mayor Mitchel at the City Hall yesterday, in reply to the attacks made on the film. Mr. Littleton was able to get into the record of facts before his Honor the exact attitude of the National Board of Censors toward the film story. The original committee from the Board passed the picture in January. At an invitation presentation on March 1 another committee saw the picture and recommended certain modifications in the presentation. These changes were made, and on March 12 the Committee of Twenty-three, by a vote of 15 to 8, passed the picture.

(o)

APR 2 1915

(o)

Martin W. Littleton, representing D. W. Griffith, owner of the photo play, "The Birth of a Nation," appeared before Mayor Mitchel at the City Hall yesterday to reply to the charges of these agitators. Mr. Littleton was able to get into the record of facts before His Honor the exact attitude of the National Board toward the film story. The original committee from the board had passed the picture in January. At an invitation presentation on March 1 another committee saw the picture and recommended certain modifications in the presentation. These changes were made and on March 12 the Committee of Twenty-three passed finally upon the production and by a vote of 15 to 8 voted to adopt the report of the original committee and pass the picture as approved.

(o)

Morning Telegraph March 30-1915

APR 2 1915

National Board Set Right.

A statement was issued yesterday from the offices of D. W. Griffith, whose motion picture production, "The Birth of a Nation," has been the subject of considerable newspaper comment the past several days. This statement was in answer to the charges of the opponents of the picture that the film had not been passed by the National Board of Censors.

Martin W. Littleton, representing Mr. Griffith and his associates, appeared before Mayor Mitchel at the City Hall yesterday to reply to the charges of these agitators. Mr. Littleton was able to get into the record of facts before His Honor the exact attitude of the National Board toward the film story. The original committee from the board had passed the picture in January. At an invitation presentation on March 1 another committee saw the picture and recommended certain modifications in the presentation. These changes were made and on March 12 the Committee of Twenty-three passed finally upon the production and by a vote of 15 to 8 voted to adopt the report of the original committee and pass the picture as approved.

Mail APR 2 1915

National Board Set Right.

A statement was issued to-day from the offices of D. W. Griffith, whose motion picture production, "The Birth of a Nation," has been the subject of considerable newspaper comment the past several days. This statement was in answer to the charges of the opponents of the picture that the film had not been passed by the National Board of Censors.

Martin J. Littleton, representing Mr. Griffith and his associates, appeared before Mayor Mitchel to reply to the charges of these agitators. Mr. Littleton was able to get into the record of facts the exact attitude of the National Board toward the film story. The original committee from the board had passed the picture in January.

At an invitation presentation March 1 another committee saw the picture and recommended certain modifications in the presentation. These changes were made and on March 12 the committee of twenty-three passed finally upon the production and by a vote of 15 to 8 decided to adopt the report of the original committee and pass the picture as approved.

APR 2 1915 Eve. Sun

D. W. Griffith, whose motion picture production, "The Birth of a Nation," has been the subject of considerable newspaper comment the past several days, issued a statement yesterday in answer to the charges of the opponents of the picture that the film had not been passed by the National Board of Censors. Martin W. Littleton, representing Mr. Griffith and his associates, appeared before Mayor Mitchel at the City Hall yesterday and showed that the original committee from the board passed the picture in January. At an invitation presentation on March 1 another committee saw the picture and recommended certain modifications in the presentation. These changes were made and on March 12 the Committee of Twenty-three by a vote of 15 to 8 voted to adopt the report of the original committee and pass the picture as approved. These figures were furnished Mr. Littleton by the secretary of the National Board of Censors and submitted to the Mayor.

APR 2 1915 - My. Commercial

A statement was issued late yesterday from the offices of D. W. Griffith, whose motion picture production, "The Birth of a Nation" has been the subject of considerable newspaper comment the past several days. This statement was in answer to the charges of the opponents of the picture that the film had not been passed by the National Board of Censors. Martin W. Littleton, representing Mr. Griffith, appeared before Mayor Mitchel at the City Hall yesterday to reply to the statement of these agitators. Mr. Littleton was able to get into the record the exact attitude of the National Board toward the film story. The original committee from the Board passed the picture in January. At an invitation presentation on March 1, another committee saw the picture and recommended certain modifications. These changes were made and on March 12 he Committee of Twenty-three passed finally upon the production and by a vote of 15 to 8 voted to adopt the report of the original committee and pass the picture as approved. These figures were furnished Mr. Littleton by the Secretary of the National Board of Censors and submitted to the Mayor.

Journal of Commerce

APR 2 1915

A statement issued yesterday from the office of D. W. Griffith, producer of "The Birth of a Nation," answers the charges of the opponents of the picture that the film has not been passed by the National Board of Censors. The record was placed before Mayor Mitchel yesterday. The original committee from the board passed the picture in January. Another committee saw it on March 1 and recommended certain modifications. These were made and the film was passed by the Committee of Twenty-three on March 12, by a vote of 15 to 8.

Morning Telegraph APR 2 1915

National Board Set Right.

A statement was issued yesterday from the offices of D. W. Griffith, whose motion picture production, "The Birth of a Nation," has been the subject of considerable newspaper comment the past several days. This statement was in answer to the charges of the opponents of the picture that the film had not been passed by the National Board of Censors.

Martin W. Littleton, representing Mr. Griffith and his associates, appeared before Mayor Mitchel at the City Hall yesterday to reply to the charges of these agitators. Mr. Littleton was able to get into the record of facts before His Honor the exact attitude of the National Board toward the film story. The original committee from the board had passed the picture in January. At an invitation presentation on March 1 another committee saw the picture and recommended certain modifications in the presentation. These changes were made and on March 12 the Committee of Twenty-three passed finally upon the production and by a vote of 15 to 8 voted to adopt the report of the original committee and pass the picture as approved.

APR 2 1915

The Unfair Customer

March 23, 1915.

To the Editor The Tribune,
New York City.

Dear Sir: Seeing the enclosed advertisement in your paper under amusements, I decided to go to the Liberty Theatre, and instead of seeing actors perform as the advertisement implies, it was only a Motion Picture Show, and I feel this advertisement should say so.

You will see by the seat stubs that this is a price big enough for a good performance and entirely too much for movies.

Hoping you will have this "ad" changed for the benefit of the future readers of The Tribune amusement columns.

Respectfully,
(Unsigned.)

As we see it

As we see it, this claim is entirely beyond the bounds of fairness. D. W. Griffith is known through his picture plays in hundreds of thousands of homes, not only in America but in Europe as well. His name is synonymous with moving pictures. Yet The Tribune would have refunded the full price of the seats had the letter not been anonymous.

Perhaps our readers will, from this instance, understand more fully The Tribune's Moneyback Guarantee. It is as simple and as complete as the mind of man can make it. We will refund in full any amount paid out by you to any concern who advertises in The Tribune—save only on real estate and investments, where your own judgment must be final.

The mere fact that you want your money refunded is enough for us. We will give it to you—even though the claim be far-fetched, and in that case there will be never a word to the advertiser concerned.

It Pays to Advertise in

The Tribune

APR 8 1915

"The Birth of a Nation" continues at the Liberty Theatre upon its sixth phenomenal week with the matinee and night performances on Easter Sunday.

Journal of Commerce
APR 3 1915

D. W. Griffith's wonderful picture, "The Birth of a Nation," starts its sixth week to-morrow. Even Holy Week seemed to have no effect upon the attendance at the Liberty Theatre and the house was crowded at every performance. So far nearly 90,000 persons have viewed the film and the management expects to record at least one million visitors before the run ends.

Morning Telegraph
APR 3 1915

Since "The Birth of a Nation" opened at two per sit. everybody in the producing line is announcing a forthcoming "two-dollar" feature. Concentration on twenty-five-cent pictures will bring bigger results, say we.

Mg. Clipper
APR 8 1915

"BIRTH OF NATION" STILL BIG.

D. W. Griffith's production in motion photography of "The Birth of a Nation" started its fifth week of unprecedented success at the Liberty Theatre with two performances Sunday afternoon and night. The artistic scope and the astonishing details of this work, in which the master hand of Griffith is apparent at every turn, have impressed New York theatregoers as nothing the season has provided to date. The great battle scenes, the historic incidents of the war, the assassination of President Lincoln and the wonderful runs of the Ku Klux Klans are the high points of interest in the most absorbing drama of the decade. The comprehensive and atmospheric manner in which the thrilling theme is presented, and the enlargement of this appeal in the musical accompaniment of the big orchestral effects, so cleverly made a vital part of the story, are all further points of the most impressive kind.

WALTHALL REJOINS GRIFFITH.

Henry Walthall, the distinguished film player, after a brief absence, has returned to the Griffith-Mutual fold, and in forthcoming Reliance and Majestic three and four reel features he will be starred.

For his first appearance he will portray a dual role in a four reel adaptation of Ibsen's "Ghosts," prepared by Russell E. Smith. In the early part of "Ghosts," Walthall, the master screen actor, plays Oswald, the young son, and later Alving, the old man, which allows him ample opportunity to display his versatility.

Walthall was absent from the Griffith studio for a short while, and during that time was missed very much by his studio associates, with whom he is a great favorite. His most recent success as "The Little Colonel," in D. W. Griffith's "The Clansman," has set filmland talking, and his performance as John Howard Payne in Griffith's immortal classic, "Home, Sweet Home," has convinced many that he, as a photoplay artist, is a mountain in the film game.

He will long be remembered for his characterizations in Griffith films.

Director George Nicholls will direct Walthall in the picturization of Ibsen's "Ghosts," and his supporting cast will be exceptionally good.

Mr. Walthall, when asked as to how he felt now that he was back at the Griffith studio, replied:

"There is no place like home, and I was very lonesome for my dear friends—but I tell you they will never get me away again."

The manner in which this usually clever screen actor delivered the above remarks convinced the listeners that Henry Walthall, once again, was where he belonged.

THE BIRTH OF A NATION—Historical [illegible] in two acts, founded on Thomas Dixon's "Clansman." Produced by D. W. Griffith. Photography by G. W. Bitzer. Music by Joseph Carl Briel. Liberty Theatre, New York.

Colonel Ben Cameron.....Henry Walthall
Margaret Cameron, the elder sister.....Miriam Cooper
Flora, the pet sister.....Mae Marsh
Mrs. Cameron.....Josephine Crisp
Doctor Cameron.....Elmer Clifton
Wade Cameron, the second son.....J. A. Berry
Duke Cameron, the youngest son.....John Fox
Mammy, their faithful old servant.....Jennie Lee
Hon. Austin Stoneman, leader of the House.....Ralph Lewis
Elsie, his daughter.....Lillian Gish
Phil, his elder son.....Elmer Clifton
Tod, the younger son.....Robert Harron
Jeff, the blacksmith.....Wallace Reid
Lydia Brown, Stoneman's mulatto housekeeper.....Mary Alden
Silas Lynch, mulatto Lieutenant Governor.....George Siegmann
Gus, a renegade negro.....Walter Long
Abraham Lincoln.....Joseph Henaberry
John Wilkes Booth.....Raoul Walsh
General U. S. Grant.....Donald Crisp
General Robert E. Lee.....Howard Gaye
Cabinet members, generals, military aides, attaches, Secretaries, Senators, Representatives, visitors, soldiers, Abolitionists, Ku Klux Klansmen, plantation crowds and mobs.

Three hours of beauty and emotion; the finest stagings of battle scenes yet accomplished; the most poetic handling of nature and man in the large; the biggest "thrill" on Broadway—that is the monster photoplay, "The Birth of a Nation."

Not the least marvelous thing about "The Birth of a Nation" is that it succeeds in "putting over" at last Thomas Dixon's "Clansman." Mr. Griffith, a Southerner himself, has kept the theme of the book, a picture of the sufferings of the South under the atrocities of reconstruction. But he has so ennobled it historically and so massed the whole struggle of the Civil War about it that the result achieves a dignity and interest that Mr. Dixon is not at all responsible for.

The story is as romantic and impossible as in the book. The Northern cousins meet the Southern cousins before war breaks out and acquire attachments both friendly and sentimental. The best two pairs of them, meet on the battlefield. The men and women, two more pairs, fall in love and wed. But all this commonplace romance is driven into the background by the power and terror of the scenes of war.

After preliminary views of the South Carolina town of Piedmont, resting in the soft, leaf-flecked light of the rosy dawn before the war, the film throws us headlong into the most remarkable battle scene ever staged. One shows us the taking and burning of Atlanta, swinging the vision of the lense from a ruined mountain shack down a 10-mile valley of Sherman's charging army, to the flame licked streets of the city. Still more remarkable is the final battle where the cousins meet. The camera shows alternately the battling trenches of the opposing armies and the sweep of the ranks across another great valley, taking the after line of entrenchments, and fallen to the last man as "The Little Colonel" rams the flag of his State down the smoking cannon in a Federal breech.

The handling of crowds—18,000, the management tells us; and it looks fully as many—is marvelous. The intensity and yet the clocklike and perfect precision of the sweep of the armies and mobs, and yet the myriad individual detail of falling men, stricken horses, bursting shells.

The acting—never obtrusive, always perfect, even when Lincoln, Grant and Lee are on the screen—is a thing to admire for itself. But it fades before the handling of mass. In the last act, devoted mainly to the vengeance of the Ku Klux Klan, the white array of the marshalled knights as they gather in a great field and then whirl past at the charge is only a final proof of the wonderful art that lies before the cinematograph in the creation of scenes of sweeping, stirring beauty.

Federation of Women's Clubs—Mag. Apr. 1915

The Item APR 2 1915

Liberty Theatre, New York.

D. W. Griffith's production in motion photography of "The Birth of a Nation" started its fifth week of unprecedented success at the Liberty Theatre, Manhattan, with two performances on Saturday last. The artistic scope and the astonishing details of this work, in which the master hand of Griffith is apparent at every turn, have impressed New York theatregoers as nothing the season has provided to date. The great battle scenes, the historic incidents of the war, the assassination of President Lincoln and the wonderful runs of the Ku-Klux Klans are the high points of interest in the most absorbing drama of the decade. The comprehensive and atmospheric manner in which the thrilling theme is presented, and the enlargement of this appeal in the musical accompaniment of the big orchestral effects, so cleverly made a vital part of the story, are all further points of the most impressive kind.

Motion Picture Mag. Apr. 3-15

CLEVELAND (Ohio) PRESS
APRIL 1, 1915

Going Up!

FIVE-DOLLAR movies are now being planned for the Metropolitan opera house in New York.

This announcement sounds improbable. But it sounds no more so than did the first announcement of the prices to be charged for "The Birth of a Nation," the film play now showing in New York with the best seats selling at $1.50 and $2.

Cleveland, Ohio PRESS
APR 1 1915

FIVE-DOLLAR movies are now being planned for the Metropolitan opera house in New York.

This announcement sounds improbable. But it sounds no more [illegible]

NEWS
BIRMINGHAM, ALA
MAR 28 1915

Lasky Has Big Plans.

Griffith's "Birth of a Nation" has stirred the motion picture industry, and Jesse L. Lasky announces plans for a forthcoming production to rival this big American feature.

Mr. Lasky has been out in California the last several weeks and has just returned to New York. He announced the intended spectacle, but would not go into details. He did say, however, it was going to be handled like "The Birth of a Nation," at $2 prices. Many believe [illegible]

EVENING MAIL
New York City
APR 3 1915

90,000 Saw Film Play.

D. W. Griffith's marvelous spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," continues the film sensation of the season at the Liberty Theatre. It starts in upon its sixth week with the matinee and night performances Sunday. Nearly [illegible] have already seen the [illegible] by the [illegible] million.

What's What—and Why

By TARLETON WINCHESTER

THE heights of Motion Picture production and presentation have been reached in D. W. Griffith's masterpiece, "The Birth of a Nation." Nothing so elaborate, so thrilling and so stupendous has ever before been made by an American director. As a spectacle, as an historical document and as art it is unequaled.

It has been said that Mr. Griffith, as a Southerner has made his scenes in the latter part of the picture more horrible than the facts. This is hardly true. It has also been said that he has made an attack upon the North. This is foolish.

In a cast of such excellence it is difficult to pick those who shine above the others. Henry Walthall comes first; then Mae Marsh, Ralph Lewis, George Seigmann, Lillian Gish and Miriam Cooper. Joseph Henaberry as Abraham Lincoln, Donald Crisp as General U. S. Grant, and Howard Gaye as General Robert E. Lee win individual applause. "The Birth of a Nation" marks an epoch in the history of Motion Pictures.

[illegible] not been [illegible] the house since [illegible] formance, and such [illegible] have been turned [illegible] presentation that an [illegible] have been filled [illegible] been manifeste[illegible] that such flatte[illegible] been devoted t[illegible] to it maki[illegible] will mark an [illegible] a stage histo[illegible]

Morning Telegraph

APR 4 1915

D. W. Griffith's marvelous spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," continues the sensation of the season at the Liberty Theatre. It starts in upon its sixth week with the matinee and night performances there on Easter Sunday. Even Holy Week, just passed, usually the worst period in a theatrical season, was no exception to the rule of crowded houses.

THE TWO-DOLLAR PICTURE NOW AND IN THE FUTURE

Its Success Has Been Brought About By People of Film Studio and Not of the Legitimate Show Shop.

By ROBERT GRAU.

Not since that day in July, 1896, when the Cinematograph was first shown to the general public of this big town at the Union Square Theatre has there been so much discussion in theatrical circles as to the trend of motion pictures, as has been heard at every turn since March 3 of this year when D. W. Griffith fulfilled a prophecy which the present writer was emboldened to place in type just five years before, while picture plays were yet utilized in the cheaper theatres as "chasers."

"It may be five years before some intrepid producer hands down a photo-spectacle which will not only attract the multitude at the highest prices for seats charged to see a spoken play, but that day will usher in a new era in the field of the theatre, wherein a new type of showman will enter the arena making his impress so positive that theatrical history will assume a new aspect."

These were the words written in 1910. prophecies are still being ventured as to the future of this infant art and industry, but the two-dollar photo-spectacle (mark well the term "spectacle" for the first two-dollar picture cannot be called a photoplay) brings the camera man to his goal. One may but conjecture as to what is yet to come—but let no man doubt that March 3, 1915 will be recorded in theatrical history as that day when a new epoch in public entertainment was inaugurated.

Not even Griffith himself approached the problem of two-dollar seats with absolute confidence—the master and his business associates hesitated more on this point than on any other. A glance at the first advertisements and the original billboard announcements well reveal with what timidity they undertook to establish the precedent. It was not until after the third day following the premiere that they were forced to quadruple the number of two-dollar seats, in fact, the prices were practically doubled all over the house. Even in the balcony, seats were two dollars, and where the majority of the matinee seats were originally 25 and 50 cents, now there are more dollar seats than those of the lower rates combined.

It was simply the great public's way of demonstrating that it knows what it wants. What Griffith had hesitated to establish in the way of prices was really accomplished through a clamor for the highest priced seats. There is no use denying it, playgoers of the staid sort, most of whom never buy seats at a box office, had at last capitulated to the cameraman. The spectacle of men and women standing in line not at the box office alone but at the larger ticket bureaus where seats are sold at a premium, is now daily in view. On the fourth Monday of what is destined to be an all Summer run, the line approaching the Liberty box office extended to Seventh avenue.

And now the query in all pictureddom is, "What of to-morrow?"

Let no man be fooled as to the two-dollar-a-seat picture. Already one may hear of elaborate plans on the part of old established producers and even the newcomers are impressed. If one may believe the gossip of the Rialto, another season will witness a veritable epidemic of two-dollar releases, but we may have to wait a long time before there will come into filmdom a worthy successor of "The Birth of a Nation."

It may be well too to remind those who contemplate an onrush into the two-dollar film field that Mr. Griffith attained his goal not with a stage success in which the names of stage celebrities were utilized to attend patronage instead of following the modern trend. Griffith sought his triumph along the same lines as has been his wont ever since, in sheer desperation, he turned from the stage to the film studio.

Griffith's achievement is a triumph for all that the motion picture art has stood for since it was discovered that a story could be concretely told in pictures and those who shared in the master's conceit were, to a man and woman, real products of the infant art—not one was known to that class of playgoers who are besieging the Liberty box office for two-dollar seats. Even now the players, Walthall, Gish, Marsh et. al., are attracting attention mostly through wonder as to their previous experience.

Not one in a hundred who pay theatre prices at the Liberty ever heard of Billy Bitzer, a cameraman, and an artist. Time was when directors, authors and players alike were relegated into similar oblivion, but no one can doubt that if the vital era of film production is at hand it will be greatly due to a recognition of men and women who rely not on their stage fame—who represent a far greater asset to the producer than those players who came reluctantly into the studios in an effort to convert their stage fame into cash.

The writer does not wish to assume that stage triumphs are not repeated on the screen, yet how many of the celebrities of the older field have made the transition from stage to screen with grace and dignity? The great Bernhardt herself does not hesitate to proclaim that her artistry—such as gave her fame—was not transmitted to the screen.

How many stars of the speaking stage have appeared with such success in pictures but they were induced to remain permanently? Ask the millions of patrons if they would exchange their idols of the screen for a choice of the world's stage stars.

It was the motion picture brain of D. W. Griffith, aided by the products of the environment he has created in the film studio that brought about the first two-dollar picture production, and it will be in just such an environment that others will be achieved.

New York City

APR 4 1915

Anwalt Littleton erschien am vergangenen Donnerstag als Vertreter von D. W. Griffith, dem Schöpfer des herrlichen Films „The Birth of a Nation", vor Bürgermeister Mitchel und brachte den Beweis bei, daß — entgegen den Angaben gewisser Herrschaften! — der National Board of Censors seine Erlaubnis zum Zeigen der vielbesprochenen Films gegeben habe.

PRESS

Philadelphia, Pa.

APR 1 - 1915

AT THE OPERA HOUSE

At the Chestnut Street Opera House, beginning to-morrow afternoon, D. W. Griffith's startling motion picture, "The Avenging Conscience," will be presented. This film drama was suggested by Edgar Allan Poe's famous story of "The Tell-tale Heart" and by his poem of "Annabel Lee," and it is said to provide the biggest thrill that has ever been accomplished.

The photoplay was produced by D. W. Griffith, who is on the screen recognized master of dramatic and photographic effects in the motion picture world. He has made "The Avenging Conscience" a most powerful and intensely dramatic photoplay. He has skilfully blended a mixture of mystery, horror and romance. Poe was weird and tragic, and the photoplay likewise embodies these characteristics.

Mr. Griffith's latest production, "The Birth of a Nation," now playing at the Liberty Theatre, New York, is the biggest success in the history of motion pictures and marks the first time that a motion picture production has been shown at two dollars a seat. Unusual interest therefore attaches to the production of "The Avenging Conscience" in this city.

Performances of "The Avenging Conscience" will begin at three and nine P. M. and will be preceded by a comedy bill beginning at 1.30 and 7.30 P. M.

DISPATCH

Pittsburgh, Pa.

APR 1 - 1915

DAVID GRIFFITH, who put on the film, "The Birth of a Nation," in New York and "sold out" on a $2 seat scale, says that in future millions will be spent on a film and seats will sell as high as $5. He says:

The public is quick to see values. If they are willing to pay five cents to see a picture that costs $100 to produce and 25 cents to see a picture that costs $25,000 to produce they are willing to pay $2 to see one that costs $50,000 to produce. And when we can put on a picture that will cost $1,000,000 to produce the public will be willing to pay $5 a seat for it.

"What will happen to the average theater when its prices are being cut while yours are advancing?" he was asked.

"The regular theater," Mr. Griffith replied, "will always exist, I think, I believe, as now. The pictures will eliminate from the regular theater the spectacular features of production. Plays will never again appeal to the public for their scenery, or their numbers of actors and supernumeraries. Pictures have replaced all that.

"The only plays the public will care to see in the regular theater will be the intimate, social plays that can be staged in one or two settings within four walls, and in which the setting is unimportant, while the drama will be largely subjective. Objective drama, the so-called melodrama, will be absorbed in the pictures."

STANDARD UNION

Brooklyn, N. Y.

APR 4 - 1915

Manhattan Theatres

LIBERTY, MANHATTAN.—D. W. Griffith's marvelous spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," continues the sensation of the season at the Liberty Theatre, Manhattan. It starts in upon its sixth phenomenal week with the matinee and night performances there to-day. Even Holy Week, just passed, usually the worst period in a theatrical season, was no exception to the rule of crowded houses. The attendance last week set up a new record. More distinguished persons have seen the production than ever attended any other motion picture in Manhattan. Nearly 90,000 patrons have kept the Liberty Theatre filled at every performance. Judging by the interest and the sale it is now estimated that over a million patrons will see the picture production before the end of the run across the river.

Evening News, Newark, N. J.

APR 2 1915

LIBERTY, 43d St. near 6th Ave.—"The Birth of a Nation." Very impressive picture drama, based on Thomas Dixon's novel, "The Clansman." Vivid reproductions of events during the Civil War and the reconstruction period. Instructive and intensely interesting.

Citizen, Brklyn APR 4 1915

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

Has Already Been Seen by Ninety Thousand People.

D. W. Griffith's marvelous spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," continues the sensation of the season at the Liberty Theatre. It starts in upon its sixth phenomenal week with the matinee and night performances there on Easter Sunday. Even Holy Week, just passed, usually the worst period in a theatrical season, was no exception to the rule of crowded houses. The attendance last week set up a new record.

More distinguished persons have seen the production than ever attended any other motion picture in New York. Nearly 90,000 patrons have kept the Liberty Theatre filled at every performance. Judging by the interest and the sale it is now estimated that over a million patrons will see the picture production before the end of the New York run.

DISPATCH

Pittsburgh, Pa.

APR 4 - 1915

D. W. Griffith, the producer of "The Birth of a Nation," taught her the art of acting before the camera when she was a member of his company, which she was for several years. She is loyal to Griffith, ascribes all her success to him and says that he is the nonpareil among producers.

Morning Telegraph

APR 4 1915

WITH THE LEADING MOVING PICTURE HOUSES

D. W. Griffith's spectacle "The Birth of a Nation" continues the sensation of the season at the Liberty Theatre. It starts in upon its sixth week with the matinee and night performances to-day.

APR 4 1915

The Sun

SEEN ON THE SCREEN.

Attractions of the Week in Motion Picture Theatres.

Among the motion pictures to be seen this week are D. W. Griffith's spectacle "The Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty Theatre, which continues its success and is playing to capacity audiences. It is now in its sixth week and has been performed about 90,000 persons.

The Tribune

D. W. Griffith's spectacle "The Birth of a Nation" continues at the Liberty Theatre. It starts in upon its sixth week with the matinee and night performances there on Easter Sunday. Even Holy Week, just passed, usually the worst period in a theatrical season, was no exception to the rule of crowded houses. The attendance last week set up a new record. More distinguished persons have seen the production, it is said, than ever attended any other moving picture show in New York. Nearly 90,000 patrons have kept the Liberty Theatre filled at every performance. Judging by the interest and the sale, it is now estimated that over a million patrons will see the picture production before the end of the New York run.

N. Y. American

D. W. Griffith's marvelous spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," continues the sensation of the season at the Liberty Theatre. It starts in upon its sixth phenomenal week with the matinee and night performances there on Easter Sunday. Even Holy Week, just passed, usually the worst period in a theatrical season, was no exception to the rule of crowded houses. The attendance last week set up a new record.

APR 4 1915

Herald

"BIRTH OF A NATION" BEGINS SIXTH WEEK

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION," D. W. Griffith's motion picture spectacle, based on Thomas Dixon's novel, "The Clansman," is proving its claim to a newer standard of motion picture by the crowds that [illegible] twice daily in the Liberty Theatre. It will begin the sixth week of its [illegible] to-day. Meanwhile the [illegible]

Apr. 4

Leader-Herald, Cleveland, Ohio

The producers of "The Birth of a Nation," which is a moving picture inflation of T. Dixon's "The Clansman," are planning a summer run for Chicago, charging $2 for the best seats.

Globe

APR 4 1915

"The Birth of a Nation" is in its sixth week of capacity business at the Liberty.

WASHINGTON (D. C.) HERALD

APRIL 4, 1915

Phenomenal Success.

The phenomenal success of D. W. Griffith's photographic spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Liberty Theatre [illegible] the talk of New York and the country at large. This study in motion pictures has done more to elevate its branch of art than all the things that went before and has set this form of entertainment upon a par with the best the stage offers.

Enquirer

APR 4 1915

Press

A nine-reel [illegible] the "Birth of a Nation" by Thomas R. Dixon, Jr., [illegible] from a [illegible]

BOOKMAN

New York City

APR 1915

The very extraordinary motion-picture film entitled The Birth of a Nation and depicting, among other scenes, the activities of the Ku Klux Clan during the Reconstruction days in the South, recalls a time when the discretion of Sherlock Holmes reached heights that were ludicrous. It was in "The Adventure of the Five Orange Pits." Holmes had been busy tracing the movements of the American barque Lone Star and was reporting the results of his labour to Watson in the seclusion of their rooms in Upper Baker Street. It was only after a cautious look about him and then in a whisper that he asked the question: "Have you ever heard of the Ku Klux Clan?" As a matter of fact, the query was one that at the time could have been shouted with perfect safety by any man, woman or child in any part of the United States. The work of the Ku Klux had been done, and the men who had worn its mystic insignia had gone back to their various peaceful occupations of farming, clerking, and building. To English readers the precautionary glance and the lowered tone may have brought a thrill; to Americans they were nothing more than a source of mild amusement.

PUBLIC LEDGER

Philadelphia

APR 1915

ature.

Photoplays

COURT. ST. OP. HOUSE—D. W. Griffith's startling motion picture, "The Avenging Conscience," will be presented here tomorrow. This film drama was suggested by Edgar Allan Poe's famous story of "The Telltale Heart" and by his poem, "Annabel Lee," and it is said to provide the biggest thrill that has ever been accomplished in a motion picture theatre. It was produced by Mr. Griffith, who is the recognized master of dramatic and photographic effects, and he has made "The Avenging Conscience" powerful and intensely dramatic. Poe was weird and tragic and the photoplay likewise embodies these characteristics.

Mr. Griffith's latest production, "The Birth of a Nation," now playing at the Liberty Theatre, New York, is the most important success in the history of motion pictures, and marks the first time that a picture has been exhibited at $2 a seat. Unusual interest, therefore, attaches to the production of "The Avenging Conscience" here.

RECORD

Philadelphia, Pa.

APR - 1915

Griffith's latest production, "The Birth of a Nation," now playing at the Liberty Theatre, New York, is the biggest success in the history of motion pictures, and marks the first time that a picture has been exhibited at $2 a seat.

Leader

Cleveland O.

4-4-15

The producers of "The Birth of a Nation," which is a moving picture inflaction of T. Dixon's "The Clansman," are planning a summer run for Chicago, charging $2 for the best seats.

SAN FRANCISCO (Cal.) CALL & POST, 825

APRIL 1, 1915

"Clansman" Film to Stay at Alcazar

"The Clansman," D. W. Griffith's picture drama, is to continue at the Alcazar the coming week until further notice. Despite the fact that this motion picture already has been run for weeks, the management of the Alcazar succeeded in arranging for "The Clansman" to be run Thursday night, and it will be run one of the features. The drama is that it permits the audience to gaze upon a battlefield as it really is. This shows actual warfare. The starving soldiers are seen in trenches. The hand-to-hand encounters of the opposing armies are depicted. "The Clansman" presents of the most powerful scenes of the great peace that ever came to America.

New York theatergoers paid $2 to see "The Clansman" when it is offered to the Alcazar patrons. The production is playing in this city for several weeks, and the management is taking advantage of the popular prices.

New York City

APR 3 1915

If you have not seen the wonder film of the moving picture world, The Birth of a Nation, now running at the Liberty Theatre, do so at once—or as soon as you can procure seats. As a production it is almost beyond criticism. Some of the scenes are soul harrowing, but people love to have their souls harrowed, evidently, as the theatre is packed to capacity at each of the two daily performances. The useless assassination of President Lincoln, by a mad Englishman, is very realistic; but the scene of greatest historical importance is that in which the mulatto woman bends a Cabinet Minister to her will—in other words, while he is acting as ad interim President of the United States he was influenced by this woman—she was virtually the President of the United States for several weeks. The much maligned Ku Klux Klan is received with unstinted enthusiasm. It is a wonderful spectacle when the Klan comes rushing to the rescue of the poor little South Carolina town. One may not accept all the situations as being true, but no one will deny that as a photo-play it surpasses anything yet flashed on the screen.

COLUMBUS (O.) CITIZEN

APRIL 2, 1915

FIVE DOLLAR MOVIES!

Five dollars for a seat at a movie.

The day is coming when the public will be willing to pay that. Take it from D. W. Griffith, the film genius who produced "The Birth of a Nation," that is now crowding a New York theater at $2 for the best seats.

Theater men scoffed at Griffith's suggestion that anybody would pay his price to see his big film, but the box office returns turned the laugh on them.

Griffith figures the $5 proposition thus:

"The public is alert to values. They have shown themselves willing to pay five cents to see a film that cost $500 to produce, 50 cents to see one that cost $50,000 and $2 for one that cost half a million.

"And when we can put on a film that cost $2,000,000 to produce, the people will be willing to pay $5 to see it."

Southern Theatre

Dallas Texas

April 1915

TWO DOLLAR PICTURE SHOW

"The Birth of a Nation" is the subject played at the Forty-second Street Theatre, New York City, for which admission of $2 was charged. The promoters say this production is absolutely the greatest ever attempted in the moving picture line, over eight hundred people taking part in it.

Columbus O.

4-4-15

"The Birth of a Nation" management has declined [illegible] to take the film spectacle on tour this season. Touring is not a simple matter. At the Liberty Theater, New York, nearly 100 persons are employed in the musical and mechanical effects incidental to the great spectacle.

DES MOINES (Ia.) REGISTER-LEADER

APRIL 5, 1915

While people interested in the amusement business are still gasping at the spectacle of "The Birth of a Nation" produced in motion pictures and drawing crowded houses at regular theater prices in the heart of New York's theater district, the announcement is made there that negotiations are in progress for the leasing of the Metropolitan opera house for the production of joint film and musical dramas at regular Metropolitan prices. This means that the 10-cent motion picture has leaped to the importance of the most expensive grand opera. In fact, the announcement of the negotiations in progress contains the statement that the prices of admission charged for the production to be given there [illegible]

BROOKLYN (N. Y.) EAGLE

Zanesville, O.

APR 4 - 1915

MOVIE FILMS WILL PERPETUATE WAR'S GLORIES SAFELY

"The Birth of a Nation" Will "Out-Cabiria" Famous Cabiria

18,000 MEN AND 3,000 HORSES EMPLOYED

Must the glories of war, its plumed pomp and steel-tipped grandeur, depart from earth after peace extends its universal sway?

His majesty, Mars, must be disarmed and reduced to a milk diet, it is agreed. But now it is asked: Is it not possible that Mars may still delight the eye, his helmet and cuirass agleam, his plumes freshly curled, his shield polished, his spear filed blunt, and bearing the pennon of peace among nations?

"Ay, ay," it is affirmed, "wars will still be waged when international courts of arbitration have abolished hate and bloodshed. There will still be war, glorious, soul-inspiring conflict. But it will be bloodless war, devoid of death, suffering and anguish. It will be war replete with superb and thrilling charges of horse and foot, war of melodramatic onslaughts, doughty defenses, blood-tingling clashes more tremendous than Waterloo, Balaklava, Gettysburg and Aix-la-Chappelle.

Wars of Peace.

"It will be war in which nobody will be hurt. War which will leave no widows desolate, no little ones fatherless and at the mercy of the wolf. It will be war in which thousands of warriors may withstand the battle's shock and live to tell the tale and eat a hearty dinner. It will be war—."

It will be Movie War, to make a short cut of it.

"Moving picture corporations of great wealth will undertake the reproduction of all the vast and picturesque conflicts of history. Millions of dollars will be expended financing huge "campaigns," illustrating the bloody but spectacular crisis in the legends and records of every race and nation. Men will don rich uniforms armor and accoutrements, will gird themselves with weapons of destruction and march before the domineering gaze of the ruthless conqueror but of the moving picture director. And whilst batteries of artillery utter blankshell broadsides more important batteries of motion cameras will imprint the stirring scenes for the delight of peaceful playgoers.

The Bloodless Era.

The prediction of an age of bloodless movie wars is largely based on the recent achievement of an American moving picture director. He is D. W. Griffith, the man who has cutcabiriaed Cabiria." The spectacle he has produced, which is said to open a new world of possibilities in his art, is entitled, "The Birth of a Nation."

For some of the scenes in "The Birth of a Nation" Mr. Griffith employed 18,000 persons and 3,000 horses. With this real army he has staged the most memorable [illegible] rences of the civil war, following closely the story in Thomas Dixon's novel, "The Clansman." It is the most pretenious moving picture ever attempted. As finally assembled it runs 13,000 feet in length, or more than 1,000 feet longer than the epoch-making "Cabiria." For many of the scenes the "stage" has been five miles in length. In order to secure one effect of war's havoc a village the size of thousands of communities throughout America was constructed in solid manner and then destroyed.

Record Portworth apr 4, 19

Admission of Two Dollars Is Charged To See Feature Film

"The Birth of a Nation" management has declined all offers to take the film spectacle on tour this season. Touring is not the simple matter it seems to the average exhibitor, that is, merely making more copies. At the Liberty theater, New York, nearly 100 persons are employed in the musical and mechanical effects incident to the great spectacle. Three months were occupied in getting ready for the production, after the film was completed. The ceaseless labor of D. W. Griffith and his assistants in putting forth a film drama [illegible]

Philadelphia Pa.

April 4, 1915

See notice to managers of playing concert on the Liberty, New York.

PACKENSACK

APRIL 1915

FIVE DOLLAR [illegible]

D. W. Griffith, the pioneer of movie pictures, says the time is coming when the public will be paying $5 and $6 a seat to see movie films just as does now for metropolitan grand opera.

"Some people are doing it now," he declares. "They pay $2 to speculators in New York for good seats in my new $2 film."

And that film itself shows the trend. Until it was produced, the public and the profession supposed that 50 cents was the most anybody would ever pay to see a movie show. But patrons were quick to see that it was purely a question of paying for value.

They had been willing at first to pay five cents to see a picture that cost $500 to produce. Why, then, shouldn't they pay 50 cents—those of them that had the price—to see a picture that cost $50,000?

"And when we can put on a picture that will cost $2,000,000 to produce," says Griffith, "the public will be willing to pay $5 a seat for it."

He expects soon to see the day, too, when producers will be willing to spend so vast a sum on one picture drama. A few years ago it was considered rashly extravagant to spend $500 on a film. The jump to $2,000,000 now is less difficult than was the jump from $500 to $50,000.

The movies will grow, he prophesies, until they include everything of an instructive or entertaining nature that is objective—capable of being seen. They will rob the "legitimate stage" of its melodrama, leaving for the regular actors of the regular theatre only "the intimate, quiet plays that can be staged in one or two settings within four walls, and in which the setting is unimportant, while the drama will be largely subjective.

"The audiences for these old-fashioned theatres will be drawn from old-fashioned people who remember the days of old, and how plays were produced by Belasco and Frohman 'when I was a boy.'

The new generation will be wedded to the movies. You won't be able to satisfy them with anything else."

It's a startling and revolutionary prophecy. Seeing whether it comes true or not is one of the many things worth living for. And even those who lament the probable truth of it needn't put on such doleful faces. We may be sure that if the new drama wins over the old, and wins for keeps, it will be because it is superior, satisfying mankind's dramamtic demands more fully than any other drama has ever done.

Evolution works forward in art as in other things. In spite of Solomon's doleful croak, there are "new things under the sun," and most of them are better than the old.

PORTSMOUTH

APR 4 - 1915

TWO DOLLAR MOVIE DRAWS BIG HOUSE

D. W. Griffith's astonishing production, "The Birth of a Nation," has proven the sensation of years in New York theatricals. When it was announced that a motion picture production was to be given at the popular two dollar scale of prices at the Liberty theatre, skeptics predicted instant failure for so daring an innovation. There has not been a dark or vacant seat in the house since the opening performance, and such tremendous crowds have been turned away at every presentation that another theatre could have been filled. Interest has been manifested in the production that such flattering comment has been devoted to it, and signs point to it making a record which will mark an epoch in Metropolitan stage history. "The Nation" is talked

The New York Press THE STAGE
PART IV. SUNDAY, APRIL 4, 1915.

Tired Business Man Wishes Joffre Could See "Birth of a Nation" Film

It Would Do European Generals' Hearts Good to See How the Movie Actors Carry a Trench or Storm Breastworks.

ADDS TO LIST OF BEST KNOWN MEN

BY A TIRED BUSINESS MAN.

The March Through the Shenandoah Valley as Shown in "The Birth of a Nation."

IT had been a long time since I had seen moving pictures. I think the last ones were those of the war between the Japs and the Russians, and the pictures plainly showed the Japs, each with a battle flag or two, chasing the Russians from crag to crag. The Russians dashed on and on down the mountain passes of Riverside Park and were lost to view, which meant that the picture machine operator had to stop operating or he would have caught a string of New York Central freight cars on the film.

Naturally I demurred at going to see "The Birth of a Nation," which is being shown at the Liberty Theatre every time there is an afternoon and evening. Not only was I haunted by the horrors of the Russ-Jap war, which was brought home to me so close as Eleventh avenue, but having been engaged in legitimate criticism for several weeks, I feared for the effect of such a wholly artificial production on my temperament, which I have been training to become highly artistic.

Weapons of Revolution.

"You ought to go," said Baltasar Meneses, who is the president of the Twentieth Century Culture and Uplift Club and is interested in such matters. "It would be a revelation to you."

[illegible] revolution is a [illegible] verite way of entertaining a Northern visitor was to take him out to the cotton fields and show him how it grew and was picked. Of course they also [illegible] and looked at the pictures in the album, but the visitor had to see the cotton grow. Thanks to science, which hasn't made the talkie-movies prevalent just yet, I couldn't hear the said hands sing "Old Black Joe," but I'll bet Mr. Griffith had them singing it when the pictures were taken, on the right atmosphere.

Films Cause the War.

[illegible] Southern visitors, after [illegible] would be shown with plenty of Abolitionists, Ku-Klux Klansmen, crowds and mobs.

"The Reconstruction Period," he explained, "was the time when the North sent down a lot of experts to put the South in shape again after the war."

"Expert whats?" I inquired.

"Well," he said, "men who pretended that they knew how to do it; how to fix up everything that the South had been [illegible] and put the whole country on its feet."

"What did they call these men?" I inquired.

"Carpet-baggers," said the doorman.

[illegible] had not [illegible]

Soldiers in the Trenches in "The Birth of a Nation" Film.

Klan Has No Terrors.

"You'd better wait and see the Ku-Klux Klan," said the doorman. "The pictures of them are simply wonderful."

But, being a business man, the terrific Ku-Klux could be nothing to me but comedy. When you have stood up year after year and paid a house tax, a personal property tax, a school tax, a dog tax, an automobile tax, a State stock tax, a Government corporation tax, an income tax and a tax on beds, there is nothing left in the world to scare you with except a visitation from the Ku-Klux Klan. The Ku-Klux only have been great, great, but at last they have met their match in the tax gatherers.

IPPING FROM

LOS ANGELES (Cal.) EXAMINER

APRIL 4, 1915

Sensational Run of Clansman Scene to End

The Clansman, entering on Monday afternoon upon its last week at Clune's Auditorium theater, is the sensation of the country at large. In New York it is as popular as in Los Angeles, and the Liberty theater there is not nearly large enough to accommodate the great crowds that seek admission. And this is not surprising, for while there have been motion picture productions which have appealed to the eye, never before has there been one that demonstrates so forcefully the statement that to the screen all things are possible. As a spectacle, as a thrilling historical document and as an appeal to the lovers of beauty in pictures, moving or otherwise, The Clansman stands unequalled. Others have been exciting. Others have been beautiful. But none have combined the elements of the photodramatic art as it does.

STAATSZEITUNG

s: New York City.

APR 4 1915

Wandelbilder.

D. W. Griffith's sensationell grossartige Wandelbilderserie "The Birth of a Nation", nach Thomas Dixon's berühmter Erzählung "The Clansman", ist die Roiofal-Attraktion zweimal täglich, mit einem Symphonie-Orchester von 40 Mann, im Liberty Theater zu sehen. 18,000 Personen und 3000 Pferde sind in dieser glänzenden Serie zu sehen.

HERALD

Washington, D. C.

APR 4 1915

"The Birth of a Nation" continues at the Liberty Theater, New York. It is a pictorial version of Thomas Dixon's novel, "The Clansman," and was made by D. W. Griffith.

LIPPING FROM APR 4 1915

PHILADELPHIA (Pa.) INQUIRER.

The Film Drama

OPERA HOUSE—Beginning tomorrow afternoon, D. W. Griffith's startling motion picture, "The Avenging Conscience," will be presented. This film drama was suggested by Edgar Allen Poe's famous story of "The Tell-tale Heart" and by his poem of "Annabel Lee," and it is said to provide the biggest thrill that has ever been accomplished in a theatre. The photoplay was produced by D. W. Griffith, who is the recognized master of dramatic and photographic effects in the motion picture world. He has made "The Avenging Conscience" the most powerful and intensely dramatic photoplay ever seen. He has skilfully blended a mixture of mystery, horror and romance. Poe was weird and tragic, and the photoplay likewise embodies these characteristics. Mr. Griffith's latest production, "The Birth of a Nation," now playing at the Liberty Theatre, New York, is the biggest success in the history of motion pictures, and marks the first time that a motion picture production has charged $2 a seat.

PHILADELPHIA (Pa.) INQUIRER

APR 4 - 1915

AVENGING CONSCIENCE BASED ON POE

What might have been called the bringing of Edgar Allan Poe's story of the murder of a helpless old man by an overwrought and presumably sane young man into a motion picture has been avoided by the adaptation of D. W. Griffith. In "The Avenging Conscience," to be seen at the Chestnut Street Opera House, Griffith, utilizing the story of Poe's "The Tell-Tale Heart," and the author's poem "Annabel Lee," has discovered a method that is equally effective in providing thrills and in stirring to great excitement, but resolves itself into a thing of beauty and of many visual delights.

Fancy has almost run riot as the film nears the close and the succession of beautiful effects obtained by superior photography approach the ideal in motion picture art. To realize the processes that are involved and the turn that is given the Poe story would be futile and would rob the only one of some of the pleasure of surprise. It might be said that Griffith's "The Avenging Conscience" is of the same standing as his more elaborate and longer production, "The Birth of a Nation," now causing a sensation in New York by attracting crowds and seat charges reaching two dollars.

In "The Tell-Tale Heart," the murderer is brought to a confession of his crime by reason of the beating of the dead man's heart heard distinctly by the youth as his disordered mind makes effort to deceive the inquisitorial officers of the law. Poe, in his story, relates this incident in a most absorbing way.

JOURNAL

MERIDEN, CONN.

MAR 8 1 1915

FIVE DOLLAR MOVIES.

Most folks thought that the limit had been reached when "The Birth of a Nation" was produced as a film and presented at the Liberty theatre as a $2 show but if the Wolf Film plan goes through New Yorkers will have the unique experience of having a $5 motion picture show at the Metropolitan opera house. It seems that the promoters of the plan are quite serious in their scheme and it also seems likely that the directors of the opera house will agree to the plan for they wish to build a newer and better opera home further up town.

Of course the movie promoters are planning more than just pictures, what they are going to have, if the arrangement goes through, the finest feature films that have ever been made. There will also be a grand orchestra led by Hertz or Toscamni and there will be grand opera soloists. There will be no chorus.

This is interesting as it will show whether or not the motion picture limit has been reached. It was thought not long ago that once the prices were raised from the five and ten cent admission that the motion pictures would fail. They were raised to twenty-five cents, to fifty, to a dollar and now the big show in the Liberty is playing to crowded houses at $2 performances at $2.

Will New York pay $5 for the movies? That is the gamble that the promoters are going to make.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the Year

JOURNAL

COLUMBUS, O.

APR 4 1915

A Prophecy.

David W. Griffith, the producer of the picture, "The Birth of a Nation," which people are paying $2 to see at the Liberty Theater, New York, says:

"In time I believe moving pictures will replace all plays. On the stage one can get only the great moments, the high lights. On the screen we see the gradual development, the little things that crystallize into the big issues.

"And the modern historian has to have a camera. It is the instrument with which history is beginning to be written. In time it will be used exclusively in place of typewriters.

"We may not live to see it, but one of these days each house will have pillars that open as receptacles of films. When one wants to refresh one's mind about a historical incident, there won't be anybody trekking to an encyclopedia to read what happened on such and such an occasion; instead, some one will rise and turn on the screen, and a story that needs no words will be flashed before the crowd.

"By then, I assure you, the motion picture's operation will be as familiar to everybody as putting another record on a phonograph is today."

TIMES-PICAYUNE

ss: New Orleans, La.

Apr. 4/1915

When the "movies" first began to impress themselves upon the amusement loving American public, it was customary to plank down the minimum five cents to witness the screen dramas. This was gently raised to ten cents, and later the maximum was reached when a film production was presented at twenty-five cents a head. The limit has been reached at the Liberty Theater, where "The Birth of a Nation" is crowding the house at every showing. Prices ranging from twenty-five cents to two dollars, are the rule.

And they—the critics—say that it is "worth the money." This production is reputed to have cost $500,000 in the making. An army of 18,000 people is shown, along with 3000 horses. Tickets are being sold four weeks in advance, and ticket speculators—the bane of New York theatricals—are said to be reaping a harvest. The film has to with a number of epochal events in the history of the United States, and the various characters and scenes are shown with painstaking accuracy.

LOS ANGELES (Cal.) EXAMINER

APRIL 4, 1915

Moving Pictures

CLUNE'S AUDITORIUM—"The Clansman," entering tomorrow afternoon upon its last week at Clune's Auditorium Theater, is the sensation of the nation. In New York it is as popular as in Los Angeles, and the Liberty Theater there is not nearly large enough to accommodate the great crowds that seek admission. And this is not surprising for, while there have been motion picture productions which have appealed to the eye, never before has there been one that demonstrates so forcefully the statement that to the screen all things are possible. As a spectacle, as a thrilling historical document, and as an appeal to the lover of beauty in pictures, moving or otherwise, "The Clansman" stands unequaled. In every way, from the finest detail in the picture to the finishing touch of its presentation, "The Clansman" is a pronounced success.

SAN FRANCISCO (Cal.) CALL POST

APRIL 2, 1915

'CLANSMAN' FILM CROWDS ALCAZAR

The film portrayal of Thomas Dixon's famous novel, "The Clansman," which has surprised and pleased the entire continent, continues to be shown at the Alcazar Theater until next Thursday.

With Miriam Cooper, the dark eyed beauty of the "movies," playing the leading role of Margaret Cameron, the Southern girl, the play has proved one of the most popular yet presented to Alcazar audiences.

Capacity houses witness each performance.

Kan Castle, some days Ku-Klux, some days Luther Burbank. Years ago, when I was younger and lived in Brooklyn, they thought Jack McAuliffe was the best known man in the world. Over in Switzerland, they tell me, the elections are so frequent and the population so small that every citizen dies of a broken heart unless some time or other he becomes president. I guess the world is like that and that every Dye citizen, whether it be Rae Tanner or Will Brydn, can be the best known citizen of his city. When anybody wants to be the part of any certain day Tom Edison acts as that required the most study and ar- [illegible] as if they were [illegible] that I wish [illegible] that was why I [illegible] I would have wanted to chase them very far. What is one State more or less, unless its bank clearings happen to be very big?

Next came the war, with all the Southern cavaliers hopping into their nice gray uniforms and galloping off with bluejaws of handsome Northern girls in their inside pockets. There had to be battles, of course, and the [illegible] as he saw it. Griffith [illegible] Southern [illegible] I'd [illegible] Southern [illegible] Northern [illegible] Southern [illegible] Northern [illegible] Southern [illegible] Northern

"The Birth of a Nation"

UNQUESTIONABLY the biggest thing in moving pictures produced so far by American brains is D. W. Griffith's new screen drama, "The Birth of a Nation," now drawing capacity houses at the Liberty Theatre, with a maximum price of two dollars for the best seats. While not surpassing, in artistic merit, the great Italian film "Cabiria," the Griffith photo play is certainly a remarkable achievement of the camera, and of special interest to Americans depicting as it does some of the most vital chapters in their national history. The fact that it is based upon Thomas Dixon's story, "The Clansman," a book bitterly uncompromising in its attitude to the colored question tends to weaken rather than strengthen it as delectable public entertainment. What good end is accomplished by stirring up all the racial bitterness and rehashing all the blunders that marked the Reconstruction period is not readily explained. With this one criticism, however, "The Birth of a Nation" compels the highest praise. It stands on its own merit if only by the sheer beauty of its marvellous pictures.

Bangs
D. W. GRIFFITH

It is impossible to describe all the scenes. Those showing battles are on a scale never before attempted.

From a hilltop, we see thousands of armed men fighting in the valley below. We see Sherman and his veterans on their historic march to the sea, we see the blue and the grey repelling desperate assaults in their respective trenches, and we see General Lee, strangely life-like, signing the treaty of surrender in the court house and shaking hands with the equally life-like Grant. We are present with Lincoln at the fatal performance of "Our American Cousin" at Ford's Theatre. We witness Booth shooting the President and the tumult that followed.

Made at Los Angeles, this film play is 1,385 feet in length. It cost twenty months of preparation. It required the services of 18,000 persons and its cost was a half a million dollars.

"I believe the motion pictures of the future," said Mr. Griffith to a THEATRE MAGAZINE representative, "will deal with big themes and have an epic quality. They will cost, in the making, a million dollars, and people will be glad to pay five dollars for a seat to witness them. They will become what they are destined to be, paintings in drama. They will have the dignity of grand opera and command the respect that grand opera does. It is because I have that vision of them that I produced the largest motion picture yet made."

Repelling desperate assaults in the trenches

The lean, tall, youthful looking man across the table ceased his long, slow puffs at a cigar and smiled. He had been asked to put the toil of twenty months into the space of a nutshell. It is characteristic of David W. Griffith that he tried. His experiences are well worth the telling.

"The Clansman" was submitted to me and I read it. The story was the first step. I kept it in mind while directing other pictures. It was forming in my mind for a year. I wrote it it now and then, but the actual labor of writing it was done in a month. The next step was to select my cast. That required three months. My principal difficulty was in finding a leading man. I reviewed in my mind at least two hundred men. I made a survey of all the leading men on the stage. My choice fell upon Henry Walthorne. The South, I know, is full of big men. But while Walthorne is a small man he had, otherwise, the appearance, and an heroic soul that would comprehend big issues. I called him 'The Little Colonel' to fit his stature. Lincoln was more difficult. I tried possibilities of Lincoln for three months, until I found the right man. It was the same with Sumner and Stanton, and Lee and Grant. The women were not so hard to find. One of them worked in pictures a year, playing unimportant parts and receiving little attention, because I was holding her for that part. And so of the other two leading women.

"The army of supernumeraries I secured through the large floating population of California. The motion picture business is so tremendous in Los Angeles that six thousand persons are constantly employed in the studios in the capacity of supernumeraries. We had to import from San Francisco recruits from the unemployed.

"The three thousand horses were the hardest to [illegible] It took a month. The State of California and adjourning States [illegible] secured for them.

"There is grave danger in handling horses. Once they get going in a dash like that of the Ku Klux Clan they will go a mile without stopping. While we were directing that dash the automobile in which we [illegible] taking the [illegible] was overturned by them. Fortunately no one was hurt. But there was always that chance.

Ford's Theatre the night Lincoln was shot

"The actual taking of pictures consumed eight months. We travelled far and performed dangerous feats."

ARRIVAL OF A NEW STAGE IN THE ART OF THE MOVIES

AS a picture-play "The Birth of a Nation" impresses the Reverend Dr. Thomas B. Gregory, writing in the N. Y. American, sufficiently to make him affirm that it is by all odds the greatest thing that has ever come to New York. In this masterpiece of motion-picture production, he says, we may see something of the possibilities of the art as an educator of the human race through the most royal of the senses, the eye. The historical drama called "The Birth of a Nation," presented through the medium of moving pictures in the Liberty Theater (New York) just eight years after Thomas Dixon's dramatic arrangement of his novel, "The Clansman," from which this new piece was made, was acted on the same stage for the first time.

To create this wonderful spectacle of "The Birth of a Nation," Mr. D. W. Griffith, the producer, employed the services of eighteen thousand men and women, and over three thousand horses. Miles of film were used to catch every detail. Cities were built and scenes of historical interest were reproduced in every particular. Battlefields were again laid out and registered upon the camera. Mr. Griffith and his forces were eight months making the pictures. They traveled over the sections in which the story is located, and reproduced the scenes with rigid fidelity. Thousands of works of historical and official value were carefully read to get all the full and exact particulars. It is no wonder, notes Dr. Gregory, in the light of these facts, that the making of the great picture involved the expenditure of more than $150,000.

The scenes represent the welding of a loose union of sovereign states into a real nation in the Titanic forge of the Civil War. They cover scenes North and South preceding the war (life in the South on a cotton plantation and anti-slavery meetings in the North), lurid battle-scenes of the war itself, and the throes of the reconstruction period. To quote further from Dr. Gregory:

"The trench fighting before Petersburg is also represented by a series of pictures that are simply amazing in their production of warfare as we know it in books and war pictures. No photographs that have come from Europe of the present war can compare for thrilling horror and sobering effect with these Mr. Griffiths 'composed' and which were 'fought' under his direction with that of the military officers who helped him with their technical knowledge.

THE MAN WHO STAGED A PLAY WITH 18,000 CHARACTERS IN IT

D. W. Griffith, producer of "The Birth of a Nation."

"The assassination of President Lincoln, which brings the first part to a close, also shows some extraordinary pictures of the interior of Ford's Theater with Our American Cousin being acted, the movements of the actors on the stage, the throng comprising the audience suggesting nothing but the great tragedy itself, with never a blur of artificiality anywhere in the pictures.

"The second part, with Reconstruction scenes and the machinations of Austin Stoneman and his mulatto satellite, Silas Lynch; the riding of the Ku Klux Klan and the saving of both the Cameron and Elsie Stoneman by this organization, is equally remarkable for its effectiveness as pictures and as dramatic representations of the course of the story. The assembling of the masked riders and their riding through the country and into the town of Piedmont had the spectators of the play on their tiptoes with excitement; and no melodramatic trooper riding in with the reprieve at the last moment ever received heartier applause than did these pictured riders as they rescued the Cameron and Elsie Stoneman just in the nick of time."

That the story as told by the pictures is true the Reverend Doctor Gregory is ready to swear on the Bible, the Koran, the Zend and all the other "Holy Scriptures" put together. He knows it is true because he lived through the actual realities themselves. He saw the real carpet-bagger, the real "New Voters," the real reconstruction "Statesmen," the real Ku Klux Klanners. He is prepared to say that not one of the more than five thousand pictures that go to make up the wonderful drama is in any material way an exaggeration. They are one and all faithful to historic fact, he says, so that, looking upon them, you may feel that you are beholding that which actually happened.

SAN FRANCISCO (Cal.) CHRONICLE
APRIL 5, 1915

Long Run of "Clansman" Continues at Alcazar

"The Clansman," D. W. Griffith's spectacular film drama, in two reels, will be continued at the Alcazar Theater during the coming week up to Thursday. This motion picture production has already had a run of five weeks, and the management of the Alcazar has succeeded in arranging that "The Clansman" shall be continued until Thursday night.

LOS ANGELES, CAL.
APR 1 - 1915

From accounts of returned visitors to New York, Mr. Griffith's "Birth of a Nation" photo-drama is the most important production there in the way of popularity.

It has been doing capacity business ever since it opened. It is said that the only sure way of getting good seats is to buy from speculators, who have their prices at $3 and $4 a ticket.

New York Globe
Apr. 5, 1915

"The Birth of a Nation" [illegible] sixth week of capacity business at the Liberty.

Brooklyn, (N. Y.) Standard-Union
APR 5 - 1915

[illegible] ing to big audiences in the Manhattan.

CLIPPING FROM
BIRMINGHAM (Ala.) AGE-HERALD
APRIL 4, 1915

GOSSIP OF THE Movies

BY PETTERSEN MARZONI

JUST a few weeks ago a sensation was created when seats to a motion picture sold as high as $2. Now the man who produced the big feature at such exhibition prices, D. W. Griffith, is prophesying the time when seats for features will bring prices as high as $5 and $6 per seat.

"The ticket speculators are getting that much now," Mr. Griffith is quoted in a recent interview in The New York Times.

He went on to explain that he was laughed at when he set $2 as the price for his "Birth of a Nation." Now seats are sold out for the big picture several weeks in advance, and the speculators hold the few seats they control at high prices and are getting them, according to reports.

Mr. Griffith was talking about the super-productions, not the present features released on programs. He has always been called a dreamer, until he has made his dreams realities, and now he is dreaming again. This time he envisions a picture costing as much as $2,000,000. His "Birth of a Nation" cost $500,000, and he is talking of spending four times that much.

What he will do with that much money, only D. W. Griffith knows. W. A. Brady characterized him as the man who could spend more money than anyone else, without giving him credit for achievements no other man has equalled. Practically all of the really big things in motion pictures have been evolved by him, and what he will do in the future is awaited with interest.

The pictures at $5 and $6 may or may not come, but bigger things are bound to appear in an industry that is only ten years old. One does not have to wait for superfilms to learn that. The big companies are turning out films every day that show improvement over those that have gone before. Let the high-priced features come. They will appear at long intervals, and the regular pictures will benefit by the new discoveries shown in the big productions.

"The Clansman" has taken New York by storm. It seems that New York cannot equal the record made at Chase's Auditorium where "The Clansman" is now playing its seventh week. So far over 210,000 people have seen "The Clansman." True in every detail, illustrating conditions existing at that time better than has ever been done before, this picture is making history in dramatic world.

CLIPPING FROM
Date

[illegible] wonderful the spectacle, [illegible] infinite pathos and tragedy.

Many Offers for Pictures

More than two thousand offers for purchase playing rights to "The Birth of a Nation" have been received consequent on the showing of D. W. Griffith's masterpiece drama at the Liberty Theatre, New York. Although as yet [illegible] ject, the demand is [illegible] ent from abroad than here. [illegible] firms in Great Britain, [illegible] tugal, Italy, [illegible] via, the Balkans, South Africa, Australia, India, China and Japan [illegible] the wires hot and busy. All told, the bidders for the [illegible] represent a daily [illegible] 900,000 motion picture "fans."

Telegraph
APR 6 1915

At the Liberty Theatre.

D. W. Griffith's marvelous spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," continues the sensation of the season at the Liberty Theatre. It has entered in upon its sixth week.

Even Holy Week, just passed, usually the worst period in a theatrical season, was no exception to the rule of crowded houses.

SAN FRANCISCO (Cal.) CHRONICLE
MARCH 29, 1915

[illegible] have gone to the Alcazar [illegible] D. W. Griffith's film production, "The Clansman," but none [illegible] a strong mood-[illegible] stirring story [illegible] motion pictures [illegible] its battle [illegible] music [illegible] Dixon's novel [illegible] and in [illegible] it may be [illegible] other [illegible] of [illegible] interest [illegible] the picture is making history [illegible] dramatic world.

Stoneman re[illegible] involved [illegible]

Examiner
Los Angeles Cal
Date 3-25-15

[illegible]om EVENING TELEGRAM
[illegible]ddress: Philadelphia, Pa.
[illegible]te APR 3 [illegible]

At the Opera House, beginning Monday afternoon, D. W. Griffith's motion picture, "The Avenging Conscience," will be presented. This film drama was suggested by Edgar Allen Poe's story of "The Tellitale Heart," and by his poem, "Annabel Lee," and it is said to provide the biggest thrill that has ever been accomplished in a motion picture theatre. The photoplay was produced by D. W. Griffith, who is a recognized master of dramatic and photographic effects in the motion picture world. He has made "The Avenging Conscience," it is alleged, the most powerful and intensely dramatic photoplay ever seen, and has skilfully blended a mixture of mystery, horror and romance. Poe's genius was weird and tragic, and the photoplay is designed to embody these characteristics. Mr. Griffith's latest production, "The Birth of a Nation," now playing in New York, marks the first time that a motion picture production has charged $2 a seat. Performance will begin at 3 and 9 P. M., and will be preceded by a comedy till beginning at 1.30 and 7.30 P. M.

Stockton, Cal.

APR 9 1915

"THE CLANSMAN" AT THE YOSEMITE

"The Clansman," or "The Birth of a Nation," which will be the Yosemite Saturday matinee and night photo drama throws into direct view of the eye events which are stupendously great. Mr. Griffith mingles with his heroic story a powerfully simple love tale that is concerned with all the throbbing events of the Civil war period of our history.

Nothing like this drama could be shown on the speaking stage; nothing like it has ever been approached on the photo-drama stage. It is overwhelming in its power, delightful in its beauty of lyric incisiveness and cohesive with the maximum of educative enlightenment.

The matinee will be at 2:30 with the night exhibition at 8:30. Popular prices of 25 and 50 cents will prevail with a special matinee price of 10 cents for school children.

---

om LEADER

Address: Cleveland, Ohio

te APR 5 1915

The World Film Company has announced that it is willing to spend $250,000 on a motion picture if it is possible to lease the Metropolitan Opera House in New York to show it. Grand opera soloists and orchestra would be introduced and box office prices may scale up to $5. "The Birth of a Nation" film will soon be exhibited in Chicago at $2 top price.

New York Telegram Apr 2, 1915

Cincinnati, Ohio

APR 10 1915

The influence of the fine exploitation of D. W. Griffith's Birth of a Nation is to be observed now at every turn, thus proving that a new type of showman is in evidence. Business at the Liberty Theater has varied little since the opening, the gross exceeding $12,000 a week. On Saturdays and Sundays enough people are turned away to fill the house over again at matinees as well as nights.

D. W. Griffith's gigantic spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," continues to crowded houses at the Liberty Theatre.

New York Press Apr 6, 1915

There is no decrease in attendance at the Liberty Theatre, where "The Birth of a Nation" is now in its [illegible] week in a film [illegible]

National News Service Apr. 3, 1915

TENSBORO (Ky.) MESSENGER

APRIL 2, 1915

FIVE-DOLLAR MOVIES.

D. W. Griffith, the wizard of moving pictures, has the audacity to say that the public will soon be paying $5 and $6 a seat to see movie films, just as it does now for metropolitan grand opera.

"Some people are doing it now," he declares. "They pay it to speculators in New York for good seats for my new $2 film."

And that film itself shows the trend. Until it was produced, the public and the profession supposed that 50 cents was the most anybody would ever pay to see a movie show. But patrons were quick to see that it was purely a question of paying for value.

They had been willing at first to pay five cents to see a picture that cost $500 to produce. Why, then, shouldn't they pay 50 cents—those of them that had the price—to see a picture that cost $50,000?

"And when we can put on a picture that will cost $2,000,000 to produce," says Griffith, "the public will be willing to pay $5 a seat for it."

He expects soon to see the day, too, when producers will be willing to spend so vast a sum on one picture drama. A few years ago it was considered rashly extravagant to spend $500 on a film. The jump to $2,000,000 now is less difficult than was the jump from $500 to $50,000.

The movies will grow, he prophesies, until they include everything of an instructive or entertaining nature that is objective—capable of being seen. They will rob the "legitimate stage" of its melodrama, leaving for the regular actors of the regular theater only "the intimate, quiet plays that can be staged in one or two settings within four walls, and in which the setting is unimportant, while the drama will be largely subjective.

"These audiences for these old-fashioned theaters will be drawn from old-fashioned people who remember the days of old, and how plays were produced by Belasco and Frohman 'when I was a boy.'

"The new generation will be wedded to the movies. You won't be able to satisfy them with anything else."

It's a startling and revolutionary prophecy. Seeing whether it comes true or not is one of the many things worth living for. And even those who lament the probable truth of it needn't put on such doleful faces. We may be sure that if the new drama wins over the old, and wins for keeps, it will be because it is superior, filling mankind's dramatic demands more fully than any other drama has ever done.

Evolution works forward in art as in other things. In spite of Solomon's doleful croak, there are "new things under the sun," and most of them are better than the old.

REPUBLICAN

Gloversville, N. Y.

APR 1 - 1915

FIVE-DOLLAR MOVIES.

D. W. Griffith, the wizard of moving pictures, has the audacity to say that the public will soon be paying $5 and $6 a seat to see movie films, just as it does now for metropolitan grand opera.

"Some people are doing it now," he declares. "They pay it to speculators in New York for good seats for my new $2 film."

And that film itself shows the trend. Until it was produced, the public and the profession supposed that 50 cents was the most anybody would ever pay to see a movie show. But patrons were quick to see that it was purely a question of paying for value.

They had been willing at first to see a picture that cost $500 to produce. Why, then, shouldn't they pay 50 cents—those of them that had the price—to see a picture that cost $50,000?

"And when we can put on a picture that will cost $2,000,000 to produce," says Griffith, "the public will be willing to pay $5 a seat for it."

He expects soon to see the day, too, when producers will be willing to spend so vast a sum on one picture drama. A few years ago it was considered rashly extravagant to spend $500 on a film. The jump to $2,000,000 now is less difficult than was the jump from $500 to $50,000.

The movies will grow, he prophesies, until they include everything of an instructive or entertaining nature that is objective—capable of being seen. They will rob the "legitimate stage" of its melodrama, leaving for the regular actors of the regular theater only "the intimate, quiet plays that can be staged in one or two settings within four walls, and in which the setting is unimportant, while the drama will be largely subjective.

"The audiences for these old-fashioned theaters will be drawn from old-fashioned people who remember the days of old, and how plays were produced by Belasco and Frohman 'when I was a boy.'

The new generation will be wedded to the movies. You won't be able to satisfy them with anything else."

It's a startling and revolutionary prophecy. Seeing whether it comes true or not is one of the many things worth living for. And even those who lament the probable truth of it needn't put on such doleful faces. We may be sure that if the new drama wins over the old, and wins for keeps, it will be because it is superior, filling mankind's dramatic demands more fully than any other drama has ever done.

Evolution works forward in art as in other things. In spite of Solomon's doleful croak, there are "new things under the sun," and most of them are better than the old.

From CHRONICLE

Address AUGUSTA, GA

Date APR 2 1915

Five-Dollar Movies.

D. W. Griffith, the wizard of moving pictures, has the audacity to say that the public will soon be paying $5 and $6 a seat to see movie films, just as it does now for metropolitan grand opera.

"Some people are doing it now," he declares. "They pay it to speculators in New York for good seats for my new $2 film."

And that film itself shows the trend. Until it was produced, the public and the profession supposed that 50 cents was the most anybody would ever pay to see a movie show. But patrons were quick to see that it was purely a question of paying for value.

They had been willing at first to pay five cents to see a picture that cost $500 to produce. Why, then, shouldn't they pay 50 cents—those of them that had the price—to see a picture that cost $50,000?

"And when we can put on a picture that will cost $2,000,000 to produce," says Griffith, "the public will be willing to pay $5 a seat for it."

He expects soon to see the day, too, when producers will be willing to spend so vast a sum on one picture drama. A few years ago it was considered extravagant to spend $500 on a film. The jump to $2,000,000 now is less difficult than was the jump from $500 to $50,000.

The movies will grow, he prophesies, until they include everything of an instructive or entertaining nature that is objective—capable of being seen. They will rob the "legitimate stage" of its melodrama, leaving for the regular actors of the regular theater only "the intimate, quiet plays that can be staged in one or two settings within four walls, and in which the setting is unimportant, while the drama will be largely subjective.

"The audience for these old-fashioned theaters will be drawn from old-fashioned people who remember the days of old, and how plays were produced by Belasco and Frohman 'when I was a boy.'

"The new generation will be wedded to the movies. You won't be able to satisfy them with anything else."

It's a startling and revolutionary prophecy. Seeing whether it comes true or not is one of the many things worth living for. And even those who lament the probable truth of it needn't put on such doleful faces. We may be sure that if the new drama wins over the old, and wins for keeps, it will be because it is superior, filling mankind's dramatic demands more fully than any other drama has ever done.

Evolution works forward in art as in other things. In spite of Solomon's doleful croak, there are "new things under the sun," and most of them are better than the old.

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

All New York is obsessed by the craze for the Griffith drama, which as presented in "The Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty Theatre discloses a new art. The entertainment combines 12,000 feet of film, with magnificent symphonic and vocal music and many novel mechanical effects, the whole constituting an "eye-and-ear" picture of the high peaks of American history, with special reference to the Civil War and Reconstruction periods. The public seems to have waked to the fact that a big motion picture of this new sort offers far more that is worth while than the average "indoor" $2 drama. The Liberty is packed twice a day, including Sundays, and literally thousands of would-be patrons are turned away. Two points stand out in Director Griffith's extraordinary achievement. He has succeeded in making the pictured history plausible, dignified and interesting, using all the resources of outdoor photography in battle scenes of wonderful vividness and realism. He has likewise imparted an emotional "punch" to the pictures. His photoplay screen is justly compared to a "harp of a thousand strings." No chord of sentiment or feeling is left untouched. The beautiful love story running through the play is derived from Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," but the scenario and the working-out are Griffith's own.

M. F. A.

EVENING NEWS

ss: Baltimore, Md.

MAY 2 - 1915

MARY ALDEN POPULAR

As Soon As She Finishes With One Part She Gets Another.

Mary Alden is in more demand at the Griffith-Mutual studios in Los Angeles than any other woman portrayer of character parts. No sooner was she finished with the part of the mulatto, employed by Stoneman as a housekeeper in D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation," than four directors producing feature pictures asked for her services. For the last six months she has not had a day to herself. Some of her more recent performances have been with Robert Edeson in "Man's Prerogative," and as the mother in Russell E. Smith's "Tee Nun." Later she appeared, first as the young girl, and then as the aged woman with John Emerson in Ibsen's [illegible]

SALT LAKE CITY (U.) TRIBUNE
APRIL

$500,000 SPENT TO PRODUCE BIG RACE PROBLEM MOVIE FILM

Delving into history, unearthing pictures of places known to all students of great American events, determining such infinitesimal problems as whether General Lee rode a white horse or a black one, and overcoming the difficulty of directing great crowds of people in directing great crowds of people in mammoth battle scenes, David W. Griffith, producer of "The Clansman" motion picture film, after many [illegible] incessant labor, has given to the world a picture which is a valuable aid to the student, a splendid visualization of a page out of the book of American facts.

Three former West Point men assisted in untangling the military tactics necessary to the enacting of the big war scenes. A whole town was built in order to have the correct setting for staging the Southern scenes.

And then there was the great difficulty of finding a man to play the role of Abraham Lincoln. Six different players assumed the part before one exactly suited could be found.

Six months were consumed in working out the picture and $500,000 spent. But the showing of the film, already, has broken all records.

David W. Griffith, producer of "The Clansman," a movie drama.

CLIPPING FROM Chronicle
LOS ANGELES (Cal.) TIMES
APRIL 25, 1915

WILLIAM SHAW IN THE CLANSMAN COLISEUM AUDITORIUM

LOS ANGELES (Cal.) EXAMINER
APRIL 25, 1915

CLANSMAN AUDITORIUM.—D. W. Griffith's monstrous picture production, "The Clansman," will open for a week week at Coliseum Auditorium Theater tomorrow afternoon. Based on the famous novel by Thomas Dixon, Jr., the film deals more broadly on its historical side, with the life of the American nation than does the play or book. "The Clansman" represents the very acme of art and realism in motion pictures. It includes the most spectacular battle scenes ever staged, showing thousands of soldiers in action, including infantry, artillery and cavalry. In "The Clansman" explosive shells are used for the first time in the history of motion pictures. These shells are hurled from the same huge mortars that were used by the federal troops during the American Civil War. Each shell cost $50, and more than 500 were used in the battle. The night battle scenes represent the greatest feat in photography in the history of motion pictures. The burning of the entire city of Atlanta at night is graphically shown in the picture. The famous raids of the Ku Klux Klan with thousands of these white-hooded raiders in action are shown. Lee's surrender to Grant and Sherman's historical march from Atlanta to the sea are also graphically depicted. The assassination of President Lincoln by Wilkes Booth is one of the principal features. Historically and technically, "The Clansman" is perfect. A well-known professor of history in one of the California colleges worked three months in securing historical data for this remarkable picture.

March 13, 1915. MOTION PICTURE NEWS 49

SCENES FROM "THE BIRTH OF A NATION," ITS PRODUCER AND THE CO-STARS OF THE BIG PRODUCTION

ALLEGORICAL GROUP DEPICTING THE WARS OF THE AGES

INSERT ABOVE: HENRY B. WALTHALL

THE KU KLUX KLAN

D. W. GRIFFITH

LINCOLN RECEIVING VISITORS

ONE OF THE STIRRING BATTLE SCENES OF THE CIVIL WAR REPRODUCED ON THE SCREEN

INSERT ABOVE: MAE MARSH

ABOVE: PANORAMA OF ONE OF THE BATTLEFIELDS

GRIFFITH'S "BIRTH OF A NATION" IS A MASTERPIECE

AND the greatest of these is D. W. Griffith, whose magnum opus, "The Birth of a Nation," was shown to specially assembled spectators at the Liberty theatre, New York City, on Monday, March 1, two days before its public presentation in the same theatre.

As a spectacle D'Annunzio's "Cabiria" will never be made to appear foolish. Probably the strongest story yet seen on the screen is that of "Judith of Bethulia," taken from the Apocalypse, that part of the Bible which appears between the Old and New Testaments in old versions.

But for a combination of spectacle and story (and emotional appeal follows the latter as the night follows the day), "The Birth of a Nation" has never been approached.

An attempt to criticise "The Birth of a Nation" would be utter folly. The word criticism is odious and is reserved for cub reporters with its implication of superior knowledge. A review of the picture might be attempted. But the proper frame of mind in which to attack the typewriter is the one adduced by seeing the picture and that is appreciation and reverence.

In the reviewer's mind, as he follows scene after scene of this greatest of photo dramas, every one of the whole gamut of screen essentials and possibilities is met and fulfilled. Historically it is magnificent; it is a great, true, artistic photograph of the crisis of a great war. Educationally it takes rank with, and excels in vital ways, our best war records.

True Greatness Is Its Emotional Appeal

In dramatic and photographic technique, it is beyond our present day criticism. These are surpassing accomplishments; but these are not all. The true greatness of this production lies in its emotional appeal, an appeal so forceful that it lifts you out of your seat and thrills you as the speaking stage never did and never can. This is the greatness of the motion picture, at last realized. And did any one of us ever believe it could be done—like this?

Griffith is the present day Homer of the motion picture industry. Remember what Kipling said about Homer?

When Homer smote his blooming lyre
"He made men sing by land and sea
"And what he thought he might require
"He went and took the same as me."

For "The Birth of a Nation" Griffith has taken Thomas Dixon's novel "The Clansman" as a foundation. On this foundation he has builded a structure lists of which [illegible] and possibly suggested [illegible] works of art and [illegible] These are woven together with pictorial motion picture technique into a harmonious whole. [illegible] ninety per cent. Growth and ten per cent other great [illegible]

There are bits which remind one of "Cabiria," such as the silhouette of the Klu Klux Klan crossing the brow of a hill in the moonlight as the camels did in "Cabiria." There is a wonderful man-to-man encounter, mainly speaking, in the fight which overshadows the remarkable fight in "The Spoilers." There is an allegorical [illegible] which reminds one of the famous painting "War," with [illegible] on a great horse [illegible] ruling roughshod over all human bodies. [illegible] whole picture is Griffith's. Griffith is the master [illegible] the screen.

Historical Value of Scenes Is Marked

Too much [illegible] can not be [illegible] of the picture as a spectacle and on the [illegible] scenes of Lee's surrender, [illegible] assassination [illegible] before, or cannot, by photographs or by [illegible] the great gratitude of the Civil War [illegible] graphically [illegible] The Civil War scenes of the [illegible] of the picture, [illegible] Sherman's march to the sea, the burning of Atlanta, the [illegible] Petersburg, and the gathering of the Klu Klux Klan [illegible] half and the small-made [illegible] to save the [illegible] ted whites are spectacles unsurpassed. The stage [illegible] brick walls did never [illegible] them. No [illegible] ever been produced which [illegible] meaning and interest [illegible] scenes do [illegible] have the scenes [illegible] surpassed by the [illegible] element in any other motion picture.

At the conclusion of the performance [illegible] for "Griffith" brought the producer before the curtain, for a little speech which ended in a choking voice.

The theme of "The Birth of a Nation" is taken from which "The Birth of a Nation" is taken is [illegible] Mr. Griffith has dealt with [illegible] along the lines of the old instructions on grasping a nettle [illegible] has handled the theme [illegible] that its sting is crushed. "The Clansman" dealt with the conflict between the whites and negroes in the reconstruction period of the South. "Birth of a Nation" devotes its second half to that theme. The first half deals with the Civil War itself.

CLIPPING FROM Gazette
St. Joseph, Mo.
4-25-15

mother's old home.

Mae Marsh, whose genius made her famous in "The Birth of a Nation," and "The Clansman," plays the role of the girl of the slums. The story portrays the cruelty of human justice and man made laws, a vital subject handled in a masterful manner by a great writer, full of excitement and thrill, laughter and tears. Monday and Tuesday, "The Eagle's Nest," an elaborate and spectacular drama featuring Edwin Arden and Romaine Fielding, a companion piece to "The Spoilers," will be shown. The Paramount Travel weekly, showing the old city of St. Augustine, Jamaica scenes, Pelican Islands, and some clever cartoon work, will be shown Sunday, Monday, and Tuesday in addition to the features mentioned.

SYRACUSE (N. Y.) HERALD
APRIL 25, 1915

THE VERSATILE MR. GRIFFITH

David W. Griffith, [illegible] in Louisville, Ky., [illegible] for "The Birth of a Nation," [illegible] Thomas Dixon, Jr., [illegible] down in Kentucky. As he worked [illegible] different Southern air [illegible] self for each character in the [illegible] story. Joseph Carl Brial [illegible] the hundred [illegible] Mr. Brial [illegible] essayed the [illegible] the thousands [illegible]

Sun - N. Y. Apr 25 1915

One of the pictures [illegible] ways received by large audiences [illegible] a day [illegible] Birth of a Nation [illegible] the Liberty [illegible]

...ock...

"The Clansman," D. W. Griffith's spectacular photo play, conceded to be the greatest motion picture production, will be the attraction at the Yosemite Saturday afternoon and evening. "The Clansman" is adapted from the famous

MIRIAM COOPER
In "The Clansman"

...ther the play or the book. In "The Clansman" are seen the greatest scenes ever staged with thousands of soldiers, including troops of cavalry, artillery and infantry.

...the length of the picture, only one exhibition will be given afternoon and evening. Matinee will take place at ... the evening performance at 8:30. The popular prices of 25 and 50 cents will prevail with a special price of 10 cents for school children during the Saturday matinee.

NEW YORK COMMERCIAL
New York City
APR 7 1915

Griffith's film spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation" continues to hold the ... capacity houses at the Liberty, beginning its sixth week, and has played to nearly 100,000 per-

STAR
New York City
APR 7 - 1915

Griffith, of "The Birth of a Nation," a big picture spectacle, is ... arrange with the management of the Illinois Theatre for a run of the film, at a top price of $2.

EVENING GLOBE
New York City
APR 7 - 1915

...recent photographic exhibition ... city some striking examples ...tic "still" camera work were ...d. There were pictures with ...tion and real art. Somehow ...us think of the multitude of ...that are missed by the motion ...camera.

...s in lighting and settings ... impossible to the stage are ... the film. We believe that ... of the photodrama's develop... hardly been touched upon.

... Griffith has visualized a ... of poems and stories with ...rtistic photography. We still ...er some of his old productions ... Biograph company. A num... scenes in "The Birth of a Na... show genuine artistic discern...

...In actual photography itself ... next field for motion picture ... The speed of producing a ...mount of film each week has ... handicap in the past. There ...ime to experiment. Producers ...n devoting their attention to ...ario (not enough, yet) and to ...er. But the big men of "the ...e coming to realize the value ...s work. Here the motion ...as something far beyond the ...rama. It offers nature it... ...hat a mere imitation.

NEW YORK SUN
APR 7 1915

Griffith's film spectacle "The Birth of a Nation" continues to hold the ... capacity houses at the Liberty Theatre. It is now beginning its sixth week and has already been seen by 100,000 persons.

LOS ANGELES (Cal.) EXAMINER
APRIL 25, 1915

...novel by Thomas Dixon, but it deals more broadly with the historical side than does either the play or book. In "The Clansman" are seen the greatest battle scenes ever staged, with thousands of soldiers, including troops of cavalry, artillery and infantry. The artillery duels provide one of the most spectacular features in "The Clansman." The siege before Petersburg, Sherman's historical march to the sea, the assassination of President Lincoln, Lee's surrender to Grant, the formation and raids of the famous Ku Klux Klan, and the period of reconstruction in the south are graphically shown in "The Clansman." Owing to the length of the picture, 12 reels, only one exhibition will be given during the afternoon and one during the evening. The matinee will take place at 2:30 o'clock, with the evening performance at 8:30 o'clock. The popular prices of 25 and 50 cents will prevail, with a special price of 10 cents for school children during the Saturday matinee.

Amusement Herald
(no date)

New York movie lovers are experiencing the delightful pleasure of witnessing the greatest motion picture masterpiece ever presented the American public, "The Birth of a Nation," a film adaptation of Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," staged by the wizard of film producers, David W. Griffith.

...magazines' periodicals

...om JOURNAL
...ldress COLUMBUS, O.
...te APR 25 1915

DAVID GRIFFITH

To be under 40 and to be the most talked of producer of motion pictures in the United States is the distinction of David W. Griffith, whose "Birth of a Nation" has been pronounced the greatest picture spectacle and whose "Avenging Conscience," a picturization of Poe fiction and poetry, is being seen for four days at the Colonial.

Mr. Griffith was born near Louisville and his father was a general in the Confederate army. He was formerly an actor and played in a revival of "Caste," which was produced by the same firm that put out "The Clansman," on which Ku-Klux play by Thomas Dixon, "The Birth of a Nation" is based. Some of the best reviewers in New York, however, are frank to confess that they like the Griffith position of the spectacle-play much better than that which was supplied by Mr. Dixon.

This director has originated a number of elements in photo-play technique which have become current throughout the movie world. One of these is what is known as the "cut back," whereby the teller of a film story drops his main narrative for a moment to go back to some other incident in the characters' lives to explain motives or throw light on later happenings. Many merely photographic and lighting effects have come from this man, who is reported to be worth $100,000 a year in cash to his employers, the Mutual Company.

Some of the movie stars that Mr. Griffith has developed are Mary Pickford, Arthur Johnson, Ford Sterling, Walter Miriam, Kate Bruce and the ...

...The Birth of a Nation" says that 2,125 offers of bookings for the rights of territory have been received by D. W. Griffith.

NEWS TRIBUNE
Detroit, Mich.
apr 25, 1915

By A. L. WEEKS.

To one who thinks of the theater as a place where the people—all the people—go to be entertained, amused, thrilled, perhaps instructed, the development of the motion picture and the place that it has come to occupy in the public mind is of incalculable importance. To attempt to cover the theatrical field in this country and to omit from consideration the cinematograph is comparable to discussing conditions in Europe without mentioning the war. For the motion picture is upsetting conventions in the drama as completely as the war is upsetting conventions in Europe. And yet during the session of the Drama League of America in this city last week the motion picture not only received no consideration, but it was spoken of with contempt whenever it was mentioned. A motion picture, "The Birth of a Nation," is now on exhibition in New York and Boston in theaters in which the best seats sell for $3. This fact, if no other fact about the movies, should bring students of the drama to the realization of the significance of the form from the practical standpoint of dollars and cents. It is inevitable that if thousands will pay $3 to see a motion picture, the time is not far distant when our best dramatists will devote their energies to writing for the screen as well as the stage just as our best actors and our most powerful producers have turned their attention to film plays.

SAN FRANCISCO (Cal.) CHRONICLE
APRIL 25, 1915

...om EAGLE
apr 25, 1915
...ldress: Brooklyn, N. Y.

D. W. Griffith's film, "The Birth of a Nation," continues at the Liberty Theater, where it is now in its third month. Plans are now being completed to make the summer run a feature of the season. A new system of cooling the theater is being installed and whenever the weather makes it necessary the management will be able to reduce the temperature indoors at least 15 degrees.

BERKELEY (Cal.) GAZETTE
MAY 17, 1915

THE CORT

The Clansman, or Birth of the Nation, ... its successful engagement at the Cort Theater this afternoon. Interest in this phenomenal film remains unabated.

It takes three hours to project the twelve reels of "The Clansman," but they are three hours packed with thrills. Interest never flags for an instant. Historically and educationally it is a wonderful achievement.

In the performance at the Cort the introduction of old Southern songs by a singing chorus and the playing of the special music by an augmented orchestra are happy features. There at a matinee at 2 o'clock every day, in addition to the evening performances.

LOS ANGELES (Cal.) TIMES
APRIL 25, 1915

...whom Manager Fiedlander, himself, recently discovered.

Clune's Auditorium.

"The Clansman," the noted D. W. Griffith production, will open its tenth week at Clune's Auditorium tomorrow afternoon. The reason for the second engagement is that a large number of theatergoers in the city were unable to obtain seats during the recent engagement.

The photodrama deals with the civil war and the reconstruction period, and carries the spectator through many intensely thrilling and dramatic scenes, the assassination of President Lincoln, including battle scenes, mob riots, and daring feats of the Ku Klux Klan. A story of keenest human interest runs through the photodrama.

BROOKLYN, (N. Y.) CITIZEN
APR 25 1915

IN FOR A LONG RUN.

"The Birth of a Nation" Is Still at the Liberty.

D. W. Griffith's epic film, "The Birth of a Nation," continues at the Liberty Theater, where it is now into its third month. This wonderful production has been establishing a record for attendance, which is the talk of the town. Plans are now being completed at the Liberty Theatre to make the summer run a feature of the season. A new system of cooling the theatre is being installed, and whenever the weather makes it necessary the management will be able to reduce the temperature indoors at least fifteen degrees. A film production does not demand the silence of an audience like the spoken drama, so on this account a system of exhaust fans and electrical appliances is being installed which will keep a current of cool air distributed over all part of the house during the entire performance.

...lyn, (N. Y.)
APR 25 1915

Manhattan Theatre

LIBERTY, MANHATTAN—D. W. Griffith's film, "The Birth of a Nation," continues at the Liberty Theatre, where it is now in its third month. This wonderful production has been establishing a record for attendance which is the talk of Greater New York. Plans are now being completed at the Liberty Theatre to make the summer run a feature of the season. A new system of cooling the theatre is being installed, and whenever the weather makes it necessary the management will be able to reduce the temperature indoors at least fifteen degrees. A film production does not demand the silence of an audience like the spoken drama, so on this account a system of exhaust fans and electrical appliances is being installed which will keep a current of cool air distributed over all part of the house during each performance.

NEW YORK TELEGRAM
apr 25, 1915

AT THE LEADING MOVING PICTURE

D. W. Griffith's epic film, "The Birth of a Nation," continues at the Liberty Theatre, where it is now in its third month. This wonderful production has been establishing a record for attendance which is the talk of the town. Plans are now being completed at the Liberty Theatre to make the summer run a feature of the season. A new system of cooling the theatre is being installed, and whenever the weather makes it necessary the management will be able to reduce the temperature indoors at least fifteen degrees.

"CLANSMAN" BEGINS SECOND WEEK AT THE MACDONOUGH

Scene showing assassination of President Lincoln, taken from "The Clansman."

"The Clansman," the great Griffith's film, started its second week at the Macdonough theater today. D. W. Griffith's spectacular film, which is adapted from the well known novel by Thomas Dixon, has been playing to capacity houses at the theater the past week.

A feature of the play which is particularly interesting to women is a quaint old dress worn by Miss Lilian Gish, leading lady. An accident to this dress caused the film producers a loss of $500 during the production of the picture, the entire company being forced to remain idle while the dress was being mended.

World, N.Y. Apr. 25, 1915

At the Liberty Theatre the motion picture version of Thomas Dixon's novel, "The Clansman," known on the screen as "The Birth of a Nation," ...

...: New York City
APR 25 1915

Der phänomenale Erfolg des grokartigen Lichtspieldramas „The Birth of a Nation", das D. W. Griffith jetzt tagtäglich im Liberty Theater vorführt, hat Denen Recht gegeben, die in dieser Filmproduction einen neuen Sieg der Entwickelung der kinematographischen Kunst erkannten, die sich damit auf gleicher Stufe mit den in den zwei Dollar-Häusern aufgeführten „bedeutenden" dramatischen Kunst stellt.

Morgen Telegraph, N.Y. Apr. 25, 1915

D. W. Griffith's epic film, "The Birth of a Nation," continues at the Liberty Theatre, where it is now into its third month. This wonderful production has been establishing a record for attendance which is the talk of the town. Plans are now being completed at the Liberty Theatre to make the Summer run a feature of the season. A new system of cooling the theatre is being installed and whenever the weather ...

MAE MARSH IN "THE CLANSMAN"

[illegible] Griffith, the acknowledged master of the photo-drama, by his production of "The Clansman" or "The Birth of a Nation," the photoplay which is [illegible] at the Yosemite April [illegible] for one day only, has placed himself supreme. He has done with these productions of the most potent events of our history what only the greatest poets of the world have done [illegible]. For he has introduced the public to the ugliest of the most appalling events and at the same time pictures a love story which rivals the sweetest and most touching ever written.

No American can understand what [illegible] means, what it cost and what its future is unless he sees this drama. By this picture the South is made to understand the North, and the North is made to comprehend the South as no history, no poetry, no story has ever been able to bring about. And with all this exact reproducing of the most potent facts of our history, Mr. Griffith has woven in the texture of our country a love story that is well comparable to that of the great bard's best effort, the immortal story of Romeo and Juliet. The matinee will be held at 2:30, with the night exhibition at 8:30. Popular prices of 25c and 50c will prevail, with a special matinee price of 10 cents for school children.

PRESS

Cleveland, Ohio APR - 8 1915

[illegible] Birth of a Nation," the [illegible] still drawing [illegible] in New York with the [illegible] the best seats $2, is to [illegible] soon in Cleveland. [illegible] it is to be seen in its [illegible] with parts of it suppressed [illegible] certain [illegible] for several [illegible] there. In [illegible] have been [illegible] and absurd. [illegible] it is to be [illegible] according to announcement Wednesday.

City, on M[illegible] Clarke H. Harrison of [illegible] the city censors [illegible] and had the film [illegible] his wife. All the [illegible] and indorsed that part of t[illegible] Harrison.

Tes ments in [illegible] made to "The Birth [illegible] are similar to those [illegible] "The Nigger," [illegible] Cleveland After [illegible] in Ohio for longer [illegible] "The Nigger" has [illegible] by the state censors, [illegible] announcement [illegible] the Grand, where it [illegible] another film was [illegible] on Thursday.

In t[illegible] great[illegible] essen[illegible] magni[illegible] of a [illegible] vital [illegible] True [illegible]

In c[illegible] ent da[illegible] these a[illegible] its en[illegible] your [illegible] never [illegible] realiz[illegible] like t[illegible] Griff[illegible] Remem[illegible]

THE BIRTH OF A NATION

Movies to Music.

It is a peculiar transition to go from the best screen in town to the best stage, each one operated by the peer producer in his line. The one has about as many advantages and disadvantages as the other. The stage cannot picture the enlarged features portrayed by the screen and the screen cannot give the accompanying speech and flesh of the stage. Again the screen is confined to a very skimpy compass when it does present heroic sizes, but permits far greater expanse when showing motion views at a distance. The stage has much wider proportions, but its perspective of action is limited. Of course, the great difference between the two in the last analysis is human emotion. But again the screen finds certain fans who bring that commodity with them by virtue of their creative imaginations.

Judged as a motion picture, this work undoubtedly represents the last syllable in cinematic art. It is not only on the score of huge cast and historic import that it surpasses. It is superlative even at its own game—photography and picturization.

6—ANTHONY

Appended to the first part of this picture is a dramatization of Thomas Dixon's novel "The Clansman" which has little or nothing to do with the birth of any nation, but recalls in fictitious and disgusting detail a factional strife between blacks and whites in South Carolina. Quotations from Woodrow Wilson's writings are thrown on the screen to apologize for the disunity, and as much time is devoted to it as all the rest of the nation's history. It is a blight on the truly great picture that precedes, which in itself is wonderfully well balanced and complete. It detracts in its untruthfulness from the Unity and technical perfection of the first part. Why it should be given in the same evening with "The Birth of a Nation" is hard to discern. For even as an advertisement for Mr. Dixon's novel it might do better peddled apart.

The power of Act I is marvelous. It is difficult to believe that mere photography can produce such a punch. And the strange part of it all is, that we of the North surrender our sympathies most wholesomely to the wrongs of the South. The entire trend of this Act is toward a truer realization of the bitter sufferings inflicted upon the Confederate States. But then the salutary influence yields to a second Act of unnecessary race hatred. The spectator is asked to believe that this Ku Klux Klan was a prime factor in the incubation of our nation. Sympathy for the South is now substituted by scenes plainly intended to malign the negro. Every emphasis is placed upon his supposed inherent criminal genius, but nothing is shown of the white man's part in it all. It has about as much place in labor pains of the birth of this nation as a coal strike of Colorado. Both are local blemishes, but neither one is a dominant factor in the history of these United States. Each could be omitted from all commemoration to the moral uplift and inevitable benefit of man.

The first Act is effective and finished as a whole. It furnishes your money's worth to the verge of fatigue and leaves no man in a mood to behold a long and tedious tract on the justification of spilling black blood. This early portion of the picture exceeds the ideals of almost any critic. But the latter half excels only in subtle suggestion of malicious race prejudice. It is evidently an enlargement of Mr. Dixon's pet "Jim Crow" theory and should not be allowed to despoil the artistic and truthful impression of the original concept. The second Act is an excellent example of movies used to pervert the public. The first Act is an unparalleled triumph in motion picturing employed to gratify, instruct, regenerate and glorify. It carries with it a subconscious message of the profit of peace. Music plays no meagre part in its perfection. The instrumental war effects are a welcome substitute for the blank cartridge of military drama.

[illegible] movie [illegible] showed at last. That [illegible] you may go to the Liberty, and by [illegible] a seat at the door of the house for "The Birth of a Nation," you can have the privilege of paying just six months for it [illegible] paid to see Douglas Fairbanks in "Comes Up Smiling" from the same point of vantage.

"But is it worth two dollars?" you [illegible]

Well, if you consider that the pictures are said to have taken eight months in the making, and that fifteen thousand people posed for them, five dollars a seat would not seem to be an exorbitant charge. Whether you will get two dollars' worth of enjoyment out of seeing "The Birth of a Nation" must be left for individual decision. But enjoyment is scarcely the word to apply to what is, in its best features, a historical sketch of the Civil War period in the United States. Tragedy dire and dreadful stalks through the film from the vivid hand-to-hand fights in the trenches before Petersburg to the assassination of Lincoln in Ford's Theater just fifty years ago.

Marvelous in its realism is the presentment of the latter episode. We see the auditorium, and portions of the play; we watch the President arrive and receive the greetings of the audience. We note that he draws a cloak about his shoulders as the April air turns chill. We get a glimpse of the guard seated just outside the Presidential box, and see his desertion of his post in order to peep at the play. Then Wilkes Booth enters the box, fires the fatal shot, and makes his twelve-foot leap to the stage. All this is of the tensest possible interest, and a scene which, with its wealth of detail, would be quite impossible to present in the ordinary way.

Even more wonderful than this are the battle episodes, with a vista of [illegible] which troops gallop, armies depart, charges are made. Picturesque [illegible] galore are attained by the wizard of the silent drama, David W. Griffith, who is said to have invented most of the [illegible] moving pictures, and is rated the highest salaried man in the business. He is presenting "The Birth of a Nation" on his own account.

Mr. Griffith is under forty, and was born near Louisville, Kentucky, his father having been a general in the Confederate army. He was formerly an actor, at one time appearing in a revival of "Caste," under the [illegible] firm which produced "The Clansman," on which Kuklux play by Thomas Dixon was done at the same Liberty Theater in [illegible] "The Birth of a Nation" was based. The scenes that are wholly Griffith's are much better than the Dixon part of the story that it is a pity the latter should have been included at all. "The Clansman" partakes of the cheap "class" [illegible] which have done more than anything else to belittle the motion-picture industry; this is confined to the second half of the bill, however, you may leave behind you on, if you like, and still feel that you have had the worth of your money. It [illegible] perhaps be mentioned that the [illegible] tariff applies to only a small part of the house; most of the seats cost one dollar less.

Evening Post. N.Y.C. Apr 9

Next week will be of unusual interest in screen circles. "The Eternal City" comes to the Astor Theatre for an indefinite engagement with matinee and evening, the Strand celebrates its anniversary week, and "The Birth of a Nation" starts another week of its capacity run. And the Metropolitan, Broadway, and Hippodrome will have unusual programs.

Variety N.Y.C. Apr 9

Preparations are afoot to open "The Birth of a Nation" within the near future at the Tremont, Boston. Much the same difficulty that has just arisen from the negro source is being encountered in the Hub.

TIMES
SEATTLE, WASH.
APR 9 1915

No State Rights.

There will be no state rights sold for the D. W. Griffith picture, "The Birth of a Nation." The Griffith company will send out a lot of road companies playing the picture.

EVENING NEWS
Newark, N. J.
APR 9 1915

LIBERTY, 42d St., near 8th Ave.—"The Birth of a Nation." Very impressive picture drama, based on Thomas Dixon's novel, "The Clansman." Vivid reproductions of events during the Civil War and the reconstruction period. Instructive and intensely interesting.

RECORD
PRIL 9, 1915

ANSMAN" AT THE YOSEMITE

ansman,' or 'The Birth of ," which will be the Yo- turday matinee and night nd throws into direct view events which are stupend- Mr. Griffith mingles with story a powerfully simple hat is concerned with all the vents of the Civil war pe- history.

like this drama could be e speaking stage; nothing ever been approached on drama stage. It is ex- in its power, delightful in f lyric incisiveness and ob- h the maximum of educa- ment.

nce will be at 2:30 with the ition at 8:30. Popular and 50 cents will prevail cial matinee price of 10 hool children.

Amusement Herald, Pittsburgh, Pa. April 19 1915

"Five-Dollar Movies Coming?"

David W. Griffith, today the biggest figure in the moving picture world, believes that the movies are yet in their infancy. In a recent interview the film wizzard said:

"I predict," said Mr. Griffith, "that a moving picture will be made within three or four years for which the entrance money will be $5.00 and $6.00 a seat. It is easy to predict that."

"It is foolish to think that the moving picture has reached its climax of development. We have the moving picture theatre as well built and as well run as any other theatre; we have the moving picture show that brings $2 a seat; we have the foremost actors and the foremost authors of the world working for us. So people are prone to think we have gone the limit and there is nothing more to be done. But I tell you that moving pictures are still only in their swaddling clothes.

"I am not a dreamer in the sense that I see fantastic things unlikely of realization," he explained. "I haven't dreamed an impossible thing in seven years—since I started in pictures. That is the beauty of this work. It makes dreams come true."

Mr. Griffith then predicted the five-dollar movie.

"But will the public pay $5.00 a seat merely to see a picture?" he was asked.

"They are already doing it to ticket speculators. When I first proposed asking $2.00 a seat for my new film not a single man in the theatrical business could be found to say I was making a sound business move. Regular theatres on all sides were cutting prices, not advancing them, and 50 cents a seat had always heretofore been considered a record price for the best films.

"The public is quick to see values. If they are willing to pay 5 cents to see a picture that costs $500 to produce and 50 cents to see a picture that costs $50,000 to produce, they are willing to pay $2 to see one that costs half a million to produce.

"And when we can put on a picture that will cost $2,000,000 to produce the public will be willing to pay $5 a seat for it."

Mr. Griffith doubtless is a master at his craft, and aside from his genius as a producer, he possesses unquestioned business skill and foresight. However, we doubt the soundness of his reasoning as to the $5.00 movies. The high-priced moving pictures may take here and there at intervals, but they are contrary to the very forces and conditions which have brought the moving picture its popularity and wonderful success as an amusement enterprise.

The $5.00 pictures will take in New York and some of the larger cities, but as a general proposition we cannot believe they will be a success. It is our opinion that when the price for the "movie" hits the $1.00 mark, it has gone far enough.

We realize the great cost of producing elaborate pictures, but we are constrained to believe the producers in their eagerness to put over "big cases" are going too far, at least in some cases, in the matter of salaries. The professional base ball magnates have long ago realized their mistake in paying fabulous sums for ball players and we venture to predict that in the future the promotors of photoplays will come to realize their mistake in this direction.

When the average motion picture is presented for more than 5, 10 or 25 cents, the time will have arrived when this "the people's" amusement, will cease to appeal to the masses.

The American Press Association (no. Date)

SCENE FROM "THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

The photo entertainment, "The Birth of a Nation," combines a pictorial survey of civil war history and of Kuklux Klan days with a love story based on Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman." The battle scenes, engaging thousands of combatants drilled with the well known Griffith elan and realism, are particularly effective. After seeing it some optimists are rash enough to predict that the historical novels of the future will be told in pictures rather than in sentences. It cost to produce nearly $500,000.

D. W. GRIFFITH.

A development no one would believed possible a few year seen in the establishment York, Griffith's "The Birth of a N regular Broadway attrac to absolute capacity on scale. "The Birth of a deed more than a film persons are employe ical effects and musi unreeling of its 12,00

National Magazine (no date)

LIBERTY

"The Birth of a Nation"—The most elaborate moving picture ever produced. Founded upon history of Civil War.

"The Birth of a Nation," the big D. W. Griffith production based on Dixon's book, "The Clansman," is now in its eighth week at the Auditorium theater, Los Angeles, and will continue to run indefinitely at that house.

Telegraph N.Y. Apr. 19

GRANT AND LEE CHEERED.

Audience at Liberty Theatre, Remembers the Golden Anniversary.

On April 9, 1865, General U. S. Grant and General Robert E. Lee arranged the terms of surrender which closed the Civil War.

Upon the fiftieth anniversary of that event yesterday afternoon, when the lifelike pictures in Griffith's story appeared to view at the McLean cottage on the screen at the Liberty Theatre, the audience, realizing that it was the golden anniversary of that event, and stood impressively quiet as the historic event passed before its vision. When Grant and Lee clasped hands, after signing the terms of surrender, a cheer was given.

N.Y. American Apr. 10, 1915

With the matinee tomorrow afternoon, "The Birth of a Nation" begins its seventh week in the Liberty. Yesterday's presentations of the story took on an added interest, it being the fiftieth anniversary of Gen. Lee's surrender to Gen. Grant at Appomattox.

Westfield Leader Apr. 21, 1915

Liberty—"The Birth of a Nation."

D. W. Griffith's gigantic spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which is taken from Thomas Dixon's famous novel, "The Clansman," entered its ninth week on Monday, at the Liberty, in West 42d street. The production which is the largest that has been put forth by the Mutual Film Corporation, embraces 18,000 people and three thousand horses and is said to have cost over half a million dollars. An added attraction is a Symphony Orchestra of 40 pieces.

TIMES

Brooklyn, N. Y.

APR 10 1915

"The Birth of a Nation.

D. W. Griffith's production "The Birth of a Nation" continues the sensation of the season in New York. With the matinee to-morrow afternoon this motion picture spectacle begins its seventh week in the Liberty Theatre. The weekly receipts have averaged $14,000. Last Friday's presentation of the story took on an added interest, it being the fiftieth anniversary of Gen. Lee's surrender to Gen. Grant at Appomattox, April 9, 1865. When the reproduction of this scene was flashed upon the screen the audience rose

"BIRTH OF A NATION."

Private Presentation of the Much Discussed Picture Play at the Tremont Tonight.

Today, the 50th anniversary of Gen Lee's surrender to Gen Grant at Appomattox, has been selected for the first performance in Boston of D. W. Griffith's motion picture drama, "The Birth of a Nation," in which this historic scene is shown. The performance this evening is for invited guests only, the first public presentations at the Tremont Theatre taking place tomorrow afternoon and evening.

Mr Griffith is said to have reproduced every detail of the great event. The room in which the document is signed is a facsimile of the actual Wilmer-McLean house interior at Appomattox. Donald Crisp and Howard Gaye, in the roles of Grant and Lee respectively, bear a marked resemblance to the great Generals. The costuming is exact—Grant in fatigue clothes, dusty and travel stained, and Lee, the vanquished, scrupulously arrayed in full dress.

Moving Picture World N.Y.C. Apr. 10, 1915

"The Birth of a Nation" Passed in Chicago.

"The Birth of a Nation" will be shown in Chicago without a single foot of film being cut out. Notwithstanding the widespread discussion over these films in New York, where some of the members of the National Board of Censors refused to give their sanction to the running of the pictures without certain excisions, Griffith's big photoplay will be shown in its entirety here.

Not even the Chicago Board of Censors were permitted to use their cutting implements in this instance. Mrs. Carter H. Harrison and Charles Fitzmorris, the mayor's secretary, passed on the films, and the secretary reported to Major Funkhouser that they should be shown in their entirety. This official indorsement by the mayor's secretary assured the presentation of the films in this city without mutilation.

It is said that "The Birth of a Nation" will open soon at the Illinois theater, where "Cabiria" had its big run, at $2 prices.

Journal of Commerce Apr 10.

"D. W. Griffith's production of "The Birth of a Nation" continues to be the most popular film in the city. Beginning tomorrow, the production enters upon its seventh week here. The receipts have averaged $14,000 weekly since the opening, which is the capacity of the Liberty Theatre. An added interest was given Friday, which was the fiftieth anniversary of the surrender of Lee at Appomattox, a truthful representation of which is given in the film.

Billboard Cinc. Ohio Apr. 10, 1915

GRIFFITH FEATURE SETS RECORD

New York, April 2.—D. W. Griffith's marvelous spectacle, The Birth of a Nation, continues the sensation of the season at the Liberty Theater. It starts in upon its sixth phenomenal week with the matinee and night performances there on Easter Sunday. Even Holy Week just passed, usually the worst period in a theatrical season, was no exception to the rule of crowded houses. The attendance last week set up a new record. Nearly 90,000 patrons have kept the Liberty Theater filled at every performance.

N.Y. Evening Sun Apr. 10, 1915

LIBERTY—D. W. Griffith's wonderful spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," continues as one of the sensations of the season. It begins its seventh phenomenal week with the matinee and night performances to-morrow. Attendance reached high water mark during the present Easter week. More distinguished persons have seen the production than ever attended any other motion picture in this city.

Motography

Address CHICAGO, ILL.

Ashes of Dreams—Paramount.—A three reel drama of distinct drawing power. Henry B. Walthall, famed for his work in "The Birth of a Nation" and other big features, plays the leading part and is surrounded by a strong cast. [illegible] make will be made in [illegible] ject.

who is responsible for [illegible] Nation, has launched another [illegible] called The Avenging Con[illegible] on exhibition at the Chestnut Street Opera House in Philadelphia.

[illegible] story of The Clansman still [illegible] its remarkable run at the Al[illegible]. This is the fifth week, and the demand for seats is beyond the capacity of the house.

Moving Picture World Apr. 10, 1915

"The Celebrated Scandal." Close upon this will come the "Birth of a Nation," "The High Hand," "What Happened to Jones" and "The Pageant of San Francisco."

REVIEW

New York City

APR 10 1915

[illegible] are born to unity ma[illegible] run fire and exhale powder. [illegible] would rather swagger [illegible] about in blue and gray, with [illegible] over them, than eat. [illegible] have afore mentioned, there [illegible] We have seen "Secret [illegible] rehearsed fifty times because [illegible] results in "super" blue and [illegible] it still remains the marvel of [illegible] century that Mr. Griffith [illegible] managed to thrash thousands of [illegible] into such magnificent [illegible] smashing wartime movie, [illegible] of a Nation."

NEW YORK COMMERCIAL

New York City

APR 10 1915

[illegible] matinee tomorrow afternoon, [illegible] Birth of a Nation" begins its seventh [illegible] the Liberty. Yesterday's presenta[illegible] the story took on an added in[illegible] being the fiftieth anniversary of [illegible] surrender to Gen. Grant at [illegible]

New York Journal of Commerce

Date APR 10 1915

[illegible] production of "The Birth [illegible] Nation" continues to be the most [illegible] film in the city. Beginning [illegible] the production enters upon its [illegible] week here. The receipts have av[illegible] $14,000 weekly since the opening, [illegible] the capacity of the Liberty Thea[illegible] An added interest was given Friday, [illegible] was the fiftieth anniversary of the [illegible] of Lee at Appomattox, a truthful [illegible] of which is given in the

DRAMATIC NEWS

Address: New York City

APR 10 1915

Albert Sterner, the artist, will have twelve beautiful models as pages and heralds for the special professional numbers at the ball of the Allied Arts at the Hotel Astor Thursday evening for the benefit of the Actors' Fund of America.

D. W. Griffith, who is responsible for The Birth of a Nation, has launched another big thrill called The Avenging Conscience. It is on exhibition at the Chestnut Street Opera House in Philadelphia.

EVENING GLOBE

New York City

APR 10 1915

LIBERTY.—D. W. Griffith's production "The Birth of a Nation" continues the sensation of the season in New York. With the matinee Monday afternoon this motion picture spectacle begins its seventh week in the Liberty Theatre. The weekly receipts have averaged $14,000, which is the absolute capacity of the theatre.

BROOKLYN, (N. Y.) CITIZEN

Apr. 10, 1915

[illegible] impressive incident out of the ordin[illegible] in connection with "The Birth of a Nation" took place yesterday [illegible] Liberty Theatre. On April 9, [illegible] General U. S. Grant and General [illegible] arranged the terms of sur[illegible] E. Lee. On the fiftieth anniversary of [illegible] yesterday afternoon, the life[illegible] event in Griffith's thrilling story [illegible] characters at the McLean cottage [illegible] into viewing the peace terms, [illegible] after [illegible] hands.

Telegraph N.Y. Apr. 10, 1915

[illegible] Griffith's marvelous spectacle, [illegible] of a Nation," continues the sen[illegible] at the Liberty Theatre, [illegible] upon its sixth phenomenal week [illegible] matinee and night performances [illegible] Easter Sunday.

EVENING NEWS

Buffalo, N. Y.

APR 10 19[illegible]

[illegible]S MOVIE IS COMI[illegible] GRIFFITH BE[illegible]

Says Audiences Will Willi[illegible] High Prices.

Seven years ago David W[illegible] was a penniless actor, knock[illegible] New York trying to get so[illegible] listen to his scheme for produ[illegible] ing pictures on a large scal[illegible] he is the leading figure in t[illegible] picture world, with an ann[illegible] that runs into six figures. [illegible] clares that within the next [illegible] four years moving pictures w[illegible] duced to which the price of [illegible] will be $5 and $6. In supp[illegible] assertion he points out tha[illegible] years ago an expenditure of [illegible] single film was thought to be [illegible] as the business would stand. [illegible] cents was considered the [illegible] that could be asked at a thea[illegible] the only attraction was pictu[illegible] came the $50,000 picture, f[illegible] theater managers asked and [illegible] 50 cents. He is now exhibiti[illegible] ture in New York which co[illegible] and he is asking $2 a seat. T[illegible] not only is paying the price, [illegible] buying tickets from speculate[illegible] much as $5. "And when you [illegible] on a picture that will cost $[illegible] produce, the public will be [illegible] pay $5 a seat for it," he ad[illegible]

He predicts that in time [illegible] drama will entirely disappear [illegible] list of regular plays. To pe[illegible] not be satisfied with views [illegible] corners of the world and of li[illegible] will demand great, sweeping s[illegible] possible of production on any [illegible] the last picture produced by [illegible] fith he used 18,000 people [illegible] horses and 7000 words of ex[illegible] matter, including four pag[illegible] Woodrow Wilson's history of [illegible] ted States. The people, he [illegible] can get history better in this [illegible] through books. And if they [illegible] history they can get litera[illegible] drama without end. Of cours[illegible] ance must be made for the em[illegible] of a man who has proved hi[illegible] to perform wonders with pict[illegible] it seems that the possibilitie[illegible] moving picture have by no me[illegible] exhausted.—Indianapolis News

From T[illegible]

Address RACINE

Date APR 1[illegible]

Scissors and Pa[illegible]

FIVE DOLLAR MOVIES.

David Griffith, one of the leading fi[illegible] moving picture world, has recently d[illegible] within the next three or four years mov[illegible] will be produced to which the price [illegible] will be $5, or may be more. This does n[illegible] the cheaper pictures will pass out of [illegible] only shows a tendency which Mr. Griff[illegible] have recognized in this matter.

The great producer argues that a fe[illegible] $500 was a large expenditure for the pr[illegible] single film, and 5 cents was the current [illegible] mission. Nowadays it is nothing for m[illegible] to put $50,000 into a picture, and th[illegible] these have gone up from 5 to 10 centa[illegible] quarter and a half dollar. A picture [illegible] shown in New York at $2 as the price [illegible] This film cost $200,000 to produce, and [illegible] the cost of a good seat, it is said that s[illegible] tors have sold some of them as high as [illegible]

The men who make such pictures fig[illegible] amounts. Mr. Griffith predicts the time [illegible] will cost as much as $2,000,000. This is [illegible] theorizing of a dreamer and allowance m[illegible] for such enthusiasm, but the expensive[illegible] ferred to now being shown in New Yo[illegible] have taken 18,000 people and 1,500 horse[illegible] kee News

CLIPPING FROM [illegible]

LOS ANGELES (Cal.) [illegible]

APRIL 25, 1915

PHILADELPHIA (PA.) RECORD.

Date ..... APR 11 1915

BIG MOTION PICTURES

D. W. Griffith, a Master Photo Play Producer, Employs Original Methods.

D. W. Griffith, who is among the greatest of producers of motion pictures, is the "man of the hour" just now in the amusement world, on account of the success of his latest production, "The Birth of a Nation," now playing at the Liberty Theatre, New York. This photo-play is founded upon American History and upon Thomas Dixon's story of the Reconstruction Period, "The Clansman." Some of the scenes that have aroused much discussion and commendation are the assassination of President Lincoln in Ford's Theatre, Washington, D. C.; the burning of Atlanta, Civil War battles and the surrender of General Lee to General Grant.

Another of Griffith's master productions is "The Avenging Conscience," now at the Chestnut Street Opera House here.

Griffith resorts to unique and original methods in accomplishing his dramatic and photographic effects. He is the inventor of several devices, one of which is that which permits the dissolving of one scene into another. He is said to be the first producer to succeed in taking motion pictures at night. His productions are always made on a very large scale. In "The Birth of a Nation" he is said to have utilized 18,000 people and 3000 horses. In staging the battle scenes he used regiments of various National Guards. His operations often extended over an area of many miles, and in order to direct personally every bit of action he had a mass to telephone wires extending underground to all parts of the battlefield, so that he could give directions by telephone. He would sit on a high, elevated platform and would direct as far as possible by means of a megaphone. In fact, for all large exterior scenes, Griffith invariably directs from such a platform. In "The Avenging Conscience" he staged the thrilling man-hunt and capture scene on the platform, from which he could view a circuitous chase of several miles over mountains and valleys. When he photographed the famous charge of the Ku Klux Klan in "The Birth of a Nation," wherein thousands of horsemen dash across country, he rode in a high-power racing car accompanied by his photographer with the motion-picture camera, directly in front of the horses, which was a hazardous undertaking, for if anything happened to slacken the speed of the car the horses would have dashed into it.

In reproducing the assassination of President Lincoln, Griffith was assisted by a man who had been present on the fateful night of the shooting. Griffith had his carpenters and scene painters erect an exact replica of Ford's Theatre, Washington, D. C., from a photograph taken on the night of the murder. He also had constructed a complete village from a photograph of Piedmont, S. C., and all other scenes, furniture and costumes were reproductions of the things as they actually existed. All artillery effects in the battle scenes were loaned by the Ordnance Department of the United States army for use in the picture. All the battle scenes were photographed at night, which made possible the red effects. Under the glare of giant illuminators a line of trenches stretching over a territory of three miles was photographed.

PUBLIC LEDGER

ess: Philadelphia, Pa.

APR 11 1915

The Two Davids

For years David Belasco has been the recognized wizard of stagecraft, his productions having been noted for their unique effects, and it is somewhat of a coincidence that the genius of the photoplay, David W. Griffith, should have the same first name as Mr. Belasco. In Mr. Griffith's productions, "The Avenging Conscience," now playing at the Chestnut Street Opera House, and "The Birth of a Nation," at the Liberty Theatre, New York, he has provided many novel and startling effects, which are causing much comment in both cities.

N.Y. Tribune apl 11,

D. W. Griffith's production, "The Birth of a Nation," continues the sensation of the season in New York. With the matinee this afternoon this motion picture spectacle begins its seventh week in the Liberty Theatre. The weekly receipts have averaged $14,000, which is the capacity of the theatre. Last Friday's presentation of the story took on an added interest, it being the fiftieth anniversary of General Lee's surrender to General Grant at Appomattox, April 9, 1865. When the reproduction of this scene was flashed upon the screen the audience rose and stood impressively quiet.

EAGLE

ress: Brooklyn, N. Y.

APR 11 1915

Brooklyn, (N. Y.) Standard-Union

April 11, 1915

Manhattan Theatres

STRAND, MANHATTAN—D. W. Griffith's production, "The Birth of a Nation," continues the sensation of the season in Manhattan. With the matinee this afternoon this motion picture begins its seventh week in the Liberty Theatre. The weekly receipts have averaged $14,000, which is the capacity of the theatre. Last Friday's presentation of the story took on an added interest, it being the fiftieth anniversary of Gen. Lee's surrender to Gen. Grant at Appomattox, April 9, 1865. When the reproduction of this scene was flashed upon the screen the audience rose and stood impressively quiet as the historic event passed before its vision. When Grant and Lee clasped hands, after signing the terms of surrender, a great cheer was given.

DISPATCH

Pittsburgh, Pa.

APR 11

THEATER TOPICS

D. W. Griffith's production, "The Birth of a Nation," begins its seventh week in the Liberty Theater. The weekly receipts have averaged $14,000, which is the capacity of the theater.

REVUE

ress: New York City

APR 11 1915

Der phänomenale Erfolg des grosartigen Lichtspieldramas „The Birth of a Nation", das D. W. Griffith jetzt tagtäglich im Liberty Theater darbietet, hat Denen Recht gegeben, die in dieser Filmproduction einen neuen Aufschwung der kinematographischen Kunst erblicken, die sich somit auf gleiche Stufe mit der in den zwei Vorjahren gebotenen „realistischen" cinematographischen Kunst stellt. „The Birth of a Nation" bleibt auf dem Programm des Liberty Theaters.

THE WIZARD OF THE "MOVIES"

He is D. W. Griffith, With "The Birth of a Nation" and "The Avenging Conscience" Among His Masterpieces

PHILADELPHIA, (PA.) RECORD.

Date ..... APR 11 1915.

N.Y. Telegram apl 11 1915

D. W. Griffith's production, "The Birth of a Nation," continues the sensation of the season in New York. With the matinee this afternoon this motion picture spectacle begins its seventh week in the Liberty Theatre. The weekly receipts have averaged $14,000, which is the capacity of the theatre.

N.Y. American apl. 11, 1915

D. W. Griffith's production, "The Birth of a Nation," continues the sensation of the season in New York. With the matinee this afternoon this motion picture spectacle begins its seventh week in the Liberty Theatre. The weekly receipts have averaged $14,000, which is the absolute capacity of the theatre.

Last Friday's presentations of the story took on an added interest, it being the fiftieth anniversary of Gen. Lee's surrender to Gen. Grant at Appomattox, April 9, 1865. When the reproduction of this scene was flashed upon the screen the audience rose and stood impressively quiet, as the historic event passed before its vision. When Grant and Lee clasped hands, after signing the terms of surrender, a great cheer was given.

ABLE ADDRESS CLIPSURG

PING FROM

NEW YORK PRESS

APR 11 1915

THE LIBERTY.

With to-day's matinee the popular photo-spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," enters upon its seventh week in the Liberty Theatre. The capacity of the house is said to be taxed at every performance and the many stirring scenes in the picture are received with marked approval.

N.Y. Morning Telegraph apl 11, 1915

D. W. Griffith's production, "The Birth of a Nation," continues the sensation of the season in New York. With the matinee this afternoon this motion picture spectacle begins its seventh week in the Liberty Theatre. The weekly receipts have averaged $14,000, which is the absolute capacity of the theatre. Last Friday's presentations of the story took on an added interest, it being the fiftieth anniversary of General Lee's surrender to General Grant at Appomattox, April 9, 1865. When the reproduction of this scene was flashed upon the screen the audience rose and stood impressively quiet.

PRESS

Philadelphia, Pa.

APR 11 1915

---

theater.

AT THE OPERA HOUSE

D. W. Griffith's remarkable motion picture production, "The Avenging Conscience," will enter upon its second week at the Chestnut Street Opera House, to-morrow afternoon. This unusual photoplay, which is based on Edgar Allan Poe's thrilling story of "The Tell-Tale Heart," scored an instantaneous success among Philadelphia theatergoers, by virtue of its extraordinary photographic effects and its powerful story. It is the most thrilling and startling production that has been seen here in many a day, equaling "Dr. Jekyl and Mr. Hyde," and "The Relic," Henry Walthall, who portrays the leading character, does some excellent acting. He also has the leading part in Mr. Griffith's New York success, "The Birth of a Nation." The other principals are supported by Blanche Sweet, Lillian Gish, George Seigmann, Spottiswoode Aitken and Ralph Lewis, who are members of the stock company and are seen in his pictures.

D. W. Griffith Directing Camera-Man.

Fertility of resource and an imagination keeping pace with the development of a fascinatingly weird tale, resulted in the creation of D. W. Griffith, one of the foremost of motion picture producers, of "The Avenging Conscience," a sensational film that is the legitimate precursor of Griffith's masterpiece, now in New York, "The Birth of a Nation." The difficulties that Griffith overcame in the making of "The Avenging Conscience" were greater than are found by producers who have photographed enactment of such stories as "The Eternal City," "The Christian" or "The Spoilers." In each of the instances given, the story had been created and there was only necessary the adaptation. The mere going to remote places to obtain authentic localities as a background for action, meant only expense and the consuming of time. There were no calls upon ingenuity of the producer—at least no calls that could not readily be met by the exercise of the usual skill. But in the case of "The Avenging Conscience" there must have been required unusual photographic skill and, because of the desire to bring about weird effects, resourcefulness and inventiveness were constantly under

N.Y. Telegram apr 11, 1915

INQUIRER

s: Philadelphia, Pa.

APR 11 1915

—The cast appearing in D. W. Griffith's photoplay, "The Avenging Conscience," at the Chestnut Street Opera House, is made up of the same principals who enact the leading character in Mr. Griffith's big New York success, "The Birth of A Nation," now in that city at the Liberty Theatre at two dollars a seat. Henry Walthall essays the leading role in both productions, and Miss Mae Marsh, George Seigmann, Spottiswoode Aitken and Ralph Lewis appear in both pictures. These people form the nucleus of Mr. Griffith's several stock company and are seen in his pictures.

STAATSZEITUNG

dress: New York City.

APR 11 1915

date

Wandelbilder.

D. W. Griffith's sensationell grosartige Wandelbilderserie "The Birth of a Nation", nach Thomas Dixon's berühmter Erzählung "The Clansman", in der Kolossal-Attraktion zweimal täglich mit einem Symphonie-Orchester von 40 Mann im Liberty Theater an einem 18,000 Personen und 3000 Pferde in dieser glänzenden Szenerie.

New York. Herald apl. 11, 1915

HISTORIC EVENT IN 'MOVIES'

IN the Liberty Theatre D. W. Griffith's big film production, "The Birth of a Nation," will begin its seventh week to-morrow. Additional interest was given to the motion picture spectacle last Friday, the fiftieth anniversary of General Lee's surrender to General Grant at Appomattox.

RTH OF A NATION"

Seventh Week at the Liberty Theatre.

ffith's production, "The Birth of a Nation," continues the sensation of the season in New York. With this afternoon this motion picture begins it seventh week in the Liberty Theatre. The weekly receipts have averaged $14,000, which is the capacity of the theatre.

Last Friday's presentations of the story took on an added interest, it being the fiftieth anniversary of General Lee's surrender to General Grant at Appomattox, April 9, 1865. When the reproduction of this scene was flashed upon the screen the audience rose and stood impressively quiet, as the historic event passed before its vision. When Grant and Lee clasped hands, after signing the terms of surrender, a great cheer was given.

N.Y. Telegram apr. 11, 1915

KAMINER

Chicago, Ill.

APR 11 1915

wonder if the high salaries to leading moving-picture performers and at the enormous cost of such productions as 'Les Miserables,' 'The Birth of a Nation,' 'Quo Vadis,' 'The Inferno.' They lose sight of the fact that the initial cost of production is the only factor in the film production that is costly. When a film is made it lasts forever, and may be used a million times if Birth of the Nation,' $150,000 to produce, is playing at a New York theater to capacity week for fourteen performances. D. W. Griffith, the director of the moving-picture production, is renting the theater for the week. You can imagine what profits are when he has no rent and no properties to pay

---

LYN, (N. Y.) CITIZEN

APR 11

GRIFFITH FILMS

READY FOR BOOKINGS

Avenging Conscience" and "The Escape," Now Both Available for New York.

"The Birth of a Nation" has opened a phenomenal run in New York, it is decided by the Wm. Brady Enterprises are booking these features for exhibition in the East, in preference to other masterpieces, such as "The Avenging Conscience" and "The Escape." These two exceptions, neither of which has been released to exhibitors in New York, the Strand Theatre and others having played "The Avenging Conscience," whereas "The Escape" has been successfully released at other theatres.

These films at this time given the advantage of a two-reel medium, which has become as well known as "The Birth of a Nation" and "The Hundred Days."

N.Y. Herald apr. 11, 1915

Griffith's production "The Birth of a Nation" begins its seventh week at the Liberty Theatre. It is playing to capacity houses as usual and will have averaged $14,000

NING TELEGRAPH

w York City

1 1 1915

RECORD
APRIL 13, 1915

SAN FRANCISCO CALL & POST
APRIL 13, 1915

N.Y. Tribune
Apr. 25, 1915

FEATURE FILMS.

D. W. Griffith's production "The Birth of a Nation" continues at the Liberty for the third month. This production has been establishing a record for attendance and plans are now being completed to make the summer one of the features of the season. A new method of cooling the theatre is being tried and whenever the weather makes it necessary the management is able to reduce the temperature at least fifteen degrees.

MEN OF '65 ASTOUNDED BY REPRODUCED BATTLE

Veterans Find "Birth of a Nation" Fight Like Real One.

Veterans of the civil war find that the most astonishing thing in "The Birth of a Nation," the great Griffith film at the Liberty Theatre, is the reproduction of the battle of Petersburg. Many spectators marvel at the exact reproductions of the theatre in which Lincoln was shot and of the scene of Lee's surrender to Grant, and many know them to be accurate, through having seen pictures of the two events, yet probably only one or two persons in this city have any first hand memory of these happenings. On the other hand, there are in New York a thousand or two survivors of the armies of the Potomac and of Virginia, who were at Petersburg. These old men have nearly all seen the picture and their testimony as to its accuracy is unanimous. As the battle scene comes on the screen they gasp and turn to their companions with a "Why, there are the very earthworks we tried to take," or some such remark. That is the most eloquent of testimony to the detailed accuracy of the picture. When it carries men's memories back fifty years it must be very near perfection in its illusion.

A historian of prominence who saw the film remarked that the mission of the motion picture as demonstrated in this instance was to register history by lightning flash. He struck there upon a really descriptive phrase, because in this picture, the view in which covers twelve square miles, one gets a vistalike view of the battle that could be had in no other way. By close application of historical detail the producer has presented the battlefield almost as a whole. The opposing armies are seen as they actually fought those rainy April days in 1865. It was from this field that Grant rode in his fatigue uniform and mud spattered boots to meet Lee at Appomattox and there dictate terms of surrender which quietly but effectually brought the war to a close.

It was to show both sides and to clear the perspective that Griffith planned his great battle scenes in the big picture. He worked with many historians for months before he began laying out his plan of campaign. When he was ready he had the cooperation of two engineers who had been graduated from West Point, and he also had at his elbow during the time the picture fights were being taken veterans of both armies who suggested this counterfeit of the real scene. The battlefield was laid out and built up by the engineers from the reports of many Generals who took part in the conflict. The artillery and other ordnance were exact duplications of the arms carried and used in 1865. The trenches were laid out after war maps at Washington, and only trained soldiers were used to create the impression of this last great battle as it was fought on the outskirts of Petersburg.

The actual work of assembling and rehearsing the armies and of the taking of the picture covered a period of over two months. Griffith used nineteen batteries of cameras to get the effects he wished to flash upon the screen. He occupied a tower com-

HISTORICAL KNOWLEDGE OF A DIRECTOR

They recently were staging one of the big battle scenes of "The Clansman" about [illegible] miles away from the Mutual [illegible] in Los Angeles when there arose a dispute among the actors as to the color and kind of horse ridden by the famous Confederate commander in chief, General Robert E. Lee, when he was campaigning at the head of the Army of Northern Virginia. D. W. Griffith, the well-known director, who alone is responsible for the production of this picture, was away for the moment.

"Better stop 'taking,'" said one of the actors to the camera man, "till we telephone in and have all the facts about General Lee's horse looked up and verified."

A high powered touring car had glided up behind the group. In it sat Griffith himself.

CHICAGO (ILL) POST
APRIL 3, 1915

D. W. Griffith, the author of "The Birth of a Nation," the producer of "The Battle of Atlanta Campaign," the inventor of the film picture, which [illegible] photoplays, now stands [illegible] the production of a new art in [illegible] times, shaping [illegible]

POST DISPATCH
St. Louis, Mo.
APR 11 1915

"MOVIES AS YET ONLY IN SWADDLING CLOTHES"

BY DAVID W. GRIFFITH

DAVID W. GRIFFITH is today the biggest figure in the vast new moving picture world. His annual salary as manager of a film manufacturing company is said to be $100,000, plus a percentage of the profits. His latest masterpiece, "The Birth of a Nation," employs 18,000 persons and 1500 horses, and cost $500,000. It was the first film production for which an admission fee of $2 a seat was asked—and given. Seven years ago Griffith was an actor out of work, trudging along Broadway in search of a job. He got one with a movie company at $15 a week. Four years later his salary with the same concern was $1000 a week.

THE time will come, and in less than ten years, when the children in the public schools will be taught practically everything by moving pictures. Certainly they will never be obliged to read history again.

Imagine a public library of the future, for instance. There will be long rows of boxes or pillars, properly classified and indexed, of course. At each box a push button and before each box a seat. Suppose you wish to "read up" on a certain episode in Napoleon's life. Instead of consulting all the authorities, wading laboriously through a host of books, and ending bewildered, without a clear idea of exactly what did happen and confused at every point by conflicting opinions about what did happen, you will merely seat yourself at a properly adjusted window, in a scientifically prepared room, press the button, and actually see what happened.

There will be no opinions expressed. You will merely be present at the making of history. All the work of writing, revising, collating, and reproducing will have been carefully attended to by a corps of recognized experts, and you will have received a vivid and complete expression.

Everything except the three R's, the arts, and possibly the mental sciences can be taught in this way—physiology, chemistry, biology, botany, physics, and history in all its branches.

It is foolish to think that the moving picture has reached its climax of development. We have the moving-picture theater as well built and as well run as any other theater; we have the moving-picture show that brings all in a unit; we have the foremost actors and the foremost writers of the world working for us. So people are prone to think we have gone the limit and there is nothing more to be done. But I tell you that moving pictures are still in their swaddling clothes.

But I am not a dreamer in the sense that I see fantastic things unlikely of realization. I haven't dreamed an impossible thing in seven years—since I started in pictures. That is the beauty of this work. It makes dreams come true.

My first prediction is that a moving picture will be made within three or four years for which the entrance money will be $5 and $6 a seat. It is easy to predict that. They are already paying $5 a seat—to ticket speculators. When I first proposed asking $2 a seat for "The Birth of a Nation" no single man in the theatrical business could be found to say I was making a sound business move. Regular theaters on all sides were cutting prices, not advancing them, and 50 cents a seat had always heretofore been considered a record price for the best films.

The public is quick to see value. If they are willing to pay 5 cents for a picture that costs $500 to produce and 50 cents to see a picture that costs $50,000 to produce they will pay $2 to see one that [illegible] the public will be willing to pay $5 a seat for it.

If you had asked me a year ago where we could get the money I would have believed it would be impossible, for up to that time an investment of $50,000 was considered utterly daring for a picture; but the days of little things in the pictures are gone by forever. When I started in the business only seven years ago a producer who spent $500 on a picture was considered very extravagant. Not today. We spend that much on a single scene that runs less than a minute, and then often throw it away because it doesn't fit, or is not just right.

The experimental work on a big picture costs thousands of dollars. The trying out of new effects to see if they will reproduce in a costly process, and when one has the inventive faculty and is anxious to produce new things he is likely to bankrupt his promoters.

The regular theater will, of course, always exist, but not, I believe, as now. The pictures will utterly eliminate from the regular theater all the spectacular features of production. Plays will never again appeal to the public for their scenery, or their numbers of actors and supernumeraries. Pictures have replaced all that.

The only plays that the public will care to see in the regular theater will be the intimate, quiet plays that can be staged in one or two settings within four walls, and in which the setting is unimportant, while the drama will be largely subjective. Objective drama, the so-called melodrama, will be entirely absorbed in the pictures.

The audiences for these old-fashioned theaters will be drawn from old-fashioned people who remember the days of old and how plays were produced when "I was a boy." The new generation will be wedded to the movies. You won't be able to satisfy them with anything else.

The bane of the drama is verbosity, but we can't produce any picture without some words. In one of my pictures we throw on the screen over 7000 words, in which there are at least four pages from Woodrow Wilson's history of the United States. That is more words than are used in the average short story.

We are coming to pay more and more attention to the words we use on the screen. The art of writing for the pictures is developing almost as rapidly as the art of acting for them. And the great rewards to be gained there by a writer will be a powerful incentive for him to write more crisply, more intelligently, more alluringly, than he ever could in the best spoken drama.

That, I believe, is the chief reason that the American public is so hungry for motion pictures and so loyal to a good one when it comes. They have the good old Missouri faculty of wanting to be "shown." We don't "talk" about things happening, or describe how a [illegible] actually happened, [illegible] completely, [illegible]

A very young [illegible] was discovered by D. W. Griffith in the production of "The Birth of a Nation."

Y. Herald
Apr. 13, 1915

...ers is a lay after the ...
...Attention to "The ...
...in the Liberty Theatre ...
...the scene of the assassination ...
...n drama. This picture will con...
...finitely as the attraction in the ...
...Theatre.

...E DEMOCRAT
...Louis, Mo.
APR 15 1915

...Griffith predicts that there will ...
...ving-picture shows in the fu...
...r which people will pay $5 a ...
Mr. Griffith's motto is a quo... from Puck.

...O-L HERALD
...OUISVILLE KY
APR 1 1 191

...cipline Versus Hysterics

...Y ADA PATTERSON

...k I saw a New York ...
...two and a half hours ...
...ne of that marvelous last word in ...
...tures, "The Birth of a Nation." ...
...ous had just cause for ...
...been a mistake about the ...
...ents. Whether her secretary had ...
...ending the order, whether the ...
...on a stool before the box office ...
...the theater had made it, no one ...
...did, nor did it seem ...
...that the house was full said ...
...'s sat let's for her. If she had ...
...in dungeon no one could ...
...her. She had set aside the ...
...her crowded life to enjoy the ...
...ing spectacle, and that woman's ...
...robbed her of the pleasure ...
...her displeasure.

...k you, that woman did? She ...
...s and a half hours and watched ...
...nce. She made the last of a ...
...s and that with an years of her ...
...eless emotion or in regardless ...
...blunder had been made and all ... the British Encyclopedia would ...
...ced an elephant's chair at her ...
...quarter of a century ago she ...
...swept from the theater ...
...ure of My Lady Disdain. She ...
...ous nature. Great wealth has ...
...that trend of her nature, but a ...
...h woman has. She had learned ...
...perative necessity. If not with ...
...at least in silence. Her house ...
...e for tyranny. Her club life ...
...ic. Experience in women's ...
...vaccination. Either it takes ...
It has a beneficent effect or ...
...time vs. hysterics. The great ...
New York will be an object ...
...n. club life is doing for the ...
...club women.

...Bureau in the World ...

...York City
APR 3 1915

...ut one of exceptional ability ...
...ith in "Bobby" Harron. In ...
...on plays the striking part of ...

...ier who kills in battle ...
...from the South. Ven...
...day which finds him ...
...nt here represented. ...
...for a plunge off a ...
...er, and as the season ...
...as a trifle chilly, ...
...d to plead for a little ...
...artan George Sieg... ... said, "Go!"—and ...
...e scene actually re... ...
leap, Harron took ... water. That night ...
home it was neces... ...
...her to administer re... ... form of hot lemonade ...
...d flannel, in order that ...
shape to report at the ...
...ng.

...

...

...

APRIL 12, 1915

[illegible] Lewis
[illegible] Gish
Elmer Clifton
Robert Harron
[illegible] Siegmann
Walter Long
Mary Alden
[illegible] Henaberry
[illegible] de Grasse
Howard Gaye
Donald Crisp
William de Vaull
Jennie Lee

[illegible] ROBINSON.

[illegible] masterpiece [illegible] W. Griffith com- [illegible] me with [illegible] it is an almost im- [illegible] as a typewriter [illegible] its conclusion [illegible] review of it. [illegible] years I have been [illegible] has a play taken [illegible] consciousness that the [illegible] "The Clansman" has, [illegible] or a week hence, I [illegible] a coherent, com- [illegible] of it, but not now. [illegible] "The Birth of [illegible] the very last word in [illegible] It is the most mar- [illegible] drama, based on his- [illegible] has ever been pro- [illegible] set a standard that will [illegible] up to for many [illegible] America. The cast- [illegible] there is but one [illegible] and that is hardly worth [illegible] It is the portrait of Lin- [illegible] to be not quite as [illegible] one's mental picture of [illegible] that does not detract from [illegible] merely served to [illegible] the skillful makeup of the [illegible] The work of Henry [illegible] Marsh is beyond all [illegible] settings and locations [illegible] true to type and are [illegible] the infinite and painstak- [illegible] detail that marks [illegible] the greatest of all [illegible] The photography is [illegible] it speaks for it- [illegible]

[illegible] of the production is [illegible] eloquent sermon for world [illegible] I have ever "seen" or ever [illegible] or hear.

[illegible] "The Clansman" is based [illegible] Thomas Dixon Jr. and [illegible] was arranged by Mr. Grif- [illegible] E. Woods to the fol- [illegible]

[illegible] brought to Amer- [illegible] England ships and sold by [illegible] to the south. [illegible] plous [illegible] the traffic.

[illegible] great parliamentary leader, [illegible] we call Austin Stoneman, is ris- [illegible] power in the house of represen- [illegible] Her brothers are planning a [illegible] in Piedmont, S. C., where live the [illegible] numerous old friends—the family con- [illegible] of Bennie, his two sisters, [illegible] father, and two brothers. True [illegible] their promise the Stoneman boys [illegible] Piedmont, where the elder brother [illegible] falls in love with the elder Cameron [illegible] while Bennie Cameron falls in love [illegible] a picture of Elsie Stoneman, [illegible] he has never met.

The president signs the proclamation [illegible] his first call for volunteers comes. [illegible] Stoneman boys leave for the [illegible] as do the Cameron boys. On the [illegible] battlefield the chums, the younger [illegible] Cameron and Stoneman sons, meet [illegible] once again and die in each other's [illegible]

In Piedmont war has scarred the [illegible] The Camerons sell their last [illegible] and dearest possession to aid the fall- [illegible] cause of the south.

[illegible] the north Elsie Stoneman goes as [illegible] nurse to the military hospital at [illegible] Washington. Cameron lies near death [illegible] the military hospital at Washington, [illegible] and is nursed by Elsie. Cameron is to [illegible] hanged upon his recovery, as a [illegible] guerrilla, but Elsie and his mother se- [illegible] his pardon by Lincoln. Cameron [illegible] returns home and the south goes [illegible] work to rebuild its failed fortunes, [illegible] under Lincoln's fostering hand. Then [illegible] comes Lincoln's assassination and [illegible] Stoneman finds himself in supreme [illegible] power. His protege, Silas Lynch, a [illegible] mulatto, he chooses as the leader of [illegible] the blacks and sends him south to or- [illegible] ganize and wield the power of the [illegible] black vote.

[illegible] The whites are disfranchised and [illegible] Camerons confer with their fellow [illegible] kins as to what shall be done. Lynch [illegible] elected lieutenant governor and now [illegible] love looks high and he aspires to [illegible] hand of Elsie Stoneman in mar- [illegible]

[illegible] Beaming Frame

D. W. Griffith's production, "The Birth of a Nation," continues the [illegible] attraction at the season in New York at the Liberty Theatre. The weekly [illegible] averaged $14,000, which is [illegible] the capacity of the theatre. [illegible] last Friday's presentation [illegible] took on an added interest, it being the fiftieth anniversary of General Lee's surrender to General Grant at Appomattox, April 9, 1865. When the reproduction of this scene was flashed upon the screen the audience rose and stood impressively quiet.

Apr. 14, 1915. N. Y. Eve. Sun.

The power of the motion picture to present events of historic value is shown with peculiar significance at this time in D. W. Griffith's photographic production, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Liberty Theatre. Fifty years ago to-night Abraham Lincoln attended a gala performance at Ford's Theatre, Washington, D. C., in commemoration of the close of the Civil War. Less than two hours after he entered the playhouse President Lincoln was carried out mortally wounded. He died the next morning. The theatre has passed from view forever, but this tragedy lives for those who are interested in the study of it. In Griffith's picture the scene of the assassination has been reproduced and is shown as distinctly through the perspective of half a century as if it had been registered at the time.

n CITIZEN

ress: Brooklyn, N. Y.

APR 14 1915

The power of the motion picture to present events of historic value is shown with peculiar significance at this time in D. W. Griffith's photographic production "The Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty Theatre. Fifty years ago tonight Abraham Lincoln attended a gala performance at Ford's Theatre, Washington, D. C., in commemoration of the close of the Civil War. Less than two hours after he entered the playhouse President Lincoln was carried out, mortally wounded. He died the next morning.

The theatre has passed from view forever, but this tragedy lives for those who are interested in the study of it. In Griffith's picture the scene of the assassination has been reproduced and is shown as distinctly through the perspective of half a century as if it had been registered at the time.

Journal of Commerce. N. Y. C. Apr. 14, 1915

The power of the motion picture to present events of historic value is shown with peculiar significance at this time in D. W. Griffith's production "The Birth of a Nation," at the Liberty Theatre. Fifty years ago to-night, Abraham Lincoln was shot in Ford's Theatre, Washington. In Griffith's picture the scene of the assassination has been reproduced and is shown as distinctly through the perspective of half a century as if it had been registered at the time.

Press. N. Y. C. Apr. 14, 1915.

The scene of the assassination of President Lincoln in "The Birth of a Nation," now showing in the Liberty Theatre, will be of especial interest today, which marks the fiftieth anniversary of that tragedy.

N. Y. Telegraph. Apr. 14,

Films to the Government.

D. W. Griffith, the producer of "The Birth of a Nation," is preparing a special set of films of that picture to be deposited in the Congressional library and to remain one of the records of the Government. The film will differ from the ordinary films of commerce in that it will be made of a more enduring composition.

American N. Y. Apr. 14, 1915

Lincoln's Death Shown by Film

THE power of the motion picture to present events of historic value is shown with peculiar significance at this time in D. W. Griffith's photographic production, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Liberty Theatre.

Fifty years ago to-night Abraham Lincoln attended a gala performance at Ford's Theatre, Washington, D. C., in commemoration of the close of the Civil War. Less than two hours after he had entered the playhouse, President Lincoln was carried out, mortally wounded. He died the next morning. The theatre has passed from view forever, but this tragedy lives for those who are interested in the study of it. In Griffith's picture the scene of the assassination has been reproduced and is shown as distinctly through the perspective of half a century as if it had been registered at the time.

N. Y. Herald. Apr. 14

Notes of the Stage.

Fifty years ago to-night in Ford's Theatre, Washington, D. C., President Lincoln was shot. The scene in all its realism will be shown in the motion picture "The Birth of a Nation" in the Liberty Theatre.

RECORD

dress

WILKES-BARRE, PA.

Apr. 14, 1915

APR 1

MOTION PICTURE OF MURDER

Students of history who have seen that marvelous motion picture story the Birth of a Nation, which baffles description and even makes the imagination blubble, will remember how intensely dramatic was the reproduction of the scene of the assassination. Ford's theatre was reproduced, the boxes in which the presidential party sat were accurately placed and as the motion picture unrolls one sees from the gallery box the heads of the thronged audience below, the stage and the right hand boxes. It is the past brought back. Even the draped flag at the president's box is not forgotten. One sees the play progressing, and the actors in the midst of the scene which was on, just past 10 o'clock, when the shot was fired. The president can be plainly seen entering his box, the handclapping and handkerchief waving in the audience can be seen, and the gaunt figure of Lincoln as he rises and bows to the plaudits. Naturally one forgets the stage and rivets his eyes on the box. He can see a figure creep from the back of that box—see the puff of smoke, see Lincoln's head droop forward, see the occupants of the box rush to the victim.

And intent on following the scene and how wonderfully it follows the history, he sees Booth, fallen on the stage, rising and waving his arms, the wild commotion in the house, as if a hoarse cry had gone up articulate and fierce. He sees Booth dash backward and disappear while the actors stood as if petrified. But singularly enough he does not see whether Booth jumped from the box or how he got to the stage. That second or two is a blank. The reason is of course that he is watching Lincoln. In the audience of fifty years ago the realization did not instantly come of the extent of the tragedy and hence no doubt most of those in front distinctly saw Booth drop from the box.

N. Y. Commercial N. Y. Apr. 14, 1915

The power of the motion picture to present events of historic value is shown with peculiar significance at this time in "The Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty. Fifty years ago tonight Abraham Lincoln attended a performance at Ford's Theatre, Washington, where he fell by an assassin's bullet. The theatre has passed from view forever, but this tragedy lives for those who are interested in the study of it. The scene of the assassination has been reproduced and is shown as distinctly through the perspective of half a century as if it had been registered at the time.

Dramatic Mirror N. Y. Apr. 14, 1915

After a run of eight crowded weeks, it is announced that "The Clansman" will be taken off the screen at Clune's Auditorium, to make way for the long advertised production of Thomas Ince's "Sign of the Rose," with George Nehan and company playing the finale on the stage. The return date of the great Griffith picture already is being arranged, however, as Los Angeles has had far from its fill.

HARTFORD (Conn.) POST
APRIL 14, 1915

FIVE DOLLAR MOVIES?

David W. Griffith, a leading figure in the moving picture world, declares in an Indianapolis News that within the next three or four years living pictures will be produced at which the price of admission will be $5 and $6. In support of his assertion he points out that a few years ago an expenditure of $500 on a single film was thought to be as much as the business would stand, and five cents was considered the best price that could be asked at a theater where the only attraction was pictures. Then came the $10,000 picture, for which theater managers asked and obtained 50 cents. He is now exhibiting a picture in New York which cost $200,000, and he is asking $2 for a seat. The public is not only paying the price, but it is buying tickets from speculators for as much as $5. "And when you can put on a picture that will cost $2,000,000 to produce, the public will be willing to pay $5 for a seat for it," he adds.

He predicts that in time the melodrama will entirely disappear from the list of regular plays. The people will not be satisfied with views of little corners of the world and of life. They will demand great, sweeping scenes impossible of production on any stage. In the last picture produced by Mr. Griffith he used 18,000 people and 1,500 horses and 7,000 words of explanatory matter, including four pages from Woodrow Wilson's history of the United States. The people, he argues, can get history better in this way than through books. And if they can get history they can get literature and drama without end.

Of course, allowance must be made for the enthusiasm of a man who has proved his ability to [illegible] with pictures [illegible]

Morning Telegraph N. Y. Apr. 13, 1915

To Picturize George Welty.

Inspired by A. J. Simmons, who is related indirectly to the drama, a group of men interested in maintaining the historical data of this country are promoting a stock company to produce in film form the life of George Welty, in whose honor the Century Theatre was named.

Mr. Welty himself, now that the firm of the Liebler Company is no more, is engaged in the motion picture industry, thus encompassing the entire gamut of the amusement field. From the days of strolling players, before railroads had been established, he has step by step, played a part in the evolution of the theatrical business, finally rounding up his career triumphantly with a dip into films.

Mr. Simmons and his associates regret exceedingly that in a measure the picture, "The Birth of a Nation," forestalls their scheme to present in film form the history of this country with Welty as the central figure, but they believe that the theme has not been exhausted, and that by keeping Welty the conspicuous character throughout all the vicissitudes of his long career, they will be able to produce a still more comprehensive picture.

By tracing Mr. Welty's life back to Dixon, Ill., a community in which he was the first white child to be born, the producers will have an opportunity to touch on Indian life, the Mexican war and the Civil and Spanish wars—thus epitomizing the history of our country through several generations.

Press. N. Y. Apr. 13, 1915

The popularity of "The Birth of a Nation," now in its seventh week in the Liberty Theatre, continues unabated.

DENVER, SAN FRANCISCO
CABLE ADDRESS: CLIPBURO
CLIPPING FROM Angeles Ex.
4-13-

"The Birth of a Nation," Griffith's screen version of "The Clansman," is in its eighth week at theaters in New York and Los Angeles, and still attracts thousands.

Evening Telegram. N. Y. Apr. 13, 1915

"The Birth of a Nation" is at the height of its popularity at the Liberty Theatre. Flaubert's "Salambo" is a superb pageant at the Hippodrome. There are five comedies and dramas of the screen at the Vitagraph this week. Victor Moore is an entertaining star in "Sachs" at the Strand. Maurice Hewlett's "The Jade" makes an excellent [illegible]

STATE (Mont.) REVIEW
APRIL 4, 1915

VARIETY
New York City

APR 8 1915

Claxton Wilstach, aged 51 years, went to Boston to take charge of press work there for "The Birth of a Nation," was found dead in his room in the Hotel Georgian, Boston, on Apr. 26, death resulting from the rupture of a blood vessel near his heart. His widow, Minnie Allen, has been in Danville for several years, suffering with Wilstach was a brother of the late Frank J. Wilstach. Last winter he was aged the Punch and Judy theatre in New York. The body was taken to Boston, Long Island, for burial.

EVENING NEWS
Newark, N. J.

14 1915

Washington, D. C.

APR 16 1915

Subjects Banned in Social Discussion Usually Have No Place in Film

The criticism to which the great epic, "The Birth of the Nation" has been subjected in New York and elsewhere—despite the fact that it is probably the greatest of all photo-plays—is a most interesting question with regard to the motion picture industry. Why is it necessary for producers to utilize controversial themes for their plays?

People of Washington and the brothers section of the country appreciate the controversy that was occasioned by "The Birth of a Nation." We know it is a dramatization of Thomas Dixon's novels—at least the latter half of it. We know that it deals in a dramatic way with the period made such books as the "Clansman" possible—but we cannot get the point of view of the people who have written of the century that has passed since the civil war. We know it was a period of bitterness and hatred. The characters were most real and appealing. Appreciation and consideration of the story of the Dixon is therefore confined to the section of the country. In other sections they fail absolutely to grasp it. And they criticize it for perfect honesty and justice.

Producers, in view of the fact that motion pictures are made to be seen in all sections of the country, in motion picture production should be made the nation as a whole. It doesn't seem to be good policy to stage a play on any subject that is controversial and confine kids for popularity with all types and classes.

There is no industry that we know of that has a broader field in which to work than the motion picture industry. There are so many thousands of books that have been written which could be turned into motion pictures. There are so many more thousands of stories yet unwritten which could be made into photo-plays. There are so many themes that are not stale stories at all but which would make good plays and there are so many subjects that have neither novelty nor dramatic value which, nevertheless, could be prepared for the screen. There is no medium for the discussion of great public questions that would be of as great value to us to offer such well-staged plays as the motion pictures. Surely there has been constant discussion of the tenement house question, the housing conditions, personal matter of personal hygiene, the home and the home, the pure milk and pure foods, the matters of cruelty to men and to animals, the social questions that come up from time and revolve about what is government.

All these can be treated on the motion picture plays that tell a story with a conspicuous moral dealing the subject discussed, or by giving practical examples of conditions that are to be corrected. With pictures of places where conditions have been corrected, showing the difference.

There is no book in the world that is likely read and so little applied as the Bible. Some one has said that the Bible contains the plot of every novel and every play that was ever written. It is full of romance, of poetry, of tragedy and eloquence. Plays could be made from Bible stories without departing a whit from the text which would be tremendously instructive and might get more people to read the great book intelligently.

The history of every country is filled with romance. From the history of the United States thousands of picture plays could be made, without touching the civil war period which might arouse feeling, that would give a much clearer idea of the nation's greatness and why came of it to a great mass of people who would never take the time to study out the moral themselves.

All of these things are adapted to motion picture plays—real dramatic entertainments. We have not touched upon the purely educational subjects, the scientific studies, the geographical lessons. We simply wish to deal with those subjects about which semi-fiction plays could be written. And we have not touched the literature of the world which lies open to whoever cares to make use of it.

With such a field—why try to seek sensation in controversy? That sort of business has never paid in the long run. It brings an immediate return that looks big—but it does not keep up. It cannot keep up. The greater the sensation the quicker the people grow tired of it. So why not try to confine the films to a more legitimate and conservative plane.

Amusement is the most democratic mental attitude of the people. They are bound to select their own kind—no matter how insistent the manager of the entertainment is, to induce them to go to his show, and no matter how blatantly it is advertised. They will patronize the manager they have learned to know supplies them the sort of thing they want. Most subjects banned in social discussion, however, should never be utilized on the screen—for exactly the same reasons that put them without the pale of social conversation. G. K.

N. Y. Variety Apr. 16, 1915

"The Birth of a Nation" (Liberty) (7th Week). Still attracting capacity audiences. Holy Week's gross, $14,200. With the house on a rental leaves a neat profit for the film producers.

The Billboard, Cincinnati, Ohio. Apr. 17, 1915

GRIFFITH FILMS POPULAR

New York, April 7.—Since The Birth of a Nation has opened to such a phenomenal run in New York it has been decided by the Wico Booking offices to release two of Griffith's other masterpieces, The Avenging Conscience and The Escape. With one or two exceptions neither of these features have been released to exhibitors in New York, the Strand Theater and a few others having played The Avenging Conscience, whereas The Escape has been successfully released at the Cort Theater.

By releasing these films at this time when New York is Griffith mad the exhibitors get the advantage of a twofold advertising medium as the initials, "D. W.," have become as well known to the film world as The Birth of a Nation itself.

The Wico Booking Offices are handling the interests of this Griffith production and booking through the Eastern territory direct to the exhibitor.

N. Y. Globe Apr. 17, 1915

LIBERTY.—"The Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty Theatre starts in to-morrow upon its third month. Nearly 125,000 people have seen the picture, and the receipts have already passed the $100,000 mark in New York City.

Evening World, N. Y. Apr. 17.

...h of Nation' Starts 3d Month

...ility with which motion pictures can paint history has been graphically shown the past week in "The Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty Theatre. It is just fifty years since some of the events of American history associated with the civil war took place. In this comprehensive screen drama Griffith has been able to make these stirring occurrences live as faithfully as if one were participating in the actual events. The production starts in to-morrow upon its third month and is going as strong as ever. Its success here has been duplicated in Boston, Los Angeles and San Francisco, and plans are now shaping for a Chicago production. Nearly 125,000 people have seen the picture, and the receipts have already passed the $100,000 mark in this city. This is the best of any theatrical offering for this period.

Evening Mail, N. Y. Apr. 17, 1915

Moving Picture New York City

APR 17 1915

...Griffith star, Lillian Gish, whose recent portrayal of "Elsie Stoneman" in D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" is one that will live forever, and the same spirit and enthusiasm that she applied to "The Birth of a Nation" Miss Gish enacted the part of "Lady Barbara" in "The Escape," "Home, Sweet Home," and "The Birth of a Nation," that she is a finished artist of the photo-...

MOVING PICTURE WORLD
New York City

APR 17 1915

"THE AVENGING CONSCIENCE" AND "THE ESCAPE" RELEASED.

Since "The Birth of a Nation" has opened to such a phenomenal run in New York, it has been decided by the Wico Booking Offices to release two of Griffith's other masterpieces, "The Avenging Conscience" and "The Escape." With one or two exceptions, neither of these features have been released to exhibitors in New York, the Strand theater and a few others having played "The Avenging Conscience," and "The Escape" has been shown at the Cort theater. By releasing these films at this time when New York is Griffith mad, the exhibitor gets the advantage of a twofold advertising medium, as the initials, D. W., have become as well known to the film world as "The Birth of a Nation" itself.

From MOTION PICTURE NEWS
Address: New York City
Date APR 17 1915

"BIRTH OF A NATION" BEGINS FIFTH WEEK

D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" starts its fifth week of unprecedented success at the Liberty theatre, New York, with two performances Sunday afternoon and night. The artistic scope and the astonishing details of this work, in which the master hand of Griffith is apparent at every turn, have impressed New York theatre-goers as nothing the season has provided to date.

The great battle scenes, the historic incidents of the war, the assassination of President Lincoln and the wonderful runs of the Ku Klux Klans are the high points of interest in the most absorbing drama of the decade.

The comprehensive and atmospheric manner in which the thrilling theme is presented and the enlargement of this appeal in the musical accompaniment of the big orchestral effects, so cleverly made a vital part of the story, are all further points of the most impressive kind.

From MOTION PICTURE NEWS
Address: New York City
Date APR 17 1915

WICO BOOKING TWO GRIFFITH PICTURES

SINCE "The Birth of a Nation" has opened to such a phenomenal run in New York, it has been decided by the Wico Booking Offices to release two of Griffith's other masterpieces, "The Avenging Conscience" and "The Escape." With one or two exceptions, neither of these features have been released to exhibitors in New York, the Strand theatre and a few others having played "The Avenging Conscience," whereas "The Escape" has been successfully released at the Cort Theatre.

By releasing these films at this time the exhibitor gets the advantage of a twofold advertising medium, as the initials, D. W., have become as well known to the film world as "The Birth of a Nation" itself.

The Wico Booking Offices are handling the interests of this Griffith production and booking the film through the eastern territory direct to the exhibitor.

From TIMES
Address: Brooklyn, N. Y.
APR 17 1915

"The Birth of a Nation."

The facility with which motion pictures can paint history has been graphically shown the past week in the big Griffith epic, "The Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty Theatre. It is just fifty years since some of the memorable events of American history associated with the Civil War took place. In this comprehensive screen drama Mr. Griffith has been able to make these stirring occurences live as faithfully as if one were participating in the actual events.

The production starts in to-morrow upon its third month, and is going as strong as ever. Its success here has been duplicated in Boston, Los Angeles and San Francisco, and plans are now shaping for a Chicago production. Nearly 125,000 people have seen the picture, and the receipts have already passed the $100,000 mark in this city.

Evening Globe, N. Y. Apr. 17, 1915

ELSIE STONEMAN AND THE SENTIMENTAL SENTRY "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" Liberty

Since the success of "The Birth of a Nation" there has been a renewal of the demand for some of Mr. Griffith's earlier successes, such as "Judith of Bethulia," "The Avenging Conscience," "The Escape" and others.

Evening Mail, N. Y. Apr. 17, 1915

Evening World, N. Y. Apr. 17

"CAPT. COURTESY" STRAND'S PHOTO-PLAY.

The Strand Theatre is adding an extra attraction to its programme in the presentation of Salisbury's Wild Life pictures, showing interesting and exciting hunting and fishing scenes and other forms of outdoor sports. Dr. Salisbury will in person take the audience with him through his three and a half years' travels. The photo-play feature for the coming week is "Capt. Courtesy," a stirring drama of the early days in California under American miners. Dustin Farnum will be seen in the title role. There will also be a Keystone comedy, war pictures and musical features.

Mae Marsh, seen in the role of Mara Cameron in D. W. Griffith's motion picture production, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Liberty Theatre, is referred to as "the ...

Mr. and Mrs. Mark Murphy, who are featured prominently in the current program at Poli's theater, are a bigger hit than ever in their popular skit, "The Coal Strike." Mr. and Mrs. Murphy are known as "the evergreen favorites" and their popularity has been well merited.

"The Fascinating Flirts," a musical comedy in tabloid form, features Phil Adams, Jack Walsh and a chorus of girls. The dialogue is brilliant and the songs, dances, staging and costuming is most effective.

"Beulah," a six-part filmization of Augusta J. Evans' novel, is featured in the photoplay program. "Beulah" introduces Henry B. Walthal, who is starred in "The Birth of a Nation."

Morning Picture World, N. Y. Apr. 17, 1915

Again we say a word for "The Clansman." ... weeks. Packed. Also "Hypocrites" has done ... every six shows a day packed. Manager Freidlander of the Majestic inaugurated the new plan at the big Majestic theater by putting on a feature, Bayard Veillers' big play, "The Fight." The first run was made at 11 o'clock Easter Sunday. The policy of the show house is to exhibit only big reels of big features.

Nine solid three weeks,

CLIPPING FROM Journal
Columbus Ohio
4-18-15

Recently we printed a prophecy made by David Griffith, the producer of "The Birth of a Nation," to the effect that some day the motion picture would completely usurp the place of the spoken drama, etc. On the heels of that we came across another little prophecy, this by Sheldon Cheney, the author of a book on "The New Movement in the Theater." And this is Mr. Cheney's prophecy:

In a very few years the new movement in the theater has germinated and budded, so that today there is very definite promise of such a flowering as the drama has not known since the days of Queen Elizabeth. In remarkable strides, the theater is catching up with life, and—it is quite as important, though generally forgotten—with art. Within a decade there has been infused into the old body more new blood than for three centuries before.

And so, as Rabbi Ben Ezra asks, "Which shall my soul believe?"—no [illegible] drama at all, or a great renaissance? Perhaps both, first one and then the other.

JOURNAL
COLUMBUS, O.
APR 18 1915

BROOKLYN, (N. Y.) CITIZEN
APR 18 1915

STANDARD UNION
Brooklyn, N. Y.
APR 18 1915

Manhattan Theatres

LIBERTY, MANHATTAN—The facility with which motion pictures can paint history has been graphically shown the past week in the big Griffith epic, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Liberty Theatre, Manhattan. It is just fifty years since some of the memorable events of American history associated with the Civil War took place. In this comprehensive screen drama, Griffith has been able to make these stirring occurrences live as faithfully as if one were participating in the actual events. The production starts in to-day upon its third month and is going as strong as ever, having aroused more interest than any offering of the current season on the Manhattan stage. Its success here has been duplicated in Boston, Los Angeles and San Francisco, and plans are now shaping for a Chicago production. Nearly 125,000 people have seen the picture, and the receipts have already passed the $100,000 mark in Manhattan. This is the biggest record of any theatrical offering in Manhattan for this period.

Sun. N.Y.C. Apr. 18

D. W. Griffith's spectacle of the civ war and the reconstruction period o the South continues with unabated in terest at the Liberty Theatre, wher capacity houses are still the rul rather than the exception.

World. N.Y.C. Apr 18

At the Liberty Theatre the picture ve-sion of "The Clansman," called "The Birth of a Nation," continues to attract large audiences.

N. Y. Telegraph. Apr. 18.

The facility with which motion pictures can paint history has been graphically shown the past week in the big Griffith epic, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Liberty Theatre. It is just fifty years since some of the memorable events of American history associated with the Civil War took place. In this comprehensive screen drama, Griffith has been able to make these stirring occurrences live as faithfully as if one were participating in the actual events.

N.Y. American Apr 18. 1915: American

MIRIAM COOPER in "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" LIBERTY

EAGLE
Brooklyn, N. Y.

The facility with which motion pictures can paint history has been graphically shown the past week in the big Griffith epic, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Liberty Theatre. It is just fifty years since some of the memorable events of American history, associated with the Civil War, took place. In this comprehensive screen drama, Griffith has been able to make these stirring occurrences live as faithfully as if one were participating in the actual events.

The production starts in to-day upon its third month and is going as strong as ever, having aroused more interest than any offering of the current season on the New York stage. Its success here has been duplicated in Boston, Los Angeles and San Francisco, and plans are now shaping for a Chicago production. Nearly 125,000 people have seen the picture, and the receipts have already passed the $100,000 mark in New York City. This is the biggest record of any theatrical offering in New York for this period.

N.Y. Herald-Apr. 18, 15

Fifty years to a day after the assassination of President Lincoln, the anniversary brought attention to "The Birth of a Nation" in the Liberty Theatre last week because the scene of the assassination in all its realism is shown in this extraordinary film drama. The picture will continue indefinitely as the attraction in the Liberty Theatre.

New York Times Apr. 18, 1915

So remarkable and elaborate a photoplay as "The Birth of a Nation," which is now drawing crowded houses in half a dozen cities, is familiarly used to instance how far motion pictures have gone, but it might be quite as aptly used to suggest how far they have still to go. For all its enormous cost and care, for all its impressive pageantry of arms and men, it is, we may hope, not the last word in motion pictures. It is simply the latest word. The photoplay, if not in its infancy, gives evidence of being still in its callow youth.

There are certain tricks of the trade the movie will outgrow. It will surely outgrow, for instance, that trick technically known as the "cut back," which shifts the scenes back and forth in the irresponsible and mischievous manner of the dancing spot of light reflected from the mirror in a small boy's hand. The film director, flushed with the realization that he could move about with a freedom unknown to the stage, has been so delighted with this liberty that he has indulged himself incontinently, without pausing to consider that he might be playing havoc with that precious element called tension. It is easy to predict that the cut back, and similar evidences of restlessness, will fade gradually from the screens, to be used only on special occasions to follow, say, such converging lines as Dickens traced so effectively when the three men gathered in Jasper's rooms on the night of Edwin Drood's disappearance, or as Barrie traced when, in the book, he followed through the thunderstorm the separate paths leading up the hill where the Lady Babbie and Gavin Dishart were being married.

But these are rather lofty comparisons, and a recent visit to several films shown hereabouts suggests forcibly that the analogies might be sought more properly in literature of another plane. For observe the tone that is given to "The Birth of a Nation" by the captions, or "flashes," that tell of the "poor bruised heart of the South," that speak of "the opal gates of death," and make such utterances as this:

"The Love strain is heard by fond hearts above the land's miserere."

They sound as if they had been written by Harold Bell Wright in an off moment and been revised by Florence Barclay.

You might make a dozen predictions as to the work of the film director of the future. You may be sure, for example, that he will not jostle so many people into a scene that the thread of the story is lost in the crowd, nor will he, in preparing an old stage favorite for the screen, toil dutifully to get so much into the scenario that the result is such mystifying confusion as afflicted the early part of "The Heart of Maryland." He will go on developing the resources that are not open to the stage, such vistas of Rome as enrich the background of "The Eternal City," which has come to the Astor, and such glimpses of great armies on the march and in the field as reward a visit to "The Birth of a Nation."

Telegram N.Y. Apr 18, 1915

D.W. GRIFFITH PRODUCER OF "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" LIBERTY THEATRE

BUNE
New York City
APR 18 1915

The facility with which motion pictures can paint history has been graphically shown the past week in the big Griffith epic, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Liberty Theatre. It is just fifty years since some of the memorable events of American history associated with the Civil War took place. In this comprehensive screen drama, Griffith has been able to make these stirring occurrences live as faithfully as if one were participating in the actual events. The production starts in to-day upon its third month and is going as strong as ever.

BROOKLYN (N. Y.) EAGLE
APR 18 1915

"Nearly 125,000 people have seen "The Birth of a Nation," at the Liberty Theatre, New York City, and the receipts have already passed the $100,000 mark in New York City."

SENTINEL
MILWAUKEE, WIS.
APR 18 1915

"The Birth of a Nation," David W. Griffith's mammoth photoplay, now at the Liberty theater, New York, has developed a new brand of motion picture fans. Some of them have already seen the play three or four times, visiting the theater to delve deep into the history which the picture represents. Others go to study the technical processes involved in its production.

The spectacle, seemingly, does not pall by repetition, but rather presents so much material and detail that each visit brings out something that has not been noticed before.

Although it takes a quick eye to catch many of the apparent trifles in the picture, their importance was never better illustrated, and it is said that 200,000 details, all of them historically correct, figure in it. These include incidents in the careers of President Lincoln and Gen. Lee as they are thrown upon the screen, as well as little touches in the lives of the clansmen, [illegible]

LOS ANGELES (Cal.) TIMES
APRIL 25, 1915

President Lincoln, "Birth of a Nation" Liberty

N.Y. Press: Apr 18 1915

STAATSZEITUNG
New York City.
APR 18 1915

Telegram. N.Y. Apr. 18.

At the Liberty Theatre "The Birth of a Nation," with its big epic story told in moving pictures, continues to attract attention and provoke discussion.

Vitagraph [illegible] entertaining [illegible] at the Strand. Maurice Hewlett's "The Jade" makes an excellent [illegible] Wanderbilder.

D. W. Griffith's sensationell großartige Wanderbilderserie "The Birth of a Nation" und Thomas Dixon's berühmter Roman "The Clansman" [illegible]

PITTSBURGH (Pa.) DISPATCH
APRIL 18, 1915

"The Clansman" and "Hypocrites" are breaking records in Los Angeles, Cal.

Among the good things offered for release by Vitagraph-Lubin-Selig-Essanay is Charles Hoyt's "A Texas Steer," with Tyrone Power in the leading role.

...W. D. Griffith has given the public the greatest motion picture of all time in the stupendous production of "The Birth of a Nation." After seeing this picture one will have to admit that the spectacular effects, the photography, the historic settings and the acting are above criticism. Mr. Griffith surely has a wonderful insight into human nature, as shown by the little lovable things that he brings out in this great picture. The detail that is worked out in this offering is surely the work of a master mind. The shooting of Lincoln is shown with such marvellous realism and accuracy, even down to the minutest detail, that you would almost believe that you were one of the audience that night, cheering as he took his place in the reserved box and mourning as he was carried away dying, a martyr to the cause.

The battle scenes and the gathering of the clansmen, in which thousands of men and horses participated, were flashed upon the screen vividly, and to see those clansmen, arrayed in weird and ghostly attire made for them by the loyal women of the South, come dashing out of the night, through stream and over hill to the rescue of an outraged land is a thrilling sight that tingles your blood and makes you want to shout out, so great is your excitement.

A facsimile of Lincoln signing the document that calls for 75,000 volunteers and the surrender of General Lee are shown, and the makeup of the characters in these scenes is very near perfect, especially that of Lincoln. Mr. Griffith has assembled a cast that fit their parts to perfection, and the acting is superb throughout the entire twelve reels. Henry Walthill as the Little Colonel, Lillian Gish as Elsie Stoneman and May Marsh as the Little Colonel's beloved sister do wonderful work. The affection of the Little Colonel and his sister for each other is brought out beautifully. This production was eight months in the making, with an expenditure of about half a million dollars. It certainly is wonderful that man could direct such a big spectacle, and Mr. Griffith deserves the greatest of credit for this masterpiece of the moving picture industry.

N.Y.C. Herald Apr. 20, 1915

LIBERTY THEATRE.—The usual large audiences attended the matinee and evening performances of "The Birth of a Nation."

N.Y.C. Press. Apr 19

Crowded houses are the rule this week at the Liberty Theatre, where "The Birth of a Nation" is being shown.

N.Y.C. Morning Telegraph Apr 20, 1915

IT'S A TRULY GREAT EPIC.

"Birth of a Nation" Attracts Thousands at Liberty Theatre.

The facility with which motion pictures can paint history has been graphically shown the past week in the big Griffith epic, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Liberty Theatre. It is just fifty years since some of the memorable events of American history associated with the Civil War took place.

In this comprehensive screen drama, Griffith has been able to make these stirring occurrences live as faithfully as if one were participating in the actual events.

N.Y. Evening Telegram Apr 20, 1915

W. Griffith's gigantic spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Liberty, a great triumph of moving picture art, with big crowds and an epic story from American history.

N.Y. Sun Apr 25, 1915

One of the pictures which are always watched by large audiences twice a day is "The Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty Theatre. The great successful picture is to be seen simultaneously in Boston and other cities. It has been equally successful everywhere.

...ture." Mr. Griffith has given the public the greatest motion picture of all time in the stupendous production of "The Birth of a Nation." After seeing this picture one will have to admit that the spectacular effects, the photography, the historic settings and the acting are above criticism. Mr. Griffith surely has a wonderful insight into human nature, as shown by the little lovable things that he brings out in this great picture. The detail that is worked out in this offering is surely the work of a master mind. The shooting of Lincoln is shown with such marvellous realism and accuracy, even down to the minutest detail, that you would almost believe that you were one of the audience that night, cheering as he took his place in the reserved box and mourning as he was carried away dying, a martyr to the cause.

The battle scenes and the gathering of the clansmen, in which thousands of men and horses participated, were flashed upon the screen vividly, and to see those clansmen, arrayed in weird and ghostly attire made for them by the loyal women of the South, come dashing out of the night, through stream and over hill to the rescue of an outraged land is a thrilling sight that tingles your blood and makes you want to shout out, so great is your excitement.

A facsimile of Lincoln signing the document that calls for 75,000 volunteers and the surrender of General Lee are shown, and the makeup of the characters in these scenes is very near perfect, especially that of Lincoln. Mr. Griffith has assembled a cast that fit their parts to perfection, and the acting is superb throughout the entire twelve reels. Henry Walthill as the Little Colonel, Lillian Gish as Elsie Stoneman and May Marsh as the Little Colonel's beloved sister do wonderful work. The affection of the Little Colonel and his sister for each other is brought out beautifully. This production was eight months in the making, with an expenditure of about half a million dollars. It certainly is wonderful that man could direct such a big spectacle, and Mr. Griffith deserves the greatest of credit for this masterpiece of the moving picture industry.

...ing picture art, that it ...ets a new place in art.

...ent." Mr. Griffith has been able to make these stirring occurrences live as faithfully as if one were participating in the actual events

DRAMATIC NEWS
New York City
APR 24 1915

THE BIRTH OF A NATION

The facility with which motion pictures can paint history has been graphically shown the past week in the big Griffith epic, The Birth of a Nation, at the Liberty Theatre. It is just fifty years since some of the most memorable events of American history associated with the Civil War took place. In this comprehensive screen drama Griffith has been able to make these stirring occurrences live as faithfully as if one were participating in the actual events.

The production started on Sunday, April 18, upon its third month and is going as strong as ever, having aroused more interest than any offering of the current season on the New York stage. Its success here has been duplicated in Boston, Los Angeles and San Francisco, and plans are now shaping for a Chicago production. Nearly 125,000 people have seen the picture and the receipts have already passed the $100,000 mark in New York City. This is the biggest record of any theatrical offering in New York for this period.

SAN FRANCISCO (Cal.) EXAMINER
APRIL 29, 1915

[illegible] "The Clansman" [illegible] and again. The third and [illegible] week of the engagement begins [illegible]. The special music, ar[illegible] by Lloyd Brown and played [illegible] augmented orchestra, and the [illegible] of old Southern songs, add [illegible] to the entertainment.

SAN FRANCISCO (Cal.) CALL & POST
APRIL 29, 1915

"Clansman" Filmed at Cort Draws Well

"The Clansman, or the Birth of the Nation," continues in its popularity at the Cort Theater. The third and final week of the engagement will begin Sunday.

"The Clansman" is the most extraordinary motion picture that has been seen at the Cort. It is founded on the book by Thomas Dixon Jr. The pictures of the Battle of Petersburg, with the Union and Confederate soldiers fighting in the trenches, only a few hundred feet apart, with artillery in the distance and the shells bursting overhead, are thrilling. The pictures of the Ku Klux Klan show their thrilling rides.

SAN FRANCISCO (Cal.) CHRONICLE
APRIL 30, 1915

CLIPPING FROM Herald
Alameda Cal
5-6-15

LILLIAN GISH IN "THE CLANSMAN" COMING TO MACDONOUGH THEATER, OAKLAND.

LOS ANGELES (Cal.) TIMES
[illegible] 1915
4-27

[illegible] marked the [illegible] of [illegible] week of "The Clansman" at [illegible] Auditorium. [illegible] played to big business on [illegible] day, many persons who [illegible] the photoplay during its for[illegible] engagement returning to view it [illegible] or third time.

LOS ANGELES (Cal.) TIMES
APRIL 28, 1915

PICTURE AT CORT WILL CLOSE SOON

Farce at Imperial; Barricade at Portola; Dramatic Stock at the Wigwam.

"THE CLANSMAN" continues its popularity at the Cort Theater, and the third week, which will be the last, beginning next Sunday, promises to be the biggest of the engagement. The thrilling picture could remain at the Cort indefinitely, but the resumption of the regular dramatic season necessitates its close after next week. It will be followed by Henry W. Savage's elaborate production of "Sari."

The special music played in conjunction with the projection of the scenes of "The Clansman" adds greatly to the effectiveness of the gigantic motion picture production.

GRACE KINGSLEY

[illegible] Griffith, king of motion [illegible] has returned from [illegible] with laurels thick upon his [illegible] under that brow, as might [illegible] are some more new ideas [illegible] pictures.

[illegible] 12 motion picture has come [illegible] provided the producer delivers [illegible] said Mr. Griffith. "I mean [illegible] money and brains must be [illegible] Piedmont, pictures, if they are to [illegible] old friends—music, the lights, too, [illegible] Bennie, his attention in con[illegible] father, and two exhibition of pic[illegible] promise the [illegible] is to be taken to [illegible] Piedmont, where the [illegible] er, and will prob[illegible] in love with the [illegible] Gaiety, he says. [illegible] while Bennie Cameron, is the first ever [illegible] a picture of Elsie [illegible] dramatic crit[illegible] he has never met.

[illegible] the president signs the [illegible] he has another [illegible] his first call for volun[illegible] but refuses to [illegible] The Stoneman boys [illegible] "You may say [illegible] do the Cameron [illegible] hanticler," with [illegible] laughed. [illegible] Fairfield the chums,

SAN FRANCISCO (Cal.) BULLETIN
APRIL 28, 1915

[illegible]ITED WAR DRAMA IS MAGNET AT CORT

"THE CLANSMAN, OR THE BIRTH OF THE NATION" continues in its popularity at the Cort Theater, attracting capacity [illegible] at every performance. So [illegible] the appeal of the powerful [illegible] story that many persons [illegible] "The Clansman" again [illegible] this week [illegible] the Cort begins [illegible] of the scenes are [illegible] The Battle of Petersburg, with [illegible] Confederate soldiers [illegible] only a few [illegible] with artillery in the [illegible] shells bursting [illegible]

N.Y. Times Apr 27 15

CLAXTON WILSTACH DEAD.

One of Three Brothers Prominent in Theatrical Circles.

BOSTON, April 26.—Claxton Wilstach of New York, a theatrical traveling manager, was found dead in a hotel here today. The medical examiner said death probably was due to natural causes.

Claxton Wilstach was one of three brothers, all of whom have been prominent in theatrical circles for many years. Frank Wilstach, one of the brothers, has been the general press representative of E. H. Sothern on his last tours, and Paul, the other brother, has written a number of plays. The Wilstachs came from Lafayette, Ind., where the eldest brother, Walter, still lives.

Claxton Wilstach was in New York during the Winter as press representative of the Punch and Judy Theatre. When it closed a week ago he went to Boston to take charge of the exhibition of the film, "The Birth of a Nation," here. Mrs. Frank Wilstach said last night that her brother-in-law had not been well all Winter, and that while no definite information had been received she imagined death was due to neuralgia of the heart. Mr. Wilstach was 53 years old. He left a wife, a vaudeville actress, who is known on the stage as Miss Allen. She has been playing in the West, and is expected here today. Their home is at Laurelton, L. I.

N.Y. Sun. Apr 27,

Claxton Wilstach.

BOSTON, April 26.—Claxton Wilstach, who came here from New York last week to relieve Henry MacMahon as assistant manager and publicity agent for the photo play "The Birth of a Nation," was found dead this morning in his room in the Hotel Georgian. Medical Examiner Leary said that death resulted from the breaking of a blood vessel near the heart. Mr. Wilstach, who was about 42 years old, was for several years manager for Sothern and Marlowe. His brothers, Paul and Frank Wilstach, are well known in the theatrical world.

OAKLAND (Cal.) TRIBUNE
APRIL 25, 1915

"THE CLANSMAN" WILL COME TO MACDONOUGH

"The Clansman," noted film depicting the rebuilding of the south after the war, will play a return engagement in Oakland, beginning May 3, when it will be shown at the Macdonough theater. The film, now playing in San Francisco, [illegible] cleared to have been barred in [illegible] and on the ground that it [illegible] race prejudice, but [illegible]

J. Gazette, Ft. Wayne. Ind. May 3, 1916

In "The Outcast," four-part Mutual Masterpicture at the Lyric to-day

MILFORD (N. H.) CABINET
APRIL 23, 1915

The "Birth of a Nation" is the best advertised photo play that has ever been staged. With scenes eliminated or not it is sure to attract huge audiences in the future wherever it is produced. There is so much criticism, adverse and otherwise, of this film, that judgment as to its merits should be with held by all who have not seen it. The Outlook some weeks ago, before the objection to it arose, in discussing it, said the film was a wonderful piece of work but that the greatest criticism to it was that it was not true history. This is a severe criticism in itself. The many points of view and different angles at which the play is viewed indicates that the critics are far from unanimous as to its wholesomeness. It was a wise selection of a city for its first production. If it would not pass the censors in Boston it will not any where. If it is condemned in Boston its fate is sealed for success elsewhere.

OAKLAND (Cal.) TRIBUNE
APRIL 27, 1915

STIRRING DRAMA WILL BE SHOWN IN FILMS

"The Clansman," or "The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's spectacular film drama in [illegible] reels, is coming to the Macdonough for a three-weeks' stay, commencing Monday, May 10.

In this film, Mr. Griffith, who is conceded to be the world's foremost motion picture producer, with a keen sense of drama, mingles with his heroic story a powerfully simple love tale, comparable to that of Romeo and Juliet, mingled with events of the Civil war.

Nothing like this drama, it is said, could be shown on the speaking stage; nothing like it has ever been approached on the photo-drama stage. It is said to be overwhelming, delightful and educative.

Sun. May 1, 1915

LIBERTY—"The Birth of a Nation," now in its third month, continues one of the regular attractions to withstand the counter offerings of the spring showmen. It is claimed that Griffith's wonderful film has been seen by more people than anything of the kind ever brought out in the way of a regular theatrical presentation. The vast area of action it covers and its potential effects have created [illegible]

CLIPPING FROM LOS ANGELES

OAKLA

CLIP

LOS AN

TRIBUNE
New York City
Apr 25, 1915

[illegible] ON THE [illegible]

SAN BERNARDINO (Cal.) INDEX
APRIL 25, 1915

CLIPPING FROM Express
LOS ANGELES (Cal.) EXAMINER
MAY 1, 1915

[illegible] The Clansman [illegible] begin Monday afternoon at Clune's Auditorium [illegible] It is impossible to [illegible] greater interest being displayed [illegible] than [illegible] displayed in The Clansman, the marvelous production is an event in the history not only of the drama of the world, but of America, for it makes possible now what seemed an impossibility before. Important events in the world's history can now be placed before the public in an intelligent manner. The Clansman is the pioneer of all greater motion pictures, and D. W. Griffith apparently could not have selected a subject of greater interest to the public. It already has a hold on them that cannot be broken.

The Clansman has come to stay, and it will indeed have to be a wonderful subject that will arouse such a heart interest as has this production. It probably will be many years before another picture is made that will rival The Clansman.

[illegible] Theum to Offer

San Francisco Ex.
5-4-15

[illegible] of the Nation, [illegible] will [illegible] with the [illegible] "The Clansman," is the most [illegible] fifth drama that [illegible] shown at the Cort.

The great battle [illegible] first that were taken at night [illegible] motion picture camera. Over [illegible] from authorities were consulted in order to get the proper atmosphere into the scene in which President Lincoln was shot.

The whole action covers a period of twelve years and shows by a narrative threaded by romance the reconstruction of the Southern States dating from the time of their secession.

"Hurl," Henry W. Savage's latest musical comedy production, with Mizzi Hajos, comes to the Cort Sunday, May 9.

[illegible] Portola Theater

OAKLAND (Cal.) ENQUIRER
MAY 1, 1915

"THE CLANSMAN"

The travail of a [illegible] creation, the stress of its growth, the [illegible] its majesty in its [illegible] of human powers pertained in all [illegible] details, is impressed on the mind as [illegible] he does by no history, by D. W. Griffith's photodrama, "The Clansman or The Birth of a Nation," based on Thomas Dixon's novel, "The Clansman or the Birth of a Nation." This is positively [illegible] to the Washington theater for a [illegible] weeks' stay, opening Monday [illegible] May 10.

Mr. Griffith has photographed [illegible] our own [illegible] years and [illegible] eyes and [illegible] the [illegible] greatness of event, but [illegible] with a love romance, with the [illegible] of the individual American, both of the north and the south.

Argonaut N.Y.
May 1, 1915

Final Week of "The Clansman."

The third and final week of the engagement of "The Clansman, or The Birth of the Nation," at the Cort Theatre, will begin with the matinee and evening performances of Sunday, May 2. Previous Cort bookings prevent a continuance of the engagement, although the phenomenal attendance indicates that "The Clansman" could continue to play there indefinitely.

"The Clansman" is by all odds the most imposing film drama that has ever been produced. It is also the most mammoth production known to screenland. How D. W. Griffith, the producer, ever managed to stage and assemble so imposing a spectacle must strike the layman as being nothing short of marvelous, and "The Clansman" is certain of appealing to every one who cares for novelty, spectacular effects, and thrills piled upon thrills.

Over eighteen authorities were consulted in order to get the proper atmosphere into the scene in which President Lincoln was shot. This is only one of the historical incidents that are faithfully reproduced, and it shows with what care the putting on of this motion picture was engineered.

The whole action covers a period of twelve years, and shows by a narrative threaded with romance the reconstruction of the Southern States, dating from the time of their secession. The purpose of the spectacle is to carry a message for universal peace, and great care has been taken not to glorify battle and to emphasize the "note of terror and desolation which is the real truth of war."

"The Clansman" takes three hours to unreel. A matinee is given daily at the Cort. The special music by Lloyd Brown is a feature.

OAKLAND (Cal.) ENQUIRER
MAY 1, 1915

LOS ANGELES (Cal.) TIMES
MAY 2, 1915

Clune's Auditorium.

An eleventh week of "The [illegible] announced for Clune's Auditorium.

The photodrama deals with the construction period of American history, following the Civil War, and the twelve reels telling the story of the south is shown before, during and after the war. The magnificent photography is revealed [illegible] thread of the story [illegible] which yields the film [illegible] spectacle.

Dealer, Cleveland O.
May 2, 1915

Thursday and Friday, D. W. Griffith, producer of "The Birth of a Nation," will present "The [illegible] adapted from Paul West's stories of the "Bill" series. The cast includes Mae March, Robert Harron and [illegible] Pallette.

CLIPPING FROM News
Cleveland Ohio
Date 5-9-15

"Birth of a Nation" Playing to [illegible] Houses in the North

New York, May 1.—The success of David W. Griffith's marvelous film spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," presented at first-class theatrical prices, is not confined to New York City, for recently another company of equal excellence began a capacity engagement at the Tremont Theater, Boston, Mass. An opening invitation performance was attended by some of the most distinguished people and by the representatives of the press. Since that date all the houses have been sold out, both matinees and night, and so great was the demand that tickets have been placed on sale four weeks in advance.

Many showmen believed that "The Birth of a Nation," which is based on Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," could never play Boston, deeming the play a radical presentment of the Southern angle of reconstruction history. Mayor Curley announced at an early stage that he had no power to prevent the performance, as it was not open to any charges of immorality. Since then public sentiment has voiced itself strongly in favor of the play. The applause and enthusiasm are, if anything, greater than in New York.

CLIPPING FROM
LOS ANGELES (Cal.) EXAMINER
MAY 1, 1915

FORT WORTH (Tex.) STAR-TELEGRAM
MAY 2, 1915

D. W. Griffith, the Mutual's $100,000 director, with the production of his masterpiece, "The Birth of a Nation," has exemplified in [illegible] twelve-reel motion picture those natural abilities which have made so many releases in the Mutual program so remarkable from an artistic point of view and so appealing from the standpoint of popularity. "The Birth of a Nation" is considered the greatest photoplay ever produced. The cast contains 18,000 people and 3,000 horses and was produced at a cost of $500,000.

SAN ANTONIO (Tex.) EXPRESS
MAY 2, 1915

Light

Griffith Is Resourceful.

An article in the May Green Book Magazine concerning David W. Griffith, producer of "The Birth of a Nation," tells many interesting stories of the methods he uses to make players appearing before the camera rise to the requisite heights of dramatic emotion. In the early days of Mary Pickford's career, when she was engaged to her present husband, Owen Moore, who was working with her in Biograph productions, Griffith would accuse her of a lack of intelligence. Miss Pickford, you must remember, was only a child—just 16 years old. She would lose her temper and become angry. Then Griffith would turn quickly to the camera man and whisper: "Go ahead! Grind!" The result was always an exhibition of temperament on the part of "Little Mary" that exactly fitted the character she was portraying.

LOS ANGELES (Cal.) TIMES
MAY 2, 1915

Gazette-Times
Pittsburg Pa
5-2-1915

Griffith Picture at Miles.

Following the engagement of D'Annunzio's "Cabiria" in the new Miles Theater, it was announced by Mr. Miles last night that "The Avenging Conscience," a photo-drama produced by David Griffith, who is responsible for "The Birth of The Nation," would be put on in [illegible] for an indefinite run. This play has just closed a two months' run in the Chestnut Street Opera House in Philadelphia, and is now in its third month in the Fine Arts Theater in Chicago. It is said to be a remarkably fine piece of work, strictly American in theme and story, and very vivid in its characterization.

The "Birth of a Nation," now being shown at the Liberty Theatre, is the most thrilling motion picture drama ever shown in New York. The deaf, keen observers and enthusiastic patrons of the silent drama have not been slow to recognize the excellence and educational value of this historical photo-play and are patronizing it in large numbers. Most histories, especially those used in schools, pay little attention to the reconstruction period following the Civil War. The average reader has scant knowledge of the mementous events following the association of Lincoln and the desperate condition of the south in the grip of unscrupulous politicians as it attempted to rehabilitate itself from the devastation of the great war. Instead of reading through pages of uninteresting, slurred over, and distorted facts, one has but to attend a performance at the Liberty Theatre. Here he will have impressed on his mind the stirring events of those trying times out of which the new South arose phoenix like from the ashes of the old. The "Birth of a Nation" [illegible] merits the [illegible]

Mutual Journal
P. 5

J. Union. Jacksonville Fla
May 2, 1915

MARY ALDEN IN DEMAND FOR CHARACTER ROLES

Her Film Performances So Marked Many Managers Seek Her Services.

Mary Alden is in more demand at the Griffith-Mutual studios in Los Angeles than any other woman portrayer of character parts. No sooner was she finished with the part of the mulatto, employed by Stoneman as a housekeeper in D. W. Griffith's The Birth of a Nation, than four directors [illegible] feature pictures asked for her services. For the last six months she has not had a day to herself. Some of her more recent performances have been with Robert Edeson in Man's Prerogative, and as the mother in Russell E. Smith's The Nun. Later, she appeared, first as the young girl, and then as the aged woman with John Emerson in Ibsen's Ghosts.

Miss Alden is a Southern woman and a grandniece of the famous Southern general, J. D. T. Beauregarde. She was born in New Orleans and was educated at the Notre Dame college, in Montreal. When she came of age, she chose art as a profession and studied for a while in New York. However, she had to live, and illustrating seemed to offer little opportunity for advancement. It was Rose Melville, the famous "Sis" Hopkins, who got her her first stage job. In the course of her career, she appeared with Mrs. Fiske for a season, but spent most of her time in stock.

It was Philips Smalley who got her to go into pictures. In time she came to the attention of D. W. Griffith, and she ascribe to this great director's teaching her remarkable development [illegible]

CLIPPING FROM News
TOLEDO (O.) BLADE
MAY 1, 1915

[illegible] the last six months, Mary [illegible] of the Griffith-Mutual studios [illegible] Angeles has not had an idle [illegible] A few years ago she danced [illegible] the [illegible] of the [illegible] in [illegible] of a Nation [illegible]

CLIPPING FROM News
TOLEDO (O.) BLADE
MAY 1, 1915

David W. Griffith, producer of "The Birth of a Nation," [illegible] $3 film in [illegible] on [illegible] the [illegible] Grand Opera House [illegible]

RODUCING A PLAY ON A STAGE FIVE MILES WIDE

Auto from which pictures of the onrushing Ku Klux riders were taken.

Scene after the battle of Petersburg.

Mr. Griffith directing actors from top of sixty-foot tower.

D. W. Griffith's Great Idea and How He Worked Out Historically Accurate Battle Scenes With 18,000 Actors and 3,000 Horses

AN observing officer of a moving picture corporation was watching rehearsals for a little film drama one morning seven years ago when a complication developed and it was patent that, as arranged for, the idea, in the language of the studio, would not get over. One of the players in the company, a slender young leading man, went up to the producing director and said: "Why couldn't it be done so and so?" indicating his plan.

The producing director nodded emphatically. "Right!" he said, and it was right. Whereupon the observing officer first mentioned turned to the actor, saying seriously: "Why don't you try producing, Griffith?"

"I wouldn't mind having a chance to work out a few little ideas," was the answer.

"Work them out, then," was the [illegible]

Up at the Liberty Theatre during [illegible] the box office nearly over to Seventh [illegible] suffering for the privilege [illegible] $2 a seat in [illegible] picture [illegible]

when he went out into the world he gravitated to Louisville and very promptly applied for a position with a modest little stock company which was giving everything from Shakespeare to Charles Hoyt at a local theatre.

He was engaged, as he says, because they needed somebody. Then there were seven years of the stage, now in road companies, now in repertoire, all the time getting up a little. He played with Gertrude Coghlan, Walker Whiteside and finally Nance O'Neil, in the last year a leading man.

Something else happened. In an odd moment on the road the young actor had written a short story or two and some verses. He came back to New York and sent them to a magazine, which promptly accepted them. Then he wrote a play, "The Fool and the Girl," and James K. Hackett took it. Another great romantic drama was begun, and its acceptance promised. [illegible] and the early part of 1907.

"[illegible] made the stage for me," he [illegible] "No more of the hardships. I was going to be an author and draw down royalties. I woke up in about six months.

"The Hackett play failed and I have [illegible]

Then came "The Merchant of Venice," rather ambitious; "The Blot on the Escutcheon," "Enoch Arden," a sombre fancy; "Lines of White on a Sullen Sea," all of which led up to "Oil and Water," written by Mr. Griffith himself. A little more ambition and then came "A Corner in Wheat," the first pictures of which were modelled directly on Millet's "Gleaners," and the audience liked that.

"Just about that time," he put in, "it came to me that a wonderful thing could be done with 'The Life of Christ.' The divine tragedy has a universal appeal, and adequately done with reverence it could not fail of approval." He laughed. "I submitted my idea and it was approved, but when I got to talking about details, Palestine and Jerusalem, a great cast, for I had chosen two of the foremost actors in the world—an initial expenditure of thousands—the thermometer dropped. It was madness." He paused. "Do you know it is a little gratifying to me now that within the last few days I have been approached by a syndicate which has asked me to do that very same thing, and they have said that I need not worry about a little thing like $500,000 or a $1,000,000 if I need it."

By this time it is apparent Griffith had swung into his stride and a year ago or a little more came "Judith," using about 2,000 people, where they built forty foot concrete walls, wide enough to have a battle on.

Then came "The Clansman." It seems that the chief producing director, as Mr. Griffith was, changed from one company to another, and according to reports he did so at a salary that would pay the President's yearly salary of $75,000 and more. He wouldn't talk about that. In any event he had not worked long before he had the Dixon book handed over to him to read. He read it and lost interest in about everything else.

"I read the book," he says, "and I saw it. Not the book entirely, but as an opportunity for me to set forth, first, the birth of the South following the travail of the civil war.

"I saw a chance to tell the story of how they suffered through what I believe to be the most dramatic period in the history of the country—reconstruction. There was a chance to show what the South thinks of Lincoln; there was a chance to show that the negro of the South did not of his own volition degenerate into the human being who made the Ku Klux Klan necessary, but rather he was seduced by the unscrupulous adventurers, who exploited a situation for their own selfish ends.

"There was nothing of race in my idea, and may I say there is nothing of race antagonism in my production. It is simply the pictorialising of an epoch."

Taking the book, reading it and dreaming about it, however, did not do the work. There were eight months of incubation. First three men, and they were professors of colleges, were asked to work out the correct historical data. There were interviews with veterans of the civil war on most important points, recourse to maps and reports down at Washington and finally a patient county by county tour of Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama and North Carolina until Piedmont was discovered.

Then came the location of the battlefields, after which the veterans with their maps went forth to lay out a battlefield just as it was at Petersburg and just as it was in part during the march of Sherman's army from Atlanta to the sea. Where approved territory was found the experts went to work upon it.

Ford's Theatre Reproduced in Actual Size and Five Southern Towns Built and Burned for the Sake of a Moving Picture

If a road wound this way, if there was a brook or a river, or a house or a barn, that road, brook, house and barn were found or put in. If a town was needed along came an architect with his corps of builders and they put it up just as some gray haired old man remembered it.

They remembered burnings, and a town, two towns were put in—five altogether were built. One man remembered the burning of a town by night. Something must be done about that. A fireworks man said he could build bombs which exploding in the air would give enough light for the camera to work at night. Incidentally it may be added the bombs cost $48 apiece, but they did the work.

"Was it difficult to get the actors?"

"No," replied Mr. Grimth, "not difficult, but tedious. You see we advertised in the newspapers that we wanted so many persons, men, women and children. We established employment bureaus, so to speak, and made [illegible]

[illegible] shops and from every other place we found some with remarkable talent. A producer some day may put forth the tragedy of the negro on the film—he will find men and women of that ters were megaphoned by the captains to their commands."

The headquarters alluded to in the battle scenes was a sixty foot tower in front of the whole scene. It was there that George W. Bitzer, "best camera man in the world," Mr. Griffith says, and five assistants set their cameras. Every scene it may be said was taken six times.

Finally when every move of every section had been gone over again and again in rehearsal, when the soldiers knew when to charge or fall back, when to die or drop, even when the artillery knew the exact second when to wheel into action and the cavalry had its time schedule perfect, even the exact place where a horse must stumble or fall, the section came to headquarters. [illegible] Back [illegible] were waiting. They [illegible] their cameras. The [illegible] was ready and to the [illegible] signal [illegible] gun. The air filled [illegible] soldiers appeared as if in a [illegible] Trains of pack-stricken [illegible] wound over the hills in [illegible] then they stopped.

"We used the greatest number in the scenes where they appear with [illegible] appear in that [illegible]

"Some of the scenes which appear in order to-day were taken three or four months apart. That made more trouble, but it had to be done that way. You must remember exactly [illegible] did the first time had its first sight in New York and of whom also other men who study and observe rather than direct declare that he has raised the film drama to an art with a capital A, and that he has unfolded new possibilities, pioneered in hitherto unsuspected fields.

In brief, Mr. Griffith took "The Clansman," a novel by the Rev. Thomas Dixon, and from it evolved an ambitious spectacle for the camera in which, working on a stage roughly speaking five miles long and two miles deep, he employed altogether 18,000 persons and 3,000 horses. He delineated battle scenes conducted according to the records preserved in the War Department at Washington, using artillery, cavalry and infantry as they were used in a real battle of the civil war.

His artillery duels were real artillery duels, his cavalry charges were passed by the men who participated in such a charge fifty years before. His men died as men had died in the trenches of the South and they suffered just as the men who did suffer said they had. He built or caused to be built no less than five complete Southern towns, faithful to the last architectural detail, and he burned three of them.

He massed and handled great mobs of whites and negroes as history said the real mobs acted. He reproduced one theatre exactly life size and delineated the great national tragedy of the assassination of President Lincoln just as history says it occurred. He built the legislative halls of a Southern State and with an actual still photograph as a model brought back to life a scene in that chamber fifty years ago. Above all throughout two hours and forty minutes he ran the threads of a love story.

Thus it was that Mr. Griffith leaned back in his chair puffing contentedly at an after luncheon cigar, taking his first vacation is about fourteen months. He was at that moment digesting among other things four questions which would take several hours to answer.

"Who are you?"

"Where did you learn how?"

"How did you do this?"

"What will come after?"

Mr. Griffith told how he was born in Kentucky some thirty odd years ago, the son of Jacob Wark Griffith, a brevet Brigadier-General of the Confederate army. His family comes near to being eligible for about all the patriotic societies, for his grandfather was Capt. Daniel Griffith of the war of 1812. In the generation further on there was a great grandfather in the Revolutionary war. Before that time there were Griffiths in Virginia.

After the war, of course, the Griffiths of Kentucky had, like many other families, mainly their memories to live on—memories and the products of a farm on the edge of the blue grass. The boy was born in that situation, received his education at the nearby country school.

The wander year came to the boy at 20. In the meantime he had always liked to act in the dialogues at school, Friday afternoons and a little later when they gave the plays at the Literary Society. In any event found the moving picture game growing."

He began writing moving picture scenarios then at $5 and $10 apiece. That was all right if you could turn out enough of them. There are limits, however, to the physical capacity of even such plots as they used in those days and the young man added moving picture acting to his other work. He went into the company of a corporation, the first one mentioned, studied the game as it was then, saw that it might be made an art and bided his time until the officer heard him make the suggestion to the producing director, whereupon another era was born.

There is no doubt the young manager grew a little more ambitious about that time. The corporation for which he worked had not been particularly prosperous, although to-day it is worth millions, but there was somebody in it wise enough not to impose any rules or regulations on the new director.

Perhaps the reader will remember a modest, haunting little film, "Pippa Passes," the representation of Browning's poem. Griffith did that and all it was was a day of a young girl with her ancient Italian guitar singing her little song ending: "God's in His Heaven; all's right in the world."

Mr. Griffith posing his extras for the panic flight of the citizens out of Piedmont, S. C.
Above—The camera platform from which the battle scenes were made.

shops and from every other place we found some with remarkable talent. A producer some day may put forth the tragedy of the negro on the film—he will find men and women of that race fully competent."

Of course, it was explained, they did not use the 18,000 persons all the five or six months they were actually photographing the drama. While it is true that by the time he had finished his long term of study Mr. Griffith did not use a scrap of paper, a book or scenario, yet he had arranged it all in his mind.

The great multitude for the flight from Atlanta and the town scenes were not actually under employment longer than two weeks. Then it may be added that the expenses ran far up into the thousands every day.

"The only way we could handle them was by military discipline," said Mr. Griffith. "We laid out a camp for the whites and a camp for the blacks. We set up two commissaries. Then we divided our forces into sections, each section commanded by a captain who had his staff under him. That is how the picture was worked out.

"Every section leader in the big battle scenes or the town scenes kept his section, rehearsed it and looked after it. Complete telephone systems were installed for every section and the orders delivered from headquar-

"Some of the scenes which appear in order to-day were taken three or four months apart. That made more trouble, but it had to be done that way. You must remember exactly what the individual did the first time in order to preserve uniformity, exactly how he or she wore a hat, entered a house, wore the hair, or did anything else. That brings gray hair. Then we had a few little stunts.

"You remember that case where the negroes are shot and fall when the Ku Klux come into the town. The horses jump over them as they lie in the street. It took considerable persuasion to get men to do that, although the horses and their riders were the best trained obtainable. We took it up with some men. 'Boss, we won't do that for less'n $5 a day,' they said. They got it.

"Take another case in the guerrilla invasion of the town. It may be recalled that a man shot falls from the roof of a front porch head first on the ground. Many think the fall is made by a dummy. A real man does it and practised in a fire net until he got his fall just right, timed exactly as it had to be done to fit in with the scene.

"There is one case where a rider coming out of a house makes a flying leap into the saddle over the tail of his horse. That took time and it does not show, but the man who did that had to jump over a railing encumbered by a robe.

"Many things were done in the work that do not appear in the film. There are twenty-five field guns in the battle scene pounding away and they were too far away for the eye of the camera. Houses are burned of which you catch only a vague glow, people are fleeing over the hills and you can hardly see them."

The actual work was all over in five months, Mr. Griffith said. From their first camp they went to California for interiors and the honeymoon scenes, the allegories and theatre scene showing the assassination of President Lincoln.

"The theatre was the exact size of Ford's in Washington," Mr. Griffith explained, "and it was an exact duplicate. Old prints gave us every detail even down to the appearance of Laura Keene and her company in 'The American Cousin.' We sought long before we got a man who could satisfy us as President Lincoln, and every man who became a member of his Cabinet was required to look like the original in size and general makeup.

"It was there that detail became almost overpowering. Men who lived in the old days were besieged. How did this man walk; how did he gesture; how did he wear his clothes; did he have any mannerisms? I tell you it kept a great many people awake nights. We took the famous painting of the surrender of Lee and we never laid it down until I believe that every man in it had an exact double before our cameras."

Thus it all came out. There were more months as the film was perfected and made ready for the public. But at last it was all done.

"Now what is the future of the moving picture?"

The man being interviewed lifted his hands. "Why, there are no limits to its possibilities in artistic work. This is only child's play.

MAY 2, 1915

Making a Great Movie

[illegible] TORK [illegible]

[illegible] equipment and the presence of hundreds of trained "movie" actors. Armed with data from the war department relating to the battle of Petersburg a battle ground was laid out in the San Fernando valley. A camp was established for a modern military reservation with a hospital corps, commissary department and other features to look after the creature comforts of several thousand men and women.

While this was going on trenches were thrown up, roads laid out and other preparations made for staging the battle scenes. Another corps of men were set to work making shells and explosives for these effects. This work had to be carried on with great care to get the effect of bursting shells without endangering the lives of the soldiers in the mimic warfare. Owing to the fact that the scenes were laid in the period of the civil war it was difficult to get the same sort of rifles which were used in these conflicts.

The artillery which was used in the picture was loaned by the ordnance department of the United States government. Some of it had actually seen service. The men took part in the battle scenes were rehearsed in sixteen different groups under subdirectors who had been previously trained by Griffith. They were divided into battalions, each man taking orders from the battalion commander, who in turn looked to Griffith for the signal to enter his foines and "attack the camera."

When everything was in readiness, Griffith and his chief photographer, G. W. Bitzer, took their station on the observation tower, from which he commanded a view of the entire battlefield. Straight down from this view point stretched the opposing trenches at intervals for a distance of nearly three miles. At many places the rival trenches were less than forty yards apart. This proximity was warranted by historical records of the fight at Petersburg.

The Signal for Action.

The signal for action was "Attack the Camera." Every detail of the big scenes had been thoroughly rehearsed for three weeks when the day came for the signal. By an elaborate systems of highways and underground telephones Griffith was in constant touch with the commanders of the sixteen battalions. These in turn were covered by separate cameras to get the minute details of their part of the action. The results were obtained without a hitch except that the film made the first day the battle scenes were begun was useless. A thoughtless lieutenant touched off a great store of shells and the camera lost its vision in clouds of yellow smoke that enveloped the battlefield. This mistake cost thousands of dollars to say nothing of the disappointment after so much hard work. However, Griffith's saving sense of humor came to his rescue in the studio that night when the disheartening truth was revealed upon the developed films. "I guess he wanted to make it real," was all he said as he walked off to bed to rest for the trying ordeal of the next day.

A striking detail of this production of staggering details is that having sketched out the scenario Griffith never had a scrap of paper before him to prompt his work. For five months he carried every detail in his memory.

For the first time in the history of motion pictures in America actual scenes of warfare were taken after dark. The burning of Atlanta and the escape of the refugees from that city before Sherman's conquering advance all parts of this. These scenes were taken with the aid of giant illuminants and specially constructed illuminant bombs.

[illegible] TELEGRAM

[illegible] Week of "Clansman" Begins at Cort Theater

[illegible] last week of "The Clansman" and "The Birth of the Nation," at the Cort Theater, where the D. W. Griffith masterpiece continues to capacity houses. "The Clansman" will have been shown for nine weeks in this city with the opening of the present engagement.

Herald, N.Y. May 3, 1915

LIBERTY—"The Birth of a Nation" continues at the Liberty Theatre where D. W. Griffith offers his mammoth production in the same manner that made it a sensation when originally given in this city. Saturday turned the 123d presentation of the big picture in New York during which time it was seen by approximately 190,000 theatregoers.

[illegible] COLUMBIA (S. C.) STATE
MAY 4, 1915

"The Birth of a Nation," now in its third month at the Liberty theatre, New York, continues one of the regular attractions. This gigantic spectacle is from the pen of D. W. Griffith, taken from Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman." The press agent says that 18,000 people and 3,000 horses are used in this production and its cost was $500,000. Its drama is so intense that it brings audiences to their feet as no theatrical play has in many years. The prices for this picture are: Orchestra $1 and $2, first balcony, 75 cents, $1 and $2; second balcony, 25 cents and 50 cents. If such prices were charged in this city for a picture, people would laugh at the idea. Nevertheless they are the prices and the house is sold out one week in advance. Of course the theatre has an orchestra of 40 people, which helps make the cost look small.

NEW HAVEN (Conn.) REGISTER
MAY 5, 1915

this. The big feature secured for the first three days of the new season starting Monday is "The Spoilers," a nine reel masterpiece with William Farnum in the leading role. Reviewers of photoplays have agreed that, other than "The Birth of the Nation," the twelve reel [illegible] playing in New York and Boston, there is no feature yet made that compares with "The Spoilers," and as a matter of fact it was Mr. Poli's intention to secure "The Birth of the Nation" for the premiere of the new policy at the Bijou but it was not available until later. Therefore the next best was secured and it will surely be a revelation to those who see it. —Ona

Citizen, Columbus O. May 7, 15

ITS STILL DRAWING

D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation," has entered upon the [illegible] month of its showing at the Liberty theater, New York. The piece plays at $2 prices, but is able to battle successfully, at that, with the productions of the spoken stage. It is declared that more people have witnessed this performance than anything of its kind.

TOLEDO (O.) NEWS-BEE
MAY 5, 1915

The Crown theater on Sunday will have "The Birth of a Nation," "Won By a Mustache," "The Paris Hat," and musical comedy. "The Western Border" will be the Monday feature.

WATERBURY (Conn.) AMERICAN
MAY 8, 1915

For Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, Director Jilson has booked what is certainly a masterpiece in "The Awakening Conscience," a six part feature produced by D. W. Griffith, the man who produced "The Birth of the Nation," and admitted by critics to be the most mysterious, most masterful and most sensational motion drama ever devised. It was suggested by Edgar Allen Poe's story of "The Tell-tale Heart," and by certain others of Poe's works, and shows how a sinner is pursued by the horror of his crime. The story tells of a young man in love with a girl and the match opposed by the man's uncle. The youth reads Poe's "The Tell-tale Heart" and becomes obsessed with the idea of getting the uncle out of the way, so that there will be no bar to his happiness with the girl. It is then that the saving grace of conscience demonstrates its power. How the avenging conscience in this case operates and how its influence is used to prevent the terrible tragedy can best be told by the picture itself. Suffice to say that Griffith is a master producer and Henry B. Walthall, who is starred, is the star of the world's greatest photoplay, "The Birth of the Nation."

HARTFORD (Conn.) POST
MAY 8, 1915

The comedy end of the photoplays will be taken care of by Charles Chaplin the inimitable and the irrepressible in his new creation "By the Sea," guaranteed to cure any fit of the blues and the big photoplay feature will be "The Avenging Conscience" a six-part masterpiece featuring Henry B. Walthall, the star of "The Birth of the Nation." It might be said in passing "The Avenging Conscience" is produced by D. W. Griffith, the man who produced "The Birth of a Nation" and next to that feature is considered Mr. Griffiths supreme achievement. It is really one of the most mysterious, masterful and sensational motion dramas ever devised showing how a sinner is pursued by the horror of his crime and was suggested by Edgar Poe's story of "The Tell-Tale Heart" and by certain of Poe's Poems [illegible] This feature is expected to [illegible] a place after its three days [illegible] Palace as the best production that will be [illegible] These shows daily [illegible]

[illegible] Seen by 190,000

"The Birth of a Nation" [illegible] at the Liberty Theatre, [illegible] the 123d presentation of the big picture in New York, during which time it was seen by approximately 190,000 theatregoers.

The engagement has already assumed record proportions, as its time at the Liberty is equivalent to a stay of eighteen weeks for an ordinary attraction playing eight performances a week. "The Birth of a Nation" is given fourteen times a week.

N. Y. Journal & Courier May 8, 14/15

"The Birth of a Nation" [illegible] the Liberty Theatre, and this [illegible] produced by D. W. Griffith, has not lost any of the interest [illegible] when first shown. The 123d presentation of the picture was given to-day, this number being equal to about eighteen weeks of an ordinary play. "The Birth of a Nation" is given fourteen times a week and, judging from the audiences it is drawing, will set a record for the Liberty Theatre. The great battle scenes and the historic incidents of the Civil War are expected to be of special interest to the visitors who will be in the city this week for the visit of the fleet.

N. Y. Telegraph May 8, 1915

Bowles Has a Side Line.

George Bowles drove into town yesterday on a load of garden truck from his Connecticut farm, and accepted the position of business manager for "The Birth of a Nation" when that motion picture begins its engagement at the Illinois Theatre, Chicago, later in the month.

Mr. Bowles of late has been devoting himself almost exclusively to the business of eggs and poultry. There is a well grounded suspicion at the Lambs Club that he accepted the engagement with "The Birth of a Nation" only after reading of the [illegible] attack on that film in Boston, and that when he goes to Chicago he will take with him a stock of his ben fruit rendered unmarketable by age, and as a side line reserve to himself the egg privilege.

Brooklyn Times May 8, 1915

"The Birth of a Nation."

"The Birth of a Nation" continues at the Liberty Theatre where D. W. Griffith offers his mammoth production in the same manner that made it a sensation when originally given in this city. To-day turned the 123d presentation of the big picture in New York during which time it was seen by approximately 190,000 theatregoers. The engagement has already assumed record proportions as its time at the Liberty is equivalent to a stay of eighteen weeks for an ordinary attraction playing eight performances a week. "The Birth of a Nation" is given fourteen times a week. Judging by its record and the increasing interest in the big production it will remain for a long time to a run which will be the record for the Liberty Theatre. Special interest attaches to the coming weeks for the visitors who will be in town to see the assembling of our great modern fleet. The famous battle scenes and historic incidents of the Civil War are given in such elaborate detail in the picture will furnish an interesting contrast with the evolution of modern warfare as shown in the North River when the fleet gathers here.

Billboard, Cin. May 8, 1915

BIRTH OF A NATION

New York, May 1.—In its third month, The Birth of a Nation, playing at the Liberty, continues to battle successfully with the counter offerings of the spring showmen. It is claimed that this film has been seen by more people than anything of its kind.

Times, Los Angeles Cal. May 6, 1915

Clune's Auditorium.

"The Clansman" will enter its last week next Monday afternoon. The film has been shown in only two eastern cities, New York and Boston, and every critic who has seen it has praised it unstintingly.

Crowds are witnessing each performance here.

ALAMEDA (Cal.) TIMES-STAR
MAY [illegible] 1915

"The Clansman, or the Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's spectacular film drama in 12 reels, conceded by the dramatic critics throughout the country to be the [illegible] film ever produced, by special arrangement will be the attraction at the Macdonough theater for three weeks, beginning with a matinee Monday afternoon.

Woman's Home Companion, Springfield, Ohio. May 1915
Better Films for Children by Helen Dean

THE BIRTH OF A NATION, Mutual—Griffith: A remarkable [illegible] twelve reels picturing the reconstruction period of the South. [illegible] based on "The Clansman," by Thomas L. Dixon, but it has [illegible] those historical influences which brought about the [illegible] the broken pieces. Mr. D. W. Griffith, the [illegible] high standard in film art which only the vision [illegible]

LOS ANGELES (Cal.) EXPRESS
MAY 6, 1915

[illegible] SAN [illegible]

[illegible] ANCISCO (Cal.) CHRONICLE
MAY 3, 1915

[illegible] woman.

For Old Glory.

Today is to be Old Soldiers' Day at Clune's Auditorium.

W. H. Clune has invited 500 members of the Soldiers' Home at Sawtelle to view "The Clansman" this afternoon, and has secured ten cars of the Pacific Electric to bring them to the city.

The soldiers will alight on the corner of Ninth and Hill at 1:30 and will march over to Broadway and down Broadway to Fifth street, and thence to the Auditorium. A committee of Old Soldiers will receive the martial crowd at the door and escort them to their seats. The theater will be decorated with flags.

Yesterday at the Home, there was a great furbishing up of rusty swords, a great polishing up of ancient rifles and unfurling of ancient and moth-eaten silk flags, for today is the veterans' day of days.

Examiner, Los Angeles Cal. May 4, 1915

LOS ANGELES (Cal.) TIMES
MAY 4, 1915

CLIPPING FROM Enquirer
Oakland Cal
DATE 5-6-15

CLIPPING FROM Enquirer
Oakland Cal
DATE 5-6-15

"BIRTH OF A NATION" GREAT SUCCESS.

The facility with which motion pictures can paint history has been graphically shown the past week in the big Griffith epic, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Liberty, New York. It is just fifty years since some of the most memorable events of American history associated with the Civil War took place. In this comprehensive screen drama, Griffith has been able to make these stirring occurrences live as faithfully as if one were participating in the actual events.

The production started Sunday, April 18th, upon its third month, and is going as strong as ever, having aroused more interest than any offering of the current season on the New York stage. Its success here has been duplicated in Boston, Los Angeles and San Francisco and plans are now shaping for a Chicago production. Nearly 125,000 people have seen the picture, and the receipts have already passed the $100,000 mark in New York City. This is the biggest record of any theatrical offering in New York for this period.

N.Y. Press May 2, 1915

LIBERTY.

"The Birth of a Nation," now in its third month at the Liberty Theatre, continues one of the regular attractions to withstand the counter offerings of the spring season. The vast area of action it covers and its potential effects have created a fuller understanding of the art of animated photography, but aside from these accomplishments it is potent because of its story. The dramatic effect of conflict and the love element of romance is never lost sight of, though the protagonists are assembled by thousands and move to a stirring [illegible]

Mirror. N.Y. May 8, 15

Not since moving pictures first came into being, and when the passing of a crowd on a street corner, or the firing of a disappearing gun with its bass drum accompaniment, won applause by its very blinking novelty in the vaudeville houses, has a screen drama been so seriously discussed as "The Birth of a Nation," which is "turning 'em away" at the Liberty Theatre. It is commented upon even as a play of the best would usually be spoken of, and one grows to think of the characters at least as personally as one would those mimicked each performance by men and women, instead of those who are but shadows on a shade. And they do say that Thomas Dixon, who wrote "The Clansman," on which "The Birth of a Nation" is founded, is so fascinated with Mr. Griffith's version of his story that he practically makes the Liberty Theatre his headquarters.

From Morning Telegraph
Address NEW YORK CITY
Date MAY 2 - 1915

THE BIRTH OF A NATION

"The Birth of a Nation" est maintenant dans son troisième mois au Liberty Theatre, et la salle est aussi bondée que le premier jour. Rien d'étonnant à cela. Les effets dramatiques de la guerre, alternant avec les scènes d'amour, ne laissent aucun répit au spectateur, qui frémit d'enthousiasme ou s'attendrit d'un bout à l'autre de la représentation.

Cette pièce cinématographique est puissamment attachante.

BERKELEY (Cal.) GAZETTE 12c
MAY 8 1915

"THE CLANSMAN", $500,000 FILM, IN OAKLAND MONDAY

Lillian Gish, who appears in "The Clansman," at Macdonough next week.

"The Clansman" Coming.

In "The Clansman," or "The Birth of a Nation," the world's greatest motion picture, which cost more than $500,000 to produce, and which opens at the Macdonough theater for twenty-one days beginning Monday, May 10, are shown some of the greatest battle scenes ever staged before a motion picture camera.

These depict the siege before and the reduction of Petersburg, with more than 25,000 soldiers seen in spectacular infantry attacks, cavalry charges and artillery duels.

The same huge mortars that belched forth during the American civil war are shown in the film.

CLIPPING FROM Tribune
SALT LAKE (Utah) TRIBUNE
MAY 9 1915

Moving Picture World. N.Y. May 8, 1915

OTHER SAN FRANCISCO NOTES.

"The Clansman," which recently ran for five weeks at the Alcazar, will be shown again for a limited engagement at the Cort. It would have been retained indefinitely at the former house had not other bookings interfered.

The Grizzly is to be known in the future [illegible]

LOS ANGELES (Cal.) EXAMINER
MAY 8, 1915

W. H. Clune, who owns the California State rights to "The Clansman," has already played that great drama to over $100,000, and it is still making a noise like a mint.

The play's runs in New York and Boston have not abated, and the indication is that it will be continued during the hot weather in both cities.

Mr. Griffith yesterday told of a remark that George Cohan made when he saw the picture.

m STANDARD UNION
May 3, 1915
dress: Brooklyn, N. Y.

The power of the motion picture to present events of historic [illegible] with peculiar [illegible]

DULUTH (Minn.) HERALD
MAY 8, 1915

Claxton Wilstach [illegible] to Boston to [illegible] work there [illegible] "The Clansman" was [illegible] Hotel [illegible]

Mae Marsh, whose spectacular rise to the top rank of motion picture actresses is generally attributed to the training of D. W. Griffith, is possessed of natural capacities of a pre-eminent order, according to Mr. Griffith himself.

"If I have done anything," that director says, "I have shown this remarkable girl how to get the best out of the unusual talent which is hers. Today she is, perhaps, the best we have. But she owes her success as much to her own perseverance and determination as to any other quality."

Miss Marsh's star has been rising since the production a year ago of "The Escape." Her two recent appearances in the Mutual masterpictures, "The Outcast," by Thomas Nelson Page, and "The Outlaw's Revenge," in "The Birth of a New Republic," as well as the electric performance she gave on the film in "The Birth of a Nation," have established her [illegible] To those who remember her as an awkward school girl who followed her sister to the studio two years ago, the transformation seems almost impossible. Under the tight-coiled hair, D. W. Griffith, however, saw what is now conceded to be the most perfectly shaped head in motion pictures. She has been a mimic from childhood. For Griffith the rest was easy.

Evening Sun. N.Y. May 7, 1915.

AT the Liberty Theatre D. W. Griffiths' spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," is in its third month. This moving picture play is presented by a cast numbering 18,000 people and is one of the most thrilling screen dramas ever [illegible]

NEW YORK MAIL
Date MAY 8 1915

It is reported D. W. Griffith's next great production will be based on the life of Christ, with the story of Ben Hur worked into the film, much as he has done with the story of "The Clansman" in "The [illegible]

N.Y. Telegram May 9, 1915

"Birth of a Nation" continues at the Liberty Theatre, where D. W. Griffith offers his mammoth production in the same manner that made it a sensation when originally given in this city. Saturday it turned the 133d presentation of the picture in New York, during which time it was seen by approximately 190,000 theatregoers. The engagement has already assumed record proportions as its time at the Liberty is equivalent to a stay of eighteen weeks for an ordinary attraction playing eight performances a week. "The Birth of a Nation" is given fourteen times a week. Judging by its record and the increasing interest in the big production it will remain for a long time to a run which will be the record for the Liberty Theatre.

WASHINGTON (D. C.) POST
Herald. MAY 9, 1915

It is said that the producers of the motion picture, "The Birth of a Nation," have found it expedient to employ fifteen detectives to oversee the audiences at the Liberty Theater, New York, and prevent disorder on the part of those who resent the "reconstruction" of episodes depicted.

HARTFORD (Conn.) COURANT
MAY 9, 1915

"The Avenging Conscience," a six-part masterpiece, featuring Henry B. Walthall, the star of "The Birth of the Nation." It might be said in passing that "The Avenging Conscience" is produced by D. W. Grith, the man who produced "The Birth of a Nation" and owing to that feature considered Mr. Griffith's supreme achievement. It is truly one of the most mysterious, powerful and sensational motion pictures ever devised, showing how a man is pursued by the horror of his crime and was suggested by Edgar Allan Poe's story of "The Tell-Tale Heart" and by certain of Poe's Poems of Affection. This feature is expected to take its place after its three days' showing at the Palace as the best production there and that will be full-of-thrilling indeed.

WASHINGTON (D. C.) POST
MAY 9, 1915

There are three directors of photoplays producing for the Mutual brand of films who earn from $60,000 to $100,000 a year. The higher figure goes to D. W. Griffith, who produced "The Birth of a Nation," but Griffith's earnings on this one production will add vastly to his income, as it is a separate undertaking in which he is heavily interested. It was just six years ago that Griffith, in sheer desperation, turned from the stage to the film studio glad to accept the regulation price of $5 a day.

N.Y. Telegram May 9, 1915

Athens May 9, 1915

"Birth of a Nation" continues at Liberty Theatre, where D. W. Griffith's mammoth production reached its 133d presentation yesterday. It was seen by approximately 190,000 theatregoers. The engagement has already assumed record proportions, as its time at the Liberty is equivalent to a stay of eighteen weeks for an ordinary attraction playing eight performances a week. The "Birth of a Nation" is given fourteen times a week. Special interest attaches to the coming weeks for the visitors who will be in town to see the assembling of the Atlantic fleet. The famous battle scenes and historic incidents of the Civil War as given in the picture will furnish an interesting contrast to the scenes of modern warfare to be seen in the North River.

[illegible] that made it a sensation when given in this city. Saturday it turned the 133d presentation of the big picture in New York, during which time it was seen by approximately 190,000 theatregoers.

"The Birth of a Nation" continues at the Liberty Theatre, where D. W. Griffith offers his mammoth production in the same manner that made it a sensation when originally given in this city. Saturday, May 8, marked the 133d presentation of the big picture in New York during which time it was seen by approximately 190,000 theatregoers. The engagement has already assumed record proportions, as it's time at the Liberty is equivalent to a stay of eighteen weeks for an ordinary attraction playing eight performances a week. "The Birth of a Nation" is given fourteen times a week. Judging by its record and the increasing interest in the big production it will remain for a long time to a run which will be the record for the Liberty Theatre.

Dispatch Pittsburg, Pa. May 9, 1915

There are three directors of photoplays producing for the Mutual brand of films who earn from $60,000 to $100,000 a year. The higher figure goes to D. W. Griffith, who produced "The Birth of a Nation," but Griffith's earnings on this one production will add vastly to his income, as it is a separate undertaking in which he is heavily interested. It was just six years ago that Griffith, in sheer desperation, turned from the stage to the film studio glad to accept the regulation price of $5 a day.

CLIPPING FROM Globe
Date 5 7 15

MACDONOUGH

The Clansman or The Birth of a Nation, D. W. Griffith's wonderful $500,000 motion picture production, the world's greatest motion picture production, in twelve reels, which is the attraction at the Macdonough theater, tomorrow afternoon for a three weeks' stay, with a matinee every day, is an adaptation of Thos. Dixon's well known novel, but it deals more broadly on its historical side than does either the play or book.

The Clansman shows comedy, romance and drama amidst historical scenes.

It includes the most spectacular battle scenes ever staged, including the siege before Petersburg, the bombardment and burning of Atlanta, Sherman's historical march to the sea and terminating with Lee's surrender to Grant. Page after page of American history is unfolded before the eye in this mighty film spectacle.

LOS ANGELES (Cal.) TIMES
MAY 9, 1915

Clune's Auditorium.

"The Clansman" will begin its twelfth and last week here tomorrow.

There are few subjects as interesting to the American public as "The Clansman." It portrays war vividly in all its phases, and the North and South are faithfully shown in all their political and social phases. Not only is the film historically correct, but it tells a gripping human story of individual lives.

Eastern critics have pronounced "The Clansman" the greatest of motion pictures.

Manhattan Theatres

LIBERTY, MANHATTAN.—"The Birth of a Nation" continues at the Liberty Theatre, Manhattan, where D. W. Griffith offers his mammoth production in the same manner that created a sensation when originally given in Manhattan. Yesterday turned the third presentation of the big picture in Greater New York, during which time it was seen by approximately 190,000 theatregoers. The engagement has already assumed record proportions as its time at the Liberty is equivalent to a stay of eighteen weeks for an ordinary attraction playing eight performances a week. "The Birth of a Nation" is given fourteen times a week. Judging by its record and the increasing interest in the big production it will remain for a long time to a run which will be the record for the Liberty Theatre. Special interest attaches to the coming weeks for the visitors who will be in town to see the assembling of our great modern fleet. The famous battle scenes and historic incidents of the Civil War as given in such elaborate detail in the picture will furnish an interesting contrast with the evolution of modern warfare as shown in the North River when the fleet gathers here.

N.Y. Telegraph May 9, 1915

[illegible] of a Nation [illegible] Deserves Success It Has Gone [illegible]

[illegible] records [illegible] marketable that so masterly the [illegible] it will stand out in solitary relief through all annals of play-production and play-going. Not alone in New York, but in the world it stands alone in this regard backed by an endorsement and proclaim that has never been equalled. And it is a moving picture.

For nearly ten weeks at the Liberty Theatre has "The Birth of a Nation" been a sensation and a substantial one. It has never had a performance, and there are two every day, that has not had a crowd that has tested the theatre capacity. Productions have come and gone, many of them notable, but like a Gibraltar this photo-play production has stood out against everything, the fiercest competition, and a season not of general prosperity, until now almost at the very end of the theatrical year it is still drawing the same and unabating crowds.

[illegible] man, [illegible] loses a valuable part of [illegible] tion, they overlook no [illegible] their country's most dramatic [illegible] that they cannot again gain, they [illegible] thrills, stirring feelings, intense interest, heart touches, genuine humor and in fact every run of the emotion that they may never have gone [illegible] all-encompassing opportunity to grasp. It is a personal injury to oneself not to see "The Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty Theatre.

Mr. Griffith shows himself in this production to be a master of every side of the art and craft in which he is such a distinguished personage. If he had done nothing else but arrange, produce and photograph for motion pictures his Sherman's March to the Sea he would have done a great thing. But it is only an incident of this marvellous picture—a gem in a mosaic of wonders and surprises unparalleled. No one has an idea what war and [illegible] are until they have faced the realism of these scenes. No one can appreciate peace until they have witnessed these dark scenes in the red days of war and wrath gone wild.

Praise cannot be too liberally given the acting cast. Each type is perfect—the conception absolute and acting flawless. No one will ever see "The Birth of a Nation" without forever carrying in their memory an indelible vision of the beauty of Lillian Gish, the Elsie of the story. It is so full of all the joy of life, so reproductive of all its agonies, so expressive of every emotion that it must be remembered. Her acting is sublime. And all will love the vivacious Flora, the little sister of the Camerons as played by Mae Marsh. These two stand out. The ensemble is perfect.

Mr. Griffith has set a fearful pace for other picture-play producers. His crowded theatre last night, to-day, to-night and to-morrow proves that the American public never fails to reward that which is meaningly great.

There is just one reason—it is the finest piece of its kind that has ever been done. It has topped heights of production, detail, acting, handling of armies of people, cavalcades of horses, tremendous effects, and photography that no one in this remarkable art-industry-film making ever dreamed would be attained. D. W. Griffith has planted his banner of wondrous perfection in motion play production and photography so high, that all other attempts in this direction fade away as mere dwarfs of effort. It is the high-water mark of motion pictures and besides being a great achievement in itself it has done more for this art than all the combined efforts of years.

In the face of this it is reasonable to predict that Mr. Griffith's photo-production, founded on Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," will always remain an institution. Never before has every function of the moving picture been so completely met and

LOS ANGELES (Cal.) EXAMINER
MAY 9, 1915

CLUNE'S AUDITORIUM.—Richard Harding Davis, the world's greatest war correspondent, recently stated in New York that "The Clansman" portrayed war as it actually is. No general on a battlefield more carefully outlined a campaign of defense or attack than did Mr. D. W. Griffith while arranging for the greatest battle scenes ever made. "The Clansman" will begin its twelfth and last week at Clune's Auditorium tomorrow afternoon, and this will bring to a close the most remarkable run any dramatic attraction has ever had. "The Clansman" touches upon an almost forbidden subject, the race problem. But it does it in such a delicate manner that no offense can be taken and both races can gain from it an object lesson. Many will take advantage of this last opportunity to see "The Clansman," and there will be a great demand for seats as the [illegible] will also want to [illegible] this great drama.

LOS ANGELES (Cal.) TIMES
Express MAY 9, 1915

Last Opportunities to Witness The Clansman

Monday afternoon The Clansman will begin its twelfth and last week at Clune's Auditorium theater. This wonderful photo-drama has enjoyed the most remarkable run in the history of motion pictures. Indeed, it is doubtful if any dramatic attraction has played to as great a number of people during a similar period. And this is not to be wondered at, for if ever an attraction deserves the favorable criticism of the public in general The Clansman does; for never before has [illegible] been presented to the people a subject so vital; certainly it has not been presented in the powerful manner that D. W. Griffith has used in The Clansman. Carrying the spectators through the terrible events of the Civil war, he portrays in as natural a manner as possible the [illegible] of both the north and the south. That he has succeeded in [illegible] a most realistic [illegible]

N.Y. Telegraph May 9

[illegible] D. W. Griffith [illegible] famous studio [illegible] giant of his [illegible] "The Birth of a Nation" [illegible]

BROOKLYN, (N. Y.) CITIZEN
MAY 9 1915

Date .....

SEEN BY 190,000 PERSONS

"The Birth of a Nation" Continues at the Liberty

"The Birth of a Nation" continues at the Liberty Theatre, where D. W. Griffith offers his mammoth production in the same manner that made it a sensation when originally given in this city. Saturday, May 8, marked the 133d presentation of the big picture in New York during which time it was seen by approximately 190,000 theatregoers. The engagement has already assumed record proportions, as its time at the Liberty is equivalent to a stay of eighteen weeks for an ordinary attraction playing eight performances a week. "The Birth of a Nation" is given fourteen times a week. Judging by its record and the increasing interest in the big production it will remain for a long time to a run which will be the record for the Liberty Theatre.

N.Y. Press May 9

"The Birth of a Nation" continues at the Liberty Theatre, where D. W. Griffith is offering his mammoth production in the same manner that made it a sensation when originally given in this city. Last Saturday, May 8, marked the 133d presentation of the big picture in New York. It was seen by approximately 190,000 theatregoers. The engagement has already assumed record proportions, as its time at the Liberty is equivalent to a stay of eighteen weeks for an ordinary attraction playing eight performances a week. "The Birth of a Nation" is given fourteen times a week. Judging by its record and the increasing interest in the big production it will remain for a long time to a run which will be the record for the Liberty Theatre.

Globe N.Y. C. May 9

David Wark Griffith, producer of "The Birth of a Nation," makes an interesting prediction in a motion picture trade journal:

"Mark my words," he says, "you will soon see the day when it will take two or three days' time for a theatre to show a single picture, when a man will drop in early in the afternoon and stay until the theatre closes at night, and then come back the next day to see the rest of it. There will be literature in motion pictures for one and two reels. There will always be a story in literature, and there will come when outstanding among the shorter pictures, so long as a day, will be reserved a place, and people will go to see them, just as they read a chapter at a time.

Whether or not this is a sweeping [illegible] weight of [illegible] undoubtedly [illegible] truth.

Anyway, we [illegible] he says that [illegible] ducers grind out [illegible] of a story, [illegible] weakness of the [illegible] say.

OAKLAND (Cal.) TRIBUNE
MAY 9, 1915

Lillian Gish in "The Clansman" June's Auditorium.

Greatest Film Play Visits Oakland

"Clansman" Opens at Macdonough

MIRIAM BROOKS (left) AND ILLIAN GISH, STARS OF "THE CLANSMAN," D. W. GRIFFITH'S MASTERPIECE TO BE SHOWN HERE. BELOW IS PICTURED GRIFFITH.

W. Griffith's latest achievement, Clansman or the Birth of a Na- in twelve reels, is the attraction at acdonough theater, for twenty-one beginning Monday, May 10. film is based on the famous novel homas Dixon Jr., but it deals more y on its historical side with the of the American nation than does lay or book.

e Clansman or the Birth of a Na- is the greatest and most spectacu- pictures ever produced. It cost e to produce and seven months consumed in staging it.

e Clansman or the Birth of a Na- represents the very acme of art realism in motion pictures. It in- the most spectacular battle scenes staged. In the battle scenes are 25,000 soldiers in action, including ry, artillery and cavalry. In "The sman or the Birth of a Nation," ex- shells are used for the first time history of motion pictures. These are hurled from the mouths of n that were used by the union during the American Civil War. shells are blanks and were constructed an expert from Washington. ally five these battle scenes cost $50 and more than five of them ed in the battle.

ARTILLERY NEEDED.

The task of securing Civil War ce- the battle scenes was quite a difficult one. It would have cost a fortune to secure pictures would have been difficult, if not impossible, to secure. But Mr. Griffith was able to secure the entire city of Atlanta, Ga., which was the scene of the battle of Atlanta, and the Georgia militia, which was the scene of the battle of Atlanta, and the Georgia militia, which was the scene of the battle of Atlanta, and the Georgia militia,

...e in next theatre just before the Assassination—a scene in "The Birth of a Nation."

...YORK, April 2.—Two dollar ...performances ...—a flickering film—must ...place among the notable ...productions of New York's ...photo spectacle, "The ...Nation," has jumped right ...of the legitimate stage ...the regular drama ...tells the tale of a sol... woven through the ...civil war and the even ...troubles in the South dur... ...first part of the film is ...are very few dry eyes in ...The emotional strain on ...who see the play is actually ex... the most spectacular and realistic ever attempted in a film drama, while the reproduction of the assassination of President Lincoln by John Wilkes Booth thrills the spectators as few other scenes in the movies have ever done. The character and makeup of Abraham Lincoln in this scene is strikingly carried out, while the staging of the theatre is historically correct in every detail.

Racial antagonism stirred up by the handling of the South's negro problem in this film has caused a tremendous amount of discussion of the production, and culminated in the throwing of eggs at the screen and a small sized riot in the theatre the other day. It is probable that some of the objectionable scenes, such as that of the white girl throwing herself over a cliff when pursued by a negro, will be toned down before the film is shown in other parts of

N.Y. Journal & Commercial Apr 24 1915

MANY NOVEL FILMS OFFERED NEXT WEEK

STRIKING BILLS TO BE PRESENTED AT SEVERAL THEATRES.

Hippodrome Will Have "When It Strikes Home" and a New Musical Programme—Vitagraph Announces "The Girl Who Might Have Been," a Detective Drama—"Birth of a Nation" Still Drawing Crowds.

"Birth of a Nation" Crowded.

Griffith's great film, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Liberty Theatre, where it ...for one month. This production ...in establishing a record for attend... ...overshadows that of any motion ...Plans are now being made to ...the summer run comfortable and ...ht for the audiences. A new system ...ing the theatre is being installed ...will make it possible to lower the ...ture fifteen degrees.

SAN

The popularity of the "movies" has given birth to another periodical devoted to its interests. The Picture-Play Weekly is an illustrated quarto devoted to picture plays, their actors, and authors. The April July number was the initial issue and it contains stories from the popular films of various well-known companies in the story that will attract general attention, ...description of the work involved in producing "The Birth of a Nation," which is the sensation of New York among the photo plays, even with its price of $2.00 for the best seats. So popular is it that it is necessary to purchase seats four weeks in advance. The photo-play sets a record of one hundred and fifty years in our national history, and its director, David W. Griffith, took eight months at an enormous cost to produce it. The periodical is one that dealers should call attention to their customers, for it is one of the best of the motion picture papers, with its folks and comments about well known actors. It is published by Street & Smith, Seventh Avenue. Price, 5 cents.

Oakland (Cal.) Enquirer May 11, 1915

Cities Can't Close Film Theatres, Appeal Court Rules.

ALBANY, May 6.—Municipalities are without the power to prohibit moving picture shows on Sunday by means of fines and imprisonment, according to a decision of the Court of Appeals to-day.

The decision was made in the case of Wolden Kiely of Yonkers, who was arrested and imprisoned for violating a local ordinance prohibiting Sunday moving picture shows. He obtained his release on a writ of habeas corpus, and the city of Yonkers appealed from the order releasing him. The Appellate Division, Second Department, upheld the release.

The opinion declared that the Legislature alone may command how Sunday may be kept.

The city of Rochester is one of the up-State cities where the Sunday moving picture ban has been in force.

BERKELEY (Cal.) ... MAY 12, 1915

THROUGH THE ... OF

"The Clansman, or the ... Nation" photo-play, D. W. Griffith's latest achievement, in twelve ... is the attraction at the Macdonough theater this week, where it will remain for a three weeks' stay.

D. W. Griffith has framed an epical photo-drama which pictures as no history can describe, as no poetry can make vivid, as no story can depict, the trilogy of that period—the era previous to the war, the war time, and the "reconstruction" epoch.

Griffith has, with consummate skill, and a constant throbbing poetical significance, interwoven with the history of the nation, a history of individuals, a love story of ardent nature as thrilling as lyric, and as romantic as any which mark the greatest dramas of the stage is threaded in and out of all the great scenes of history.

THE CLANSMAN'S AUDIENCE CHEERS, WEEPS AND SINGS

MAE MARSH
Who appears in one of the leading roles in "The Clansman," which began at the Macdonough last night for a twenty-one-day stay.

By THE SPECTATOR

The pages of American history rolled back more than half a century at the Macdonough theater last night.

And for more than three hours an audience sat as if spellbound, and eagerly absorbed the most dramatic story ever presented before a camera's eye. And it was an audience that cheered and wept and sung. No living, breathing actors on the stage could have swung the emotions more than those silent figures on the white screen.

It was the story of "The Birth of a Nation"—the photo-dramatization of Thomas Dixon's great novel, "The Clansman." It was D. W. Griffith's masterpiece.

In those three hours the audience experienced every emotion known to man—love and hate, beauty and darkness, bravery and cowardice, brutality and benevolence, selfishness and kindness, were interminably tossed together. And in the end the conflicting elements disintegrated, broke apart, and the clear light of a nation united stood vividly in the mind's eye.

Historically correct, painstakingly gotten together, "The Clansman" in three short hours carries one through the ten most trying years in American history. Beginning with the peace of the Old South and the Old North, stepping suddenly into the days of the Civil war, switching from the battlefield of cannon to the battlefield of the social and political world, the story carries one through the dark reconstruction days, when the race problem reached its zenith, and the black man pitted his brute strength against the brain of the white man, and so on through the formative period of the New South, until ... fades away and the curtain ... that out of all

A BROADER UNDERSTANDING

And when the play ends, one has a broader and better understanding of that titanic struggle that rocked the very foundations of the nation half a century ago.

It is as though one was witnessing actually and in fact the scenes that the art of Griffith has placed before the camera's eye.

In the days before the fratricidal strife one is given a peep into the tranquility of the southern home, when a northern family visits its southern cousins. The very thoughts and emotions of the two groups stand out vividly. Here commences the love story that is carried through the entire production.

WAR CLOUDS GATHER

Then the clouds gather. From peace and tranquility the nation is suddenly torn assunder by the fratricidal war. Lincoln has been elected president. South Carolina has seceded. Other states have followed.

And one sits there in a cushioned seat and sees all this.

The battles are fought before his very eyes.

The south is battered and bruised and wrecked.

Lee is defeated.

Grant accepts the surrender of the great general.

Meanwhile one has been given a glimpse of the statesmen of the time and the greatest of all, Lincoln. The days are no less dark in Washington.

And through it all runs the course of human love—the old story of the northerner who loved the girl of the south, and the southerner who loved the little northern girl.

This ... fatal shot ... President ... the die of ... vives with ... in, all of ... tail; it smile ... daring the ... of Petersburg ... since ... heroes on ... in the ... Then when the ... constructing ... men and ... livered ... maddened ... this lovely ... forward ... unequalled ... ...ful drama of ... ...great allegory ... and progress ... Prince ...

N.Y. World May ...

LIBERTY

"The Birth of a ..." at the Liberty ... Griffith is offering ... ...duction along the ... a sensation when ... this city. Last ... 1913 presentation of ... New York. It has been ... by approximately ... The engagement ... record proportions ... Liberty is equivalent ... eighteen weeks for an ... ...traction playing ... a week. "The Birth of a ..." given fourteen ... ...ing by its record ... interest in the big production ... remain for a long time ...

THE WAR ...

The war ends. One ... of the bruised and ... The scene has been ... ...ture is shown in ... ...cally grotesque, ...presents more ... ...

The scene of the ... ...where ... ...and ... southern people had ... Then the ...

...the ... ...

...

...

...

...

...

...

...

...

...E FROM "THE CLANSMAN" AT MACDONOUGH THEATER THIS WEEK.

...ibune, Oakland.
May 10, 1915

...Griffith's latest achievement, "The Clansman," or "The Birth of a Nation," reaches its 2d week at the Macdonough theater today, with a matinee at 2:15.

It is based on the famous novel by Thomas Dixon Jr., but it deals more with the historical side with the life of the American nation than does the book.

The Clansman, or The Birth of a Nation, is the greatest and most ambitious motion picture ever produced. It surpasses its predecessor, The Clansman or The Birth of a Nation, in the very sense of art that has contributed to making it a masterpiece in motion pictures. It includes a spectacular battle scene, over 1000 soldiers in action, including the artillery and cavalry. In the battle scenes are shown the charges of the Ku Klux Klan, or the Birth of a Nation, as it was in the days of the Civil war. Historically correct in detail, the battles are shown complete. Whole hillsides are seen during artillery duels. Miles of fighting men in trenches are shown.

LINCOLN ASSASSINATED.

Then comes Lincoln's assassination. The old Ford Theater, reproduced for the film, shows the players who appeared before the martyred President. He enters his box. The old-fashioned audience cheers. Booth creeps in, fires—and leaps to the stage and makes his escape. Absolute fidelity in every move makes the scene notable and the effect on the audience is as interesting as is the remarkable scene itself.

There come the most remarkable scenes in the play—and here really begins the "Clansman" as Thomas Dixon wrote it—for he presupposed knowledge by his reader of all that went before. The Civil war colonel, seeking some way to stop the pillage of the forces in power, observes white children frightening surrounding colored ones with a white sheet. This marked the formation of the strange army in white that terrorized the negroes and restored the whites to power.

Contrary to expectation, the "Clansman" is not a slur on the colored man as was declared in the protests that went forth. The blame is placed, no, not on the black man, but upon the white man who victimized the former slave—on the carpet-bagger, the radical, and the ruthless spoilers of the south who, inflaming the ignorant former slaves to madness with liquor, bent them to any task of ill.

FAITHFUL SLAVES WEEP.

One scene shows a girl, attacked by a colored trooper, leaping from a cliff. The scene shifts. Faithful slaves are weeping over her death.

"None were deeper mourners than these," reads the caption.

One of the most thrilling rescues in the play is effected by former slaves, who rescue their white ex-master from their own people. Several of the erstwhile actions in the film are those performed by colored men.

Superb acting, aida Dwyer Boughton, Lillian Gish, Mae Marsh, Miriam Cooper, Henry Walthall, Donald Crisp, George Beigmann and a dozen other actors have remarkable roles. The great scenes, battle are the most realistic. They recall the Civil war years. Historical... that makes it ... Bigger sections ...

...TERBURY (Conn.) AMERICAN
MAY 10, 1915

...t is admitted to be the most ...ious, most sensational and most ...iting big feature ever screened ... shown at the Strand Theater ...ree days, beginning today. It ...d "The Avenging Conscience" ... adapted from Edgar Allen ...story of "The Tell Tale Heart," ...g how the conscience of a man ...m with horror when he faters ... to slay. The feature was pre... under the personal direction ... W. Griffith, the man who pro... "The Birth of a Nation," and ...ure to be the ... that ...rand has played that will be ... of for months and months to ...

The star of the feature is ... R. Walthall, now starring for ...riffith in "The Birth of the Na... and the leading actress with him ...nche Sweet. An all star cast ...n in support.

...N. Y. Evening Sun.
May 10, 1915

...BERTY—"The Birth of a Nation" ...ues at this theatre, where D. W. ... offers his mammoth production ... same manner that it made ...ion when originally given in this ... To-day turns the 132d ...n of the big picture in New ... during which time it has been ...proximately 190,000 theatre-goers ...ngagement has already assumed ... proportions, as its time at the ...y is equivalent to a stay of eight ...weeks for an ordinary attraction. ... eight performances a week ... Birth of a Nation" is given four ...imes a week.

...ooklyn Standard Union
May 10, 1915

...presented ... Birth ...

...N. Y. Press, May 10, 1915

ALAMEDA (Cal.) TIMES-STAR
MAY 10, 1915

MACDONOUGH THEATRE

"The Clansman, or the Birth of a Nation," the world's greatest motion picture, produced by D. W. Griffith, the world's foremost motion picture producer, opened today at the Macdonough theater.

While the film is based on Thomas Dixon's novel, it is much broader in its scope than either the book or the play. In this film are 1400 soldiers dealing from the time of the great American civil war to the reconstruction period that followed.

Romance, drama and comedy, intermingled with historic incidents, are shown in "The Clansman," which comes to Oakland after a record run of nine weeks in San Francisco, 12 weeks in Los Angeles and is now being shown in Boston and New York, where the price of admission is $2.00.

"The Clansman" cost more than $500,000 to produce and eight months were required to stage it.

The greatest battle scenes ever enacted before a camera are seen in the film, with more than 25,000 soldiers participating.

Among the many notable features contained in "The Clansman" are Lincoln's call for volunteers, the siege before Petersburg, the bombardment and burning of Atlanta, Lee's surrender to Grant, Sherman's historical march to the sea, the assassination of President Lincoln, the rise in power of Thaddeus Stevens, the formation and raids of the famous Ku Klux Klan and the history of the south during the reconstruction period.

Matinees will be held daily at 2:10 o'clock, with the evening exhibition taking place at 8:15.

N. Y. Evening World
May 10, 1915

...The Birth of a Nation" continues at the Macdonough theatre, where D. W. Griffith offers his mammoth production in the same manner that made it a sensation when originally given in this city. To-day marked the one hundred and thirty-third presentation of the big picture in New York, during which time it has been seen by approximately 190,000 persons.

N. Y. Telegram
May 11, 1915

With a symphony orchestra of forty musicians "The Birth of a Nation" continues at the Liberty. ... two performances are given daily.

N. Y. Sun May 11, 1915

"The Birth of a Nation" will remain at the Liberty Theatre. D. W. Griffith's film spectacle of the civil war, the Ku Klux Klan and the reconstruction period in the South is as popular as ever.

...THE BATTLE SCENES IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

Birth of a Nation," the great Griffith film at the Liberty Theatre, is the reproduction of the battle of Petersburg. Many spectators marvel at the exact reproductions of the theatre in which Lincoln was shot and of the scene of Lee's surrender to Grant, and many know them to be accurate, through having seen pictures of the two events, yet probably only one or two persons in this city have any first hand memory of these happenings. On the other hand, there are in New York a thousand or two survivors of the armies of the Potomac and of Virginia who were at Petersburg. These old men have nearly all seen the picture and their testimony as to its accuracy is unanimous. As the battle scene comes on the screen they gasp and turn to their companions with a "Why, there are the very earthworks we tried to take," or some such remark. That is the most eloquent of testimony to the detailed accuracy of the picture. When it carries men's memories back fifty years it must be very near perfection in its illusion.

A historian of prominence who saw the film remarked that the mission of the motion picture as demonstrated in this instance was to register history by lightning flash. He struck there upon a really descriptive phrase, because in this picture, the view in which covers twelve square miles, one gets a vistalike view of the battle that could be had in no other way. By close application of historical detail the producer has presented the battlefield almost as a whole. The opposing armies are seen as they actually fought those rainy April days in 1865. It was from this field that Grant rode in his fatigue uniform and mud spattered boots to meet Lee at Appomattox and there dictate terms of surrender which quietly but effectually brought the war to a close.

It was to show both sides and to clear the perspective that Griffith planned his great battle scenes in the big picture. He worked with many historians for months before he began laying out his plan of campaign. When he was ready he had the cooperation of two engineers who had been graduated from West Point, and he also had at his elbow during the time the picture fights were being taken veterans of both armies who suggested this counterfeit of the real scene. The battlefield was laid out and built up by the engineers from the reports of many Generals who took part in the conflict. The artillery and other ordnance were exact duplications of the arms carried and used in 1865. The trenches were laid out after war maps at Washington, and only trained soldiers were used to create the impression of this last great battle as it was fought on the outskirts of Petersburg.

The actual work of assembling and rehearsing the armies and of the taking of the picture covered a period of over two months. Griffith used nineteen batteries of cameras to get the effects he wished to flash upon the screen. He occupied a tower commanding a view of the entire battlefield and by means of a system of underground telephone wires was in constant touch with his sub-directors. It takes but a few minutes to flash these actual battle scenes upon the screen, but the work of months is shown in that time.

ALAMEDA (Cal.) TIMES-STAR
MAY 13, 1915

MACDONOUGH THEATRE

"The Clansman," D. W. Griffiths' photo-dramatic spectacle now running at the Macdonough theater where exhibitions are given daily at 2:15 and 8:10 is drawing capacity houses. The picture depicts the birth of the nation. It is now in its twelfth week in New York, being shown for $2 at the top price, in contrast with the popular prices that prevail at the Macdonough.

Nightly the audience bursts into applause during the different scenes and situations in the production.

"The Clansman" is by all odds the greatest photo-drama that has ever come to the Macdonough.

With marked fidelity it unfolds some of the most potent events in American history, including Lincoln's call for volunteers, the siege of Petersburg, the burning and bombardment of Atlanta, Sherman's historical march to the sea, the assassination of President Lincoln by John Wilkes Booth, the rise in power of Thaddeus Stevens the great commoner and the formation and raids of the famous Ku Klux Klan with thousands of these white hooded riders seen in action.

Every school child and student of history should see "The Clansman." Three hours are consumed in the unfolding of the story.

The augmented orchestra playing the medley of old southern plantation airs together with the special chorus of twenty voices blends harmoniously with the showing of the film.

LOS ANGELES (Cal.) EXPRESS.
MAY 13, 1915

Last Week of The Clansman

The Clansman, D. W. Griffith's marvelous picture production, is in its last week at Clune's Auditorium theater. People visiting here from all points of the country are taking advantage of this opportunity to see the photo-drama that has startled the world. There are very few people who have not heard of The Clansman, whose fame has spread throughout the United States and Europe.

Dealing with a subject of great heart interest, the condition of our country during the Civil war, it touches the American public as nothing else has done, and shows the great sacrifice demanded of everyone at that time and the manner in which they responded.

STANDARD UNION

...ss: Brooklyn, N. Y.

MAY 2 - 1915

Manhattan Theatres

LIBERTY, MANHATTAN—"The Birth of a Nation," now in its third month at the Liberty Theatre, Manhattan, continues one of the regular attractions to withstand the counter offerings of the spring showmen. Griffith's wonderful film has been seen by more people than anything of the kind ever brought out in the way of a regular theatrical presentation. The vast area of action it covers and its potential effects have created a fuller understanding of the art of animated photography, but aside from these technical accomplishments, it is potent because of its fundamental story. The dramatic effect of conflict and the love element of romance is never lost sight of, though the protagonists are assembled in thousands and move to a stirring impulse which could never be incompassed in the limits of a four-act play of the spoken word. A thousand alluring artists only serve to heighten the interest in a story which is grieving and emotional. It is his grasp of the fundamental appeal of the true drama which Griffith has made the basis of his theme, and bigness only adds a startling ... the general excellence of the ... has created an ...

OAKLAND (Cal.) TRIBUNE
MAY 11, 1915

'THE CLANSMAN' A MASTER FILM

World's Largest Motion Picture Faithfully Tells Story of Civil War.

Thrilling battle scenes and filmed lyrics of strife and friendship, romance and war's ugly details, mingled last night before a large audience at the Macdonough when what is probably the world's largest motion picture production unreeled. Produced on a lavish scale, puts it far from anything every before done in films, "The Clansman," the remarkable story of the birth of the ... America, is more than a "movie." It is vital—throbbing with life, of more than ordinary historical and educational value—and, withal, it preserves, in the ... story it tells, that touch of human interest that holds great audiences spellbound.

The stirring events of the Civil war and the reconstruction period that followed are shown in striking detail in the remarkable production. The fighting in the trenches in Petersburg, the other famed battles and finally the surrender of Gettysburg, are all as Old Civil war uniforms, muskets and artillery are seen. Historically correct in detail, the battles are shown complete. Whole hillsides are seen during artillery duels. Miles of fighting men in trenches are shown.

LINCOLN ASSASSINATED.

Then comes Lincoln's assassination. The old Ford Theater, reproduced for the film, shows the players who appeared before the martyred President. He enters his box. The old-fashioned audience cheers. Booth creeps in, fires—and leaps to the stage and makes his escape. Absolute fidelity in every move makes the scene notable and the effect on the audience is as interesting as is the remarkable scene itself.

There come the most remarkable scenes in the play—and here really begins the "Clansman" as Thomas Dixon wrote it—for he presupposed knowledge by his reader of all that went before. The Civil war colonel, seeking some way to stop the pillage of the forces in power, observes white children frightening surrounding colored ones with a white sheet. This marked the formation of the strange army in white that terrorized the negroes and restored the whites to power.

Contrary to expectation, the "Clansman" is not a slur on the colored man as was declared in the protests that went forth. The blame is placed, no, not on the black man, but upon the white man who victimized the former slave—on the carpet-bagger, the radical, and the ruthless spoilers of the south who, inflaming the ignorant former slaves to madness with liquor, bent them to any task of ill.

FAITHFUL SLAVES WEEP.

One scene shows a girl, attacked by a colored trooper, leaping from a cliff. The scene shifts. Faithful slaves are weeping over her death.

"None were deeper mourners than these," reads the caption.

One of the most thrilling rescues in the play is effected by former slaves, who rescue their white ex-master from their own people. Several of the erstwhile actions in the film are those performed by colored men.

Superb acting, aida Dwyer Boughton, Lillian Gish, Mae Marsh, Miriam Cooper, Henry Walthall, Donald Crisp, George Beigmann and a dozen other actors have remarkable roles. The great scenes, battle are the most realistic. They recall the Civil war years. Historical... that makes it ... Bigger sections ...

The latest paper for "The Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty, New York, is featuring the name of H. E. Aitken, president of the Mutual. The paper mentions the Mutual as presenting the feature, but on the same line and in much larger type (almost as large as that for Griffith) Aitken's name appears.

GRIFFITH RETURNS TO LOS ANGELES.

D. W. Griffith, filmdom's foremost producer, has arrived at the California studios of the Reliance and Majestic companies, of which he is director in general. As yet he is undecided as to what his next subject will be for a Griffith feature.

Mr. Griffith has been in New York and Boston attending the opening of his latest spectacular photodrama, "The Birth of a Nation," and he reports wonderful progress.

No sooner had Griffith arrived than he plunged right into work by supervising the productions of some of the Reliance and Majestic releases. Mr. Griffith will probably remain in California until after he has completed his next feature and then perhaps he will arrange for its New York premier.

Motion Picture World May 15, 1915

D. W. Griffith arrived back home this week and is rejoicing over the big run of "The Clansman" everywhere. He will remain here for awhile then leave for other cities to superintend the exhibition of the great war picture.

Motion Picture News. N.Y. May 15, 1915

Biograph Re-Issues

Successfully Revives Subjects Directed by D. W. Griffith with All-Star Casts.

The announcement made by the Biograph Company to the effect that they will re-issue the all-star Biographs produced by D. W. Griffith during 1912 and 1913 is of importance to every exhibitor. A folder listing the various subjects that are foremost in demand has been mailed by Biograph to all exhibitors on their mailing list.

This announcement is the outcome of the large number of requests Biograph has been receiving for the re-issue of these subjects, and the course they have followed in releasing them in the regular service will enable every exhibitor to include them in his program.

It is hardly necessary to introduce these subjects to the exhibitors; suffice it to say that they are well known Biographs with the following players in the casts:— Henry Walthall, Blanche Sweet, Lillian Gish, Mae Marsh, Dorothy Gish, Robert Harron, Charles H. Mailes, W. Chrystie Miller, Lionel Barrymore, Mabel Normand, Harry Carey, Florence La Badie, Claire McDowell, Charles H. West, etc., etc., and directed by D. W. Griffith, who directed "Judith of Bethulia" and "The Birth of a Nation," the two greatest motion pictures ever produced.

These re-issues will be released in the regular service every Friday, beginning with "The Battle" on Friday, June 11, and, judging by the interest being taken in them, the demand for bookings should be large.

OAKLAND (Cal.) ENQUIRER
MAY 15, 1915

Biograph Plans to Re-issue 1912-1913 Griffith Films

Company Will Revive Subjects Directed by Producer of "Judith" and "Birth of a Nation" with All-Star Casts—Begin June 11

THE announcement made by Biograph Company to the effect that they will re-issue the all-star Biographs produced by D. W. Griffith during 1912 and 1913 is of importance to every exhibitor. A folder listing subjects most in demand has been mailed to exhibitors.

This announcement is the outcome of the large number of requests Biograph has been receiving for the re-issue of these subjects, and the course they have followed in releasing them in the regular service will enable every exhibitor to include them in his program.

It is hardly necessary to introduce these subjects to the exhibitors; suffice it to say that they are well known Biographs with the following players in the casts: Henry Walthall, Blanche Sweet, Lillian Gish, Mae Marsh, Dorothy Gish, Robert Harron, Charles H. Mailes, W. Chrystie Miller, Lionel Barrymore, Mabel Normand, Harry Carey, Florence La Badie, Claire McDowell, Charles H. West, etc., etc., and directed by D. W. Griffith, who directed "Judith of Bethulia" and "The Birth of a Nation," the two greatest motion pictures ever produced.

These re-issues will be released in the regular service every Friday, beginning with "The Battle," on Friday, June 11, and the demand for bookings should be large.

Motion Picture News May 15, 1915

COLUMBUS (O.) STATE JOURNAL
MAY 16, 1915

The New York and Boston production of David W. Griffith's famous spectacle of American history, "The Birth of a Nation," continue to attract equally large audiences in those two great Eastern cities. The New York run at the Liberty Theater has nearly completed three months; the Hub has already had five weeks of the play, and both engagements show no prospect of any falling off in the capacity attendance. Many requests have been received from other cities for summer runs, but with the possible exception of Chicago these offers of hot weather bookings will all be declined, as it is the intention to book the spectacle only on regular country-wide tours, beginning next autumn.

CABLE ADDRESS
CLIPPING FROM News
Galveston Tex
Date 5-16-15

GRIFFITH BACK IN LOS ANGELES

Special to MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Los Angeles, May 3.

D. W. Griffith, who has been in the East since the opening of "The Birth of a Nation," at the Liberty theatre, New York City, arrived at Los Angeles the first of the week to resume production of his next release, "The Mother and the Law."

With his arrival he made the announcement that four prints of his thirteen reel subject are playing to very satisfactory business at New York, Boston, San Francisco and Los Angeles, and that the opening at Chicago and in other large cities has now been postponed until fall.

The tenth week of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Auditorium here began Monday, and business has been as good as during the seventh, eighth and ninth weeks. Seats are now on sale for a week in advance, and it is the belief of Manager Lloyd Brown that the engagement will continue for several weeks, the first engagement which continued nine weeks having proven so unexpected that he does not wish to make a prophecy for the future.

OAKLAND (Cal.) ENQUIRER
MAY 16, 1915

OAKLAND (Cal.) TRIBUNE
MAY 15, 1915

CLANSMAN TO DISCUSS "THE CLANSMAN" FILM

[illegible] contained in the "Clansman" moving picture a real solution for the race problem, will be discussed by Rev. Albert W. Palmer, in a criticism of the much-talked of movie play from the pulpit of the Plymouth Congregational church Sunday evening.

Rev. Palmer in reference to the play says:

"Beautiful as 'The Clansman' is as a moving picture achievement it contains a sinister philosophy in spots and ought not to go unchallenged and unanswered. I am anxious that as many as possible who see the film may also hear the criticism of its implied solution of the race problem.

"I shall ask these questions about the 'Clansman': is it fair? Has it a real solution for the race problem? What does it leave out? Why do the colored people object to it so vigorously? Why did it produce a riot in Boston? What should be the attitude of fair-minded Christian men and women to the problem with which it deals? How can we allay the bitterness and resentment it will cause?

"I trust many fair-minded people who see the film, and admire much of it, will welcome the opportunity to hear another side than the one it presents—for there is almost decidedly a better, saner and [illegible]

Macdonough

D. W. Griffith's wonderful motion picture production "The Clansman or the Birth of a Nation," which has been amplified from Thomas Dixon's well-known novel, continues to draw capacity houses at the Macdonough theater, where it is being shown twice daily.

The enthusiastic reception accorded the film by the audience at every exhibition proves conclusively that the picture has earned its reputation of the greatest film ever produced. In New York and Boston "The Clansman" is being shown to capacity houses at an admission price of $2.

At every exhibition of the film the audience sits enthralled as page after page of American history is shown through the medium of the motion picture screen. Mingled with the historical features in the picture is a double romance that rivals that immortal story of the great bard, Romeo and Juliet. "The Clansman" will start on its second big week Sunday. The management of the Macdonough requests that as many of the theater patrons as possible secure tickets in advance and avoid standing in line.

The specially arranged musical program of old southern airs and the large chorus of voices blend harmoniously with the showing of the film.

Press. Union (Calif) May 14 1915

The Clansman Is Improved

The Lyceum theatre last night played a return of the "Clansman," the great spectacular dramatization of Thomas Dixon's famous novel. The attendance was fair. It can be said of Mr. Griffith's picture that he has made a number of very noticeable changes in the film since it was shown here a few months ago, and the changes have added greatly to the picture. It is a story of the Civil war and incidents of the south following the great tragedy, a picture well worth seeing. An orchestra of eight pieces plays appropriate music for the various scenes in the picture. "The Clansman" will be here today, Saturday and Sunday, [illegible]

"The Birth of a Nation" Is Not to Go on Summer's Run

The New York and Boston productions of David W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation," continue to attract equally large audiences in those two great Eastern cities. The New York run at the Liberty Theater has nearly completed three months, the Hub has already had five weeks of the play, and both engagements show no prospect of any falling off in the attendance. Many requests have been received from other cities for summer runs, but with the possible exception of Chicago, these offers of hot weather bookings will all be declined, as it is the intention to book the spectacle only on regular country-wide tours beginning next autumn.

Henry Walthall, who plays the heroic role of the little confederate colonel in "The Birth of a Nation," is a member of the well-known Walthall family of Mississippi. Miss Miriam Cooper, appearing in the play as Margaret Cameron, is a native of Maryland. The work of these typical Southern actors imparts a verisimilitude to the war and reconstruction scenes. The military details of the picture, handled by Director Griffith, are based on the director's talks with veterans of the Southern warfare and his own recollections of the war stories told him by his father, who was Brigadier General Jacob Wark Griffith of the confederate army.

Tribune Oakland Cal. May 16, 1915

MISS MAE MARSH

Who plays Florence Cameron in the "Clansman," now at the Macdonough times in front of the camera—and [illegible]

Mae Marsh, the attractive motion picture actress star, who takes the part of Florence Cameron, one of the leading characters in D. W. Griffith's spectacular photo-play, "The Clansman, or the Birth of a Nation," which is the attraction at the Macdonough theater for twenty-one days, beginning last Monday, has gone through a tragic death scene almost 166 times for the benefit of the motion picture camera.

Miss Marsh has been in motion pictures almost three years, starting with Mr. Griffith as an extra.

In Director Griffith's first play, Miss Marsh was supposed to die. She did this so realistically and displayed such wonderful ability for enacting a death scene, that in almost every picture in which she has appeared since, she died a tragic death.

Tribune Oakland Cal.

Evening Sun May 17, 1915.

CAMERA DYING IS IN AIR

'CLANSMAN' STAR TELLS WHY

Birth of Nation Even Increases in Popularity

THE success of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty Theatre has been little short of phenomenal. Although it has been attracting capacity audiences for more than two months, there seems to be no decrease in its wide popularity among those who prefer the artistic film. Many thousands have already seen this film masterpiece, and have labelled it as the most wonderful affair of its kind they have ever seen. Many thousands more will view the film before it is permitted to be withdrawn from the Broadway playhouse, and the latter will readily agree with those who have previously endorsed this remarkable work.

"The Birth of a Nation" has for its foundation the remarkable novel, "The Clansman," by Thomas Dixon. Both as a story and a play it has long since created a sensation in all parts of the country. In its present form, that of a motion picture, it is a masterpiece and its success has been greatly amplified.

It has been transferred to the screen by D. Griffith, popularly proclaimed "Balasco of the Movies," and is unique in a way that is typical of the great producer. The scenes depicting the Civil War and the assassination of President Lincoln are reproduced with exactness, and have proven particular features of this great film. While these may have been particularly picked out by those who have witnessed the tremendous success of Mr. Griffith master work, there are scores of other notable events that appear in the film that will command an equal amount of attention.

Miss Lillian Gish and a notable company of screen stars are seen as the interpreters of the various roles in this splendid silent drama, and it may well be said that neither effort or expense has been sacrificed in the making of this remarkable production.

Lillian Gish.

American May 16, 1915

PHILADELPHIA, (Pa.) INQUIRER.

The Sun May 16, 1915

Liberty Theatre, "The Birth of a Nation," most elaborate of all the native productions on the screen; thousands of persons employed and highly novel pageants revealed; the performance this afternoon will be the 150th given in the theatre. It is also on view simultaneously in eight other large cities.

Telegraph. May 16 1915

The current week will wind up the third month of the run of D. W. Griffith's great spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Liberty Theatre, where it continues to attract attention of all sorts of theatregoers. On Sunday afternoon the 150th presentation of the master picture in New York will be celebrated. The first half of the picture remains the same stirring series of marvelous drama, ranging from the picturesque days of the old South to the events leading up to the Civil War and showing in stirring action the terrors and the spirit of the great conflict. Then comes the graphic reproduction of the assassination of President Lincoln and the thrills of this tragic period of American history. The final half of the picture is largely devoted to the Reconstruction period in the South, and the rise of the Ku Klux Klan.

Telegram May 16, 1915

MIRIAM COOPER
"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" LIBERTY

AT THE LEADING MOVING PICTURES

The current week will conclude the third month of the run of D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Liberty Theatre, where it continues to attract attention of all sorts of theatregoers. This afternoon the 150th presentation of the picture in New York will be celebrated. Its record is without a parallel on the local stage.

The first half of the picture remains the same stirring series of marvellous drama, ranging from the picturesque days of the old South to the events leading up to the civil war, and showing in stirring action the terrors and the spirit of the great conflict. Then comes the graphic reproduction of the assassination of President Lincoln and the thrills of this tragic period of American history. The final half of the picture is largely devoted to the reconstruction.

New York Even. Mail. May 15, 1915

"BIRTH OF A NATION" ACTRESS A FAVORITE.

Matinee idols are not limited to the stage exclusively, as is proved by motion picture players. Lillian Gish, who has been playing "leads" with D. W. Griffith's various productions for three years, is an illustration. Miss Gish is not out of her teens, yet she is known in the abstract at least to millions of playgoers. She never was in New York more than two months in her life, but even here she receives hundreds of letters weekly from admirers. The fair young Californian is seen as Elsie Stoneman in "The Birth of a Nation," and not a day passes at the Liberty Theatre but the postman leaves several letters addressed to her. These letters are forwarded to California, where Miss Gish and other prominent players in the different companies under Mr. Griffith's direction are now at work on two of his new pictures, which will be ready late in the fall.

BROOKLYN (N. Y.) EAGLE
May 16, 1915

The current week will wind up the third month of the run of D. W. Griffith's great spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Liberty Theatre, where it continues to attract attention of all sorts of theatregoers.

CLIPPING FROM May 16, 1915
PHILADELPHIA, (PA.) RECORD.

Birth of Nation

The current week will wind up the third month of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty Theatre, where it continues to attract attention of all sorts of theatregoers. On Sunday the 150th presentation of the master picture in New York will be celebrated. Its record is without a parallel on the local stage.

BROOKLYN, (N. Y.) TIMES

"The Birth of a Nation"

To-day winds up the third month of the run of D. W. Griffith's great spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Liberty Theatre where it continues to attract attention of all theatregoers. On Sunday afternoon the 150th presentation of the master picture in New York will be celebrated. Its record is without a parallel on the local stage.

The first half of the picture remains the same stirring series of marvelous drama, ranging from the picturesque days of the old South to the events leading up to the Civil War and showing in stirring action the terrors and the spirit of the great conflict. Then comes the graphic reproduction of the assassination of President Lincoln and the thrills of the period. The final half of the picture is largely devoted to the reconstruction period in the South and the rise of the Ku Klux Klan. The wild rides of the ghostly knights remain most thrilling. The tale has been amplified from here on and shows what sober judgment in the way of education is doing for the children of the former slaves. It brings history up to date without curtailing the dramatic strength of the marvelous production. The thrills of swift action are kept intact and the great picture stands as an achievement of wonderful effectiveness and dramatic appeal.

N. Y. Journal of Commerce May 15, 1915.

The current week will wind up the third month of the run of D. W. Griffith's great spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Liberty Theatre, and [illegible] picturing of the reconstruction days in the South appears not to lose its popularity in the least. The 150th performance will be celebrated to-morrow afternoon.

On next Saturday, May 22, the new summer policy will be inaugurated in Madison Square Garden, and first run pictures of unusual size will be shown twice daily in connection with the music of a symphony orchestra and other special features. The Garden is now being arranged in accordance with the new idea, the details including the erection of a solid plaster screen for the pictures, and which is said to be the largest ever built. Special ventilating and cooling systems are also being installed.

N. Y. Commercial May 15, 15

"The Birth of a Nation" will conclude the third month of its run the coming week at the Liberty.

N. Y. Telegraph May 16, 1915

AT THE LIBERTY THEATRE.

"Birth of a Nation" Finishing Its Third Month.

The current week will wind up the third month of the run of D. W. Griffith's great spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Liberty Theatre, where it continues to attract attention of all sorts of theatregoers.

The first half of the picture remains the same stirring series of marvelous drama ranging from the picturesque days of the old South to the events leading up to the Civil War and showing in stirring action the terrors and the spirit of the great conflict. Then comes the graphic reproduction of the assassination of President Lincoln and the thrills of this tragic period of American history.

New York Herald May 16, 1915

The current week will wind up the third month of the run of D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Liberty Theatre, on Sunday afternoon the 150th presentation of this picture in New York will be celebrated.

N. Y. Telegraph May 16, 1915

Ralph Lewis is doing another one of those wide-bound old grouch parts for which he has become famous. For his characterization of the part of Stoneman in "The Birth of a Nation" Lewis is being deluged with congratulatory letters than the most [illegible] matinee idol ever dreams of [illegible]

CLEVELAND (O.) LEADER
MAY 16, 1915

"The Birth of a Nation" continues at the Liberty theater, New York, where D. W. Griffith offers the mammoth production in the same manner that made it a sensation when originally given. Last Saturday turned the one hundred and thirty-third presentation of the picture in New York, during which time it was seen by approximately 190,000 theatergoers.

New York World May 16, 1915

"The Birth of a Nation" retains its popularity at the Liberty Theatre, interesting large audiences at all performances and suffering little from its competition with high-priced dramatic productions.

SPRINGFIELD (Mass.) REPUBLICAN
MAY 22, 1915

[illegible] refusal to license free speech by the Mayor, which anxious editors Griffith's photoplay, has already set in forecast for Boston, has already Thompson for Chicago, for the new mayor, Thompson, has [illegible] to license the Klansmen, there, [illegible] must no longer [illegible] for that [illegible] Sunday city; every [illegible] trammeled, and Boston can [illegible] Griffith's pack-[illegible] thing [illegible] shall [illegible] and [illegible] is coming to when the [illegible]

Brooklyn, (N. Y.) Standard-Union May 16, 1915

LIBERTY, MANHATTAN—The current week will wind up the third month of the run of D. W. Griffith's great spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Liberty Theatre, Manhattan, where it continues to attract attention of all sorts of theatregoers. This afternoon the 150th presentation of the master picture in Manhattan will be celebrated. Its record as a photo play is without a parallel on the local stage. The first half of the picture remains the same stirring series of marvelous drama, ranging from the picturesque days of the old South to the events leading up to the Civil War, and showing in stirring action, the terrors and the spirit of the great conflict. Then comes the graphic reproduction of the assassination of President Lincoln and the thrills of the tragic period of American history. The final half of the picture is largely devoted to the Reconstruction period in the South and the rise of the Ku Klux Klan. The wild rides of these ghostly knights of a specific era in American development remain the most thrilling series of stage pictures ever seen in the theatre.

The tale has been amplified from here on and shows what sober judgment in the way of education is doing for the children of the former slaves. It brings history up to date without curtailing the dramatic strength of the marvelous production. The thrills of swift action are kept intact and the great picture stands as an achievement of wonderful effectiveness and dramatic appeal.

New York Sun May 16, 15

OUR GOOD DUMB ACTORS.

Who, Like the Well Bred Children, Are Seen and Not Heard.

Among the striking film plays that continue to attract large audiences are:

Liberty Theatre, "The Birth of a Nation," most elaborate of all the native productions on the screen; thousands of persons employed and highly novel pageants revealed; the performance this afternoon will be the 150th given in the theatre. It is also on view simultaneously in eight other large cities.

BROOKLYN, (N. Y.) CITIZEN

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

Celebrates Its 150th Performance in New York.

The current week will wind up the third month of the run of D. W. Griffith's great spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Liberty Theatre, where it continues to attract attention of all sorts of theatregoers. On Sunday afternoon the 150th presentation of the master picture in New York will be celebrated. Its record is without a parrallel on the local stage.

The first half of the picture remains the same stirring series of marvelous drama ranging from the picturesque days of the old South to the events leading up to the Civil War and showing in stirring action the terrors and the spirit of the great conflict. Then comes the graphic reproduction of the assassination of President Lincoln and the thrills of this tragic period of American history.

The final half of the picture is largely devoted to the Reconstruction period in the South and the rise of the Ku Klux Klan. The wild rides of these ghostly knights of a specific era in American development remain the most thrilling series of stage pictures ever seen in the theatre.

The tale has been amplified from here on and shows what sober judgment in the way of education is doing for the children of the former slaves. It brings history up to date without curtailing the dramatic strength of the marvelous production. The thrills of swift action are kept intact and the great picture stands as an achievement of wonderful effectiveness and dramatic appeal.

...ar's Horrors as Well as Heroism in Film Drama

"The Birth of a Nation" Filled with Wonderful Battle Scenes That Show Both Sides of Armed Conflict.

"Now cry for war if you dare!" challenged a woman writer a few days ago after she had described the horrors of a field hospital on the French fighting line. And it is this silent challenge—made silently but none the less effectively—that runs through "The Birth of a Nation," David W. Griffith's photo-drama of civil war and reconstruction days, which for many weeks has been attracting large audiences to the Liberty Theatre.

The battles are only incidental to the main story of the struggle of the southern people against the "carpet-bagger" politicians who raided their land after the war was over, but it is safe to say that audiences at present leave the theatre with the battle scenes standing out more vividly in their minds than any of the other pictures in the long series of wonder-scenes.

There have been many other film reproductions of battles, but most of them were mere confusions of men and smoke. One could not see on the faces of the fighters the expression of exhultation, hate, heroic endeavor or bravado—all the mixed and ever-changing emotions that pass over the soldier in his death-fight with an enemy. But Griffith's reproduction of Lee's last stand shows all this. His soldiers are not mere hired "supers"; they are actors who look like soldiers and act as men face to face with death.

There is a charge—a wonderful piece of forlorn and hopeless courage in which all fall but one who carries his flagstaff into the very mouth of the enemy's cannon before he at last sinks down wounded.

For a moment one thrills with the sublime courage of his act. For a moment, probably, every man in the theatre would like to have followed as a leader. But then, so quickly that it has the force of a blow in the face, comes another scene.

As far as the eye can see is a tangle of things that once were men. War's wastage lies there before you. Over the field lie the bodies of youths and old men and men in the prime of life. There is nothing glorious in this picture. There is the last of the great citizen class of the South—among them doctors, lawyers, planters, bankers, businessmen, whose useful careers had been snuffed out by a tiny pellet of lead. For a moment it all seems so futile, so unnecessary, that their heroism is almost forgotten in a feeling of abhorrence for war in any cause whatever.

But the purpose is there, for out of the smoke that winds toward the sky from that shambles a nation is born. A free and kindly nation that is destined to hold out welcoming hands to the oppressed of every country. Freedom for the black men has been bought at a terrible price, but with it has come the realization of liberty for millions of whites—millions who soon came streaming into the reborn America—Irish, German, Italian, Slav and all others from the darker spots in Europe where the light of liberty burned dimly, but strong enough to guide the way to a happier land.

MAE MARSH

In "The Birth of a Nation," Liberty.

WEEKLY

St. Louis.

MAY 1 - 1915

Five Dollar Movies

Ten years ago David W. Griffith was a jobless actor, knocking about New York trying to get some one to listen to his scheme for producing moving pictures on a large scale. Today he is the leading figure in the moving picture world, with an annual salary that runs into six figures.

He declares that within the next three or four years moving pictures will be produced to which the price of admission will be $5 and $6. In support of his statement he points out that a few years ago an expenditure of $500 on a single picture was thought to be as much as the public would stand, and 5 cents was considered the best price that could be charged at a theater where the only attraction was a picture. Now he claims the $50,000 picture which theater managers refused 50 cents. He is now producing a picture in New York which he says shall be shown at $2 a seat, and he is asking $2 for a picture for which the public not only is paying the price but is buying tickets from speculators at as much as $5. "And when you have cut to a picture that will cost $2,000,000 to produce, the public will be willing to pay $5 a seat for it," he adds.

He predicts that in time the melodrama will entirely disappear from the list of attractions. The people will not be satisfied with views of little corners of life, but demand the world and of life. They will demand sweeping scenes impossible of production on any stage. In the last picture he made, Mr. Griffith he used 18,000 people, 300 horses and 7,000 words of matter, including four pages of Wilson's history of the American people, he argues, [illegible] in this way than [illegible] they can get history, literature and drama [illegible] allowance must be made for the fact of a man who [illegible] wonderful films story.

FILMS AND FILM FOLK BY WID

Went to see "The Birth of a Nation" for the third time Tuesday night and was accompanied by a man who is "doing New York." He has seen a score of other amusements, including some of our best little dramatic and musical offerings and when he came out he said emphatically "Why, that's the best thing I have seen in town, not excepting anything."

There you are. That's why I am not only going to win the box of boyos I bet on the opening night that the big film would run for more than three months, but that is why it is going to run all summer and then some. I got some thrills with the third sitting. That's pretty good proof of the greatness of the production.

ALAMEDA (Cal.) STAR
MAY 22, 1915

THE CLANSMAN TO ENTER ON FINAL WEEK

D. W. Griffith's wonderful photoplay, "The Clansman or The Birth of A Nation," continues to play to capacity houses both afternoon and evening at the Macdonough theater. More than 25,000 persons have witnessed the film during its exhibition in Oakland for the past two weeks.

"The Clansman" will start on its third and last big week Monday, May 24th, and ending Sunday, May 30th

LOS ANGELES (Cal.) EXPRESS.
MAY 20, 1915

Clansman to Return Tomorrow

The seats are selling rapidly for next week, the thirteenth great week of The Clansman at Clune's auditorium theater. Over 300,000 people have witnessed this remarkable production, which proves that it is by far the most popular picture attraction ever to come to Los Angeles. Indeed, the reception given The Clansman has been the leading topic of conversation in [illegible] the [illegible]

D. W. Griffith, [illegible] from the coast, will shortly start work on his next screen spectacle, based on the legend of the Holy Grail. Mr. Griffith's plans to filmize the knights of the Round Table were first noted in The Globe.

The Hastings Echo
Dobbs Ferry
March 19, 191[illegible]

LIBERTY—D. W. Griffith's marvellous spectacle "The Birth of a Nation" continues as one of the sensations of the season. It starts in upon its sixth phenomenal week with the matinee and night performances on Easter Sunday. Even Holy Week, just passed, usually the worst period in a theatrical season was no exception to the rule of crowded houses. The attendance last week set up a new record. More distinguished persons have seen the production than ever attended any other motion picture in New York. Nearly 90,000 patrons have kept the Liberty Theatre filled at every performance. Judging by the interest and the sale it is now estimated that over a million patrons will see the picture production before the end of the New York run.

LOS ANGELES (Cal.) TIMES
MAY 19, 1915

Screen and Stage.

MAY PRODUCE GRAIL STORY.

Looks Like It's to be Next Griffith Feature.

Morosco to be Movie House, Rumor Says.

Doings of Footlight Stars and Film Favorites.

FF

BY GRACE KINGSLEY.

"The Quest of the Holy Grail" will probably be the next film masterpiece to be produced by David Griffith, the famous director of "The Clansman." It will follow out the lines of the Arthurian romances, dealing with the search for the talisman by the Knights of the Round Table.

Ever since the production of "The Clansman," there has been much surmise as to what Mr. Griffith would do next. Certainly "The Quest of the Holy Grail," with its stupendous picturesqueness and spiritual significance, offers a subject worthy of his genius.

Questioned concerning the matter, Mr. Griffith said: "'The Quest of the Holy Grail' will make a beautiful film classic, and it has long been my desire to reproduce it in a film play. I am of the opinion that the film possibilities of the subject are vast, and no doubt would be an exquisite one on which to base a multiple reel feature."

Already it is a matter of public knowledge that Mr. Griffith made a special trip to Boston to secure the pictorial rights for certain scenic features from the Abbey family; and he will go to the Boston Public Library and photograph the famous Abbey frescoes. Reproduction of these frescoes is controlled by Mrs. Edwin Austin Abbey, the artist's widow, and negotiations are being made with her, and also with her brother-in-law, Charles Scribner, who manages her affairs, for the rights to photograph the frescoes.

The photodrama will be produced in California if negotiations are successful, Mr. Griffith believing there is no picture country in the world like this State.

The Grail romances deal with the search for the Grail, and also with its early history. Both phases will be treated of in the filmization. Even now a careful search is being made for all literature containing information as to the "Quest of the Holy Grail."

Those knowing Mr. Griffith's work as a motion picture producer, and bearing in mind his recent success, "The Clansman," or "The Birth of the Nation," as it has been renamed, can picture for themselves the results with the great new subject under consideration.

OAKLAND (Cal.) TRIBUNE
MAY 20, 1915

GRIPPING FILM DRAWS CROWDS TO MACDONOUGH

D. W. Griffith's powerful photodrama, "The Clansman," based on Thomas Dixon's well known novel, continues to draw capacity houses at the Macdonough theater, where it is being shown twice daily to enthusiastic audiences that tax the capacity of the theater.

Among the leading features to be seen in "The Clansman" are Lincoln's call for volunteers, the siege before Petersburg, with thousands of soldiers in action, the burning and [illegible] Sherman's march [illegible] Charleston, [illegible] Francisco [illegible] Theatre [illegible]

GRIFFITH TO MAKE HOLY GRAIL PICTURE

The Great Story Has Long Attracted Him—Studying Abbey Pictures.

David W. Griffith, producer of the "Birth of a Nation," in an interview with the World correspondent, stated that he is elated with the enthusiastic reception which Bostonians are giving to his great spectacle. He also announced that his next production will be a film based on "The Quest for the Holy Grail" and while in Boston he spent considerable time at the Boston Public Library studying the paintings of Edwin Austin Abbey, which are based on the subject. In discussing the production in Boston, Mr. Griffith said:

"I am very much enthused over the manner in which the Boston audiences are appreciating the film. Since we opened here we have played to capacity houses. In fact we have taken in more money in a single day than any legitimate production, which has played this theater during the year, has taken in in a week."

"The advance sale is beyond all expectations. Of course the production was widely advertised. A large number of persons have written to me stating that they would rather pay ten dollars to see this film than to pay one dollar for any dramatic production."

"For the past two years, I have been desirous of producing "The Quest of the Holy Grail" for the screen. I have been studying those wonderful paintings in the Boston Public Library on the subject. The rights of reproduction are controlled by Mrs. Edward Austin Abbey, the artist's widow. I have written to Charles Scribner, the New York publisher, who is Mrs. Abbey's brother-in-law, and who manages her affairs opening negotiations for the motion production."

CENSORS HOLDING UP "NATION"

18FF

Chicago, May [illegible]

The Illinois Board of Censors is [illegible] tarding the opening of "The Birth of a Nation" film at the Illinois theater. The management has the theatre under a lease and will place the big feature on exhibition as soon as they can secure the O. K. of the Board. The general manager, secretary to Griffith and the chief operator of the company have left the picture have been here since Tuesday of last week and have revised the film since showing it to the Board. Another showing is to be given this week.

Atlantic City, May 19.

"The Birth of a Nation" feature is to open here at the Apollo for an indefinite engagement in June. The feature people are to play the house on a percentage.

OAKLAND (Cal.) TRIBUNE
MAY 2, 1915

I... Theatre

New York City

MAY - - 1915

Bangs D. W. GRIFFITH
Producer of "The Birth of a Nation"

Three highly paid directors, all with the Mutual brands of film, are D. W. Griffith, Thomas Ince and Mack Sennett. Griffith began eight years ago with the Biograph company at a daily wage of $3. Now he is famous as the $100,000 a year director. Moreover, few there are who question that he receives this honorarium and still fewer who believe he is overpaid. His latest production, "The Birth of a Nation," is one of the marvels of the camera.

Examiner, Los Angeles (Cal.)
May 20.

Mr. D. W. Griffith was called suddenly to the East last week on business connected with his "Birth of a Nation" photo-drama.

OAKLAND (Cal.) TRIBUNE
MAY 17, 1915

CLIPPING FROM Times
LOS ANGELES (Cal.)
MAY 20

Clune's Auditorium.
Over 300,000 people have viewed Clune's Auditorium, [illegible] rapidly for [illegible] teenth in the [illegible] film.

SAN ANTONIO (TEX.) LIGHT
MAY 23, 1915

...W. Griffith, producer of "The Birth ... Nation," will start work next ... on a new photo spectacle called ... Quest of the Holy Grail."

Telegram May 20.

...A. Abbey's famous mural decorations ... "The Quest of the Holy Grail," in ... Public Library have inspired ... W. Griffith, who produced "The ... a Nation," to turn the famous ... legend of the Grail into moving ... The preparation of the work is ... under way.

Globe & Commercial N.Y. May 21, 1915

...id W. Griffith, producer of ... Birth of a Nation," now in its ...enth week at the Liberty Thea... on his way east, following a ... of activity at the Majestic-Re... studios in Los Angeles. Mr. ...th makes from fifteen to twenty ... the-continent trips each year. ...ating eight to ten days for a ... trip, one-sixth of his year is de... to travel. However, the director ...s no time, devoting the journ... to reading books and working ...cenarios.

...rk has almost been completed ... the direction of Mr. Griffith on ... Mother and the Law." Mae ...h and Miriam Cooper are co... in the photodrama. "The ... of the Holy Grail" will be the ... important Griffith picture and ...uccessor to "The Birth of a Na... This was first told in The ... some time ago. The players ... "The Quest of the Holy Grail" ... not yet been selected.

... the way, during Mr. Griffith's ... to Boston in April the director ... most of his time studying the ...n A. Abbey "Grail" painting in ... Boston Public Library.

Journal.

...ing his next elaborate motion picture play following "The Birth of a Nation," David W. Griffith announces he will produce "The Quest of the Holy Grail," which he will base on his study of the paintings by Edwin A. Abbey in the Public Library in Boston. He will start work on the production in Los Angeles next month.

N.Y. Herald. May 20, 1915

...David W. Griffith, who produced the famous film, "The Birth of a Nation," now being shown in the Liberty, has announced "The Quest of the Holy Grail" as the title of his next picture. Mr. Griffith has long been an admirer of Edwin A. Abbey's pictures in the Boston Library, and has made several trips there this spring to study them with a view of weaving a scenario about them. Work on the picture will be begun early next month, and several leading romantic actors will act for it.

Times. N.Y. May 20, 1915

...Work on the new picture will start in June.

...announces for the subject of his next film "The Quest of the Holy Grail." Mr. Griffith has long been an admirer of the Edwin A. Abbey "Grail" pictures that adorn the Public Library in Boston, and has made several trips thither this spring to study their possibilities for a narrative story and to negotiate for the rights. The production will be fully as sumptuous as "The Birth of a Nation," and the cast will include several of the leading romantic actors of the American stage. Work will be started in June, immediately upon the director's return to Los Angeles.

...W. Griffith, producer of "The Birth of a Nation," announces ... the next elaborate ... "The Quest of the Holy Grail." Griffith has long been an admirer of the Edwin A. Abbey "Grail" pictures that adorn the Public Library in Boston. He has made several trips there this spring to study their possibilities for a narrative story, and to negotiate for the rights. The production will be fully as sumptuous as "The Birth of a Nation," and the cast will include several of the leading romantic actors of the American stage. Work will be started in June, immediately upon the director's return to Los Angeles.

LIFE (New York)
MAY 20 1915

Liberty.—"The Birth of a Nation." Impressive moving pictures of the rehearsing in dramatic and spectacular form, on a large scale but with much attention to detail, the events at the close of the Civil War and during the reconstruction period.

Motion Picture News. N.Y. May 22, 1915

Griffith on Master Pictures

David W. Griffith is again actively engaged at the Majestic and Reliance studio after an absence for four months spent in looking after the showing of his recent thirteen reeler, "The Birth of a Nation," and is giving practically all of his time to the rehearsal of companies producing for the Mutual Master-Pictures program.

BROOKLYN, (N. Y.) TIMES
May 22, 1915

"The Birth of a Nation."

The fourth month of D. W. Griffith's spectacle of the American military era, "The Birth of a Nation," shows undiminished attendance at the Liberty Theatre. The attraction seems eminently suited to the present, with European complications and the portent of possible war overshadowing the land. Civil strife that grew out of misunderstanding and jealousy; battles fought over wide-stretching areas; the torch and rapine their corollary; the great, all-loving heart of the War President, and the little men that thwarted his far-seeing plan; the victory of the North and the terrible aftermath of Reconstruction—these furnish a succession of themes the working out of which impinges as vividly upon 1915 as upon 1861-'70. Never before has America's greatest war been thus comprehensively put on film, canvas or panorama. "The Birth of a Nation" proved of intensest interest last week to thousands of those who attended the naval review and to hundreds of the Jackies. It is the one big patriotic entertainment in town, inculcating the lesson of national solidarity with sledge-hammer strokes. The fascination of the beautiful love-romance, the excellent acting and wonderful photography, the emotional appeal of the music, and the cunning art of the mechanical effects, combine to make an entertainment satisfyingly delightful to classes of theatregoers.

New York World. May 22, 1915

"BIRTH OF A NATION" HAS PATRIOTIC APPEAL

The fourth month of D. W. Griffith's spectacle of the American military era, "The Birth of a Nation," shows undiminished attendance and enthusiasm at the Liberty Theatre. Civil strife that grew out of misunderstanding and jealousy; battles fought over wide-stretching areas; the torch; the great, all-loving heart of the War President; the victory of the North and the aftermath of reconstruction—these furnish a succession of themes the working out of which is vividly dramatic. Never before has America's great war been thus comprehensively put on film, canvas or panorama. "The Birth of a Nation" is essentially patriotic, inculcating the lesson of national solidarity. The fascination of the love-romance, the excellent acting and wonderful photography, the emotional appeal of the music, and the art of the mechanical effects combine to make a remarkable entertainment. Matinee and evening performances are given at the Liberty every day, including Sundays.

Motion Picture News. May 22, 1915

IBSEN'S "PILLARS OF SOCIETY" A MUTUAL MASTER PICTURE

Ibsen's "Pillars of Society," is being made into a motion picture by the Reliance company, for release as a Mutual Masterpicture.

The cast is one of the strongest obtainable. Henry B. Walthall, star of Griffith's "Birth of a Nation," is playing Bernick, the head of the long established ship building house which is nearing bankruptcy. Mary Alden, whose work in "The Birth of a Nation," "Man's Prerogative," and other feature pictures, has won her enviable fame as a character woman, has visualized Ibsen's creation of Lona with unusual force and insight.

As the leader of the hypocrites and a pillar of society, Ralph Lewis has been given just the sort of part he can make the most of. The scenario is the work of Mary H. O'Connor, and R. A. Walsh is responsible for the production.

Journal. May 22, 1915

"Birth of a Nation" Star Own Cousin of Figure In Events He Portrays

The little hero that "Birth of a Nation" patrons applaud so vigorously at the Liberty Theatre has some right to the bay and laurel wreaths of fame, for Henry Walthall, playing the "little Confederate Colonel" aforesaid, is own cousin of the late United States Senator Walthall, of Mississippi. Senator Walthall played a distinguished part in the reconstruction events which his young relative portrays.

"Impossible!" said the "I-know-it-alls" when D. W. Griffith announced his intention of casting Henry Walthall as Colonel Ben Cameron, the leader of the Ku Klux Klan, in "The Birth of a Nation." They thought a six-footer necessary to heroics, whereas Mr. Walthall is small but elegantly formed, about 5 feet 3 inches in height. But when it came to the actual photography, everybody realized Mr. Griffith was right.

Walthall takes a most dashing military picture. His father fought for the Stars and Bars, and the young actor "eats up" the war scenes. See him charging the battle intrenchments, flag in hand, or robed as a clansman saving the girl from a ring of carpet-bagger foes and it's no longer a wonder that the Liberty audiences whoop it up for this paragon of fiery warriors.

He received his first "movie" training at the old Biograph studio here in New York under David W. Griffith's direction. When the latter assumed charge of the Mutual film-making, he took Walthall out to California with him. The role of Colonel Cameron, which the young man plays, is the longest one in "The Birth of a Nation."

MAE MARSH, "Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty Theatre.

"The Birth of a Nation" at Liberty Still Packing Them to the Doors, Rain or Shine, Parades Park Packed All the Time.

Mail. May 22, 1915 N.Y.C.

'Birth of a Nation' Still Draws Well

The fourth month of D. W. Griffith's military spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," shows undiminished attendance and enthusiasm at the Liberty Theatre. The attraction seems eminently suited to the present, with European complications and the portent of possible war overshadowing the land.

Civil strife that grew out of misunderstanding and jealousy; battles fought over wide-stretching areas; the torch and rapine; the great, all-loving heart of the war president, and the little men that thwarted his far-seeing plan; the victory of the north and the aftermath of reconstruction—these furnish a succession of themes that appeal to imagination as strongly in 1915 as in 1861-'70.

Never before has America's greatest war been thus comprehensively put on film, canvas or panorama. "The Birth of a Nation" proved of intense interest last week to thousands who attended the naval review and hundreds of the jackies. It is the one big patriotic entertainment in town, inculcating the lesson of national solidarity with sledge-hammer strokes.

The fascination of the beautiful love-romance, the excellent acting and wonderful photography, the emotional appeal of the music, and the cunning art of the mechanical effects combine to make an entertainment that delights all classes of theatregoers.

Only in New York and two or three other large cities is "The Birth of a Nation" on view. The elaborateness of the mounting and accessories forbids its multitudinous reproduction. Matinee and evening performances are given at the Liberty every day, including Sundays.

Motion Picture News. May 22, 1915

Miriam Cooper, a Mutual actress, who had a prominent part in "The Birth of a Nation," and her mother made a short visit to New York recently.

Evening Sun May 22, 1915 N.Y.C.

LIBERTY—The fourth month of D. W. Griffith's marvellous spectacle of the American military era, "The Birth of a Nation," shows undiminished attendance and enthusiasm. The attraction seems eminently suited to the present, with European complications and the portent of possible war overshadowing the land. Civil strife that grew out of misunderstanding and jealousy; battles fought over wide stretching areas; the torch and rapine their corollary; the great, all loving heart of the war President and the little men that thwarted his far seeing plan; the victory of the North and the terrible aftermath of reconstruction. These furnish a succession of themes the working out of which impinges as vividly upon 1915 as upon 1861-70. Never before has America's greatest war been thus comprehensively put on film, canvas or panorama.

PLAYHOUSE—"Sinners" is upon the edge of its sixth month of conspicuously high favor in New York. A manager in a distant city wrote to Mr. Brady last week asking for a next season booking for "the best known play in America," a phrase which appears to be justified through the large attendance of persons from various sections of the country visiting New York for vacation purposes.

COMEDY—"The White Feather" continues to be viewed with appreciation and excitement by assemblages of numerous extent. This English comedy-drama depends principally for success upon the humorous situations in which it abounds and the suspense, which is almost continuous. The mid-week matinees at this theatre occur on Tuesdays.

New York Herald Tribune May 22.

There have been, of course, some splendid moving ...tures. Cabiria was a magnificent spectacle. It ...s pictorially greater than anything attempted in ... spoken drama. It was well acted. The Birth of a Nation was done upon a scale that would be utterly ...ossible with canvas, paint, and dialogue. Those ...nde... battle-scenes and rides of the Ku-Klux ...n could not even have been approximated on the ...gest stage, or in any enclosure. But even The ...th of a Nation is advertised by lithographs of the ...oting of Lincoln. On the bill-boards we may see ...oth jumping from the Presidential box in Ford's ...atre, Washington.

The most enthusiastic admirer of the movies today ...not maintain that the pictures, often admirable ...d well acted as they are, tend to prepare audiences ...t will arise and demand a higher standard for our ...ge. The theatre is vital and will find its own sal...ion from commercialism. It does not need the ...vies, but the movies might have done better than ... some of the worst features of the ...

N.Y. Commercial May 22, 1915

"The Birth of a Nation," the American war spectacle by D. W. Griffith, continues in its fourth month at the Liberty. The working out of the themes covers the period of 1861-1870, and impinges on the more terrible war now being fought across the sea in 1915.

N.Y. Motion Picture News May 22, 1915

"NATION" SHOWN 133 TIMES IN NEW YORK

"The Birth of a Nation" continues at the Liberty theatre, New York, where D. W. Griffith offers his mammoth production in the same manner that made it a sensation when originally given in this city.

Saturday, May 8, turned the one hundred and thirty-third presentation of the big picture in New York, during which time it was seen by approximately 190,000 theatregoers. The engagement has already assumed record proportions, and at the Liberty is equivalent to a run of sixteen weeks for an ordinary attraction, playing eight performances a week.

The Globe & Commercial N.Y. May 22, 1915

Journal of Commerce May 22, 1915

The fourth month of D. W. ... great spectacle of postbellum day ... reconstruction period. "The ... Nation," shows undiminished ... the Liberty Theatre. The ... continues throughout ... matinee ...

MISS LILLIAN GISH in "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" LIBERTY THEATRE.

"The Birth of a Nation" is now in the fourth month of its engagement in the Liberty Theatre. Miss Lillian Gish appears in a leading rôle.

N.Y.C. Telegraph. May 23, 1915

N.Y.C. American May 23, 1915

MIRIAM COOPER in "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" at the LIBERTY THEATRE

The fourth month of D. W. Griffith's marvelous spectacle of the American military era, "The Birth of a Nation," shows undiminished attendance and enthusiasm at the Liberty Theatre. The attraction seems eminently suited to the present, with European complications and the portent of possible war overshadowing the land. Civil strife that grew out of misunderstanding and jealousy; battles fought over wide-stretching areas; the torch and rapine and corollary; the great all-loving heart of the War President, and the little men that thwarted his far-seeing plan; the victory of the North and the terrible aftermath of Reconstruction—these furnish a succession of themes the working out of which impinges as vividly upon 1915 as upon 1861-70.

MIRIAM COOPER in "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" LIBERTY THEATRE

May 23, 1915

"Birth of a Nation." (Film.)

Telegram May 23, 1915

The fourth month of D. W. Griffith's spectacle of the American military era, "The Birth of a Nation," shows undiminished attendance and enthusiasm at the Liberty Theatre.

N.Y. Telegraph May 23, 1915

The current week will wind up the third month of the run of D. W. Griffith's welcome spectacle "The Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty Theatre, which continues to receive the most attention of all sorts of theatre-goers. On Sunday afternoon the 150th representation of the master picture in New York will be celebrated. Its record is without a parallel on the local stage.

YN (N. Y.) EAGLE

The fourth month of D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation," shows undiminished attendance at the Liberty

CLEVER MOVIE ACTRESS TO BE MADE A STAR

Miss Miriam Cooper, the military-looking young actress who leads the great cavalry parade seen in "The Birth of a Nation," at the Liberty Theatre, is a great-great-great-grandadughter of Charles Carroll, the Maryland signer of the Declaration of Independence. For a hundred years the male side of the line has included one or more United States cavalry officers.

When "The Birth of a Nation" was being played recently in Los Angeles, Miss Cooper led a real parade of mounted Union "vets" from the National Soldiers' Home to the Auditorium. Several hundred of the old boys took part in the ride and then saw the play. They all marveled at the historical accuracy of the Civil War scenes. Parade and special performance formed an extraordinary tribute from the survivors of '61 to the new art of 1915.

Miss Cooper was in New York the other day—her first visit East since "The Birth of a Nation" was completed. Director David W. Griffith intends soon to star her with Mae Marsh in a modern problem picture entitled "The Mother and the Law."

"BIRTH OF A NATION" AT THE LIBERTY

The fourth month of D. W. Griffith's marvelous spectacle of the American military era, "The Birth of a Nation," shows undiminished attendance and enthusiasm at the Liberty Theatre. The attraction seems eminently suited to the present, with European complications and the portent of possible war overshadowing the land.

NEWARK, (N. J.) CALL

Date .....

David W. Griffith, who produced the feature film, "The Birth of a Nation," now being shown in the Liberty, has announced "The Quest of the Holy Grail" as the title of his next picture. Mr. Griffith has long been an admirer of Edwin A. Abbey's pictures in the Boston Library, and has made several trips there this spring to study them with a view of weaving a scenario about them. Work on the picture will be begun early next month, and several leading romantic actors will be selected for it.

The fourth month of D. W. Griffith's spectacle of the American military era, "The Birth of a Nation," shows undiminished attendance at the Liberty Theatre. The attraction seems well suited to the present, with European complications and the portent of war overshadowing the land. Civil strife that grew out of misunderstanding and jealousy, battles fought over wide-stretching areas, the torch and rapine corollary, the all-loving heart of the War President and the little men that thwarted his far-seeing plan, the victory of the North and the aftermath of Reconstruction—these furnish a succession of themes the working out of which impinges as vividly upon 1915 as upon 1861-1870.

N.Y.C. Tribune. May 23, 1915

The fourth month of D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" shows undiminished attendance at the Liberty Theatre. The attraction seems eminently suited to the present, with European complications and the portent of possible war overshadowing the land. "The Birth of a Nation" proved of interest last week to thousands of those who attended the naval review, and to hundreds of the jackies. Only in New York and two or three other large cities is "The Birth of a Nation" on view. The elaborateness of the mounting and accessories forbids its multitudinous reproduction. Matinee and evening performances are given at the Liberty every day, including Sundays.

N.Y.C. Sun. May 23, 1915

FACTS ON THE SCREEN.

History as "The Birth of a Nation" Shows It.

Theatregoers who have wondered what historical basis there was for the Southern clans pictured in "The Birth of a Nation" spectacle at the Liberty may be interested to learn that they were an indirect outgrowth of the Highland clans of Scotland.

David W. Griffith, producer of the play, is a Southerner and dug up many little known facts for the preparation of the picture.

Thousands of Highlanders and their families, broken by the Stuart rebellions, settled in North and South Carolina in the eighteenth century. The traveller to-day finds quaint villages in the Appalachian foothills, where all the inhabitants are Scottish of close kin. To ride swiftly and to shoot straight is the distinguishing mark of the men. The tradition of clannish union for defence rules strong as ever. The rite of upholding St. Andrew's Cross is vividly remembered and in some instances preserved.

The clans sprang to life during the Reconstruction struggles of 1869-71. Gen. Nathan Bedford Forrest organized them. John W. Morton, afterward Secretary of State of Tennessee, was Adjutant-General. The incident in "The Birth of a Nation" of the North Carolina clansmen massing to aid their South Carolina brethren is actual fact. Often parties of clansmen rode fifty to sixty miles by night on such secret errands, and the show of force at any one time or place was thus irresistible.

Henry Walthall, who plays the Ku Klux Klan leader in "The Birth of a Nation," is the son of a clansman. The rites used are taken from the ritual book of the order which was secretly published at Pulaski, Tenn. The "underground railroad" was an important part of the system. When the Federal prosecutions were instituted many offenders were thus enabled to escape West and so-called refugeed clansmen are prominent members of communities in Texas, Arkansas and Oklahoma. A general amnesty finally removed the ban of secrecy, since which time the stories of their doings and thrilling escapes have developed into a kind of semi-historical, semi-legendary lore, like the stories of the Highlanders in Sir Walter Scott's time.

New York Sun. May 23, 1915

PLAYS ON THE SCREEN.

Attractions in the Motion Picture Houses This Week.

The leading motion picture plays which hold public attention this week are:

"The Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty Theatre, D. W. Griffith's gripping drama of the civil war and the reconstruction period in the South, the assassination of President Lincoln, the Ku Klux Klan and other features. "The Eternal City" continues to be popular at the Astor Theatre. The Famous Player Film Company's production of Hall Caine's novel of life in modern Rome, with Pauline Frederick in the leading role, will be supplanted on May 31 with "The Alien," based on the play "The Sign of the Rose." It will be acted by a strong and capable cast.

Tribune, Oakland, Cal. May 23, 1915

MACDONOUGH

"The Clansman," by "The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's marvelous film drama, in twelve reels, based on Thos. Dixon's well-known novel, which is being [illegible] at the Macdonough

BROOKLYN, (N. Y.) CITIZEN

Date MAY 23 1915

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

Undiminished Attendance at the Liberty Theatre.

The fourth month of D. W. Griffith's marvelous spectacle of the American military era, "The Birth of a Nation," shows undiminished attendance and enthusiasm at the Liberty Theatre. The attraction seems eminently suited to the present, with European complications and the portent of possible war overshadowing the land.

Civil strife that grew out of misunderstanding and jealousy; battles fought over wide-stretching areas; the torch and rapine their corollary; the great, all-loving heart of the War President, and the little men that thwarted his far-seeing plan; the victory of the North and the terrible aftermath of Reconstruction—these furnish a succession of themes the working out of which impinges as vividly upon 1915 as upon 1861-70.

Never before has America's greatest war been put on film, canvas or panorama. "The Birth of a Nation" proved of intensest interest last week to thousands of those who attended the naval review and hundreds of the Jackies. It is the one big patriotic entertainment in town, inculcating the lesson of national solidarity with sledge-hammer strokes.

The fascination of the beautiful love-romance, the excellent acting and wonderful photography, the emotional appeal of the music, and the cunning art of the mechanical effects, combine to make an entertainment satisfyingly delightful to all classes of theatregoers.

Only in New York or two or three other large cities is "The Birth of a Nation" on view. The elaborateness of the mounting and accessories forbids its multitudinous reproduction, as with other pictures.

Matinee and evening performances are given at the Liberty every day, including Sundays.

Brooklyn, (N. Y.) Standard-Union MAY 23 1915

Manhattan Theatres

LIBERTY, MANHATTAN — The fourth month of D. W. Griffith's marvelous spectacle of the American military era, "The Birth of a Nation," shows undiminished attendance and enthusiasm at the Liberty Theatre, Manhattan. The attraction seems eminently suited to the present, with European complications. Civil strife that grew out of misunderstanding and jealousy; battles fought over wide-stretching areas; the torch and rapine their corollary; the great, all-loving heart of the War President, and the little men that thwarted his far-seeing plan; the victory of the North and the terrible aftermath of Reconstruction, these furnish a succession of themes the working out of which impinges as vividly upon 1915 as upon 1861-70. Never before has America's greatest war been put on film, canvas, or panorama. "The Birth of a Nation" proved of interest last week to thousands of those who attended the Naval Review and to hundreds of the Jackies. It is the one big patriotic entertainment in town, inculcating the lesson of national solidarity with sledge-hammer strokes. The fascination of the beautiful love-romance, the excellent acting and wonderful photography, the emotional appeal of the music, and the cunning art of the mechanical effects, combine to make an entertainment satisfyingly delightful to all classes of theatregoers.

LOS ANGELES (Cal.) EXAMINER MAY ...

LOS ANGELES (Cal.) TIMES MAY 23, 1915

Woodley.

Lillian Gish in ... of "The Clansman" ... the Woodley.

MIRIAM COOPER IN "THE CLANSMAN" CLUNES AUDITORIUM

Among the picture features so be seen this week are "The Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty Theatre, where D. W. Griffith's film spectacle of the civil war continues to play to capacity houses. At the Astor Theatre the Famous Players Film Company's adaptation of Hall Caine's novel "The Eternal City," with Pauline Frederick in the leading role, is entering on its last week. The next picture will be "The Alien."

Although only three months before the public, D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," has already been witnessed by more than 750,000 patrons. Of this number, 250,000 persons have seen the play at the Liberty Theatre here, and the remainder of the attendance has been divided between Boston, Los Angeles and San Francisco. Such a record within such a short space of time would have been impossible save for the "capacity" business that has consistently prevailed in each of the four production centres.

Brooklyn, (N. Y.) Standard
Date MAY 2 4 1915

Although only three months before the public, D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," has already been witnessed by more than 750,000 patrons. Of this number a quarter of a million persons have seen the play at the Liberty Theatre, Manhattan, and the remainder of the attendance has been divided between Boston, Los Angeles and San Francisco.

N. Y. World May 23, 1915

Vanity Fair
Place: New York City
MAY 1915

Remarkable Scenes from a Remarkable Film

TOWARD the end of the theatrical season, after months of managerial moaning regarding box-office receipts, along came D. W. Griffith, with his moving picture, "The Birth of a Nation," and an honest desire to show that business wasn't so bad after all, even at dollars a seat. The production was both favorably and unfavorably received. Chief among the objections voiced against it was the accusation that it aroused race prejudice, and was unfair to the South. Feeling on the question rose to such a pitch that the firm hand of Mayor Mitchel fell upon the picture, with the result that two of the biggest scenes were edited out of it. The film may have its faults of subject-matter, but it must undoubtedly command a certain admiration. For photography alone, it is remarkable; as witness the night battle scene shown above, which was really photographed at night, by the aid of a new illuminating device that has been kept a close studio secret. In the scene at the top of this page, Mr. Griffith's aim was to show in an allegory the uselessness and cruelty of war throughout the ages. It took him a fortnight, but, as you can see, he produced not merely a "human salad," but a striking composition.

LOS ANGELES (Cal.) TIMES
MAY 23, 1915

[illegible] Auditorium

The Clansman will [illegible] week at Clune's Auditorium [illegible] afternoon. It is [illegible] 300,000 persons have viewed the [illegible] in this city, and still they come. [illegible] historical appeal of [illegible] scenes, the assassination [illegible] the exploits of the [illegible] is mighty; but yet is the appeal of [illegible] human story [illegible] woven through the [illegible]

LOS ANGELES (Cal.) EXAMINER
MAY 23, 1915

[illegible] PIECE OF A NATION" [illegible]

[illegible] Clansman, of the photo-[illegible] drama [illegible] by this return; when the [illegible] was first shown here it [illegible] the [illegible] week, and that [illegible] [illegible] photo-play has estab-[illegible] fact that this one is re-[illegible] seems to be well [illegible] photo-play [illegible] that attributes of [illegible] claim that he is [illegible] who has made wonderful [illegible] of it, he is right. That he [illegible] photo-plays of beauty, dra-[illegible] and fascinating demand [illegible] will be produced by Mr. [illegible] producers and will re-[illegible] pieces in the re-[illegible] the theater-going people.

What about the dramatist [illegible] theatrical producer? David [illegible] the reputation based on [illegible] drawing more money here [illegible] other man, but Mr. Warfield [illegible] as much money probably [illegible] combined engagements here [illegible] Birth of a Nation" has made. [illegible] no use bolstering up the [illegible] with profound [illegible] the pity of the drama [illegible] over pictures in [illegible] and voice of the [illegible] all that is true. It is also [illegible] the theatrical producer has [illegible] Actor has at least equalled the [illegible] and the situation is as [illegible] among the connecting managers [illegible] in the theatrical business [illegible] what it will be in for [illegible] theatrical man-[illegible] not so badly if they were [illegible] that what has been estab-[illegible] by tradition as the only way to [illegible] plays is [illegible] necessarily the [illegible] way, but the best way.

[illegible] a motion picture play runs ten [illegible] Los Angeles and comes back [illegible] to be a proper period for [illegible] by dramatic producers.

KU KLUX ROBED IN BLACK.

So Says Powell Clayton in a Book of Arkansas After the War.

White photographs better than black. The robes of the Ku Klux riders in "Th[redacted]ion" are mainly white. James Ford Rhodes in his history speaks of white masks, high cardboard hats and white "shrouds." But Powell Clayton, in his "Aftermath in the Civil Wars in Arkansas" (Neale Pub. Co.), quotes Gen. Shaver, who was a Wizard of the order, as saying that "the uniform of the order was a black shroud both for man and horse, with tin stars, half-moons, etc., sewed upon it." Many men still living were members of the order; and yet we have this disagreement in so sharp an issue as that between black and white!

Gov. Clayton's account of the four troublous years, 1868-1872, is like listening to a telephone conversation. You do not hear what the other fellow is saying; and once in a while you catch from the man you do hear a hint of the presumed rebuttal. Again and again negro militiamen are spoken of. Their employment by a carpet-bag government must have been most irritating. Adjutant Gen. Danforth, in reporting on the Woodruff County troubles, which approximated civil war, recommended that colored troops be not sent. The conditions he describes are those of extreme terrorism.

Again, the same General whose operations in Woodruff County had led to the Danforth inquiry and report took from Marion four prisoners whom Col. Watson had captured. "On the march to Mississippi County these men attempted to escape and were killed." Mr. Clayton, then Governor, seems to have suspected an Arkansas "ley de fuga," but was later convinced that "in this case they actually were attempting to escape." No one remembers their names.

Murder was frequent in those sad days. Witnesses tell of it nonchalantly. "We put him in the well," says one, "and put some puncheons on the well." Gov. Clayton's brother was shot dead in an election quarrel. Clayton himself was spared because some members of the klan, as was afterward admitted, thought it inexpedient to murder him.

Strange, forgotten details are revived in memory by this book. How the planters tried to bring in Chinese to replace negroes in the cotton fields. How one negro man reverently took up on a board the imprint of Clayton's foot in the mud, dried it and kept it as a memento of the racial deliverer. How the land grant railways were financed by the State, including the Little Rock and Fort Smith, so damaging to Blaine's reputation.

Negroes were only twenty-five per cent. of the people of the State; yet Gov. Clayton seems surprised and aggrieved that after four years of warfare in which negro troops were employed to uphold a government accused of gross financial corruption and at the best imposed upon the State from outside, Arkansas has been consistently Democratic.

Gov. Clayton's book starts in bravely with a swinging account of his inauguration, when in the bare room in the State House which was his office, his predecessor, Gov. Murphy, took from a barrel filled with straw which was almost its only furniture, a bottle of moonshine to drink to his success. Thereafter he does his best to make a thrilling story dull by long quotations from official papers, including his nine-page inaugural message. But a bad method cannot destroy a book with such important material.

Mail May 24

Dismiss Film Play Case

The summons issued against Harry E. Aitken and D. W. Griffith, producers of the film play, "The Birth of a Nation," was dismissed by Magistrate Herbert in Jefferson Market Court today. The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People withdrew the complaint.

MISS LILLIAN GISH in "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" at LIBERTY THEATRE.

"The Birth of a Nation" is now in the fourth month of its engagement in the Liberty Theatre. Miss Lillian Gish appears in a leading role.

N.Y.C. Telegraph. May 23, 1915

MIRIAM COOPER in "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" at the LIBERTY THEATRE

MIRIAM COOPER IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" LIBERTY THEATRE

The fourth month of D marvelous spectacle of military era, "The Birth shows undiminished attend thusiasm at the Liberty T attraction seems eminently present, with European c and the portent of possible shadowing the land. Civil strife that grew out of misunderstanding and jealousy; battles fought over wide-stretching areas; the torch and rapine and corollary; the great all-loving heart of the War President, and the little men that thwarted his far-seeing plan; the victory of the North and the terrible aftermath of Reconstruction—these furnish a succession of themes the working out of which impinges as vividly upon 1915 as upon 1861-70.

May 23, 1915

"Birth of a Nation." (Film.)

Telegram May 23, 1915

The fourth month of D. W. Griffith's spectacle of the American military era, "The Birth of a Nation," shows undiminished attendance and enthusiasm at the Liberty Theatre.

N. Y. Telegraph May 23, 1915

The current week will wind up the [illegible] third month of the run of D. W. Griffith's [illegible] spectacle "The Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty Theatre, [illegible] continues to [illegible] attention of all sorts of theatre-[illegible] On Sunday afternoon the 150th [illegible] of the master picture in [illegible] York will be celebrated. It's record is [illegible] a parallel on the local stage.

BROOKLYN (N. Y.) EAGLE

[illegible] month of D. W. Griffith's [illegible] of a Nation," shows undi-[illegible] attendance at the Liberty

The fourth month of D. W. Griffith's appearance of the American military era, "The Birth of a Nation," shows undiminished attendance at the Liberty Theatre. The attraction seems well suited to the present with European complications and the portent of war overshadowing the land. Civil strife that grew out of misunderstanding and jealousy, battles fought over wide-stretching areas, the torch and rapine corollary, the all-loving heart of the War President and the little men that thwarted his far-seeing plan, the victory of the North and the aftermath of Reconstruction—these furnish a succession of themes the working out of which impinges as vividly upon 1915 as upon 1861-1870.

N.Y.C. Tribune. May 23, 1915

The fourth month of D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" shows undiminished attendance at the Liberty Theatre. The attraction seems eminently suited to the present, with European complications and the portent of possible war overshadowing the land. "The Birth of a Nation" proved of interest last week to thousands of those who attended the naval review, and to hundreds of the jackies. Only in New York and two or three other large cities is "The Birth of a Nation" on view. The elaborateness of the mounting and accessories forbids its multitudinous reproduction. Matinee and evening performances are given at the Liberty every day, including Sundays.

N.Y.C. Times. May 23, 1915

FACTS ON THE SCREEN.

History as "The Birth of a Nation" Shows It.

Theatregoers who have wondered what historical basis there was for the Southern clans pictured in "The Birth of a Nation" spectacle at the Liberty may be interested to learn that they were an indirect outgrowth of the Highland clans of Scotland.

David W. Griffith, producer of the play, is a Southerner and dug up many little known facts for the preparation of the picture.

Thousands of Highlanders and their families, broken by the Stuart rebellions, settled in North and South Carolina in the eighteenth century. The traveller to-day finds quaint villages in the Appalachian foothills, where all the inhabitants are Scottish of close kin. To ride swiftly and to shoot straight is the distinguishing mark of the men. The tradition of clannish union for defence rules strong as ever. The rite of upholding St. Andrew's Cross is vividly remembered and in some instances preserved.

The clans sprang to life during the Reconstruction struggles of 1863-71. Gen. Nathan Bedford Forrest organized them. John W. Morton, afterward Secretary of State of Tennessee, was Adjutant-General. The incident in "The Birth of a Nation" of the North Carolina clansmen massing to aid their South Carolina brethren is actual fact. Often parties of clansmen rode fifty to sixty miles by night on such secret errands, and the show of force at any one time or place was thus irresistible.

Henry Walthall, who plays the Ku Klux Klan leader in "The Birth of a Nation," is the son of a clansman. The rites used are taken from the ritual book of the order which was secretly published at Pulaski, Tenn. The "underground railroad" was an important part of the system. When the Federal prosecutions were instituted many offenders were thus enabled to escape West and so-called refugeed clansmen are prominent members of communities in Texas, Arkansas and Oklahoma. A general amnesty finally removed the ban of secrecy, since which time the stories of their doings and thrilling escapes have developed into a kind of semi-historical, semi-legendary lore, like the stories of the Highlanders in Sir Walter Scott's time.

New York Sun May 23, 1915

CLEVER MOVIE ACTRESS TO BE MADE A STAR

Miss Miriam Cooper, the military-looking young actress who leads the great cavalry parade seen in "The Birth of a Nation," at the Liberty Theatre, is a great-great-great-great-grandadughter of Charles Carroll, the Maryland signer of the Declaration of Independence. For a hundred years the male side of the line has included one or more United States cavalry officers.

When "The Birth of a Nation" was being played recently in Los Angeles, Miss Cooper led a real parade of mounted Union veterans" from the National Soldiers' Home to the Auditorium. Several hundred of the old boys took part in the ride and then saw the play. They all marveled at the historical accuracy of the Civil War scenes. Parade and special performance formed an extraordinary tribute from the survivors of '61 to the new art of 1915.

Miss Cooper was in New York the other day—her first visit East since "The Birth of a Nation" was completed. Director David W. Griffith intends soon to star her with Mae Marsh in a modern problem picture entitled "The Mother and the Law."

"BIRTH OF A NATION" AT THE LIBERTY

The fourth month of D. W. Griffith's marvelous spectacle of the American military era, "The Birth of a Nation," shows undiminished attendance and enthusiasm at the Liberty Theatre. The attraction seems eminently suited to the present, with European complications and the portent of possible war overshadowing the land.

NEWARK, (N. J.) CALL

Date .....

David W. Griffith, who produced the feature film, "The Birth of a Nation," now being shown in the Liberty, has announced "The Quest of the Holy Grail" as the title of his next picture. Mr. Griffith has long been an admirer of Edwin A. Abbey's pictures in the Boston Library, and has made several trips there this spring to study them with a view of weaving a scenario about them. Work on the picture will be begun early next month, and several leading romantic actors will be present for it.

BROOKLYN, (N. Y.) CITIZEN

Date MAY 23 1915

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

Undiminished Attendance at the Liberty Theatre.

The fourth month of D. W. Griffith's marvelous spectacle of the American military era, "The Birth of a Nation," shows undiminished attendance and enthusiasm at the Liberty Theatre. The attraction seems eminently suited to the present, with European complications and the portent of possible war overshadowing the land.

Civil strife that grew out of misunderstanding and jealousy; battles fought over wide-stretching areas; the torch and rapine their corollary; the great, all-loving heart of the war President, and the little men that thwarted his far-seeing plan; the victory of the North and the terrible aftermath of Reconstruction—these furnish a succession of themes the working out of which impinges as vividly upon 1915 as upon 1861-70.

Never before has America's greatest war been put on film, canvas or panorama. "The Birth of a Nation" proved of intensest interest last week to thousands of those who attended the naval review and to hundreds of the Jackies. It is the one big patriotic entertainment in town, inculcating the lesson of national solidarity with sledge-hammer strokes.

The fascination of the beautiful love-romance, the excellent acting and wonderful photography, the emotional appeal of the music, and the cunning art of the mechanical effects, combine to make an entertainment satisfyingly delightful to all classes of theatregoers.

Only in New York or two or three other large cities is "The Birth of a Nation" on view. The elaborateness of the mounting and accessories forbids its multitudinous reproduction, as with other pictures.

Matinee and evening performances are given at the Liberty every day, including Sundays.

Brooklyn, (N. Y.) Standard-Union

MAY 23 1915

Manhattan Theatres

LIBERTY, MANHATTAN — The fourth month of D. W. Griffith's marvelous spectacle of the American military era, "The Birth of a Nation," shows undiminished attendance and enthusiasm at the Liberty Theatre, Manhattan. The attraction seems eminently suited to the present, with European complications. Civil strife that grew out of misunderstanding and jealousy; battles fought over wide-stretching areas; the torch and rapine their corollary; the great, all-loving heart of the War President, and the little men that twarted his far-seeing plan; the victory of the North and the terrible aftermath of Reconstruction, these furnish a succession of themes the working out of which impinges as vividly upon 1915 as upon 1861-70. Never before has America's greatest war been put on film, canvas, or panorama. "The Birth of a Nation" proved of interest last week to thousands of those who attended the Naval Review and to hundreds of the Jackies. It is the one big patriotic entertainment in town, inculcating the lesson of national solidarity with sledge-hammer strokes. The fascination of the beautiful love-romance, the excellent acting and wonderful photography, the emotional appeal of the music, and the cunning art of the mechanical effects, combine to make an entertainment satisfyingly delightful to all classes of theatregoers.

PLAYS ON THE SCREEN.

Attractions in the Motion Picture Houses This Week.

The leading motion picture plays which hold public attention this week are:

"The Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty Theatre, D. W. Griffith's gripping drama of the civil war and the reconstruction period in the South, the assassination of President Lincoln, the Ku Klux Klan and other features. "The Eternal City" continues to be popular at the Astor Theatre. The Famous Player Film Company's production of Hall Caine's novel of life in modern Rome, with Pauline Frederick in the leading role, will be supplanted on May 31 with "The Alien," based on the play "The Sign of the Rose." It will be acted by a strong and capable cast.

Tribune, Oakland, Cal. May 23, 1915

MACDONOUGH

"The Clansman," by "The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's marvelous film drama, in twelve reels, based on Thos. Dixon's well-known novel, which is be-

OAKLAND (Cal.) TRIBUNE MAY 23, 1915

LOCAL THEATERS THIS WEEK

LOS ANGELES (Cal.) EXAMINER MAY

LOS ANGELES (Cal.) TIMES MAY 23, 1915

Woodley.

Lillian Gish in "The Clansman" at the Woodley.

LOS ANGELES (Cal.) EXAMINER MAY

MIRIAM COOPER in "THE CLANSMAN" CLUNES AUDITORIUM

Among the picture features to be seen this week are "The Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty Theatre, where D. W. Griffith's film spectacle of the civil war continues to play to capacity houses. At the Astor Theatre the Famous Players Film Company's adaptation of Hall Caine's novel "The Eternal City," with Pauline Frederick in the leading role, is entering on its last week. The next picture will be "The Alien."

Although only three months before the public, D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," has already been witnessed by more than 750,000 patrons. Of this number, 250,000 persons have seen the play at the Liberty Theatre here, and the remainder of the attendance has been divided between Boston, Los Angeles and San Francisco. Such a record within such a short space of time would have been impossible save for the "capacity" business that has consistently prevailed in each of the four production centres.

Brooklyn, (N. Y.) Standard

ate ..... MAY 2 4 1915

Although only three months before the public, D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," has already been wit[redacted] more than 750,000 patrons. Of this number a quarter of a million persons have seen the play at the Liberty Theatre, Manhattan, and the remainder of the attendance has been divided between Boston, Los Angeles and San Francisco.

Vanity Fair

New York City

MAY 1915

Remarkable Scenes from a Remarkable Film

AFTER the end of the theatrical season, after months of manerial moaning regarding box-office receipts, along came D. W. h, with his moving picture, "The Birth of a Nation," and an t desire to show that business wasn't so bad after all, even at llars a seat. The production was both favorably and unfa- r received. Chief among the objections voiced against it was usation that it aroused race prejudice, and was unfair to the Feeling on the question rose to such a pitch that the firm hand or Mitchel fel upon the picture, with the result that two of the biggest scenes were edited out of it. The film may have its faults of subject-matter, but it must undoubtedly command a certain admiration. For photography alone, it is remarkable; as witness the night battle scene shown above, which was really photographed at night, by the aid of a new illuminating device that has been kept a close studio secret. In the scene at the top of this page, Mr. Griffith's aim was to show in an allegory the uselessness and cruelty of war throughout the ages. It took him a fortnight, but, as you can see, he produced not merely a "human salad," but a striking composition.

m. y. World May 23, 1915

KU KLUX ROBED IN BLACK.

So Says Powell Clayton in a Book of Arkansas After the War.

White photographs better than black. The robes of the Ku Klux riders in "Th[redacted]ion" are mainly white. James Ford Rhodes in his history speaks of white masks, high cardboard hats and white "shrouds." But Powell Clayton, in his "Aftermath in the Civil Wars in Arkansas" (Neale Pub. Co.), quotes Gen. Shaver, who was a Wizard of the order, as saying that "the uniform of the order was a black shroud both for man and horse, with tin stars, half-moons, etc., sewed upon it." Many men still living were members of the order; and yet we have this disagreement in so sharp an issue as that between black and white!

Gov. Clayton's account of the four troublous years, 1868-1872, is like listening to a telephone conversation. You do not hear what the other fellow is saying; and once in a while you catch from the man you do hear a hint of the presumed rebuttal. Again and again negro militiamen are spoken of. Their employment by a carpet-bag government must have been most irritating. Adjutant Gen. Danforth, in reporting on the Woodruff County troubles, which approximated civil war, recommended that colored troops be not sent. The conditions he describes are those of extreme terrorism.

Again, the same General whose operations in Woodruff County had led to the Danforth inquiry and report took from Marion four prisoners whom Col. Watson had captured. "On the march to Mississippi County these men attempted to escape and were killed." Mr. Clayton, then Governor, seems to have suspected an Arkansas "ley de fuga," but was later convinced that "in this case they actually were attempting to escape." No one remembers their names.

Murder was frequent in those sad days. Witnesses tell of it nonchalantly. "We put him in the well," says one, "and put some puncheons on the well." Gov. Clayton's brother was shot dead in an election quarrel. Clayton himself was spared because some members of the Klan, as was afterward admitted, thought it inexpedient to murder him.

Strange, forgotten details are revived in memory by this book. How the planters tried to bring in Chinese to replace negroes in the cotton fields. How one negro man reverently took up on a board the imprint of Clayton's foot in the mud, dried it and kept it as a memento of the racial deliverer. How the land grant railways were financed by the State, including the Little Rock and Fort Smith, so damaging to Blaine's reputation.

Negroes were only twenty-five per cent. of the people of the State; yet Gov. Clayton seems surprised and aggrieved that after four years of warfare in which negro troops were employed to uphold a government accused of gross financial corruption and at the best imposed upon the State from outside, Arkansas has been consistently Democratic.

Gov. Clayton's book starts in bravely with a swinging account of his inauguration, when in the bare room in the State House which was his office, his predecessor, Gov. Murphy, took from a barrel filled with straw which was almost its only furniture, a bottle of moonshine to drink to his success. Thereafter he does his best to make a thrilling story dull by long quotations from official papers, including his nine-page inaugural message. But a bad method cannot destroy a book with such important material.

Mail May 4

Dismiss Film Play Case

The summons issued against Harry E. Aitken and D. W. Griffith, producers of the film play, "The Birth of a Nation," was dismissed by Magistrate Herbert in Jefferson Market Court today. The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People withdrew the complaint.

LOS ANGELES (Cal.) EXAMINER
MAY 23, 1915

[illegible]

LOS ANGELES (Cal.) TIMES
MAY 23, 1915

[illegible]

WORLD'S HISTORY IN FILMS NEW WAY OF RECORDING IT

David Wark Griffith Proves Value of His Method in "Birth of a Nation."

PICTURES VS. BOOKS.

His Work No Mere Pedantic Record of the Civil War and Reconstruction Days.

There is a new way of recording history. Carlyle, Motley, Macaulay, Hay, all the historians of all time, have placed the results of their research on paper. David Wark Griffith, actor, dramatist, scenario writer and director of motion pictures, places his results on a film. His plan for history making is to set up again in reality the scenes and actions of the past so that they may be visualized in a manner quite beyond the scope of type. Jacob Wark Griffith, his father, commanded a Confederate brigade and all his kinfolk endured the terrible suffering of the post-bellum days. For years young Griffith has been planning ahead, silently devising ways for putting that epoch in our country's history on the screen, until finally as Director-in-Chief of the Mutual Film Organization he got a free hand, put his own capital and much cash from friends into the enterprise and started to "make a picture." The result is "The Birth of a Nation."

Staging and photographing a picture of war is long and arduous work; the expense involved was tremendous—the cost of this picture having been estimated at from $300,000 to $500,000—but Griffith is a master in the handling of masses of people and an artist in effective perspective. Stationed in his conning tower at the head of a valley where a charge was to be depicted, he observed through his field glasses the disposition of the troops by his field lieutenants and then gave his directions over telephone wires run underground to all parts of the scene of action.

REBUILDING THE SCENES OF HISTORY.

In staging Shermans' march to the sea, a small village of frame houses was built for the sole purpose of being burned down; Ford's Theatre at Washington was rebuilt in replica to the last detail in order to stage the assassination of Lincoln; the Assembly Chamber of the South Carolina Capitol was reproduced in the same way in order to get a scene lasting thirty seconds and showing the negro Legislature in session.

When he wanted to show the thrilling rides of the Ku Klux Klan, Griffith found that the roads in that section of the country were all oiled macadam. He needed dirt roads, so he went to the County Supervisors, obtained exclusive use of the roads in an area of ten square miles for one whole day, hired a force of laborers to lay ten or twelve inches of dirt on the roads, and ran off his rides without a hitch. Then the workmen removed the dirt.

He staged an endless series of interior views showing Lincoln with his Cabinet, the surrender of Lee to Grant in the Wilmer-McLean house at Appomattox, the military hospital in the Patent Office at Washington, the homes of the two families, one Northern and the other of the South, in which the love interest of the story centres, and he took a number of amazing scenes at night by the light of exploding incandescent bombs.

His choice of actors is based on his own ideas of what motion picture photography demands. "I don't want actors in the ordinary sense of the term," he says. "For the great historical characters I select people who 'act' as little as possible, but who look the characters and convey sincerity." The striking success of the principle is evidenced in the work of Joseph Henabery as Lincoln. When he is on the screen the "great, far seeing, silent man" seems alive before us.

What has hampered motion picture art in the past has been a lack of the big creative imagination that could visualize its possibilities and use commercial resources to make the vision an actuality. The young and indomitable Griffith had the vision and procured the resources. If he has not provided a pedantic history of the Civil War and the Reconstruction, he has at least linked history with poetry and produced an achievement which ranks favorably with that of any historical novelist of the past or present.

Globe May 25, 1915

Although only three months before the public, D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," has already been witnessed by more than 750,000 patrons.

Press. May 25, 1915

The fourth month of "The Birth of a Nation" in the Liberty Theatre finds that photo spectacle as popular as ever.

Herald. N.Y. May 25, 1915

After ten adjournments the summons issued against Harry E. Aitken and D. W. Griffith, producers of the film play, "The Birth of a Nation," was dismissed by Magistrate Herbert in Jefferson Market Court yesterday. The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People had caused the summons to be issued. Changes were made in the film and then the complaint was withdrawn.

Press May 26,

FILM SUMMONS DISMISSED.

After ten adjournments the summons issued against Harry E. Aitken and D. W. Griffith, producers of the film "The Birth of a Nation," was dismissed yesterday by Magistrate Herbert in Jefferson Market Court. Objection that the picture was a public nuisance, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People had the summons issued, but withdrew its complaint when changes were made in film.

LAUGHS IN FILM COMEDY IN 'BIRTH OF NATION' FILM

A great deal of film comedy is horse-play, but David W. Griffith in "Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty Theatre proves that quiet, refined comedy is a big laugh-maker and pleases people better than the old style slap methods.

One of the best laughs in "The Birth of a Nation" is the love-sick sentry [illegible] gazing at Elsie [illegible]. This particular bit is of the "pure fire" order, for never does [illegible] the rapt devotion of the sentinel and the haughty expression of the young lady rebuking him with a million-miles-away look.

[illegible] in the name of the young actor who has made the unusual hit in the part. He is a New Orleans Creole by birth and played [illegible] with Mme. Bernhardt before going out to Los Angeles, where Mr. Griffith discovered him. The costuming of the young soldier is wonderfully accurate to the period of 1861. Some of the recent Civil war portraits in the magazines and newspapers are almost doublets of this fairy figure, showing what care Griffith has used in reproducing the civil war type.

Miss Lillian Gish wears her costumes of Civil war and Reconstruction times that are heirlooms in her family. Through Griffith's skill all the actors in the production are made to appear as if to the manner born and not awkwardly moving about in habiliments to which they are unaccustomed.

N.Y. Commercial May 25, 1915

The National Association for the Advancement of the Colored People, yesterday asked the permission of Magistrate Herbert of the Jefferson Market police court to withdraw its complaint against D. W. Griffith and Barry E. Aitken, producers of the "Birth of a Nation" film and the case was dismissed. The case was first called on March 11, and subsequent to that time the court has granted ten adjournments at the request of the association. Former Congressman W. S. Bennett represented the association and Martin Littleton represented the producers.

N.Y. Telegraph May 25

"Birth of a Nation" Case.

After ten adjournments, the summons issued against Harry E. Aitken and D. W. Griffith, producers of the film play, "Birth of a Nation," was dismissed by Magistrate Herbert, in Jefferson Market Court yesterday. The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People caused the summons to be issued, charging that the film was a public nuisance. Some changes were made in the film and it was decided to withdraw the complaint.

N.Y. Sun. May 25

Case Against "Nation" Film Ends.

The National Association for the Advancement of the Colored People yesterday asked the permission of Magistrate Herbert of the Jefferson Market police court to withdraw its complaint against D. W. Griffith and Harry E. Aitken, producers of the "Birth of a Nation" film, and the case was dismissed.

N.Y. World May 25, 1915

COURT DISMISSES COMPLAINT AGAINST MOVIE PRODUCERS.

Magistrate Herbert in Jefferson Market Court yesterday dismissed the summons issued against Harry E. Aitken and D. W. Griffith, producers of "The Birth of a Nation." The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People had caused the summons to be issued, complaining that the picture was a public nuisance.

[illegible] INDEX
MAY 23, 1915

"THE CLANSMAN"

The last opportunity to see Griffith's great photo drama, "The Clansman," is offered at the Opera House matinee today at two o'clock and tonight at eight o'clock. The transformation scene, the opening scene where the Camerons, the family, is shown in their happy home, [illegible] They sing the old songs, accompanied by the splendid orchestra [illegible] made up of professionals [illegible] by Raymond Renius. "The Clansman" has been seen by [illegible] That fact is the answer to [illegible] man." Were it not made [illegible] human elements it could [illegible] it does to the great [illegible] See it to know what [illegible] really means.

CHICAGO (ILL.) TRIBUNE
MAY 25, 1915

"Our country! In her intercourse with foreign nations may she always be in the right; but our country, right or wrong."
Stephen Decatur.

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

The moving picture play "The Birth of a Nation" is, in our opinion, the greatest piece of work done for the films by American producers. It ranks with "Cabiria" as a tremendous spectacle and for the American temperament it has points of artistic advantage over the D'Annunzio photoplay.

In Chicago it has thus far been barred from production. It is not immoral or coarse. It does not offend for any of the reasons which usually cause the prohibition of picture plays or the elimination of scenes from them. It is in all essential episodes grounded on historical fact, representing the struggles of that terrible time in the south when the whites, back from war, saw their government taken over by the newly enfranchised blacks controlled by the northern carpetbaggers.

What happened with the negro ascendant and how the white reëstablished his supremacy is shown with obvious natural sympathy for the south, and no doubt with such heightening of effect as dramatic art has a right to employ. It presents what the south says and the north of our day, at least, is inclined to believe to be truth.

The production of this photoplay is prohibited in Chicago. The book from which the scenario was taken was not suppressed. It could not be, although it was violent. The play made from the book was not suppressed, although, it also being violent, there were requests that it be. The photoplay alone gets the subject into such form that a prohibition is ordered.

Here is a question of freedom in expression which will give any thoughtful person cause for reflection. We assert our right to such freedom within the obvious bounds of common decency and morality. "The Birth of a Nation" does not offend against either. This film draws upon veritable pages from the history of the country, embodies men and women of whom the pages treat, and they reënact their struggles. We then say that citizens may not be permitted to see it.

THE TRIBUNE has been and is opposed to interference with freedom of expression, but it confesses that the subject here involved has complexities which do not yield to the application of ordinary rules. The terrible concrete reality of the moving picture is the disturbing factor and the consequent emotional response of the spectator is the disturbing result. The sin of the film is its effectiveness.

A lecturer with ability to touch men's susceptibilities might take this subject and do his emotional best with it and we doubt that a voice would be raised to stop him. Such people as might go to hear him would have their feelings made more acute, might have their prejudices heightened, but in the end the chief result would be that they knew more about the days of reconstruction.

The moving picture not so much makes its spectators know more about the period; it makes them live through it, vicariously but intensely, and the city government has said, in effect, that the citizens of Chicago ought not to live through it, and they ought not, as a matter of public policy, to enter a theater from which they must come with prejudices and race hatreds inflamed.

If the validity of this argument be questioned, as it is bound to be, let the consideration of the subject go further. We may suppose that one producing company has selected the time of the Spanish inquisition for film purposes, or that another has taken the persecution of the Irish Catholics by Cromwell, and that either play or both, done after the manner of "Cabiria" and "The Birth of a Nation," were put in Chicago theaters. Assume that these plays kept to historical accuracy. Query: Would it be public policy to permit the productions?

All censorship is an infringement of that perfect freedom of thought and expression which is dear to the liberal as an ideal if not always acceptable as a fact. Where we concede any restriction it is extremely difficult if not impossible to justify it on other grounds than those of expediency. Censorship of information and of debate is allowed only in extreme cases, as under martial law. Censorship of literary expression also is permitted only within relatively narrow limits. The field broadens, however, with restrictions upon other forms of art, especially where their appeal is to emotion rather than reason and effects of public consequence are feared.

But here it is necessary for us to resist a tendency easily extended in the general name of expediency or morality. Not all cases are as clear as those we have cited, and restriction is often the result of the organized zeal of minute minorities rather than as expression of the consensus of a community's opinion. Also there is always a disposition to use power when it is created.

Censorship often accomplishes concrete benefit and may be conceded to be necessary. But we ought never to lose sight of the fact that, if necessary, it is a necessary evil which we are right in regarding jealously.

ALAMEDA [illegible] TIMES-STAR
MAY 15, 1915

D. W. Griffith's wonderful motion picture production, "The Clansman or The Birth of A Nation," which has been amplified from Thomas Dixon's well known novel, continues to draw capacity house at the Macdonough theater, where it is being shown twice daily. "The Clansman" will tomorrow start on its second big week. The management of the Macdonough requests that as many of the theater patrons as possible secure tickets in advance and avoid standing in line.

Music Trades. N.Y. May 22, 1915

FILM PLAY HAS A MUSICAL HIT

Charming Melody in "Birth of a Nation" Production Published as a Song by Chappell & Co.

"The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's monster film spectacle founded upon Thomas Dixon's novel, "The Clansman," and which depicts in a thrilling manner the wonderful developments of America during the reconstruction period, is admittedly the last word in moving picture dramas. This wonderful production, conceived and produced by the master mind of D. W. Griffith, marks a wonderful epoch in film productions. Not only is the piece presented in high-class theatres, patronized by the best audiences, but, after running for months in the largest cities, is attracting as much attention as during its first week's engagement.

D. W. Griffith

Mr. Griffith was over eight months in making the production and during that time employed a small army of men and women to get the desired results.

Scores of authorities were consulted to get the proper atmosphere and no detail was omitted in order that the entire production should be historically correct.

In the great battle scenes which are given in the earlier portions of the production Mr. Griffith employed many novel appliances to get his effects. For the first time in making motion pictures he utilized the telephone most extensively. Imagine a stage director handling thousands upon thousands of players in one scene and directing them by telephone.

This was done by laying underground wires to all parts of the battlefields. The director had a switchboard of ten wires directly in front of him, and in this way kept in touch with every part of the big conflicts.

The great battle scenes were also the first ever taken by a motion picture camera at night. The scenes showing the escape of the refugees from Atlanta, the bonfire effects in Piedmont, and the great red battle effects were all realized by night photography. Elaborate preparations for these were secretly laid and several inventions were made on the ground to accomplish the desired end. Patented illuminators were distributed over an area of two miles to get one midnight battle scene.

The musical portion of the production is an important one, and Joseph Carl Breil, who conducts the orchestra of forty at each performance, was secured to write the score. So well has he succeeded in catching the spirit of the play that the music never fails to evoke rounds of applause, and one melody in particular has attracted much attention. It has become so popular that words have been set to it by Clarence Lucas and Chappell & Co. have published it as a song under the name of "The Perfect Song." Mr. Breil, who will be remembered as the composer of "The Song of Souls," has written one of his most singable melodies and the song will undoubtedly become popular.

Munsey's
New York City
MAY -- 1915

SCENE FROM SHERMAN'S MARCH TO THE SEA IN D. W. GRIFFITH'S MOTION PICTURE SPECTACLE, "THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

WHERE'N "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" EXCELS

The two-dollar movie has been achieved at last. That is to say, you may go to the Liberty, and by selecting a seat at the rear of the house for "The Birth of a Nation" you can have the privilege of paying just as much for it as you did, to see Douglas Fairbanks in "He Comes Up Smiling" from the same point of vantage.

"But is it worth two dollars?" you ask. Well, if you consider that the pictures are said to have taken eight months in the making, and that fifteen thousand people posed for them, five dollars a seat would not seem to be an exorbitant charge. Whether you will get two dollars' worth of enjoyment out of seeing "The Birth of a Nation" must be left for individual decision. But enjoyment is scarcely the word to apply to what is, in its best features, a historical sketch of the Civil War period in the United States. Tragedy dire and dreadful stalks through the film from the vivid hand-to-hand fights in the trenches before Petersburg to the assassination of Lincoln in Ford's Theater just fifty years ago.

Marvelous in its realism is the presentment of the latter episode. We see the auditorium, and portions of the place, we watch the President arrive and receive the greetings of the audience. We note that he draws a cloak about his shoulders as the April air turns chill. We get a glimpse of the guard seated just outside the Presidential box, and see his desertion of his post in order to peep at the play. Then Wilkes Booth enters the box, fires the fatal shot, and makes his twelve-foot leap to the stage. All this is of the tensest possible interest, and a scene which, with its wealth of detail, would be quite impossible to present in the ordinary way.

Even more wonderful than this are the battle episodes, with a vista of miles over which troops gallop, armies deploy and charges are made. Picturesque scenes galore are attained by the wizard of the talent drama, David W. Griffith, who is said to have invented most of the innovations in moving pictures, and is rated the highest salaried man in the business. He is presenting "The Birth of a Nation" on his own account.

Mr. Griffith is under forty, and was born near Louisville, Kentucky, his father having been a general in the Confederate army. He was formerly an actor, at one time playing in a revival of "Caste," ...

CONCORD (N. H.) MONITOR
MAY 26, 1915

The big spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," has been seen by nearly 1,000,000 people in the five cities of Boston, New York, Los Angeles, San Francisco and Oakland.

Los Angeles, Cal.
May 26, 1915

Miss Alison tells of ... experience at a ... "The Clansman" ...

BERKELEY (Cal.) GAZETTE
MAY 22, 1915

'THE CLANSMAN' WONDERFUL FILM DRAMA AT MACDONOUGH

Miriam Cooper, woh appears in "The Clansman," at the Macdonough theater this week and next.

"The Clansmon or The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's wonderful film drama, continues to grow in popular approval at the Macdonough theater, where it is being shown twice daily to enthusiastic audiences that tax the capacity of the playhouse.

For three hours the audience sits with almost breathless itnerest at page after page of American history mingled with romance and comedy is unfolded through the medium of the motion picture screen.

The assassination of President Lincoln by John Wilkes Booth is one of the leading features of the atraction.

Large numbers of the theater's patrons are turned away every night, being unable to secure seats and the management of the theater urges that all secure seats in advance whenever it is possible to do so. "The Clansman" will start on its third and final big week Monday, May 24th and ends Sunday, May 30th.

SACRAMENTO (Cal.) UNION
MAY 26, 1915

$500,000 Clansman Pictures Coming Here

Film Version of Dixon's Famous Novel Will Be at Clunie for Two Weeks.

D. W. Griffith's wonderful motion picture, "The Clansman," in twelve reels, adapted from the well known novel by Thomas Dixon, conceded by the leading dramatic critics of the country to be one of the world's foremost motion pictures, will be the attraction at Clunie theater for two weeks, starting next Monday.

"The Clansman" is one of the costliest motion pictures ever made. More than $500,000 was expended before it was completed and eight months were required to stage it. In New York and Boston the film is being shown at $2 prices to capacity houses.

In "The Clansman" are seen some of the most spectacular battle scenes ever staged with more than 25,000 soldiers seen in action in infantry attacks, cavalry charges and artillery ...

CLIPPING FROM Indep't
San Bernardino Cal
5-4-915

Scene from "THE CLANSMAN"

"THE CLANSMAN" AT THE OPERA HOUSE

The great picture production "The Clansman" returns to the Opera House Friday, May 21, for three days. For details of time of curtain and prices note display advertisement. It is a brilliant, mammoth production, the like of which has never been produced.

There is pathos, comedy, hate and love depicted. There are great scenes of historical interest, made with accuracy from data of the times. Great ministers from the pulpits and other public speakers, great writers in the newspapers, have advised everyone to see "The Clansman." The local opportunity to do so is here Friday ...

PITTSBURG (Pa.) GAZETTE-TIMES
MAY 25, 1915

The Governor of Massachusetts last Friday signed a theater censorship bill passed by the recent Legislature that is quite the most drastic that has ever been put on the statute books, in that it localizes and enlarges the powers of a board of censors in the cities of the state. Of course Boston is the chief sufferer (or gainer) through this new measure, and it is declared that the law was drafted and passed in view of the proposed visit to that city of the D. W. Griffith's photo spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," to which such violent objection has been made by the negro population of both New York and Boston.

The new censor law of Massachusetts lodges unlimited powers in a board of censors composed of the Mayor, Police Commissioner and Chief Justice of the Municipal Court. The law provides that any objectionable production of whatsoever kind under the guise of public amusement may be prohibited by a majority of the three censors. Previously, the powers of censorship were vested jointly in the Mayor and Police Commissioner. They had power, however, only to stop plays of an immoral or obscene nature, and claimed that this authority was not enough to prevent the production of "The Birth of a Nation."

NORTH PLAINFIELD (N. J.) REVIEW
MAY 25, 1915

The Clansman Again

"The Clansman" opened its thirteenth week [illegible] Auditorium Theater yesterday. Thousands of tourists are taking advantage of this opportunity to witness the remarkable production that has startled the world. The days of the Reconstruction period are vividly portrayed, and never before have such gigantic battle scenes been shown [illegible] screen. To [illegible] would be to [illegible] time.

CABLE ADDRESS CLIPPING FROM Indep't
San Bernardino
5-16-1915 Cal

will accompany Mr. Guarisco.

"THE CLANSMAN"

"The Clansman" D. W. Griffith's wonderful motion picture, will again be shown at the Opera House next Friday, Saturday and Sunday, May 21, 22 and 23. Matinee every day. Since its remarkable engagement here a month ago, when people from every point in this county as well as in Riverside county, came to see it, it has been in Los Angeles in its twelfth week to large audiences. In Boston, New York and Chicago "The Clansman" or "The Birth of a Nation" is being shown at the two dollar top price and filling every seat at that, turning people away, and speculators busy at three and four dollars a ticket. Never in the history of theatrical motion pictures has such circumstances been known. The sale of seats opens next Wednesday at ... o'clock. The evening prices are ...

(New York)
May 27, 1915

Liberty.—"The Birth of a Nation." Moving picture on an immense scale and dealing in dramatic fashion with historical events during the closing days of the Civil War and the period of reconstruction.

CLIPPING FROM NEW YORK VIEWED
MAY 29 1915

Liberty (J. W. Mayer, mgr.)—"The Birth of a Nation" is now in the fourth month of its great run. It is the marvel of the motion picture world. Astor (Bert Fohlhamer, mgr.)—Opens to the last in "The Birth of a Nation," the Liberty Theatre.

LILLIAN GISH

LOS ANGELES (Cal.) EXPRESS.
MAY 27, 1915

[illegible] still Broadway [illegible] to see The Clansman [illegible] that W. H. Clune [illegible] the opening of the seat [illegible] fourteenth week starting [illegible] afternoon.

For thirteen weeks Clune's great auditorium has been the most popular theater in this city, in fact in the world, for more than 300,000 persons have witnessed The Clansman performances during that period.

This record has never been equalled and it is substantial proof of the merits of The Clansman. From every viewpoint this marvelous production by D. W. Griffith has been pronounced perfect.

Tribune. Oakland.
May. 27, 1915

[illegible] WILL FOLLOW
FILMS AT MACDONOUGH

"The Clansman; or, The Birth of a Nation," by D. W. Griffith's spectacular film drama, based on the well known novel by Thomas Dixon, continues to be enthusiastically received at the Macdonough theater, where it is being shown [illegible] daily to audiences that pack the houses to the doors. The engagement closes next Saturday evening.

N.Y. Journal
May 1, 1915

First Anniversary of "Birth of a Nation"

D. W. Griffith to-day celebrates the first anniversary of his initial work upon his great picture, "The Birth of a Nation," which is doing the show business of the town at the Liberty Theatre here, and which is also creating a sensation in Boston, San Francisco and Los Angeles.

On May 1, 1914, Griffith laid his preparatory scenario aside and started in to make his picture. In the four cities the big picture has played in less than four months' time to a gross attendance of over half a million.

CLIPPER
New York City
MAY 1 1915

NOTES.

THEODORE MITCHELL is aiding in the management, in New York, of "The Birth of a Nation," Griffith motion picture drama, which was first staged here.

Lake. N.Y. May 1, 1915

LIBERTY.—"The Birth of a Nation" now in its third month at the Liberty Theatre, continues one of the regular attractions to withstand the counter offerings of the spring showmen. Griffith's wonderful film has been seen by more people than any of the kind ever brought out in the history of a regular theatrical presentation.

Commercial
May 1, 1915

[illegible] Nation," now in its third month at the Liberty Theatre, continues one of the regular attractions to withstand the counter offerings of the spring showmen.

Grant and Lee True to Life In Big Historic Film Play

LEE AND GRANT AT APPOMATTOX.

Gaye and Crisp Add to the Realism of "The Birth of a Nation."

Among all the film actors playing historical characters in "The Birth of a Nation" spectacle at the Liberty Theatre, Howard Gaye and Donald Crisp have received the most compliments on the faithfulness of their work, the one as Gen. Robert E. Lee and the other as Gen. U. S. Grant.

The picture shows Lee surrendering to Grant in the Wilmer-McLean mansion at Appomattox Court House, Va., April 9, 1865. It is a faithful reproduction of the personages in the historic scene and of the minute details of the action.

It is well known that many supporters of the defeated Confederacy wished to prolong the struggle by means of a guerrilla warfare. In fact John Wilkes Booth supposed that in killing President Lincoln he would have the support of the South in a new struggle. But Lee was of a different temper. He realized that the South had been beaten in a fair struggle on the fields of battle and that prolonging the fighting would merely add to the horrors and miseries endured by his people. Therefore, after the battle of Five Forks he opened negotiations with Grant and on the morning of April 9 under the budding apple trees of an Appomattox orchard, were determined the terms of peace, which were formally written down at the Wilmer-McLean house in the afternoon.

Lee had dressed for his last public occasion with great care. Grant, on the contrary, lacked his full dress and appeared in the "fatigue" uniform and dusty jack boots of a hard campaign. Strangely enough, Gen. Lee had no pencil to write with. A pocket inkstand and pen were lent him by an officer of the General Staff, and it was with these that the historic document of surrender was written. Afterward an effort was made to arrest and indict Lee for treason, but Grant, who knew Lee's nobility of character, and how he had filled to the letter all the surrender obligations, prevented any such disgraceful sequel to the great event.

Evening Mail, N.Y.
May 1, 1915

The wonderful run of the great Griffith success, "The Birth of a Nation" continues at the Liberty and seats are still selling far ahead. An entirely new system of ventilation is being installed at the house to make the theatre pleasant through the summer, since the big film will surely run along without any interruption.

m TIMES
ress: Brooklyn, N. Y.
MAY 2 1915

"The Birth of a Nation."

"The Birth of a Nation," now in its third month at the Liberty Theatre continues one of the regular attractions to withstand the counter offerings of the spring showmen. D. W. Griffith's wonderful film has been seen by more people than anything of the kind ever brought out before. The dramatic effect of conflict and the love element of romance is never lost sight of though the protagonists are assembled in thousands and move to a stirring impulse which could never be encompassed in the limits of a four-act play of the spoken word. A thousand alluring details serve to heighten the interest in a story which is gripping and emotional. It is his grasp of the fundamental appeal of the true drama which Mr. Griffith has made the basis of his drama and bigness only adds a startling quality in the general excellence of this production which has created so much favorable comment everywhere.

EVENING WORLD
New York City
MAY 1 1915

"BIRTH OF A NATION" STARTED A YEAR AGO.

Exactly one year ago to-day D. W. Griffith laid down the scenario suggestions for his production of "The Birth of a Nation" and began the actual work of assembling the series of events which are crowded into the action of this screen story. For eight months he pounded away from 7 o'clock in the morning until sunset and then, after dinner, worked until midnight in his studio inspecting the day's work. Then came tedious days of research with historians and military authorities to cover accurately the scenes of historic importance. Other days and weeks were devoted to marshalling the great forces in the battle scene. In these scenes the eye of the camera ranges over about twelve square miles of territory and thousands of men and horses are seen in the reproduction of the last desperate stand of Gen. Lee's army before the conquering forces under Gen. Grant at Petersburg, Va.

The picture was completed in January and presented to the public in [illegible]

MAY 15 1915

The Cla[illegible]

JOSEPHINE PROWELL AS MRS. CARMEN IN "THE CLANSMAN" AT THE MACDONOUGH IN OAKLAND.

Perhaps no greater illustration can be drawn showing the wonderful progress made in the motion picture industry than citing "The Clansman or The Birth of A Nation," D. W. Griffith's marvellous film-drama which is now playing to packed houses twice daily at the Macdonough theater in Oakland. Six years ago the motion picture was an experiment with not more than $10,000 being invested in the entire enterprise throughout the United States. To-day it ranks third in the leading industries of the country being exceeded in the amount of capital invested only by the United States Steel Trust and the Standard Oil corporation. More than 85 percent of all films made are produced in California. Six years ago the average motion picture cost about $350. "The Clansman" cost $500,000 to produce and eight months were required to stage it. Battle fields were laid out in exact imitation of the original scenes of conflict.

More than 15,000 persons were engaged in the staging of the film. Entire cities were built only to be destroyed in the war scenes. In one theater scene the assassination of President Lincoln. This included the stage, curtain, chairs, [illegible] and equipment.

The photodrama is based on the historical novel by Thomas Dixon. It deals more broadly with the subject than does either the play or book. In The Clansman it included the greatest battle ever staged showing more than [illegible] men in action, including cavalry and artillery. [illegible] shells are used for the first time in this production in the motion pictures. These were hurled from the mortars that were used in the [illegible] during the American Civil War. The sets were built and constructed by an expert manufacturer. [illegible] battle scenes [illegible] and more than [illegible] in the battles. The [illegible] the civil war artillery [illegible] scenes was [illegible] would have been [illegible] secure modern [illegible] duction, but Griffith [illegible] to be the work [illegible] picture producer [illegible] lery used during the [illegible] be secured [illegible] scenes would [illegible]

SCENE FROM "THE CLANSMAN," AT MACDONOUGH THEATRE IN OAKLAND.

The [illegible] borrowed [illegible] government [illegible] guns [illegible] and the [illegible]

MAY 28 1915

Cooper, in "The Birth of a Nation," given a four weeks' vacation and she to New York to enjoy it.

CABLE ADDRESS CLIPBURO

PPING FROM
NEW YORK ~~WORLD~~

MAY 28 1915

F ADVERTISING RECORD.

Picture companies, manufacturers film program corporations have nt big monies in booming a series pictures or a general program serv- but none has come near expending advertising on one picture like e Birth of a Nation" has at the erty, New York.

nce the Griffith film was first shown 42d street $50,000 has been spent, still more money to be spent in ming the photoplay production this mer.

he Griffith feature sets a record for picture advertising boosting.

urther evidence that the "Nation" is not letting down in its crusade demonstrated this week when Phil Angeles, in charge of six expert bill- ers, started in two autos on a road that will cover every barn, stone, d and telephone pole along the ntry road and auto courses between York and Bridgeport and via ghkeepsie, on the way back, Phil stretchers, 5-sheet banners and a line of every sized paper for the rsion out of town.

he "Nation," in addition to splurges he New York papers, has also done e extensive billboard advertising in York and Brooklyn.

Mail. May 1, 1915

'Birth of Nation' Now in 3d Month

"The Birth of a Nation," now in its d month at the Liberty Theatre, tinues one of the regular attractions withstand counter offerings of the g showmen. Griffith's wonderful has been seen by more people than thing of the kind ever brought out e way of a regular theatrical pre- tion.

e dramatic effect of conflict and ve element of romance are never sight of, though the protagonists sembled in thousands and move to ring impulse which could never be passed in the limits of a four-act of the spoken word.

Journal of Commerce May 1, 1915

EWS AND NOTES OF THE PICTURE HOUSES.

Bills at Hippodrome and Vitagraph To-morrow.

The Birth of a Nation," now in its third th at the Liberty Theatre, continues of the most popular attractions in the D. W. Griffith's wonderful film has seen by more people than anything of kind ever offered and there is no ution in the interest. A thousand ing details serve to heighten the ab- tion of the audiences in a story which ripping and emotional.

NGELES (Cal.) TIMES
MAY 28, 1915

o Got 'Em?

"The Clansman" musical ... For twelve weeks ... rd Brown of Clune's ... been flooded with letters ... the success of ... who has attended ... After careful ... ones ... used. ... for the ... red Miss L. ... at the B ... cessed correspondence ... four selected ... tickets for ... d Miss Bertha ...

... Fair Oaks ... ia. The fo ... for three ... Hewitt, No. 1...

The c... will wind up th third month of its run of D. W. Griffith's great spectacle "The Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty Theatre where it continues to attract attention of all sorts of theatregoers. On Sunday afternoon the 150th presentation of the master picture in New York will be celebrated. Its record is without a parallel on the local stage.

The first half of the picture remains the same stirring series of marvelous drama ranging from the picturesque days of the old south to the events leading up to the Civil War and showing in stirring action the terrors and the spirit of the great conflict. Then comes the graphic reproduction of the assassination of President Lincoln and the thrills of this tragic period of American history. The final half of the picture is largely devoted to the Reconstruction period in the South and the rise of the Ku-Klux Klan. The wild rides of these ghostly knights of a specific era in America's development remain the most thrilling series of stage pictures ever seen in the theatre. The tale has been amplified from here on and shows what sober judgment in the way of education is doing for the children of the former slaves. It brings history up to date without curtailing the dramatic strength of the marvelous production. The thrills of swift action are kept intact and the great picture stands as an achievement of wonderful effectiveness and dramatic appeal.

OAKLAND (Cal.) TRIBUNE
MAY 24, 1915

...RE'S STAGE SUCCESS

'CLANSMAN' CLOSING ITS STAY

MACDONOUGH

"The Clansman; or, The Birth of a Nation," Griffith's wonderful photo-drama of the Civil War period which having a successful run at the Macdonough theater, will start on its third and final big week today.

"Rosemary," as for remembrance, and to Charles Frohman's present revival of this earlier success of John Drew's, in which he is in his here, May 31, June 1 and 2, recalls memories of the play's first performance when Mr. Drew was surrounded by a company, several members of which have since become famous. The role of Dorothy was originally played by Maude Adams, while the smaller part of Priscilla, the entry maid, was done by Ethel Barrymore, that role being Miss Barrymore's first of any consequence.

The Macdonough management announces that Chauncey Olcott in "The Heart of Paddy Whack," will appear at the Macdonough theater for three nights and a matinee, beginning Thursday, June 3, and that "Sari," with Mizzi Hajos and Charles Meakins, will play a week's engagement here, commencing Sunday, June 13, with matinees on Wednesday and Saturday.

New York City

MAY 1 1915

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

THE moving-picture, despite its popularity, may usually be dismissed as an unintelligent type of entertainment; but "The Birth of a Nation" must be considered seriously, because of its undeniable dramatic power.

This greatest of all moving-pictures is founded on Thomas Dixon's story of "The Clansman," and is produced under the direction of D. W. Griffith, a man who quite evidently is endowed with unusual imagination. The scenario repeats the history of the War of the Rebellion from the southern point of view. The first part deals with the war itself, and culminates with the surrender of Lee to Grant at Appomattox and the assassination of Lincoln in Ford's Theatre at Washington; and the second part deals with the activities of the Ku Klux Klan in reference to the difficult problems of the period of reconstruction.

The narrative is thrilling in itself, and is fairly representative of the facts of history. In detailing particular occurrences it is meticulously accurate. Technically, "The Birth of a Nation" must be praised as an unprecedented triumph of science and the art of the moving-picture play. The battle scenes are marvelously rendered; and the swift dashes of the Ku Klux cavalry send thrills along the spinal column of the tiredest of tired business men among the spectators.

There is an allegorical ending to the spectacle which is sentimental and mawkish; and occasional instances of incoherence might be pointed out in the general progress of the narrative. But, considered as a whole, the presentation evokes a more vigorous emotional response than the majority of melodramas that are acted on Broadway. The fact that the Liberty Theatre has been crowded to capacity ever since the first disclosure of this moving-picture may be accepted as an evidence that the merit of the exhibition is not merely pictorial but also essentially dramatic.

LOS ANGELES (Cal.) EXAMINER
MAY 27, 1915

MISS MAE MARSH, in "The Victim," at Clune's Broadway Theater.

HOWARD HAYDEN'S STUDIO PHOTO

'Clansman' Is in Trouble in Chicago; Press Agent Too Zealous? Oh, That's the Query

D. W. Griffith and W. H. Clune are in Chicago seeking for "The Clansman."

Whether by the fatal zeal of a press agent or from the acute sensibilities of the negroes of that city, intense feeling was aroused against the photo play, now called "The Birth of a Nation."

The same sentiment was hostile to it in New York and in Boston, but was overcome by diplomacy and argument.

It was said yesterday that the authorities had refused a permit for the showing of the picture, but it was understood to be the intention of Mr. Griffith and Mr. Clune to go ahead with it and test their case on the arrestment of the people if force was used to close the showing.

Ballots have been taken in Chicago and will be [illegible]

MOVING PICTURE WORLD
s: New York City
MAY 1915

Henry Walthall has returned to the Mutual fold. In forthcoming three and four reel features he is to be starred and great things are expected of him by all who saw his performance as the Little Colonel in D. W. Griffith's production, "The Birth of a Nation."

Morn. Telegraph. May 4, 1915

AT THE LIBERTY THEATRE.

"The Birth of a Nation" Makes Continuous Appeal.

"The Birth of a Nation," now in its third month at the Liberty Theatre, continues one of the regular attractions to withstand the counter offerings of the Spring showmen. Griffith's wonderful film has been seen by more people than anything of the kind ever brought out in the way of a regular theatrical presentation.

The vast area of action it covers and its potential effects have created a fuller understanding of the art of animated photography, but aside from these technical accomplishments it is potent because of its fundamental story.

N.Y. Globe. May 4

David Wark Griffith, producer of "The Birth of a Nation," makes an interesting prediction in a motion picture trade journal:

"Mark my words," he says, "we will soon see the day when it may take two or three days' time for a theatre to show a single picture, when a man will drop in early in the afternoon and stay until the theatre closes at night, and then come back the next day to see the rest of it. That will be literature in motion picture form.

"There will always be room for the one and two reel pictures, just as there is always room for the short story in literature, but the day will come when, outside of the real gems among the shorter pieces, the long picture, so long it cannot be shown in a day, will be regarded as the masterpiece, and people will see it in installments, just as they read a book a chapter at a time."

Whether or not we believe this sweeping prediction, it carries the weight of coming from Mr. Griffith, undoubtedly the foremost picture producer.

Anyway, we join Mr. Griffith when he says that the present day producers grind out pictures in too much of a hurry. Hurried production is the weakness of the photodrama of to-

Sun. May 2, 1915 N.Y.

PLAYS ON THE SCREEN.

The Picture Dramas New During This Week in Town.

Among the attractions for the present week in the theatres devoted to the picture plays which have enjoyed a continued popularity are:

"The Birth of a Nation," historical and imaginary representations of events in the growth of the nation after the civil war; shown on a scale of unprecedented grandeur and the crowning [illegible] of the picture

Mail (N.Y.) May 4, 1915

I got a shock when I saw Hammerstein's covered with posters announcing "The Birth of a Nation" Monday morning. But it was only some quick work by the alert publicity bureau of the Griffith forces in securing this wonderful location for "paper" announcing that the big film is still running to capacity around the corner at the Liberty.

Herald. N.Y. May 4, 1915

Liberty. With every indication of remaining through the season "The Birth of a Nation" was shown before two large audiences yesterday.

Press. May 2 N.Y.

LIBERTY.

"The Birth of a Nation," now in its third month in the Liberty Theatre, continues one of the regular attractions to withstand the counter offerings of the spring season. The vast area of action it covers and its potential effects have created a fuller understanding of the art of animated photography, but aside from these accomplishments it is potent because of its story. The dramatic effect of conflict and the love element of romance is never lost sight of, though the protagonists are assembled in thousands and move to a stirring impulse. Press, May 2

STAATS ZEITUNG
ess New York City.
MAY 1915

Wandelbilder.

D. W. Griffith's sensationell großartige Wandelbilderserie "The Birth of a Nation", nach Thomas Dixon's berühmter Erzählung "The Clansman", ist als Kolossal-Attraktion zweimal täglich, mit einem Symphonie-Orchester von 40 Mann, im Liberty Theater zu sehen 18,000 Personen und 3000 Pferde sind in dieser glänzenden Serie zu sehen

MAY 29, 1915
SANTA BARBARA (Cal.) PRESS.

Great Griffith Pl

In "The Clansman," which will be shown at the Potter theater all next week, commencing with the night performance Monday, May 31, are shown the most spectacular battle scenes ever staged. Field telephones, couriers, flag signals, signals by mirrors, and even a captive balloon were utilized in staging "The Clansman." No general on the European battlefield has made better use of the modern appurtenances of war than did D. W. Griffith, the leading figure in the motion picture world, in staging the battle scenes for "The Clansman." These were not used in the picture as a part of the army equipment, but were simply utilized by Mr. Griffith in staging the scenes. He used 1915 methods to better execute the methods of 1861-65. The battlefields stretched for a length of two miles. At one end of the field, a tower 100 feet in height was erected. Mr. Griffith directed the movements of the army from this place of vantage. At the rear of both armies telephone wires were strung. The opposing forces represented the northern and southern troops during the civil war. At a distance of every 50 yards a telephone operator was stationed with a receiver strapped to his ear. The telephone wires were connected with the tower. At Mr. Griffith's elbow was an army officer. When the director desired a certain part of the infantry to advance or fall back, the cavalry to charge, or the artillery to shell a certain position, he gave his order to the officer at his side. This officer transmitted it by telephone to the operator located at the point where Mr. Griffith desired the movement to take place. The operator then gave the command to the officer in charge of the troops at that point, with the result that the military maneuvers were executed with only an instant's delay after leaving Mr. Griffith's mouth. In staging the battle scenes Mr. Griffith had three West Point army officers, a regiment of the National Guard, and a dozen or more G. A. R. veterans to assist him.

One of the battle scenes shows

Telegraph N.Y. May 3.

AT THE LEADING MOVING PICTURES

"The Birth of a Nation" now in the third month at the Liberty theatre continues one of the popular attractions in Gotham and the country outside of the spring showers. [illegible] wonderful film has been seen by many people from mythical of the high [illegible] and is in the way of a regular [illegible] [illegible]. The vast area of action it covers and its potential effects have created a fuller understanding of the art of animated photography, but aside from these technical accomplishments it is noted because of its fundamental [illegible]

American. N.Y. May 29, 1915

Griffith Develops Screen Marvel in Clever Mae Marsh

MAE MARSH is known to the millions of "movie" fans as the girl with a thousand faces. Her remarkable rise to the position in the motion picture field that Maude Adams holds in the legitimate drama is due they say to the careful manner in which D. W. Griffith, the master producer, has studied her personality and brought out every point of vantage.

Little Miss Marsh has only been in pictures two years, but she has been coming forward like a speed devouring aeroplane. A few seasons back and she came into Griffith's studio to watch her older sister do some picture work. She was raw and undeveloped, but Griffith's expert eye saw great possibilities beneath the surface of her anxious eyes and mobile countenance. He wanted a half-grown girl for a work he was about finishing, and he put Miss Marsh in pictures. Now she has the most likeable role in all the thousands of characters that are crowded into Griffith's masterpiece, "The Birth of a Nation," and has been the joyous note of youth in the most remarkable drama the film has yet unfolded.

Experienced actors sit about at the Lambs and Players these nights and after marvelling over the prodigal detail of Griffith's big production they invariably add a tribute of sincere praise for the little lass who plays the younger sister in this appealing story. Great throngs that nightly fill the theatre to see this picture always ask about the girl who played Flora. It is a rare recognition of Miss Marsh's fine realism. Griffith has taught some other [illegible] of screen [illegible] a more pliable material than this [illegible] express [illegible] the feminine mind [illegible]

MAE MARSH

MAY 2 - 1915

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

[illegible] Film Has Been Seen by Thousands.

The Birth of a Nation," now in its [illegible] month at the Liberty Theatre, [illegible] one of the regular attractions to [illegible] the country offerings of the [illegible] Griffith's wonderful [illegible] by more people than [illegible] ever brought out in [illegible]

Journal of Commerce May 29 1915

At the Picture Houses.

Great crowds are breaking the records for attendance at the Liberty Theatre where D. W. Griffith's wonderful film, "The Birth of a Nation," is now in its fourth month. Memorial Day, which is really a three-day holiday this year, is expected to bring in capacity houses as the city will be filled with veterans, who will be anxious to see the scenes in which they played such prominent roles. Of greatest interest to them will be the siege of Petersburg, the march to the sea, the burning of Atlanta, the assassination of Lincoln, and the surrender of Lee.

Lillian Gish
The Birth of a Nation
Liberty Theatre

Milan Cooper

and Lee.

The attendance throughout the week has been capacity both matinee and night, and the city department will probably have to be called out to restrain the ardent throngs trying to get in on this wonderful picture over the three-ply Memorial Day.

Paddock, [illegible] Theodore Mitchell, publicity representative, returns to the track Monday after a [illegible] "vacation" in Boston interviewing proponents and opponents of "The Birth of a Nation" bill before the Massachusetts Legislature.

(Inside Information.—This was written by Henry MacMahan, who wanted to try his hand at writing a close sheet.)

N.Y. Commercial May 29

SACRAMENTO (Cal.) BEE
MAY 29, 1915

Three Decoration days in a row—so considering Saturday, Sunday and Monday, because of the real holiday transpiring on Sunday—recalls the fact that "The Birth of a Nation," now in its fourth month at the Liberty, reflects directly the patriotic and historical aspects of the American Civil War. Federals and Confederates alike can find keen interest in such incidents as the siege of Petersburg, one of the stirring scenes in this play. The second part of the spectacle takes up the troublous era of Reconstruction history. There, too, the film is marked by loyalty to the flag of the reunited nation.

N.Y. World May 29, 19

Fourteen performances a week of "The Birth of a Nation" are given at the Liberty Theatre. Besides the patriotic appeal, the accompanying music and the mechanical effects contribute to the most elaborate presentation of epical picture drama that has ever been devised.

Italian moving pictures and music will be offered at the Grand Opera House, Brooklyn.

MAE MARSH
CLUNIE

"The Clansman," Feature Pictures at the Clunie

"The Clansman, or the Birth of a Nation," the sensational and spectacular D. W. Griffith picture adaptation from Thomas E. Dixon's much-advertised novel, will run two weeks at the Clunie, beginning Monday, with the exception of Wednesday night, when it gives way to Chauncey Olcott in "The Heart of Paddy Whack." This is said to be one of the most elaborate productions which have been produced, rivaling in cost and immensity of detail D'Annunzio's "Cabiria."

It is said that two armies were used in the depiction of the battle scenes and that most of the great events portrayed are historically correct, even including the assassination of President Abraham Lincoln in the old Ford Opera House in Washington.

The management claims there is nothing offensive in the picture, despite the protests filed against it. The real villain of the entire story is a white man, a carpet-bagger. The conditions as portrayed are claimed to follow only the lines of history.

BROOKLYN, (N. Y.) TIMES
May 29, 1915

ate .... The Birth [illegible] day crowds are breaking every previous tremendous records at the Liberty Theatre, where D. W. Griffith's patriotic and historical entertainment, "The Birth of a Nation," is now in the fourth month of its prosperous run. The holiday falling on Sunday really gives three Decoration Days this year and each of them is marked by a big patronage from veterans, both Federal and Confederate, and the son of the veterans who participated in the stirring war scenes witnessed in the play. Among the most notable of these scenes is the thrillingly conceived and wonderfully executed siege of Petersburg. Others of as thrilling interest are the burning of Atlanta, Sherman's march, the assassination of Lincoln and the final surrender of Lee to Grant at Appomattox. The second part of the spectacle takes up the troublesome era of Reconstruction history. There, too, the film is masked by passionate loyalty to the flag of the reunited nation, and the most affecting scene of all is in the log cabin where the Union veterans join in with the oppressed Southern whites to defend their Aryan birthright. The spirit of Daniel Webster, calling the country to a new nationhood, breathes throughout this closing half of the picture.

SACRAMENTO (Cal.) BEE
MAY 28 1915

"Clansman," With One Scene Removed, Approved

With the scene of a negro chasing a white girl eliminated, the moving pictures of "The Clansman," against which a negro delegation of Sacramento protested before City Commissioner Carraghar, will be shown at the Clunie Theater starting Monday afternoon. This was the compromise agreed upon last night by all concerned.

The protestants at first wanted the entire movie play kept out of Sacramento, on the ground that it was unfair to the negro race and would tend to incite rate riots. The main objection finally was concentrated on the scene where a white girl, to escape from a negro, leaps over a cliff and is killed. Representatives of the film company agreed to eliminate this and Commissioner Carraghar gave his sanction to the pictures.

rom CITIZEN
ddress: Brooklyn, N. Y.
ate

Liberty Sun May 29,

LIBERTY—Enormous Memorial Day crowds are breaking even the previous tremendous records at the Liberty Theatre where D. W. Griffith's patriotic and historical entertainment, "The Birth of a Nation," is now in the fourth month of its prosperous run. The holiday falling on Sunday really gives three Decoration days this year and each of them is marked by a big patronage from veterans, both Federal and Confederate, and the sons of the veterans who participated in the stirring war scenes witnessed in the play. Among the most notable of these scenes is the thrillingly conceived and wonderfully executed siege of Petersburg. The second part of the specials takes up the troublous era of reconstruction history. Four[illegible] performances a week of "The Birth of a Nation" are given at the Liberty Theatre, which means a daily matinee and a daily night showing, both of equal length and technical excellence.

Mail May 29, 1915

'Birth of a Nation' Death Scene Visit

Three hundred stage deaths are the [illegible] of Miss Mae Marsh, who plays "little Flora," in the "The Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty Theatre. In "The Birth of a Nation" as "little Flora" she plunges to her death over a cliff.

"I have died so many times before the camera," said Miss Marsh, "I am getting used to it and really enjoy the experience. When I die I believe I have all the emotions of a person who is actually on a deathbed. After I do a death scene I feel bad for a short time. Then it strikes me funny and I laugh."

...ing war and the ... period of the South ... incidents of interest.

...icago May 30.

...es Memorial Day crowds ...ing even the previous tre... records at the Liberty Thea... D. W. Griffith's patriotic ...orical entertainment, "The ... a Nation," is now in the ...month of its prosperous run. ...day, falling on Sunday, really ...three Decoration Days this ...d each of them is marked by ...atronage from veterans, both ... and Confederate, and the sons ...veterans who participated in ...ring war scenes witnessed in ...

...een performances a week of ...irth of a Nation" are given at ...erty Theatre, which means a ...atinee and a daily night show... ...th of equal length and techni... ...ellence.

...ppeal May 30, 1915

Tribune, May 30, 1915

At the Liberty Theatre "The Birth of a Nation" is now in the fourth month of its run. The holiday falling on Sunday really gives three Memorial Days this year, and each of these is marked by a big patronage from veterans, both Federal and Confederate, and the sons of the veterans who participated in the war scenes witnessed in the play. The second part of the spectacle takes up the troublous era of Reconstruction history. Fourteen performances a week of "The Birth of a Nation" are given at the Liberty Theatre, which means a daily matinee and a daily night showing, both of equal length.

Press. N.Y. May 30, 1915

...ds are breaking even the previous ...s at the Liberty Theatre, where D. ...ffith's patriotic and historical en...ment, "The Birth of a Nation," is ...n the fourth month of its prosperou... Among the most notable of the ...s in the siege of Petersburg. Other ...g thrilling interest are the burning ...lanta, Sherman's march, the assassin... of Lincoln and the final surrender of ... to Grant at Appomattox.

MIRIAM COOPER ... OF A NATION" AT THE LIBERTY.

...legraph N.Y. May 30, 1915

...AN THEY KEEP IT UP?

...suit, started by the National As... ...n for the Advancement of Colored ... has been in evidence ever since ...ture began to run in public a few ... ago. As the film continued to ...ing houses and the average negro ... remained calm in spite of the ... ...sult to their race contained in the ...ne, it appears as though the as... ... members went to a wholly un... ...y amount of trouble merely for ... of kicking up a row about noth... ... keeping under the publicity spo...

...KLYN, (N.Y.) CITIZEN

MAY 30 1915

...E BIRTH OF A NATION."

...d-Breaking Crowds Still Seen at the Liberty Theatre.

...mous crowds are breaking even ...rious tremendous records at the ... Theatre, where D. W. Griffith's ... and historical entertainment, ...irth of a Nation," is now in the ...month of its prosperous run. The ... falling on Sunday really gives ... Decoration Days this year and ...portunity for thousands of vet... both Federal and Confederate, ...e sons of the veterans who par... ...d in the stirring war scenes in ... the play. Among the most not... ... these scenes is the thrilling ...ed and wonderfully executed siege ...tersburg. Others of as thrilling ...t are the burning of Atlanta, ...an's march, the assassination of ...n and the final surrender of Lee ...nt at Appomattox.

... second part of the spectacle takes ... troublous era of Reconstruction ... There, too, the film is marked ...sionate loyalty to the flag of the ...d Nation, and the most affecting ... of all is the log cabin where the ... veterans join in with the oppressed ...ern whites to defend their Aryan ...ight. The spirit of Daniel Web... ...lling the country to a new nation... ... breathes throughout this closing ... of the picture.

...teen performances a week of "The ... of a Nation" are given at the Lib... theatre, which means a daily mat... ...d a daily night showing, both of ... length and technical excellence. ... the patriotic appeal, the wonderful ...panying music and the cinematic ...ac effects contribute to the ... ...ate presentation of epical drama ... has ever been devised and ... ...gh in anw era of theatrical ...

MAY 30, 1915

...ANGELES (Cal.) TIMES

... Auditorium.

David Griffith master... ...ness," will enter ... at Clune's Auditorium ...

...stirring photo... ...ation period of ... ...with its great ... ...battlefields ...

Herald. May 30.

"Birth of a Nation," produced by D. W. Griffith, is the attraction in the Liberty Theatre, where it will remain indefinitely.

N.Y. World. May 30

"The Birth of a Nation" retains its popularity [redacted] Liberty Theatre and is well patronized at both matinee and evening performances.

MISS MAE MARSH AS FLORA CAMERON IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" LIBERTY THEATRE

N.Y. Telegraph. May 30

Triumph of Griffith Film.

The fourth month of D. W. Griffith's spectacle of the American military era, "The Birth of a Nation," shows undiminished attendance at the Liberty Theatre. The attraction seems eminently suited to the present, with European complications and the portent of possible war overshadowing the land. Civil strife that grew out of misunderstanding and jealousy, the victory of the North and the terrible aftermath of Reconstruction furnish a succession of startling themes. Never before has America's greatest war been put on film, canvas or panorama. "The Birth of a Nation" proved of intensest interest last week to thousands of those who attended the naval review and to hundreds of the jackies. It is the one big patriotic entertainment in town.

Brooklyn, (N. Y.) Standard Union

Date May 31, 1915

Manhattan Theatres

LIBERTY—Memorial Day crowds are expected to break even the previous tremendous record at the Liberty Theatre, Manhattan, where D. W. Griffith's patriotic and historical entertainment, "The Birth of a Nation," now in the fourth month of its prosperous run. Among the most notable of the scenes presented is the wonderfully executed siege of Petersburg. Others of as thrilling interest are the burning of Atlanta, Sherman's march, the assassination of Lincoln and the final surrender of Lee to Grant at Appomattox. The second part of the spectacle takes up the troublous era of Reconstruction history. Fourteen performances a week of "The Birth of a Nation" are given at the Liberty Theatre, Manhattan, which means a daily matinee and a daily night showing, both of equal length and technical excellence.

MAY 30, 1915

SACRAMENTO (Cal.) UNION

MARY ALDEN ... IN "THE CLANSMAN" ...

MAN WHO MADE IT

D. W. Griffith.

Producer of "The Birth of a Nation," the film which is [redacted] New York, Boston and Chicago at $1 a seat.

Another of Griffith's master productions is "The Avenging Conscience," which will be produced for the first time in Pittsburg in the Miles Theater this week.

MAY 30, 1915

SACRAMENTO (Cal.) UNION

"The Clansman" at Clunie Tomorrow

Massive Twelve-Reel Photodrama Will Be Shown Here Two Weeks.

Differing radically from the incidents in connection with the production of a regular stage play, were the experiences sustained by Director D. W. Griffith in producing the "Clansman" or "The Birth of a Nation," the great photo-drama in 12 reels which opens for two weeks at the Clunie tomorrow.

There is a wide difference between the actions of the players on the legitimate stage as compared with the movements of the actors and actresses of the silent drama.

In the former, the players, of course, depend a great deal on their lines to show the progress of the play, but in motion pictures the audience must be reached by action and facial expression entirely.

A large number of players in the picture drama are unable to get the proper emotion on their faces unless they have lines to speak. As no lines are prepared in the studio, the players make their own lines.

In the scene depicting Lee's surrender to Grant, Donald Crisp, who plays the latter character, said to Howard Gaye, who has the role of General Lee, "Well, old scout, shake hands quick for I wish to get home early."

...ress: New York City

Revue.

MAY 2

Der phänomenale Erfolg des grohartigen Bühnenspielbramas „The Birth of a Nation" von D. W. Griffith jetzt tagtäglich im Liberty Theater verhilft hat Denen Recht gegeben, die in dieser Filmproduction einen neuen Ruhm für die kinematographischen Kunst erblickten. Nämlich der finematographischen Kunst erblickten. Nämlich der [illegible]

MADISON (Wis.) JOURNAL

MAY 30, 1915

...ational ... with its star cast furnishes the ... brilliant performance of the year.

The "Birth of a Nation" [illegible] picture [illegible] acts, and produced by the Mutual Film corporation under the direction of D. W. Griffith, its $100,000 a year director is now in its fourth month at the Liberty Theater, New York. Prices for admission are from $2.00 to 25c, and the attendance and enthusiasm is the same as at the beginning. A symphony orchestra of forty furnishes the music [illegible]

[illegible] "The Birth of a Nation" was in the course of production, D. W. Griffith had considerable trouble in finding just the kind of gate he wanted to use in one of the scenes. Hearing of this, Walter Long, one of the Mutual heavies, went to the trouble of building one himself only to learn that it was not the kind in vogue in 1860.

Raymond Hitchcock, the comedian, was a visitor at the Hollywood Studios this week and his comment on all that he saw kept D. W. Griffith, who showed him about, continually laughing.

Kate Toncray, the famous film actress, has rejoined D. W. Griffith after a two-years' absence and will appear in Mutual releases henceforth. Miss Toncray has had a distinguished career on the speaking and silent stage. Among her intimate friends she numbers the great Italian tragedian, Tomaso Salvini and his wife. The war prevented her visiting them in Florence this year.

[illegible] will be completed this [illegible] will then be made [illegible] German, Italian, Danish, [illegible] and Japanese, and the book will [illegible] simultaneously next March in [illegible] London, Paris, Berlin, Milan, [illegible] Moscow and Tokio.

Pres. May 31.

[illegible] W. Griffith and Thomas [illegible] will join forces in the novelization of "The Birth of a Nation," [illegible] spectacle now running in the [illegible] Theatre. Much of the plot in [illegible] film was taken originally from [illegible] civil war novels.

Herald. May 31 (N.Y.)

[illegible] leading pictures this week to be [illegible] in the various film theatres are: "The Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty Theatre, which is still doing a [illegible] business. The stirring incidents of the civil war and the reconstruction period of the South seem to [illegible] incidents of interest.

Herald N. Y. May 31, 1915

David W. Griffith and Thomas Dixon have decided to join forces in the official novelization of "The Birth of a Nation" film spectacle now running at the Liberty. Mr. Griffith invented about 60 per cent. of the action, and the remainder is based on the Dixon books, hence the need of collaboration. The story, it is announced, will be strictly non-controversial, following closely the chain of filmed incidents of civil war and reconstruction days.

BROOKLYN, (N. Y.) CITIZEN
May 31, 1915

FILM TO BE NOVELIZED.

"The Birth of a Nation" May Be "Best Seller." 14

David W. Griffith and Thomas Dixon have decided to join forces in the official novelization of "The Birth of a Nation" film spectacle now running at the Liberty. Mr. Griffith invented about sixty per cent. of the action and the remainder is based on the Dixon books, hence the need of collaboration. The story, it is announced, will be strictly non-controversial, following closely the chain of filmed incidents of Civil War and Reconstruction days.

A syndicate has offered $100,000 for the book rights. This offer has been refused, as Messrs. Griffith and Dixon intend to retain the literary property and to use a prominent international publishing firm as their agents. The novelizing will be completed this summer. Versions will then be made into French, German, Italian, Danish, Russian and Japanese, and the book will be issued simultaneously next March in New York, London, Paris, Berlin, Milan, Copenhagen, Moscow and Tokio.

LOS ANGELES (Cal.) TIMES
MAY 30, 1915

MAY 30, 1915
BIRMINGHAM (Ala.) NEWS

Another Griffith Feature.

Now that "The Birth of a Nation" is firmly established in New York and the public is proving that $2 movies will pay, D. W. Griffith announces he is about ready to start work on another big production. The feature will be "The Quest of the Holy Grail," founded on the legend of King Arthur and his knights. The opportunities for the spectacular, of which Griffith is the master, should be enormous in this new picture. The hunt for properties, according to the costumes and other features of the life of that time has begun, and the next few weeks should see a start made toward the new master picture. It is expected Henry Walthall will be cast as Sir Galahad.

American N.Y. May 2, 1915

"BIRTH OF A NATION" AT THE LIBERTY

"The Birth of a Nation," now in its third month at the Liberty Theatre, continues one of the regular attractions to withstand the counter offerings of the Spring showmen. Griffith's wonderful film has been seen by more people than anything of the kind ever brought out in the way of a regular theatrical presentation.

The vast area of action it covers and its potential effects have created a fuller understanding of the art of animated photography; but, aside from these technical accomplishments, it is potent because of its fundamental story.

The dramatic effect of conflict and the love element of romance is never lost sight of, though the protagonists are assembled in thousands and move to a stirring impulse which could never be encompassed in the limits of a four-act play of the spoken word.

(no date)

For "The Clansman" Mrs. Norton made the little record of 800 biscuits of a morning for breakfast, and I assure you she makes biscuit that "taste like more."

"I always loved to cook," she explained just as some people would say "I always loved to paint," or to write, or any of the supposedly exclusive inspirations of genius, "and so did Bert."

Apparently their gift is paying them well, for the same day we returned from our desert trip I met them out at the Selig zoo—and they were so spruce and dressed up looking that I scarcely recognized them.

SAN FRANCISCO (Cal.) EXAMINER
MAY 30, 1915

CLUNES AUDITORIUM.—Based upon history, portraying the darkest chapter in the life of the United States, "The Clansman" is creating a sensation equaled by no other dramatic production ever presented to the American public. Dealing delicately with a problem that still confronts the South, the race problem, "The Clansman" bears a message that will not be overlooked. It will enter upon its fourteenth great week at Clune's Auditorium Theater tomorrow afternoon. It is playing to capacity business in New York and Boston; and in spite of every effort is being made to prevent its being exhibited. In Los Angeles alone, over 300,000 people have witnessed the remarkable manner in which D. W. Griffith portrays that eventful period, the reconstruction of the South. The world's greatest dramatic critics have claimed "The Clansman" the greatest of all motion pictures. Not only this, but those who know best the conditions that existed during those troublous times, state that from every standpoint "The Clansman" is per-

SACRAMENTO [illegible]

"The Clansman" at Clunes Tomorrow

Massive Twelve-Reel Photodrama Will Be Shown Here Two Weeks

Differing radically from the incidents in conection with the production of a regular stage play, were the experiences sustained by Director D. W. Griffith in producing the "Clansman" or "The Birth of a Nation," the great photo-drama in 12 reels which opens for two weeks at the Clunie tomorrow.

There is a wide difference between the actions of the players on the legitimate stage as compared with the movements of the actors and actresses of the silent drama.

In the former, the players, of course, depend a great deal on their lines to show the progress of the play, but in motion pictures the audience must be reached by action and facial expression entirely.

A large number of players in the picture drama are unable to get the proper emotion on their faces unless they have lines to speak. As no lines are prepared in the studio, the players make their own lines.

In the scene depicting Lee's surrender to Grant, Donald Crisp, who plays the latter character, said to Howard Gaye, who has the role of General Lee, "Well, old scout, shake hands quick for I wish to get home early."

SAN FRANCISCO (Cal.) [illegible]
MAY [illegible]

FINAL OF "THE CLANSMAN"

THE third and final week of "The Clansman" or the Birth of a Nation," at the Cort Theatre, will begin with the matinee to-day. Previous Cort bookings prevent a continuance of the engagement, although the phenomenal attendance indicates that "The Clansman" could continue to play there indefinitely. "The Clansman" is the most imposing film drama that has yet been produced. How D. W. Griffith, the producer, ever managed to stage and assemble so imposing a spectacle must strike the layman as marvelous, and "The Clansman" is certain to appeal to everyone who cares for novelty, spectacular effects and thrills piled upon thrills.

The great battle scenes are the first that were taken at night by a motion picture camera. As to the costumes, field equipment and the like, even the most hypercritical observer would be hard put to find a false note. More than eighteen authorities were consulted in order to get the proper atmosphere into the scene in which President Lincoln was shot. This is only one of the historical incidents that are faithfully reproduced.

The action covers a period of twelve years and shows by a narrative threaded by romance the reconstruction of the Southern States dating from the time of their secession. The purpose of the spectacle is to carry a message for universal peace, and great care has been taken not to glorify battle and to emphasize the "note of terror and desolation which is the real truth of war."

"Sari," Henry W. Savage's latest musical comedy production, with Mizzi Hajos, comes to the Cort next Sunday.

SAN FRANCISCO (Cal.) CHRONICLE
MAY 4, 1915

...Birth of a Nation" ...
...ing at the Liberty ...
...about sixty per cent ...
...the remainder is based on ...
...ks, hence the need of collab-
...story, it is announced, will be ...controversial, following closely
...filmed incidents of Civil War
...ruction Days. Translations will
...all languages including Japa-

June 1, 1915

...rth of a Nation" continues
...ful run in the Liberty The...re two performances are
...ly, including Sundays, to
...iences.

...gram. June 1, 15

...rth of a Nation" continues at
...y Theatre. "Love, Snow and ...thrilling moving picture at the
... with a new instalment of

...legraph - June 1.

PLEASES VETERANS.

...of a Nation" Draws Thou-
...ds to Liberty Theatre.

...ess Memorial Day crowds
...en the previous tremendous
...at the Liberty Theatre, where
...Griffith's patriotic and historical
...ment, "The Birth of a Nation,"
...in the fourth month of its pro-
...run.

...holiday falling on Sunday really
...ree Decoration Days this year,
...of them was marked by a big
...e from veterans, both Federal
...nfederate, and the sons of the
... who participated in the stirring
...nes witnessed in the play.

...y. Times. June

...the Harris, the film play "The ...Nation" at the Liberty, "A Full
...the Massacre, and "The Natural
...the Republic.

...SE (CAL.) MERCURY-HERALD
APRIL ...

...nman' Shows Facts ...he Ku Klux Klan?

...s Depict Occurrences of At-
...pt to Justify Lawless Band.

...r Mercury Herald: Every im-
... man familiar with the events
... days which The Clansman at-
... to portray as facts, must be
...sed with this truth: That while ... pictures are wonderful produc-
...f art and industry, they are the ...ation of past futile efforts to ... justify and glorify the Ku
...Klan, whom everyone who lived
...e days must know was a law-
...nd of secret night prowlers, or-
...d and acting by threats and
... and sometimes by murder, to
...t not only negroes, but white
... the south who were loyal to
...on from going to the polls on
... day, or like the night-riders
...ouri today, to intimidate those ... whom they had a grievance.
... union men, both north and ... thought it a mistake to confer
...ctoral franchise on the negro
... he was prepared to properly
...e that franchise, but all men of ... character and standing, north
...uth, condemned acts of violence,
...bloodshed by the Ku Klux Klan.
... attempt in these moving pic-
...falsehoods to make it appear that ... simply to protect the white
...es from the insults and injuries
...ffered by the blacks is contradict-
...ntradicted by many of the brave
... honorable confederate soldiers
... have borne testimony to the ...ulness of the old slaves, who,
... the master was at the front,
...ed peacefully in the field and ...household. Of course there were
...nd cases of wrong doing by the
... as there were by the whites.
... slander on the fair fame of that ...nguished and able Senator Charles
...ner, who is represented in these
...res as trucking to and kissing the
... of a big negress, in those days

By HELEN DUEY

LAST month the editors of the WOMAN'S HOME COMPANION recommended a film called "The Birth of a Nation," based primarily on the "Clansman," Thomas Dixon's well-known novel, but picturing comprehensively those historical situations before and after the war which brought about a united nation. By this time many of you have seen it, and some have condemned unsparingly the recommendation by the WOMAN'S HOME COMPANION. You have expressed much the same opinion as that of a prominent motion picture critic, who said:

"It's a great mistake, that picture! Wonderful? It is stupendous; the greatest thing in motion pictures! . . . Yes, it did stir me deeply. That's why I say it's a mistake. To tear open old wounds that are healed, to arouse emotions that are quiet, is not right. None but the South will ever know what the South suffered in those despairing times after the guiding hand of Lincoln was removed. But nothing can be done now to wipe it out. It is all over. The great problem of the disposition of the negro race is yet to be met. The picture rouses us to action without telling us what to do. Our emotions are suspended in the air and then dropped flat. Perhaps the director left it that way intentionally to make us reflect on the terrible consequences of war, so that we will not be so eager to plunge into it." Then he added thoughtfully, "Maybe the picture is not a mistake, after all."

This well expresses the opinion of the editors of the WOMAN'S HOME COMPANION. Though they deprecated the intensity of those scenes which make war and its consequences seem a heinous crime against humanity, they realized the powerful historical value of the film and the exquisite beauty of its scenes, and therefore felt justified in their recommendation.

Judging a film thus in its totality is the basis upon which the WOMAN'S HOME COMPANION makes up its recommended list. Personal opinions and prejudices are laid aside, and the picture is judged as nearly as possible in conformity with the soundest public opinion as it makes itself felt on the platform and in the press. No fixed standard can be set, for two reasons; the uncertainty due to the constantly shifting basis of public opinion, and the necessity for judging any scene in its relation to the whole film, a relation which varies for every situation.

Of the seventy-five feature films, and of the eight hundred shorter films making up the regular service, those which are considered the best on the whole from an artistic, entertaining, and moral standard are selected each month. This does not mean that the recommended films are faultless. We are a long way yet from the perfect film, but there are glimpses in these selected films of the great things that are coming.

...subsequent to the war, must be apparent to every one whether he lived in those days, or who has read impartial history. So liberal and just was Senator Sumner to the people of the south after the war, not only in his speeches in the senate, but in his efforts and influence with the administration, that so distinguished and able a statesman, scholar, jurist and soldier as Hon. L. Q. C. Lamar, in congress from Mississippi, on the 28th day of April, 1874, delivered a most eloquent speech on the floor of the house in eulogy of Senator Sumner, who had died on March 11, 1874.

In Indiana and Tennessee the members of the Ku Klux Klan so frequently in their night raids of violence and intimidation violated the laws of the state, that the state authorities arrested and punished such of its members as could be identified. In Tennessee I recall a case where a white man was murdered, and the perpetrators were subsequently discovered, arrested and one of them convicted and hanged.

Let those who have no recollection of these events read impartial history, and on its pages he will find refuted these slanders.

As an old Democrat remarked to me as we witnessed these moving pictures, "It is a mistake to present such scenes, for it awakens old animosities long since dead or sleeping."

JUSTICE.

...JUNE 1, 1915

...CENSORS AND THE CENSORED

To give a bureau the right to say that a thing shall not be printed or displayed is a thing not likely to sit well with Americans, a fact brought out by the Chicago Tribune in the following:

In New York the censor prohibited the production of a moving picture called "The Ordeal." It, like "The Birth of a Nation," gave no offense to public morals or decency, but was feared as a provocative of nationalistic prejudice and bitterness. It presented the desolation and sadness in parts of France traversed by the Germans in the Franco-Prussian war. The censor held that it would offend German-Americans and refused to let it be shown.

The film company went to court, and the judge who issued an injunction restraining the commissioner of licenses from interfering with the photoplay said that national distinctions could not be urged in an American court as a reason for shaping or coloring decisions.

In the jurisdiction of the court there could be no classes of citizenship and no increase of rights by hyphenization. It is enough to give Americans a start to realize that we must have a judicial statement of this fact. The other important point is the assertion of judicial control over bureaucratic government.

The rights of the public are not to be abridged by bureaucracy, but are under the protection of the judiciary. The growth of censorship, undoubtedly stimulated by the moving picture, is a development which no American devoted to ideals of freedom can observe without alarm. The complexities in the situation are recognized and there is no disposition to push hard and fast rules to the extreme, but the censorship is an anti-American institution.

The use of censorship easily may tend to the misuse of it, and the position of the courts as a corrective to check abuse of power by what is virtually an extra legal authority and might easily become an autocratic and stupid authority, must constantly be kept in mind.

LOS ANGELES (Cal.) EXAMINER
MAY 2, 1915

MAE MARSH IN "THE CLANSMAN" CLUNES AUDITORIUM

...SACRA... JUNE 1, 1...

"The Clansman" Is Remarkable in Its Spectacular Scenes

Tensely Interesting Portrayal of Stirring Episodes of the Reconstruction Period

By E. S. CARROLL.

More than a hundred G. A. R. and Spanish-American War Veterans, invited to the theater as guests of the Clunie management, burst into insistent and continuous applause last night when, in the course of the running of "The Clansman" pictures, the scene of General Lee's surrender to General Grant was depicted.

Underlying the outburst from the grizzled veterans of the Civil War possibly was the bridging of the half century of time by the memory of the relief experienced and the thanksgiving inspired when that great historic event put a period to the internecine strife. But the veterans seemed interested and in the main gave approval to the visualization of a time in this Nation's history when they were important units in the making of it.

The pictures run for more than three hours and yet the audience seemed to be interested to the end and at times gave evidence of close attention by applauding when a more than usual stirring scene or dramatic occurrence was depicted. In a great measure the maintained interest is due to the atmosphering of the running pictures with music.

The orchestra, under the direction of Professor Tony De Nufero, played Southern and old-time love airs for the softer scenes, while the battle and riot scenes were given to the clash and blare of martial music and the emotion-arousing classic compositions. A quartet, concealed in the wings, now and then sang appropriate songs.

The synchronization of the music and the scenes on the screen was almost perfect. In the ball-room portrayal the music of the orchestra seemed to set the time for the moving figures on the screen; and later an assembly call was given when the lips of the screen figure moved in unison in the forming of notes which in reality were given by the orchestra cornetist.

The pictures themselves have been described as the largest of the motion pictures created. More than eight months were required in completing them. Thousands of men, women and horses were employed; expensive costumes, arms and ammunition were used; a theater was constructed in exact facsimile of Ford's, for the assassination scene; a town was built and burned. Those are a few of the requirements which were successfully met by the producers.

The result is that on a thread of primitive romance is strung tremendous battle scenes, great historical events vividly depicted, including the murder of Lincoln; the surrender of Lee.

The pictures are faithful in detail to historic relation. The events portrayed are of strong dramatic interest. The battle scenes are wonders

...CABLE ADDRESS ... CLIPBURO
CLIPPING FROM Gazette
Trenton N J
6-2-15

New Griffith Film.

FF

David W. Griffith, the producer of "The Birth of a Nation," announces for the publication by the ... elaborate film "The Quest of the Holy Grail." Mr. Griffith has long been an admirer of Edwin A. Abbey "Grail" pictures that adorn the public library in Boston. He has made several trips thither this spring to study their possibilities for a narrative story and to negotiate for the rights.

The production will be fully as sumptuous as "The Birth of a Nation," and the cast will include several of the leading romantic actors of the American stage. Work will be started in June ...

...CLIPPING FROM Examiner
Los Angeles Cal
5-1-15

The Clansman

FF

Yesterday "The Clansman" opened its fourteenth week at ...'s Auditorium Theater. In spite of the large capacity of Clune's Auditorium, this marvelous picture will establish a record for the longest run ever made by any dramatic attraction. It was but a few days ago when a car was chartered to bring in a large party from Northern California ...

June 2, 1915
N. Y. Commercial

COLUMBUS (O.) CITIZEN
JUNE 2, 1915

IN ... MOVIE.

Henry Walthal, who is appearing as the young poet in "The Evening Gown" at the ...

A Los Angeles Exhibitor

Blaisdell Discovers Picture Presentation DeLuxe at Clune's Auditorium—Manager Brown a Man of Classic Ideas.

By the Moving Picture World Staff Correspondent.

Los Angeles, California.

THERE'S an exhibitor-showman or a showman-exhibitor out here in this southern California city who complains that his greatest difficulty is obtaining big motion pictures. The man who gives utterance to this somewhat remarkable declaration is Lloyd Brown, manager of W. H. Clune's big Auditorium, where for nine consecutive weeks the Griffith production of "The Birth of a Nation" has been holding the screen—and twice a day filling the 3,000-seat theater. Mr. Brown bluntly expresses the opinion that the exhibition of pictures is a showman's job, and adds that the proper presentation of a big subject should increase by at least 50 per cent. the entertainment quality of the producer's finished work. Mr. Brown wants more pictures like "The Birth of a Nation" and "Les Miserables." With "The Spoilers" he did much, and he expects to do much with the Kessel & Baumann production of George Beban in "The Sign of the Rose," made under the direction of Tom Ince.

W. H. Clune.

"The exhibition of motion pictures has been up to the present time what I would call a purely commercial business," said Mr. Brown in his office, the other day. "We have not been putting on the pictures from the showman's standpoint, but from the theatrical side. At first we had short subjects and then those of one and two reels. The first big theatrical subject was 'Les Miserables,' to my mind the greatest that has been made. The length of the Pathe picture was about the same as 'The Birth of a Nation,' 13,500 feet. Where the former was what I would call a slow picture—I am speaking of the action and consequently of the projection—the latter is a fast one."

Mr. Brown's treatment of "The Clansman"—as it is known here and not as "The Birth of a Nation"—is impressive. In the opening the curtain rises on a Southern home, of two stories, the front adorned with six pillars. The stage of the Auditorium is 100 feet wide and 55 feet deep. The opening is 50 feet. The mansion, which is 68 feet wide or long, if you prefer, sits back 20 feet from the stage opening. As the house appears to view the orchestra softly plays "The Mocking Bird." A woman garbed as Mrs. Cameron emerges from the front door and sits down to the side. A man dressed as Mr. Cameron comes out, caresses the hand of the woman, and slips into a chair by the entrance. The orchestra shifts to "Suwanee River." The stage lamps are lowered. A light appears in an upper window. The music changes to "Old Kentucky Home." The screen is lowered. The house is in the atmosphere of the story before the title is shown.

The music is one of the features of "The Clansman." There are over a hundred pieces in the score. With the six or seven repetitions as motifs or theme music there are 118 arrangements. "We have gone further with this production than we have with others because we had the opportunity," said Mr. Brown. "With others we could not get the subject in advance of the initial presentation. It takes a long time to make things perfect. As big scenes were being taken for the picture Mr. Clune and I would go out and watch them. At the same time we figured on the music that would fit the particular scene. When it came time to collect music for the orchestral arrangement we went after it in New York and San Francisco as well as here. There were a lot of back numbers we could not get. Old orchestra leaders could not help me—the stuff was simply out of print.

Lloyd Brown.

"I have been a theatrical man all my life—and I have been in the picture end off and on since 1898. In my time I have had much to do with music. Downstairs below the theater we have a projection room. We used to go down there for two or three hours in the morning and for the same time in the afternoon, the orchestra leader, the arranger and myself. In the cases of sixteen pieces of music I had to whistle them to the arranger, just dig them out of the back of my head.

"My idea of a musical accompaniment to a picture is to employ a medium that will heighten the dramatic effect, to work on the emotions. If you have a dramatic climax in your subject get every ounce of force out of it. In 'The Clansman' the music is pushing the picture. There are twenty-six pieces in the orchestra and also a big pipe organ. You will have noted that at times the music becomes riotous, but there is a reason for it."

The writer suggested that in his opinion nothing he had even seen quite approached "Les Miserables" in its appeal to the emotions.

The manager's eyes sparkled. "I am with you on that," he said, quickly. "While in 'Les Miserables' there are few if any of what are described as great scenes, I believe nothing has been done in pictures in the way of true acting like 'Les Miserables.'"

Mr. Brown told how in San Diego he put on the French dramatic subject. William W. Hodkinson, who was just starting his Progressive service, had the California rights. In San Diego the maximum admission ever charged for a picture entertainment was 10 cents. No subject had been shown for more than one day. When Mr. Brown finally secured the Pathe film he had only two or three days to prepare for its exhibition. He arranged his music, secured an orchestra of ten pieces and established his prices of admission at 25 and 50 cents. On his opening day his orchestra quit, demanding a half hour's rest. Imagine on his musicians the effect if he used music at all he must use it continuously, and that a half hour's stop was impossible. The manager cajoled and pleaded for the entire week that the picture was shown. He won his point throughout the seven days and the theater was packed.

Then followed five and six reel subjects and comedies, but put in the same category of the Pathe picture, "Les Miserables" was brought back for another week and again the house was packed.

Stage Setting for "The Clansman."

Over.

SAN BERNARDINO (Cal.) INDEX
APRIL 18, 1915

Theatrical News

"THE CLANSMAN IS COMING THIS WEEK

"The Birth of a Nation" or "The Clansman" is founded on Thomas Dixon's novel, "The Clansman", but it is as much more vital than the book as the thing we see is to the mere printed words telling of it.

The pictures of the Ku-Klux Klan in their ghostly regalia, holding their mysterious rites, and their raids, when they rode like cossacks, make a series of the most thrilling films ever shown in a moving picture. Love interest is lent to the play by two pretty romances of a Northern man and a Southern girl, and a Southern man and a Northern girl, that run like a golden thread through the dark woof and warp of the war drama.

"The Clansman" opens for a four days engagement at the Opera House with the matinee tomorrow. For further information of time and prices note the announcement on display on this, the editorial page.

2 SECTIONS GET BOTH

Price 2 cents

CLANSMAN TO BE GUEST OF NEWS

Member of Famous Organization to Witness Scenes in Which He Took Part

Was Dispatch Bearer in Civil War, Indian Fighter and Knew Kit Carson

When "The Clansman" opens at Clune's Theater Monday, Charles W. Hays of Goldfield, Nevada, president of the Talmadge Gold Mining Company, in that greatest mining camp in the world, Goldfield, will be present as the guest of the Pasadena News and Mr. Nelson, manager of the theater.

Mr. Hays was a member of the Klu Klux Klan and was number 17 in that famous organization. He will witness the presentation of the wonderful picture and will see the workings of the Klu Klux Klan on the screen as he saw it in real life nearly fifty years ago.

Mr. Hays is in Pasadena as the guest of Mrs. L. W. Coombs of 806 South Mentor avenue. He is an old Indian fighter and carries scars upon his body received in conflicts with Indians.

During the Civil War Mr. Hays, then a boy of about 16, was the dispatch bearer for Stonewall Jackson, the Confederate general. On one of his trips he was captured by the Union forces and in order to destroy the dispatches he carried he chewed them up and swallowed them.

The soldiers strung him up to a tree in an effort to make him disclose their contents. After he was nearly strangled they lowered him and gave him an opportunity to tell but he refused and they strung him up again. After a spell they lowered him for the second time and because of his refusal to tell he was strung up for the third time and left for dead.

Around his neck was a leather strap halter and after he was supposed to be dead he was cut down, as the leather halter was too valuable for the soldiers to lose. He recovered and to this day carries a knot or lump on the back of his neck.

After the war Mr. Hays became a member of the Klu Klux Klan and was known as number 17. He participated in the stirring events of that exciting period and as the guest of the News will be at the performance Monday evening.

Mr. Hays is a man who knows the west as few men know it. He was a friend of Kit Carson, the scout and during the Indian troubles he was in many exciting battles. He and two companions were caught in a hut which was surrounded by Indians and was under fire for hours. He is fearless and has an imposing appearance.

He owns a large ranch in Colorado, has property in California and Nevada and has been in the mining business for 35 to 40 years. His Talmadge mine in Goldfield is on the same veins as the famous Mohawk, Jumbo Extension and the Goldfield Consolidated. He is interested in a mine in Death Valley with L. W. Coombs of this city.

WON'T BAN
TH OF A NATION"

ce Riots, Mass Meetings
rotests Censors Decide for Film.

atch to The Morning Telegraph.)

BOSTON, June 2.

he widespread agitation fol-erous mass meetings, sensa-ts, race riots and court pro-ainst the production of "The Nation" the photo-film play barred in this State. This animous decision reached by reated Board of Censorship the end of a three-hour ses-or Curley's office.
witnessed the performance, sel representing the protest-e licensee, and having given ration to the entire subject," statement read, "we have at the license of the theatre be revoked or suspended."
rd which placed the stamp of proval on the production con-
Chief Justice Bolster of the Court, Mayor Curley and mmissioner O'Mear. Petitions 000 names were presented the ainst the play. Ex-Assistant tates District Attorney William
. J. Mott Hallowell and Butler n waged the fight in behalf of jectors.

CISCO CHRONICLE & POST 829
APRIL 2[illegible] 1915

NEWARK (N.J.)

David W. Griffith, Thomas Dixon have agreed to the official novelization of "The Clansman" which was the theory, Mr. Griffith wanted about 60 per cent of the action, and the remainder based on the Dixon books. Neither denied of collaboration.

SACRAMENTO

Clansman Resumes Its Place at Clunie

Remarkable Film of Reconstruction Days After the Civil War.

Beginning today and continuing all week, the remarkable film, "The Clansman," will be shown at the Clunie. This wonderful series of motion pictures tells the story of the Ku Klux Klan in the reconstruction days of the South and reveals something of the conditions that existed in those stormy times.

RACUSE (N.Y.) HERALD
MAY 2, 1915

W GRIFFITH SELECTED PLAYERS IN EARLY DAYS

Youth, Beauty and Ambition Chief Requisities—Some of His Movie Stars.

Picture-producing six or seven years ago when David W. Griffith, now the highest paid director in filmdom, then a stranded actor, cast his lot with the movies, was not all beer and skittles. Director Griffith was put to it many times for capable people—actors and actresses who could do something else besides wave their arms and roll their eyes. He began to cast about for his players, his selections, in most instances, being governed by youth, beauty and ambition. He didn't pin much faith in the corpulent leading ladies and the swash-buckling leading men of the times, preferring the talented but untrained thespians to those who had scared the country playing "Hamlet" or "Lady Macbeth."

And so it is, reads an article on Griffith in the May Green Book magazine, that his name is linked with the career of a score or more of the present-day film favorites. "Little Mary" Pickford, delightful Florence Lawrence, Arthur Johnson, Harry Salter, Marion Leonard, Stannar E. V. Taylor, David Miles, Owen Moore, Thomas Ince, James Kirkwood, Henry Walthall, Flora Finch, Fred Mace, Frank Grandon, George Nicholls, Frank Powell, Wilfred Lucas, Mack Sennett, William Cabanne, Mabel Normand, Dorothy Bernard, Mabel Normand, Dorothy Bernard, Bessie McCoy, Blanche Sweet, Billy Quirk, Charles Mehis, Clara McDowell, Tony O'Sullivan, Dell Henderson, Edward Dillon, Charles Murray, Lionel Barrymore, Vivian Prescott, Flo La Badie, Dorothy Davenport, Mae Marsh, Herbert Prior, Ashley Miller, Barney O'Neil, Courtanay Foote, Gertrude Prior and Walter Miller are only a few of those now holding stellar positions in the film firmament and who acknowledge the benefit of the early instruction given by Director Griffith.

Many interesting stories are told by these people of the methods used by Director Griffith to make them rise to sufficient heights of emotion during the playing of their first important parts. His ability to make people act approaches real genuius. In the early days of Mary Pickford's career, when she was engaged to her present husband, Owen Moore, who was working with her in Biograph productions, Director Griffith would accuse her finance of a lack of intelligence. Miss Pickford, you must remember, was only a child—just sixteen years old. She would lose her temper and become angry. Then Griffith would turn quickly to the camera man and whisper, "Go ahead! Grind" The result was always an exhibition of temperament on the part of "Little Mary" that exactly fitted the character she was portraying.

e Naughty, Naughty Swear Words, and Other Anecdotes of the Reel Thin of naughty swear words on the part masculine players during the staging fight scene in D. W. Griffith's spec- motion picture production, "The Clans- the Birth of a Nation," now having a run at the Cort Theater, completely the scene and compelled Director Grif- build another stage setting and re- scene in its entirety.

bility of a mute to read the lips of ers while the film was being cut and d in the projection room at the Griffith was responsible for the discovery.

years ago the term "silent drama" was the new art of motion pictures. But easure this name is applied erroneously as many of the players during the stag- a film oftentimes make use of forceful es in the effort to get the stronger of emotion properly registered on their e fight scene, where the young black- fights more than a dozen negroes in hite Arm Gin Mill," the action of the was carefully rehearsed and the play- tructed to put up a good fight and get into their actions.

the limit, but I want you to show me a ight," said Director Griffith just before ne was caught by the camera. There o women present and the actors entered fight with such realism that it resulted of the most spectacular, rough-house ever enacted before the camera being in "The Clansman."

of the players swore and they mauled mmeled each other in the scene, but in citement this incident was overlooked as the camera is supposed to catch only the action and not the conversation. The piece of film was developed, printed and run off in the projection room at the studio several weeks later for inspection. The action was conceded to be perfect.

Mary Alden in "The Clansman"

There were several visitors at the studio to witness the trial run, among them being a mute who was a professor at the deaf and dumb institute located at Indianapolis. As the film was being shown, this professor began to get excited.

"Those men in the scene swore like troopers," was the message written on a piece of paper and handed to Mr. Griffith by the professor at the conclusion of the exhibition.

"I read their lips while they acted, and could see where they swore at each other more than a dozen times," was the second message conveyed to Director Griffith by his mute visitor.

"Well, I guess it's a case of retake the scene," concluded the director, "as there will be a number of deaf and dumb people in the audiences that view 'The Clansman,' and I don't wish to offend them."

A complete new stage setting showing the gin mill was then erected and the fight scene was taken over the second time.

In the taking of the second scene, however, Mr. Griffith instructed his players to do nothing but grunt, and by all means to refrain from oaths and slang as they grappled with each other.

Despite the absence of conversation on the part of the actors, the second fight scene proved really to be more realistic than the first.

One of the negroes who had participated in the first fight and had taken a minor role throughout the Reconstruction scenes left Los Angeles immediately upon the completion of the first scene. It was imperative that this man be secured for the staging of the second fight.

A search was instituted and he was finally located in San Diego. He was shrewd and demanded $100 for reappearing in the second fight scene. The amount was paid without a murmur, and the negro afterward was heard to complain that he was sorry that he did not demand a larger sum.

spared in the endeavor to secure realism in the production. Mary Alden, who portrays the role of the mulatto woman, Stoneman's housekeeper, for weeks made her residence in the negro settlement district, the better to study and absorb the mannerisms of negro women. She put on her mulatto make-up at her home before going to the studio to take her place before the camera.

One morning, soon after making her home in this neighborhood, as she was walking to the studio, she was accosted by a young negro chap who asked her to go to a dance with him that evening. He was under the impression that she was a bona fide mulatto and added that his steady girl had jilted him for another man and that he wished to "kill her dead with a knife" when she saw him coming to the dance "with another pretty yaller gal."

Miss Alden did not stop to make any reply but put on quite a burst of speed and made the distance to the studio in record-breaking time.

George Siegman, who plays the part of Silas Lynch, Stoneman's protege, had a hard time to keep his hair curled. It was imperative for his role that he have curly hair. Siegman's hair is straight. There was no hairdressing parlor located within miles of the studio. Siegman's wife was away during the staging of the film.

He decided that the only thing for him to do was to curl his hair on a curling iron, as he felt that there might be some objection from his wife if he engaged some other woman in the studio to do the task.

Four hours were required for the first job, and when Siegman arrived at the stage door the first morning after completing his first attempt, he had his fingers all bandaged up from being burned on the iron. His hair was also badly singed in numerous places where the impromptu curler accidentally placed the hot iron by fingers that were strange to the art.

Two weeks were required by Siegman before he became an adept with the curling iron and could make artificial curls while feeling that his fingers were safe in wielding the iron.

SAN JOSE (CAL.) HERALD
APRIL 11, 1915

Clansman" at the Victory day and for One Week

. Griffith's latest achievement, lansman," in 11 reels, is the at- n at the Victory theatre, begin- with a matinee today, for one except Wednesday.

film is based on the famous y Thos. Dixon Jr., but it deals roadly on its historical side e life of the American nation the play or book.

Clansman" is the greatest and pectacular motion picture ever d. It cost $500,000 to produce, ven months were consumed in it.

Clansman" represents the very f art and realism in motion pic- It includes the most spectacular scenes ever staged. In the bat- nes are shown 25,000 soldiers in including infantry, artillery and . In "The Clansman" actuals are used for the first time in tory of motion pictures. [illegible] are hurled from the [illegible] s that were used by the [illegible] during the American civil war. ells are blanks and [illegible] d by an expert fireworks [illegible] especially for the [illegible] Each shell cost $[illegible] o of them are used [illegible] task of securing [illegible] the battle [illegible]

[illegible] would be a farce. The civil war cannon were finally borrowed from the United States government for the occasion. Battle scenes at night, showing the artillery duels, the infantry in the trenches and the charges of the cavalry, are faithfully reproduced in "The Clansman" photo-drama.

The night battle scenes represent the greatest feat in photography in the history of motion pictures. The burning of the entire city of Atlanta at night is graphically shown in the picture. This scene does not show merely a few dwellings, as is usual in a feature of this kind, but depicts the entire city on fire.

The famous raids of the Ku Klux Klan with thousands of these white-hooded riders in action are shown. Lee's surrender to Grant and Sherman's historical march from Atlanta to the sea are also graphically depicted.

The assassination of President Lincoln by Wilkes Booth is one of the principal features. R. A. Walsh, who has the role of Wilkes Booth, repeated the assassination scene 39 times before it was done to the satisfaction of Mr. Griffith. Walsh made the jump from the president's box to the stage below a distance of 14 feet, 38 times before the scene was satisfactory to Mr. Griffith. Walsh fell on his hands and knees each time. He is an all-around athlete and keeps himself in first-class physical condition, but he was very shaky in the legs for several days following the incident.

[illegible] pit, furnishings and all other equipment of the historical playhouse. This scene was built from the most authentic paintings that could be secured, and is identical in size with the original theatre. On the stage in the theatre are seen the same characters that were there the night the assassination place. The same play that was staged on that night is also depicted.

Historically and technically "The Clansman" is perfect. A well-known professor of history in one of the California colleges worked three months in securing historical data for "The Clansman."

No general on the European battlefield has made better use of the modern appurtenances of war than did Mr. Griffith in directing the big battle scenes for "The Clansman." Field telephones, couriers, flag signals and signals by mirrors were all utilized. These were not used in the picture as part of the army equipment, but were simply used to stage the scenes. Director Griffith used 1915 methods to better represent the methods of 1861-65.

The battlefield extended for a length of two miles. A tower 100 feet high was built at one end of it. Mr. Griffith directed the movements of the armies from this point of vantage. In the immediate rear of the opposing armies, telephone wires were strung. The telephone wires were connected with the tower and a telephone operator, with a receiver strapped to her ear, was stationed at a distance of every 50 yards. Standing next to Mr. Griffith on the tower was an ex-army [illegible] with a field telephone in his [illegible] Director Griffith desired [illegible] the infantry to advance [illegible]

In motion pictures no effort or expense is [illegible] telephoned it to the operator located at the point where Mr. Griffith desired the movement of the troops to take place. The command was then transmitted to the officer in charge of the soldiers at that point, with the result that the movement was executed with but a few seconds delay.

Seven G. A. R. veterans, three West Point military officers and a regiment of the national guard assisted Mr. Griffith in staging the battle scenes.

In one of the battlefields, the siege before Petersburg is depicted. The G. A. R. veterans, two of whom were commissioned officers, took part in the original battle and they assisted in laying out the trenches and placing the troops in the same positions as they were during the original conflict.

The soldiers taking part in the battle scenes were thoroughly drilled by the national guard officers in military tactics before taking their places before the camera. This resulted in the soldiers executing their military manoeuvers like real soldiers instead of resembling the movements of a raw mob simply dressed in soldiers' uniforms.

These battle scenes are the costliest pieces of motion picture film ever made. While it takes but a few moments to show these on the screen, yet each foot of film costs thousands of dollars.

The motion picture production of "The Clansman" carries the spectator through the civil war and the reconstruction period that followed. It shows the causes responsible for the civil war and treats impartially with the [illegible] [illegible] the [illegible]

"The Clansman" is a powerful plea for universal peace and finishes with an allegorical climax that is one of the strongest sermons against the horrors of war that could possibly be arranged.

Included in the all-star cast presenting "The Clansman" are the following principals:

Henry Walthall, Mae Marsh, Miriam Cooper, Josephine Crowell, Spottiswoode Aitken, Ralph Lewis, Lillian Gish, Elmer Clifton, Robert Harron, George Seigmann, Walter Long, Mary Alden, Joseph Henneberry, Sam de Grasse, Howard Gaye, Donald Crisp, William de Vaull [illegible]

Dear Mr Mitchell will you kindly send this to Mr Griffith after you read it.
R Grau

The Director of Photoplays

By ROBERT GRAU

Robert Grau

IN a chat with the writer, Edward Temple, famous as a director of great spectacles, expressed a belief that the direction of Photoplays would never attain such heights as to attract the world's greatest stage producers, such as Granville Barker, Max Reinhardt and others who represent the highest type of modern stage direction. Mr. Temple also stated that he was not personally inspired to produce for the screen, though he said he was one of the very first to direct for the Biograph Company.

Mr. Temple did not agree with the writer's view that the majority of mankind would flock quickly to the theaters where the D. W. Griffith production, "The Birth of a Nation," is shown, yet he, like fifteen hundred others, including the writer, sat for two and a half hours at the premier of the Griffith spectacle. But the writer was informed that choice seats for the first Saturday night brought as high as $5.00 each. The best proof that a new public is being attracted to the Griffith film spectacle was the reluctancy to accept balcony seats, always the best location to see a Photoplay.

Mr. Griffith refused to permit his masterpiece to be presented in any censored form. It is known that he informed Mr. Erlanger, of the theatrical syndicate which controls the majority of the playhouses the films are to be shown in, that if necessary he was prepared to omit this country entirely from the exhibition plans. Certainly he would not allow any vital phases of the pictorial recital to be cut. This was the decision in Los Angeles when the authorities began to meddle, but the public response was so tremendous that even the vast capacity of Clune's Auditorium was tested day and night, with no sign of a lesser interest at the end of the second week.

The confidence in the final outcome of the Griffith production is best understood when it is stated that the appropriation for newspaper advertising in Greater New York dailies alone was $25,000. Never in the history of the theater has there been such an advertising campaign. Moreover, the expenditure did not cease when the advance sale indicated that the main object of the publicity was accomplished.

For the first time the New York newspapers had half-page advertisements for three consecutive Sundays. Not one issue, regardless of circulation, was more favored than the other. It was quite the same with the evening newspapers. An idea of the outlay can be formed from the fact that $2,500 was spent in the Evening Journal in three days. The way that Theodore Mitchell, the publicity chief, handled this campaign has amazed theatrical men. One may only conjecture as to the heights a Griffith will now aspire, with the knowledge that even a half million dollars expended on a single effort has been proved to be good business.

When "Cabiria" was first shown in this country the critics were one in expressing a doubt that such a spectacle could be duplicated on this side of the Atlantic, the reviewers holding that only in Italy, with its natural and historic scenic environment, could a "Cabiria" be conceived and executed, which was true only of the basic theme treated. No one can doubt after seeing "The Birth of a Nation" that, even without the aid of the Barkers and Reinhardts, the American producers of Photoplays will be able to vie with the greatest efforts of those who confine their productivity to the spoken play.

Mr. Temple mentioned to the writer the fact that the director is forced often to rise at six a. m. Said he: "I am now fifty-five years old, and there is no inducement of a financial nature that would entice me to undertake tasks requiring such unreasonable hours of activity."

How different are the views of Frederic Thompson, a one-time stage director, now directing for the screen. Said Mr. Thompson: "I hope that I never have to return to a four-walled playhouse, with its limitations and uncertainty. I want to continue to direct under God's blue sky, with all the world for my stage and time without limit wherein to prepare a production."

It is significant, too, that although a few of the more modern type of stage directors have not yet capitulated to the lure of the silent drama, such masters as David Belasco, William Cecil de Mille, Hugh Ford and Lawrence Marston are not only impressed with the newer form of dramatic expression, but it is only a truth to state that Mr. Belasco believes that such of his stage productions as have been so far released by the Lasky Company have been vastly enhanced as shown on the screen.

And when Belasco permitted his pet production, "Madame Butterfly," to be visualized, he was actuated by the belief that its vogue on the screen will eclipse its stage and operatic record immeasurably. For nearly two decades Belasco has refused to allow "Madame Butterfly" to be used for vaudeville or even for dramatic stock purposes. This dramatic gem has lain dormant till now. Many there are who believe that Mr. Lasky will make a fortune with this production. It remains to be seen what an American Photoplay director can do with such a magnificent subject.

One may name at least twenty former stage directors who are now firmly entrenched in film studios, not one of whom ever earned in the older field one-half the emolument that is now meted out to them. Oscar Apfel was a stage director for more than fifteen years, yet he was comparatively unknown until he made the Reliance brand of films famous. If I am not mistaken, Mr. Apfel has not been idle a single week since then. Instead of flitting about from one theatrical company to another, he is now in one city for fifty-two weeks in the year, and his annual income is as large as that of a Cabinet officer.

Hobart Bosworth never indicated during his stage career that he possessed unusual ability as a director,

(Continued on page 32)

Times June 4

D. W. Griffith left for Chicago yesterday. He is bound for California, where he will soon start work on another big motion picture production.

Morning Telegraph June 4, 1915

Griffith Goes West.

D. W. Griffith, who has been in New York for several days completing arrangements for the tours of "The Birth of a Nation," left yesterday for Chicago, en route to California, where he is to begin work on another mammoth picture.

Just before leaving, Mr. Griffith received a full report on the favorable action taken by the newly elected Board of Censors in Boston, which he thinks is certain to put an end to the agitation against his picture in all parts of the country. "The Birth of a Nation" has now passed over every legal barrier placed in its way by the negro intermarriage societies opposed to its presentation in New York, Boston, Los Angeles and San Francisco.

The situation in Boston was unique and threatened the freedom of the stage and the press. Through the presence of negroes who are promoting the intermarriage of blacks and whites, Governor Walsh had a bill rushed through the Legislature about ten days ago creating a Board of Censors to pass upon "The Birth of a Nation," now at the Tremont in Boston. The board consists of Mayor Curley, Commissioner of Police O'Meara and Chief Justice Bolster, of the Municipal Court. After viewing the picture, the board met last Wednesday night, and decided that "The Birth of a Nation" was in no way contrary to good morals, and should not be suppressed.

As a result of the agitation, motion picture interests in Massachusetts are effecting an organization to protect them against unfair legislation and unjust censorship.

Bowles Still at It.

Meanwhile, George Bowles, who doubles as farmer and theatrical magnate, is still in Chicago trying to obtain an opening for "The Birth of a Nation" at the Illinois Theatre. Everybody in that city apparently is in favor of having the picture exhibited except a few narrow-minded officials. Bowles, of course, is terribly chagrined over the ban on the picture, because he took the job of business manager after having learned that a Boston audience had thrown eggs at the screen whereon the picture was being displayed, and with the understanding that he was to have the egg privilege in Chicago. You see, Bowles makes a specialty of eggs on his Connecticut farm, and Chicago seemed to offer him an excellent market.

A lively publicity campaign is being waged in the Chicago newspapers, intended, as Bowles writes, to promote the accouchement of "The Birth of a Nation." Following a private exhibition of the film, many of the local newspapers praised it editorially, and at least one clergyman made a vigorous plea that it be shown publicly because of its educational value.

Mail, June 4, 1915

National Board of Censors Puts O. K. on "Birth of a Nation"

Theodore Mitchell is back from Boston, where he had been in the interests of the film-play, "The Birth of a Nation."

For several weeks, or ever since the picture was first shown there, Mitchell has been maneuvering among the city and state officials in an effort to stem concerted movement to bar the much-discussed photo-play. And now word comes that his efforts have been successful, the board of censorship having finally approved it.

The same elements that incited, of same near inciting, race riots when the picture was first shown here inspired the ill-feeling and agitation against it in Boston, but the result there was far more serious and deep-seated and came close to accomplishing its purpose. Even here the racial influence reached a high state, as on several occasions eggs and rice were thrown on the stage, and the offenders had to be forcibly ejected from the theatre.

Over Legal Barriers.

Now "The Birth of a Nation" has passed over every legal barrier placed in its way by the Afro-American societies opposed to its presentation in New York, Boston, Los Angeles and San Francisco, and has been sustained in every instance, including the sanction of the National Board of Censors.

The board which placed the stamp of official approval on the production in Boston consisted of Chief Justice Bolster, of the Municipal Court; Mayor Curley and Police Commissioner O'Meara, of Boston. Petitions bearing 6,000 names were presented the board against the D. W. Griffith, who has been in New York for several days making arrangements for the tours of his big spectacle, left yesterday for Chicago en route to California, where he begins work on another mammoth picture at the end of this month.

(By Wire.)

If you have seen the great film masterpiece, "The Birth of a Nation," you are familiar with the "swing" of the action. You were held through every foot of the three hours. If you are familiar with the work of Ralph Ince, Herbert Brenon and several other real directors, you will remember their films carry you along with a consistent timing of the action, building to the situations with a sureness which grips, even though the story be simple.

Evening Sun June 4, 1915

Notes of the Stage.

D. W. Griffith left New York yesterday for Chicago, en route to California, where he begins work on another mammoth picture at the end of this month. Before leaving Mr. Griffith received a full report of the favorable action taken by the newly created Board of Censors in Boston, Mass., which is sure to put an end to the agitation against "The Birth of a Nation" in all parts of the country. The big picture spectacle, it is claimed, has now passed over every legal barrier placed in its way by societies opposed to its presentation in New York, Boston, Los Angeles and San Francisco, and has been sustained in every instance, including the sanction of the National Board of Censors.

Commercial June 4, 1915

Globe & Commercial June 4, 1915

BOSTON VICTORY FOR "BIRTH OF A NATION"

D. W. Griffith, who has been in New York for several days making further arrangements for the tours of his big spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," left yesterday for Chicago en route to California, where he begins work on another mammoth picture at the end of this month. Just before leaving Mr. Griffith received a full report of the favorable action taken by the newly created Board of Censors in Boston, Mass., which is sure to put an end to the agitation against the big picture spectacle in all parts of the country.

"The Birth of a Nation" has now passed over every legal barrier placed in its way by those opposed to its presentation in New York, Boston, Los Angeles, and San Francisco, and has been sustained in every instance, including the sanction of the National Board of Censors.

The situation in Boston was unique and threatened the freedom of the stage and the press. Governor Walsh of Massachusetts had a bill rushed through the legislature about ten days ago creating a board of censors to pass upon the big picture now being presented for a run in the Tremont Theatre. This law empowered a majority of the board to suspend or revoke any theatre license at their pleasure. The board consists of Mayor Curley, Commissioner of Police O'Meara and Chief Justice Bolster of the Municipal Court. The political phase of the case lies in the fact that the two last named officers are appointed by the governor. After viewing the picture in an official capacity the board met Wednesday night and by a unanimous vote decided that the picture was in no way contrary to good morals and should not be suppressed.

NEW YORK PRESS

Date JUN 4 1915

D. W. Griffith, who has been in New York making arrangements for the tours of his spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," left yesterday for Chicago and California, where he begins work on another picture the latter part of this month.

Evening Sun June 4, 1915

Notes of the Stage.

D. W. Griffith left New York yesterday for Chicago, en route to California, where he begins work on another mammoth picture at the end of this month. Before leaving Mr. Griffith received a full report of the favorable action taken by the newly created Board of Censors in Boston, Mass., which is sure to put an end to the agitation against "The Birth of a Nation" in all parts of the country. The big picture spectacle, it is claimed, has now passed over every legal barrier placed in its way by societies opposed to its presentation in New York, Boston, Los Angeles and San Francisco, and has been sustained in every instance, including the sanction of the National Board of Censors.

MOTION PICTURE WORLD (N. Y. City)

JUL 3 1915

LETTER FROM PRAIRIE STATES.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

Wisconsin.

MILWAUKEE is the seventh city for a run of David W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation." It will start at the Davidson theater Saturday night, July 3, for an indefinite stay.

CABLE ADDRESS CLIPPING

CLIPPING FROM NEW YORK PRESS

Date JUN 26 1915

warmest admirers, and says, [illegible]

HENRY WALTHALL has left Los Angeles for Chicago, and everyone had to see him off. The week was busy with farewell supper and business calls, and a big deputation was present to see him off at the train. He will be before the public prominently for a long, long time to come, for the release of "The Clansman" will continue for many months, and will be revived every one in a while, and closely associated with the film is the Walthall [illegible] work of Henry Walthall, as the "Little Colonel." He is a big asset to the Mutual people and the General will be a big place by his absence to theirs. Walthall takes the best wishes of everyone in the Los Angeles photoplay colony with him.

Yonkers Herald June 5, 1915

GISTRATE DISMISSES "BIRTH NATION" COMPLAINT.

After the initial presentation in New the Liberty Theatre, of "The Birth of a National Association for the Advance- Colored People, through their attorney, police court summons for Harry E. Griffith, president of the Mutual Film Corporation, producer of the picture. Finally, ing delay, involving some ten adjournments, last week, dismissed the case. Inas- complainants had withdrawn the sum- alleged that the "Nation" picture was nuisance. Several changes made in the ture, it is understood, was the reason ered association's action in withdrawing nt.

Evening Telegram (N.Y.) June 5, 1915

Miriam Cooper "The Birth of a Nation" Liberty

Birth of Nation' Well Into Fourth Month

W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Na- is well into its fourth month at Liberty. This wonderful film series history and romance retains its draw- powers in every essential and con- es to unfold a narrative of thrilling rest touching upon scenes prior to during the Civil war and closing h the exciting moments of the Re- struction days down south. reat battlefields, enormous armies rching to conflict, the daring rides of clansmen and the thousand and one ils of gripping heart interest which rifith has crowded into his story set whole production apart from the rage and make it intensely real and ike.

CABLE ADDRESS CLIPSURV
CLIPPING FROM Cleveland

5-27-

MOTION PICTURE WORLD JUNE 5, 191

Manager Lefebvre of the Or- hevien theaters at New Bedf after a visit to New York, a hat he is making arrangements the Grifith masterpiece, "The Birth Nation" for this city.

N.Y. World June 5, 1915

D. W. Griffith's wonderful spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," is well into its fourth month at the Liberty. This wonderful film series of history and romance retains its original drawing powers.

LILLIAN GISH IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" LIBERTY THEATRE.

BROOKLYN, (N. Y.) TIMES

JUN 5 1915

MANHATTAN AMUSEMENTS

"The Birth of a Nation."

D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation" is well into its fourth month at the Liberty. This film series of history and romance retains its drawing powers in every essential and continues to unfold a narrative of thrilling interest touching upon scenes prior to and during the Civil War and closing with the exciting moments of the Reconstruction days. Great battlefields, enormous armies marching to conflict, the daring rides of the Clansmen and the thousand and one details of gripping heart interest which Griffith has crowded into his story set the whole production above the average.

CABLE ADDRESS CLIPSURO
CLIPPING FROM Journal Milwaukee Wis
5-2-15

MAE MARSH
MUTUAL PHOTOPLAY STAR

Mae Marsh, whose spectacular rise to the head of the ranks of motion picture actresses is generally attributed to the training of D. W. Griffith, is possessed of natural capacities of a pre-eminent order, according to Mr. Griffith himself.

"If I have done anything," the great director says, "I have shown this remarkable girl how to get the best out of the unusual talent which is hers. Today she is, perhaps, the best we have. But she owes her success to [illegible]

Escape. Her two recent appearances in the Mutual masterpictures, The Outcast, by Thomas Nelson Page, and The Outlaw's Revenge in the Birth of a New Republic, as well as the electric performance she gave on the film in The Birth of a Nation, have established her fame securely. To those who remember her as an awkward school girl who followed her sister to the studio two years ago, the transformation seems almost impossible. Under the tight-coiled hair, D. W. Griffith, however, saw what is now [illegible] to be the most perfectly [illegible] head in motion pictures. She [illegible] a stage from childhood. For [illegible] was easy.

Sun. (N.Y.) June 5, 1915

LIBERTY—D. W. Griffith's wonderful spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," is well into its fourth month at this theatre, [illegible] the biggest attractions of the season. This wonderful film series of history and romance retains its drawing powers in every essential and continues to unfold a narrative of thrilling interest touching upon scenes prior to and during the Civil War and closing with the exciting moments of the reconstruction days down South.

Times. Trenton (N.J.) June 5, 1915

David W. Griffith and Thomas Dixon have decided to join forces in the official novelization of "The Birth of a Nation" film spectacle now running at the Liberty Theatre, New York. Although the story of the play is based on the Dixon books, Mr. Griffith invented about 60 per cent. of the action. The book will be prepared in several languages and issued next March.

Fifteenth Week of The Clansman Demanded

A critic said of The Clansman: "Nothing more impressive, more dramatic, more multitudinous, more stupendous, more daring has been seen on the screen. It is the last word in pictures." For fourteen weeks this statement has been echoed by 300,000 people who have viewed this marvelous picture at Clune's Auditorium theater. That the great demand necessitates the opening of the fifteenth week on Monday is substantial proof of this. Indeed, there are those who have reviewed The Clansman the fourth and fifth time. It seems to many spectators that they are witnessing the actual events, so real do they appear on the screen.

The great love of Lincoln for his fellow men of both the North and the South is apparent all through the terrible events of the Civil war and that trying period which followed, the reconstruction. His great efforts in behalf of humanity are portrayed, and no one can view The Clansman without having a better and more intelligent idea of the great work of the martyr president.

Birth of a Nation Still Draws Big Crowds

D. W. Griffith's wonderful spectacle "The Birth of a Nation," is well into its fourth month at the Liberty, where it remains the biggest attraction of the season. This wonderful film series of history and romance retains its drawing powers in every essential and continues to unfold a narrative of thrilling interest touching upon scenes prior to and during the Civil War, and closing with the exciting moments of the reconstruction days in the South.

Great battlefields, enormous armies marching to conflict, the daring rides of the Clansman and the thousand and one details of gripping heart interest which Griffith has crowded into his story set the whole production apart from the average and make it intensely real and life-like.

Telegraph. June 5

SPECTACLE THAT APPEALS.

"Birth of a Nation" Big Feature at Liberty Theatre.

Having passed its 200th performance, D. W. Griffith's great spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Liberty Theatre has succeeded in setting up a record for the first two-dollar motion picture production which will likely stand for a long time.

This intensely interesting drama of history and romance has been the sensational success of the year. Special arrangements have been made to continue the [illegible] the Summer season.

Herald. San Jose. Cal. 6-13-15

Return of "The Clansman" to Victory Thursday, June 17.

The travail of a nation's creation, the stress of its growth, the assumption of its majority in its plentitude of beneficent power is portrayed in all emotion stirring detail, is impressed on the mind as could be done by no history, by Mr. D. W. Griffith's photodrama, "The Clansman, or the Birth of a Nation," based on Thomas Dixon's novel, "The Clansman, or the Birth of a Nation," which comes to the Victory for four days, commencing Thursday afternoon, June 17.

Men have written vivid histories; Gibbon's Rome, Macauley's England, Carlyle's French Revolution.

But Mr. Griffith has photographed history—our own history—has placed before our eyes not only the incident potent with greatness of event, but mingled these with a lovely romance, with the drama of the individual American, both of the North and the South; the loved martyred president is shown placing his signature to documents that means the woes of countless thousands and the weal of more countless myriads to come; the mind is exalted by the intimate view of a transcendent event; then will come a scene of the universal power of romance, of love, in which the camera lens sings a pervasive lyric of humanity's primal impulse which casts blazing rays of illumination on statecraft, warcraft and the two peoples once divided by the stroke of the sword and now indissolubly blended by affection for the one flag.

Mr. Griffith has photographed an epic.

What Homer did for the Trojans and the Greeks, it has been held that Mr. Griffith has done for the people of the north and the south.

Our civil war was devoid of any Helen; it had no demigod accessory characters, but it was the most appalling beautiful epic ever wrought, for it had for its theme the greatest principle struggled for by the greatest people known to the records of the world

Helen was the most beautiful and most charming woman in all time; but Liberty was the heroine of the civil war, the personification of the most cherished desire of all mankind from the beginning of time, as it will be to the end of everything.

This drama is a trilogy of convulsing periods of time that immediately preceded the war, which includes the election of Lincoln, the despair of the south, the beginning of the hostilities, the stripping for the fight.

This is shown with such vivid fact that the picture must be forever engraved on the memory of all beholders.

It shows President Lincoln surrounded by his cabinet discussing and then signing the first call for volunteers. Then comes the second period, that of the war.

This is perhaps the greatest peace-making episode of the times, for it does not describe the horrors of combat, it does not argue with statistics and economic facts—it shows you actual horrible war; it shows what to the eye is actual slaughter; the devastation of ruthless dissolution of civilization in a way that forces the beholder to become a disciple of valiant peace.

The third epoch portrayed is that of "reconstruction" and its throes of agony. Happily there is no longer resort in the north to prejudiced accounts of what happened to the south under the revengeful radical rule which followed Lincoln's almost divine generosity and love to the defeated opponents of the Union.

These picture acts of the drama show relentlessly but without prejudice the fearful visitation the wrecked south had to endure. It is portrayed with evident impartiality, but with a sombre implacable fidelity that places it all far above the petty reach of traditional prejudices or survivals of "race prejudices" not based on race reason.

For the first time in a potent way these and the preceding facts are presented without northern prejudice or southern exultation; but it is all eminently fair to southern beliefs and traditions which adds greatly to the educational value of the drama.

As a finale to the third era comes an allegorical scene, the Prince of Peace blessing a united and reconciled nation which in its rare symbolism maintains the keynote of a freed grandeur to which Mr. Griffith has attained his masterpiece.

The acting is all beyond fault-[illegible] imagination, it [illegible]

Lillian Gish (to right) in "The Birth of a Nation."

Liberty Theatre

Photo, Witte.

MAE MARSH IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" LIBERTY THEATRE

D. W. Griffith's wonderful spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," is well into its fourth month at the Liberty. This wonderful film series of history and romance retains its drawing powers in every essential and continues to unfold a narrative of thrilling interest touching upon scenes prior to and during the Civil War and closing with the exciting moments of the reconstruction days down South. Great battlefields, enormous armies marching to conflict, the daring rides of the clansmen and the thousand and one details of gripping heart interest which Griffith has crowded into his story set the whole production apart from the average and make it intensely real and lifelike.

Press (N. Y.)

LIBERTY

D. W. Griffith's [illegible] of a Nation" is [illegible] month in the Liberty [illegible] series of [illegible] drawing powers [illegible] a narrative of [illegible] upon scenes prior to [illegible] War, and closing with [illegible] ments of the reconstruction days down South. Great battlefields, enormous armies marching to conflict, the daring rides of the Clansmen and the thousand and one details of the many features of the remarkable film.

American June 6

Miss Lillian Gish Refuses Offer

MISS LILLIAN GISH, who [illegible] in "The Birth of a Nation," "Enoch Arden" and other quality films, recently refused an offer of $35,000 a year to leave D. W. Griffith and work for a rival director. Her example should be appreciated and followed by other stars, for the theatrical world is full of actors and actresses, particularly motion picture actors and actresses, who deemed themselves more important than their stage [illegible] with lamentable results. For [illegible] Pickford who [illegible] under [illegible] new management, there are many and hundreds that fell [illegible] changed environment.

N. Y. Herald June 6.

Miss LILLIAN GISH in "The BIRTH of a NATION" LIBERTY THEATRE

Times N.Y. June 6

A Case of Mistaken Idolatry.

HENRY WALTHALL, who plays the young hero of "The Birth of a Nation," is the nearest approach to a hero that this particular story has. It is a true story, and concerns the 14-year-old daughter of a New York family who is quite, quite mad about the movies. She can name the films in which any camera actor of note has ever played, and she had been to the huge film at the Liberty just eleven times at the last count. Her extreme admiration for the actor playing the "little colonel" led her finally to a photographer to buy his picture. Thereafter her purchase adorned her dressing table, where it could be eyed fondly whenever convenient. Her family bore this in silence, but there was a good deal of laughing up the sleeves when the photograph suddenly vanished. The little maid had discovered that the treasured picture was not one of Henry Walthall at all. That mean photographer had palmed off on her a picture of some one else. For days she had been gazing rapturously at an off-stage likeness of Charlie Chaplin.

World (N. Y.) June 6, 1915

Next to Charles Dillingham comes D. W. Griffith, whose motion picture production of "The Birth of a Nation" has proved such a sensation. By leasing the Liberty Theatre outright Griffith is keeping all the profits to himself. He was anxious to put the picture in the theatre on the usual percentage basis, but Messrs. Klaw & Erlanger refused, thinking that it would not attract patronage at two dollar prices. Their decision made Griffith one of the big winners of the year.

"The Birth of a Nation" has played to more than $10,000 weekly since February and its expenses, including the lease of the theatre, orchestra and advertising are less than half that sum. The picture is also being shown in Chicago, San Francisco and Boston in first class playhouses, which have also been leased outright by the producer, and as the receipts in these cities are averaging the same as in New York, it will be seen that Griffith is piling up a weekly profit of approximately $20,000.

Until he tempted fate by asking Broadway prices for "The Birth of a Nation" no one believed that the theatregoing public would pay two dollars to see a moving picture. He played the game and won.

NEW YORK TRIBUNE

FEATURE FILMS.

D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation" is well into its fourth month at the Liberty. This film retains its drawing powers and continues to unfold a narrative of interest touching upon scenes prior to and during the Civil War and closing with the moments of the Reconstruction days.

BROOKLYN (N. Y.) EAGLE

June 6, 1915

LIBERTY STILL CROWDED.

D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," is well into its fourth month at the Liberty, where it remains the biggest attraction of the season. This film series of history and romance retains its drawing powers in every essential and continues to unfold a narrative of interest touching upon scenes prior to and during the Civil War and closing with the exciting moments of Reconstruction days. Great battlefields, armies marching to conflict, daring rides of the Clansmen and the thousand and one details of interest which Griffith has crowded into his story make it intensely real and lifelike.

Brooklyn, (N. Y.) Standard-Union

Date ..... JUN 6 1915

NEW YORK TELEGRAM

Date ..... JUN 6 -

Manhattan Theatres

LIBERTY.—D. W. Griffith's [illegible] "The Birth of a Nation" [illegible] fourth month in the Liberty. This wonderful film series of history and romance retains its drawing powers in every essential and continues to unfold a narrative of thrilling interest touching upon scenes prior to and during the Civil War and closing with the exciting moments of the reconstruction days down South. Great battlefields, enormous armies marching to conflict, the daring rides of the clansmen and the thousand and one details of gripping heart-interest which Griffith has crowded into his story set the whole production apart from the average and make it intensely real and life-like.

SAN ANTONIO (TEX.) LIGHT

JUNE 6, 1915

D. W. Griffith's famous film spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," has been seen by nearly [illegible]00,000 Americans in five different cities since it was originally brought out in [illegible]. In Los Angeles 300,000 people saw the picture during its run of fifteen weeks. In New York [illegible] five weeks 250,000 attendants visited the Liberty Theatre. In [illegible] 75,000 playgoers have seen it and in San Francisco [illegible] Oakland, Cal., another [illegible] has seen by 125,000 people.

MAE MARSH "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" LIBERTY THEATRE

D. W. Griffith's wonderful spectacle "The Birth of a Nation" is in its fourth month at the Liberty. This wonderful film series of history and romance retains its drawing powers in every essential and continues to unfold a narrative of thrilling interest touching upon scenes prior to and during the civil war, and closing with the exciting moments of the reconstruction days down South.

LOS ANGELES (Cal.) TIMES

JUNE 6, 1915

Clune's Auditorium

"The fifteenth week of [illegible] man" will open tomorrow night at Clune's Auditorium. The Griffith [illegible] continues to draw large [illegible]

MOTION PICTURE WORLD (N. Y. City)

JUL 3 1915

Dr. H. S. Clemmer announces that he will run "The Birth of A Nation" in the new Clemmer theater early in August and that it will also be run in the Seattle house in which he is interested. The prices will probably range from 75 cents to $1 here.

ART OF THE MOVE

...ERY MACMAHON.

...k of adequate interpreta- ... and criticism must astan- ... the Martian or other visitor ...g to these shores and ...redominant position rapidly ...th the amusement world by ...pictures. The cinema is a ...far growed." There are no ...e art, no rules of criticism, ...t body of opinion, and no ...n anything except that D. ... as a producer is the "best ... his film "The Birth of a ... by far the greatest motion ...k yet put forward.

...l interest being in that film, ...n pains to collate the ex- ...oncerning it by such "old- ...l leaders as Metcalfe, Eaton, ...t. Not one offers any com- ...analysis of the new art. Not ... any constructive suggestion ... future. Walter Prichard ...ting in The Boston Tran- ...ch 31, is singularly obtuse to ...ities of the new art.

...sumption," he says, "that ...back to what amounts to sign ...t this stage of civilization is ... most touchingly naive ex- ...motion-picture makers' era-

...ut the "sign language" of ...? The "sign language" of ... The "sign language" of ... Mr. Eaton's choice of a sneer ...tion picture art seems singu- ...tunate. For the function of ...o touch the emotions ideally, ...ers not whether the "signs" ...e words or tones or carvings ...s or mere facial and bodily ...nd expressions.

...eems to have sensed the fact ...new art is symbolistic. Mr. ...cules the throw-back and the ...us action, while Mr. Metcalfe ...jects to "the constant shift- ...nes, the intrusion of things ...et essential, the prolongation ...tion of the same actions." ...due respect to these eminent ... the fact must be stated that ... talking in terms of their old ... indoor drama." The technique ...otion picture is closer kin to ... frequent recurrence of paral- ... is both agreeable and neces- ... the "constant shifting of ...instead of being a blemish, is ... virtue of this new dramatic- ...otographic form, which is ...acterized as "art by lightning

...ttle series of pictures, contin- ... four to fifteen seconds, sym- ... sentiment, a passion, or an ... Each successive series, simi- ...fferent, carries the emotion to ... higher power, till at last, ...h of the parallel emotions have ... the nth power, so to speak, ...t in the final swift shock of ...d defeat.

... of pictures HAS to be swiftly ... The picturemaker HAS to use ...r of suggestion rather than the ... of logic. The environment ...unts for more than the act. ...on of the "removed fourth ... the staged drama is gone for- ...d the position of the motion- ...pectator is that of one who ... of doors from an open window ... whole of Life spread as on a ..., seeing swiftly, understanding ... because the eye is so much ...and more understanding than

...tions for the improvement of a ...atic vehicle are always wel- ...Mr. Eaton, in his Transcript ar- ...mplains of "amateur kodak- ...las! there is too much of that ...re. But so there is likewise ... of amateur English and ama- ...ma. There is ugly sculpture and ...tched painting; discordant, un- ...ous music; and (whisper it in ...nce of the High Priest of the ...rt!) "legitimate" staging ga- ...t grossly offends both eye and ...here in the Older Art is there ...tive reverence for beauty that ...ited in the making of a great ...for example, "The Birth of a ... wherein Mr. Griffith took ...set of pictures to cull out 12,000 ...s than one-tenth) for public ...ould David Belasco build and ...en times as many stage scenes ...anted?

...nt is that the efforts at criti- ... neither truly analytical nor ...tive. They do not lead any- ...or show the direction the next ...p forward will take. Often they ...the New Art or deliberately ig- ... finest phases. Thus we are ... one prominent New York re- ...that youth, beauty, and facial ...veness are the sole requisites ...eat motion picture actress—in ...ords, it's not art at all, but ... trick imparted to a bright girl by a clever director. ... reviewer ever studied the career and achievements of Mae Marsh? If he had, he would have found genius in the film as well as in his Old Art.

In general, the most learned critics of the pictures seem to be as far behind the art-form they are criticising as the Edinburgh Reviewers were hopelessly to the rear of Wordsworth, Shelley, Keats, Coleridge, and Byron, whom they vainly attempted to extinguish whilst upholding the time-worn art of Dryden and Pope. There are honorable exceptions, however. Let me quote from two of them. James Shelley Hamilton in the current Everybody's says:

"People who call movies a cheap and inferior substitute for the spoken play base their opinion on pictures that are made in imitation of the spoken play. Griffith * * * saw that the story must be told wholly by action, that the introduction of long, explanatory subtitles was just as awkward a method of construction as it would be in a spoken play if each character were to advance to the footlights and explain to the audience who he was and how he came to be there. He saw that past action had to be presented visually, and that often it had to be recalled to the audience to give point to the present action; so he invented the 'flash-back,' which is a view of a past or distant scene, inserted almost as an illustration is inserted in a story. To give emphasis to a particular character, a face, or an important bit of stage property, he invented the 'close-up.' * * * He introduced, too, the device of simultaneous action, the method by which the last part of 'The Birth of a Nation' is made so exciting. * * * All of Griffith's pictures have excelled in some particular respect, and they have all been different. But Griffith is not the only man who is doing good things in motion pictures. Directors who make artistic productions are multiplying rapidly."

Lastly, as to the position and future of the film art, let us hear from The New York Independent reviewer, Dr. E. E. Slosson, whose technical insight is entirely and rightly unswayed by the fact that he is a bitter opponent of "The Birth of a Nation" on social grounds:

"The film play, compared with its rival, the stage play, has certain serious defects, notably the absence of sound and color. But on the other hand it has certain compensating qualities of its own and producers are very wisely laying more stress on these instead of imitating what the stage can always do better. For instance, the film playwright can use all outdoors for his background instead of a painted and rumpled back drop. He can change the scene oftener than the Elizabethan dramatist. He can dip into the future or the past as though he were in Wells's time-machine. He can use literally an army of supernumeraries in place of a dozen attendants with spears. He can reveal the mind of his characters in two ways, neither of them possible on the stage, first by bringing the actor so close that the spectator can read his facial expression, and second, by visualizing his memories or imaginings. He can, if he so desires, wreck a train, burn a house, sink a ship, or blow up a fort, since he does not have to repeat the expense every night. It is natural that the new art should tend to run to excess in those things which it can do best. The film artist is so tickled at the idea that he can portray motion that he is apt to put in too much motion. * * * But these are the inevitable extravagances of youth and are already being eliminated in the best of the feature films. The motion picture has established itself, and in some form or other will become a permanent part of the intellectual and aesthetic life of the nation."

...ing in still holding forth, they have been doing a little tabulating on the side. They have figured out a conservative estimate that there are nearly 80,000 deaf and dumb residents of Greater New York. 4,000 deafs and mutes have seen the picture spectacle at the Liberty Theatre, as they are great patrons of the silent screen drama. Over 280,000 people have seen the picture since the run began. This means that out of every seventy one deaf or mute is included in the audience. The average is therefore about thirteen to the thousand.

World (N.Y.) June 7,

Over 4,000 deaf and dumb persons have seen "The Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty.

DEAF MUTES SEE FILM.

The management of the Liberty Theatre, where "The Birth of a Nation" film is being shown, has taken up the census fad. It estimates that out of the 28,000 people who have seen the picture here, 4,000 have been deaf and dumb. By its own brand of logic, the management proves that there are 80,000 deaf and dumb residents of Greater New York by reducing the one deaf and dumb man in each 70 persons who have seen the picture to a ratio of thirteen per thousand.

LOS ANGELES (Cal.) TIMES
JUNE 6, 1915

...ing in still holding forth, they have been doing a little tabulating on the side. They have figured out a conservative estimate that there are nearly 80,000 deaf and dumb residents of Greater New York. 4,000 deafs and mutes have seen the picture spectacle at the Liberty Theatre, as they are great patrons of the silent screen drama. Over 280,000 people have seen the picture since the run began. This means that out of every seventy one deaf or mute is included in the audience. The average is therefore about thirteen to the thousand.

...Liberty Theatre, where "The Birth of a Nation" is still holding forth, have been doing a little tabulating on the side. They have figured out a conservative estimate that there are nearly 80,000 deaf and dumb residents of Greater New York. Four thousand deaf-mutes have seen the picture spectacle at the Liberty Theatre since the run began, over 4,000 have been deaf and dumb, many of those thus afflicted having become great patrons of the film plays.

BROOKLYN, (N. Y.) CITIZEN
JUN 7 1915

Date .....

...however, for some ... to venture in.

THE CITY'S DEAF AND DUMB.

While the New York census is being taken the attaches of the Liberty Theatre, where "The Birth of a Nation" is still holding forth, have ben doing a little tabulating on the side. They have figured out a conservative estimate that there are nearly 80,000 deaf and dumb residents of Greater New York. Four thousand deafs and mutes have seen the picture spectacle at the Liberty Theatre as they are great patrons of the silent screen drama. Over 280,000 people have seen the picture since the run began. This means that out of every seventy one deaf mute is included in the audience. The average is, therefore, about thirteen to the thousand. This ratio to the total population of Greater New York shows approximately 80,000 deaf and dumb citizens of the city.

...While the New York census is being taken the attaches of the Liberty Theatre, where "The Birth of a Nation" is still holding forth, have been doing a little tabulating on the side. They have figured out a conservative estimate that there are nearly 80,000 deaf and dumb residents of Greater New York. Four thousand deaf-mutes have seen the picture spectacle at the Liberty as they are great patrons of the silent screen drama. Over 280,000 people have seen the picture since the run began. This means that out of every seventy one deaf or mute is included in the audience. The average is therefore about thirteen to the thousand. This ratio to the total population of Greater New York shows approximately 80,000 deaf and dumb citizens of the city.

Union. Sacramento. Cal. June. 6, 1915

CLANSMAN OPENS SECOND WEEK HERE

Mammoth Film Production at the Clunie Theater Inspires Audiences to Applause.

"The Clansman, or the Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's spectacular drama in 12 reels, conceded to be the world's greatest motion picture production, continues to draw capacity houses at the Clunie theater, where it is being shown twice daily.

For almost three hours the audience sits enthralled as page after page of the most potent events in the history of the American nation, intertwined with a double romance that in point of its dramatic interest rivals that of the immortal story of Romeo and Juliet, is unfolded through the medium of the motion picture screen.

It is seldom that an audience applauds a motion picture, but so saturated with drama, romance, history and comedy is this half-million dollar film that time after time the audience applauds and cheers different features of the production.

Among the many features in "The Clansman" are the siege before Petersburg, Sherman's historical march to the sea, Lee's surrender to Grant, the assination of President Lincoln by Booth, the rise in power of Thaddeus Stevens, the great commoner, the organization and rides of the famous Ku Klux Klan and the problems that confronted the South during the reconstruction period. The spectacular riding of the Ku Klux Klan proves of great interest.

The specially arranged musical program of old Southern airs arranged for the picture by Lloyd Brown and old Southern songs rendered by the large chorus blend harmoniously with the showing of the film. "The Clansman will start on its second and big week Monday with matinees being held daily.

Miriam Cooper in The Clansman, Clunes Auditorium

Herald. San Jose. Cal. June 6, 1915

"The Clansman" Soon to Return to the Victory

The management of the Victory theatre announces that D. W. Griffiths, the famous 12-reel masterpiece, "The Clansman" will return to San Jose soon.

This wonderful picture, showing the period of American history immediately preceding the civil war, the horrors of the war itself, and the reconstruction period following, has created a furore wherever it has been exhibited, and popular demand has prompted the Victory theatre management in arranging for a return engagement.

Mirror. Los Angeles Cal. 6-6-15

PORTLAND ...

"BIRTH OF A NATION" WINS

Chicago, June 6—Producers of "The Birth of a Nation" today won their long fight for the right to have the pictures exhibited in Chicago theatres when Judge Cooper issued an injunction enjoining the city from interfering with the production. The court's ruling ended the action of Mayor Thompson in refusing a permit.

...g Chicago negroes severely ... not only the photoplay, but ... novel, "The Clansman," on ... founded.

SACRAMENTO DAILY ...
JUNE 8, 1915

Griffith's Pictures Resume at the Clunie

At the matinee to-day the D. W. Griffith's pictures, "The Clansman, or the Birth of a Nation" ...med a run at the Clunie and will continue without further interruption afternoons and evenings to and including Sunday night.

These pictures show the adaptation to screen reproduction of Thomas Dixon's novel of the same name founded on the stirring incidents during the Civil War and the period of reconstruction following.

MOTION PICTURE WORLD (N. Y. City)
JUL 3 1915

"BIRTH OF A NATION" SOUVENIR.

...t the Liberty theater, New York City, on June 10, beauti- ... souvenirs were distributed commemorating the two hun- ...dth performance of the Griffith spectacle, "The Birth of a ...ion." The souvenir was in the shape of a de luxe pro- ...n bound in vellum, stamped with green and gold. The ...ntispiece is a good likeness of the producer, David Grif- ... which, like the other illustrations in the program, has ...ne like the old time wood cut. After an interesting in- ...duction, the story of the film is told, with the Stars and ...pes in red, white and blue, forming a beautiful initial ...r a half page deep. The workmanship is high class ... was turned out by the Epoch Producing Corporation.

FRANKFORT (Ind.) GAZETTE
MAY 23, 1915

THE FEARLESS MRS. MAYOR.

Among those who favored the presentation of "The Birth of a Nation" in Chicago, prior to the ... Mayor Thompson issued his edict barring it, was Mrs. Carter Henry Harrison, wife of the former mayor of Chicago, who had advised her husband to issue a license authorizing its production. Mayor Thompson, however, refuses to give it his official sanction—a fact that brings ... more convincingly than ever the broad mindedness of the distinguished ...

"The Birth of a Nation" is approaching its fourth month at the Liberty theatre.

D. W. Griffith's wonderful spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," is well into its fourth month at the Liberty.

This wonderful film series of history and romance retains its drawing powers in every essential and continues to unfold a narrative of thrilling interest touching upon scenes prior to and during the Civil War.

JUNE 7, 1915
INDIANAPOLIS (Ind.) NEWS

AS TO CENSORSHIP

On Saturday last Judge Cooper, of the Chicago superior court, enjoined the police from interfering with the production of the great moving picture spectacle entitled "The Birth of a Nation." The question is [redacted] and affidavits of the police censors are to be presented to the court tomorrow for the purpose of getting a reversal. It is announced further that the case will be appealed.

Nevertheless, there are many people who will think that Judge Cooper's ruling is very sensible. The objections to the performance seem to be that it is false historically, that it is insulting to the negro race, and that it tends to stir up race hatred. But for the publicity that the play has had there would not have been the slightest danger of stirring up race hatred. If every play were forbidden that was false historically there would be a sad shrinkage in the number of plays. As for reflecting on the negro race, no race can be injured by what certain members of it may or may not have done a half century ago—can not suffer even from actual contemporary misrepresentation as long as it shows itself worthy of respect and confidence, as the negro race in this country has done. On this point Judge Cooper says:

Any race or nationality so offended can best give the lie to the bad characters so presented by continuing to conduct themselves as law-abiding citizens who do not expect greater rights under the law than it allows all other men or nationalities.

There must, of course, be some censorship, and even censorship by the police of stage productions. But there is an unmistakable tendency to extend the principle too far. We are asking for a much closer censorship of the mails, and this in spite of the fact that the regulations are already rigid. There are continual efforts to curtail the freedom of the press. Whatever we do not like, that we seek to suppress or abolish. As far as history is concerned, there is no historical play that is not false, in the opinion of some people. The best opinion is that Shakespeare was grossly unfair to the Yorkists. As to race sensitiveness, that is something that people should try to get over. If public opinion pays overmuch attention to it, the country will be all the while in trouble. We need hardly say that we have a poor opinion of the books of the Rev. Thomas Dixon, of one of which "The Birth of a Nation" is a dramatization. His reading of our history is, as we think, utterly false. But our New England friends, who have stirred up such a tempest over this play, must know that "Uncle Tom's Cabin" might be fairly criticised as reflecting on the southern people because of the vile slaveholder who figures in it. In such cases there is always danger of creating a precedent that may prove exceedingly embarrassing.

We also need to be a little cautious in this matter of censorship. A wise man once said that no man can ever be written down except by himself. The same thing is true of races. In a playlet recently produced in this city a Union officer was represented as a beast. No one imagined that there was any reflection on the Union army as a whole. We can not have forgotten the foolish fuss that was kicked up in this country a few years ago over the Irish Players. And there have been people—few in number, it is true—who felt that "The Merchant of Venice" should be banished from the stage because it "reflected" on the Jews. There are many foolish things—and occasionally some wicked ones—done in the name of liberty, but nevertheless liberty [redacted]

SAN JOSE (Cal.) MERCURY-HERALD
JUNE 20, 1915

WALTHALL IS EPOCH MAKING MASTERPIECE

The reputation built upon his appealing work in the wonderful Griffith picture, "The Birth of a Nation," is as nothing to the [redacted] come home to rest upon the shoulders of Henry B. Walthall as soon as the general public has seen his masterly, soul tearing performance as Oswald in "Ghosts," the five-part Mutual Masterpicture founded on Ibsen's play and declared by a prominent clergyman to be the greatest exhortation ever delivered against vice. The fact that this picture is said to mark an epoch in the motion art and to have registered the accomplishment of the impossible is, in part, a tribute to the illuminating power of Mr. Walthall's acting.

"Ghosts" will be shown at the Empress theatre today, one day only.

HENRY WALTHALL IN "GHOSTS"

HARTFORD (Conn.) TIMES
JUNE 9, 1915

BUILD AND BURN CITY FOR MOVIES.

D. W. Griffith Tells of Hundreds of Work—Only One-Twelfth of Original Work Is Worth While.

STAGING A BATTLE FROM CONNING TOWER.

Soldiers in Marches and Mimic Fights—Is Man Who Made "The Birth of a Nation."

D. W. Griffith, who wrote and staged "The Birth of a Nation," the famous motion play now being viewed throughout the country in the principal cities, tells something of his methods of work and especially as to how he achieves results in "filming" a play. He says of his work in the Boston Transcript:

My method of composition has been to invent, originate, and reshape for myself after I have grasped the outline of a plot. I do not know to-day which scene I shall stage tomorrow. I may tear out bodily what the author considers his biggest scenes and substitute something of my own which I consider more suitable for filming. The only logic to be observed is that as many scenes as possible are to be staged first in studio.

All film work is divided into studio-taking and location-taking. The studio-taking naturally comes first, for both organization and equipment are right at hand. It was not always the case, however, with "The Birth of a Nation." In reproducing the scene of the shooting of President Lincoln by the assassin Wilkes Booth, April 14, 1865, an entire Ford's theater replica had to be built and added to our equipment. The assembly hall of the legislature of South Carolina in 1871 was another specially constructed building, and in staging the scenes in Piedmont, S. C., an entire village of old-fashioned colonial houses had to be set up. But ours is a roomy enclosure, a great yard or compound surrounding the main studio at Los Angeles, and we had no trouble in building more and more as our indoor and smaller outdoor scenes grew to completion. It may not even surprise you to know that on one side of the studio lot, a rather hilly place, there was constructed a runway down which the shorter runs (the so-called "dashes") of the Ku Klux were enacted.

Locating War.

But the work of the historical drama which goes in for depiction of battlefields must be done far from cities and the usual haunts of men. On holidays and Sundays, when my studio staff had their times off, I would look up locations. Though locations in the technical language of the craft, they were really sites for military camps and historic battlegrounds that I was seeking. I found one such wonderful site in Bear Valley. Down the length of it I could see in fancy, Sherman's legions marching to the sea; across its upper width were as plainly discernible to the practiced eye the larger natural features of the Siege of Petersburg. Thither I sent my sappers and miners, ditch-diggers, camp-makers, engineers and landscape reconstructors. A small army of people were soon getting the great location into shape. Then I communicated with the chief officers of the California National Guard, who willingly assented to my plan. This was in brief to hire whole regiments of the Guard, under their own commanders, and take them for a month's marching and mimic fighting down into Bear Valley. Each soldier was to receive $5 a day for his camera work. This, with the commissary and other fixed expenses, made the cost seem almost staggering; but on the other hand, I was to get regular war, waged by actual soldiers and under conditions that perfectly reproduced the Civil War operations of fifty years ago.

Running Movie Battle.

The plan worked like a charm. I owe the artistically happy (though actually gruesome) result to the splendid enthusiastic service of those California guardsmen, to co-operation of war veterans and West Point experts who aided me, and to the painstaking use of all the devices of the latest science such as the field-telephone, etc. It was hard, gruelling work, directing these operations from a high tower by field-wires, wigwaggery and megaphone, virtually running both sides of the battle, typifying General Grant to one set of combatants and General Lee to the other.

Another important part of outdoor work was the getting of the longer Ku Klux rides. The Ku Klux Klansmen were the midnight scourge of the south. Many a story as startling as Maseppa's is told of them. The nature of the picture demanded that their wild rides be graphically [illegible]

BROOKLYN, (N. Y.) CITIZEN
June 9, 1915

MANHATTAN ATTRACTION

With the matinee at the Liberty theatre this afternoon W. D. Griffith's film spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," celebrates its two hundredth performance in New York City. The run began on March 3 and has continued twice daily since. In this time it is figured that approximately 285,000 theatregoers have seen the big pictures in this city. As this is the first time on record that a motion picture production was ever presented at the regular scale of two-dollar prices which prevails in the metropolitan theatres, the record is the most unusual.

BANGOR (Me.) NEWS
JUNE 9, 1915

JUNE 10, 1915
LOS ANGELES (Cal.) TIMES

BROOKLYN, (N. Y.) [illegible]
June 9, 1915

N. Y. Commercial
June 9, 1915

With the matinee at the Liberty Theatre this afternoon, D. W. Griffith's film spectacle "The Birth of a Nation" celebrates its 200th performance in New York. The run began on March 3rd and has continued twice daily since. In this time it is figured that approximately 285,000 threatregoers have seen the big pictures in this city.

Press. (N. Y.) June 9.

200th presentation of "The Birth Nation" in the Liberty Theatre take place this afternoon. Since n began on March 3 it is estithat approximately 285,000 peoe seen the picture.

Telegraph. June 9.

Griffith also is pleased to note ternoon "The Birth of a Natitain its second century mark Mistry. During this period Thehill, who is Mr. Griffith's exatician, estimates that 285have seen the picture. In it must be recalled that wo-dollar scale of prices Liberty.

June 9, 1915

Birth of a Nation" celebrates its formance to-night at the Libtre.

N. Y. Evening Journal
June 9, 1915

"Birth of a Nation" on 200th Performance

With the matinee at the Liberty Theatre this afternoon, D. W. Griffith's film spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," celebrates its two hundredth performance in New York City. The run began on March 3 and has continued twice daily since. In this time it is figured that approximately 285,000 theatregoers have seen the big picture in this city.

As this is the first time on record that a motion picture production was ever presented at the regular scale of prices which prevails in the metropolitan theatres, the record is the more unusual.

Times June 9, 1915

"The Birth of a Nation," which was first shown at the Liberty on March 3, will reach its two hundredth performance this afternoon.

MANCHESTER

It is probable that an attempt to secure "The Birth of a Nation" film, which caused such an uproar in Boston, to be shown in Manchester, will be made by local theatre managers as soon as the feature closes in the Hub. This photo-play has been perhaps one of the most talked-of that has ever struck New England.

MOTION PICTURE WORLD (N. Y. City)

" has been closed at Clune's auditorium, ted steadily for sixteen weeks, cre- s expected to stand for some time. ked one and will be followed by an-

NE, 1915 — The TELEPHONE REVIEW

Making "Movies" by Telephone

D. W. Griffith Used the Instrument in Producing the Photo Drama "The Birth of a Nation" to Direct the Movements of 12,000 Men Over Twelve Square Miles of Civil War Battle Ground

By A. B. Stearns, Copywriter, Advertising Department

"CAMERA two!"

A man standing on the platform of a sixty-foot tower, from he could look out over miles of rolling meadow land, polka-dotted with masses of men and rimmed by hills, spoke these two words to the operator of a small private exchange switchboard on the platform beside him. Two or three men in the hillside tower one of the assistants received the message and operator repeated it and instantly the roar of cannon reverberated from the hills. A mass of blue-clad soldiers surged forward to attack a long line of trenches behind which gray-garbed men waited. "Camera three!" said the tower man, and immediately another battalion of fighters charged into the range of the camera. In rapid succession "Camera four—Camera five—Camera six"—sixteen of them were in action and, as the rapid-fire commands were given, guns were fired and recoiled on their carriages; bullets whistled and shrieked through the air, the rattle of rifle fire beat a tattoo on the ears; men fought hand to hand, faced bayonets fearlessly and were pitched headlong or fell back-stricken to the ground and after one convulsive shudder lay still. From 10,000 to 12,000 men were in action and it was civil warfare to show the millions of people and the "movies" how the men in blue and General Grant and General Lee fought at Petersburg, Virginia, fifty years ago.

The battle scene is one of the biggest features of D. W. Griffith's historical drama, "The Birth of a Nation," founded upon Thomas Dixon's novel, "The Clansman." One hundred years of American history are covered in the story, and now under the touch of the "movie" man, the story of this century of history can be seen from the comfortable vantage point of a cushioned theater chair. There are many remarkable pictorials in this new photo-drama, among them faithful reproductions of Sherman's march to the sea, the burning of Atlanta, the rise and the night riding of the Ku Klux Klan, but none is more vivid or more lavish in detail than the reproduction of the battle at Petersburg, which formed one of the closing chapters in the history of the Civil War.

Everyone who has seen this film battle has probably wondered how Griffith was able to marshal such large bodies of men and direct their movements over twelve square miles of meadow land in such a way that their charges and counter charges, and their every other action before the camera, combine to present a wonderful picture of war in all its grimness and horror.

The answer is—the telephone. "I could not have accomplished the results I did, without the aid of the telephone," Mr. Griffith told the writer, when discussing his photo-play masterpiece. "I got the idea of using the telephone to direct the battle scenes from the use being made of the field telephone in the European war," he continued. "When the big stage was set, I found that because of the extent of territory over which the battle would range I could not use the usual methods of directing by megaphone and wig-wagging. So I had a telephone system built to cover the field and directed the battle from my 'Central' on the top of the big tower."

Historical records were followed closely in preparing for the battle pictures. For four months professors of history in several universities conducted extensive research to obtain the correct data and West Point engineers mapped out the battlefield in accordance with the official war records. The Ordnance Department of the United States Army furnished the rifles and artillery, the cannon used having seen service in the Civil War.

Under the supervision of army engineers, a large force of men dug the trenches and prepared the breastworks. Roads were built for the artillery; mortar pits were provided for the heavier ordnance; and masked batteries, just as in the battle half a century ago, were placed behind the hills five miles distant from the center of the battlefield. To make the chance of injury to the actors as slight as possible, special shells and projectiles were used which gave the pictorial effect of the missiles used in real war, but were harmless. In spite of this precaution, however, many men were injured, although none fatally.

Mr. Griffith divided his army into sixteen battalions, with a sub-director, who reported direct to him, at the head of each. A camera was detailed to each battalion, which had been carefully rehearsed, and Griffith and his best camera man overlooked all from the point of vantage afforded by the sixty-foot tower.

When it was apparent that wig-wagging and megaphone signaling were inadequate for such a large production, Mr. Griffith had an elaborate system of telephone wires laid out. With the same faithfulness in following the teachings of history that characterized Mr. Griffiths' work with the other details of the drama, he refrained from using telephone poles in constructing his telephone system. The telephone did not come into existence until ten years after the Civil War, and so the telephone wires for the producer's use were laid along the ground. There was a direct wire to each battalion chief. The switchboard was placed on the platform of the tower, where it would not obstruct the view of the producer and his crack camera men, and when the wires extending to all parts of the immense stage were ready, Mr. Griffith simply telephoned his orders for the firing and the movements of the troops.

The scheme worked with clock precision. The sub-directors received their orders, marshaled their forces, attacked the camera at the moments when they were needed for right effect in the development of the plot. In this way Mr. Griffith was able to blend sixteen great pictures into one and create the impression of warfare. Making "movies" is a new development in the business and the success of the telephone by the man who is with setting the pace in the picture world makes it certain that other producers will follow Griffith's example.

Battle of Petersburg as Re-enacted for the Movies

Mimic Armies Fight and Sixteen Cameras Snap at the Word by Telephone

---

Birth of Nation Given 200th Time

WITH the matinee at the Liberty Theatre yesterday afternoon D. W. Griffith's film spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," celebrated its 200th performance in New York City. Approximately 285,000 theatregoers have seen the big picture here.

This is the first time a motion picture was ever shown at the regular $2 scale.

Telegraph June 10

Wilbur Higby, known on the speaking stage as the creator of types of eccentric character, has been engaged for character parts with the Griffith Players at the Reliance—Majestic studios. He has been cast for a type part in support of Francelia Billington in the Majestic feature, "Children of the Sea."

N. Y. Commercial June 10

The Yale baseball squad will attend the performance of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty in a body tomorrow night.

N. Y. Herald June 10

Members of the Yale University baseball team will see to-morrow night's performance of the motion pictures "The Birth of a Nation" in the Liberty Theatre. The team on Saturday will play Princeton University.

N. Y. Times June 10

THEATRICAL NOTES 18

On its way to Princeton, the Yale baseball squad will attend the performance of "The Birth of a Nation," at the Liberty tomorrow night.

N. Y. Mail June 10

College Ball Players at Liberty.

The Yale baseball squad will attend the performance of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty Theatre in a body to-morrow night. The Eli players will stay over in New York Friday night, coming down early in the afternoon from New Haven, and will tune up for the annual clash with the Tigers at Princeton Saturday afternoon by looking at the Griffith war spectacle.

N. Y. Sun June 10

The Yale baseball squad will attend the performance of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty Theatre in a body to-morrow night.

N. Y. Telegraph. 10

Yale Boys to See "Birth of Nation"

The Yale baseball squad will attend the performance of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty Theatre in a body to-morrow night. The Eli players will spend the night in New York, coming down early in the afternoon from New Haven and will tune up for the annual clash with the Tigers at Princeton on Saturday afternoon, by looking at the Griffith war spectacle before descending up on the Nassau camp.

JUNE 10, 1915
LOS ANGELES (Cal.) EXAMINER

W. Griffith Coming Home

He Has Vanquished Boston

The Cowl Finds Play She Likes in 'Common Clay'; White Rats Delayed

By Otheman

W. GRIFFITH has left New York on his way home.

He has settled the combat he waged against "The Birth of a Nation" by saying culture [illegible] the birth even of a nation was [illegible] quite improper.

It would seem that Mr. Griffith had by his suavity caused the Chicago critics and the aroused Afro-Americans to relinquish their stand of severity against the production of the photoplay, though the pressure of those opposed to the picture in Massachusetts, Governor [illegible] had a bill programmed through the legislature creating a board of [illegible] for the purpose of passing on the [illegible]. The verdict was that it was [illegible] to good morals and [illegible] pressed.

[illegible] was expensive advertising [illegible]

MOTION PICTURE WORLD (N. Y. City)
JUL 3 1915

By invitation of the Photoplay Magazine, this city, the delegates to the convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World witnessed an exhibition of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Illinois theater, 10 o'clock, Wednesday morning, June 23.

Brooklyn Eagle Times June 10, 1915

With the matinee at the Liberty Theatre yesterday afternoon D. W. Griffith's film spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," celebrated its 200th performance in New York City.

...ing, setting up a record for the ... motion picture production which will likely stand for a long time.

June 11, 1915

Liberty.

D. W. Griffith's wonderful spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," is well into its fourth month. This wonderful film series of history and romance retains its drawing powers in every essential and continues to unfold a narrative of thrilling interest touching upon scenes prior to and during the Civil War and closing with the exciting moments of the reconstruction days down South. Great battle fields, enormous armies marching to conflict, the daring rides of the Clansmen, and the thousand and one details of gripping heart interest which Griffith has crowded into his story set the whole production apart from the average and make it intensely real and life like.

SEATTLE (Wash.) POST-INTELL.

"BIRTH OF A NATION" STIRS UP INTEREST

Gigantic $500,000 Spectacle Will Be Presented at Clemmer, Beginning Sunday, June 27.

Few if any productions coming to Seattle have stirred up the interest that "The Birth of a Nation" has stirred up. This gigantic $500,000 spectacle of D. W. Griffith's, which is booked into the Clemmer, beginning Sunday, June 27, promises to be one of the greatest theatrical events of the season. Reports from New York, where Griffith opened his masterpiece at $2 per seat prices, show that during the past fourteen weeks upwards of 300,000 people saw this production and every performance is still packed.

JUNE 12, 1915
MILWAUKEE (Wis.) LEADER

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" TO BE SHOWN HERE

"The Birth of a Nation," David W. Griffith's spectacular motion picture in which there are 18,000 actors and 3,000 horses and which has stirred up a national controversy, will be seen in Milwaukee.

It will come to the Davidson for an indefinite engagement, beginning July 3.

"The Birth of a Nation" tells a story concerning the civil war, and takes three hours to show on the screen.

Milwaukee will be the sixth city in the United States in which the picture will be exhibited. It has created a wonderful stir where it has already been shown. It is based on Thomas Dixon's novel, "The Clansman."

In some cities prices have ranged from $2 and down. In Milwaukee, however, matinee prices will range from $1 to 25 cents, and the night from $1.50 to 25 cents.

This big movie contains many impressive spectacles and shows most of the important battles of the civil war.

N. Y.

N. Y. Sun

N. Y. Mail

"Birth of A... to Run A...

N. Y. Globe

Journal of Commerce

N. Y. Commercial

Herald

Mercury

D. W. Griffith's film spectacle, The Birth of a Nation, celebrated its 50th performance in New York City. The run began on March 3 and has continued twice daily since. In that time it is figured that approximately 285,000 theatergoers have seen the big picture in this city.

MILWAUKEE

Davidson Gets Big Picture Feature.

The Birth of a Nation, a historical drama in 12 parts, which requires three hours time to be seen, will be exhibited at the Davidson theater, beginning July 3, with two performances daily.

The production is now running in its first week to capacity audiences in Chicago. The Birth of a Nation is based on Thomas Dixon's story, The Clansman. Its production cost $500,000 and 18,000 persons and 3,000 horses participate in it.

BALTIMORE, (MD.) NEWS

JUN 19 1915

BALTIMORE NEWS.

$2 MOVIES ARE TOO HIGH FOR BALTIMORE

Big Corporation Formed In New York City Has No Local Connection.

While it is reported from New York that a chain of moving-picture theaters all over the country is being projected, with the idea of presenting $2 attractions, no news of such an establishment in this city could be gained today. Film experts here said that they had not been approached in connection with this proposition, in which those behind the stupendous "Birth of the Nation" production, now running in New York at $2 for the best seats, are interested.

Marion S. Pearce & Scheck said that feelers had been put out as to the practicability of the $2 film show here, but that he knew nothing of the particular enterprise now forming in New York.

Higher Prices Coming.

"The high-priced moving picture show is certainly coming," said Mr. Pearce, "and it is coming even more rapidly than was expected. The people here and in other cities than New York are not yet ready for such an expensive show, they have not gotten used to the idea yet; New York always leads in such innovations and it will be some time before the Baltimore public takes to the idea of a film show at that price. When it does come in Baltimore, it will be on the same principle as the regular drama is worked on now. Productions that have long runs in New York will come here for a week and then go on somewhere else."

C. E. Whitehurst of the New Theater said he had not heard of the New York concern that is contemplating a chain of high-priced movies.

"It would be an impossibility," he said, "to maintain such a production in Baltimore at the present time, or even by next fall. A year from next fall there might be some chance, but hardly before. The people must get educated up to the moving-picture show that runs at the same price as the drama. Nor will the public be ready for such prices until all such offerings are on a par with 'The Birth of the Nation.' I paid $2 to see a night performance and then again paid $1 for a matinee. Another objection in Baltimore is that there is no available theater for such offerings. However, the time will surely come when the public will be eager for such film productions. The moving-picture business is still in its infancy."

Wall Street Interest.

The New York report states that the bankers of the [illegible] are interested in the project [illegible] incorporate today [illegible]

...ERALD, WEDNESDAY, JUNE 16, 1915

MERCURY BIRMINGHAM, ALABAMA, WEDNESDAY, JUNE 16, 1915

DOLLY DALRYMPLE IN SERIES OF STORIES TELLS OF SOME THINGS SHE SAW AND HEARD ON RECENT VISIT TO NEW YORK

No. 7—"The Birth of a Nation"

By DOLLY DALRYMPLE

It was a perfect joy to me to see "The Birth of a Nation," for more reasons than one; not only because it is the most marvelous moving picture that has ever been produced, but also because I had seen so many broad, suggestive, dramas—so many "outre" plays of one sort or another during my brief visit to New York that I fairly reveled in the beauty and wholesomeness and artistic effect of Mr. Griffith's wonderful film drama.

Mr. Henry Arthur Jones remarked once upon a time that "the American drama is suffering from an overdose of ideas."

Fact is, if Mr. Jones had said an overdose of one idea, he would have been more correct in his statement, said idea being that of a perfectly good lady (the heroine, of course) gone wrong sometime between 10 years before the play opened and the end of the first act, and who tricked through scene after scene in tears and a black, spangled gown, and turned on everybody at the end of the third act, when the proverbial bedroom scene was presented, and the 'expose" came to light. Ladies gone wrong and deceived husbands are the inevitable ingredients of nearly every play that is on the boards in New York today.

A bit of comedy, of course, if thrown in, and there usually is a couple of juvenile lovers to be paired neatly off as the curtain falls, but the rest of the plot is the same everywhere—and it has been "aired" and toasted to tedium, and mangled to the thinness of tissue paper.

After seeing a half dozen or more such plays, a body feels like exclaiming with the unknown poet:

"Oh! lovely lady we implore
Please go away and sin no more,
Or, if that effort be too great,
Just go away at any rate!"

Only heaven and the Sage foundation fund know how many motion pictures are operating in New York today.

Every adventurer with money enough to hire a blonde, a retired delicatessen shop, two rolls of tickets and a roll of photographs, has gone into the "movies," it would seem.

When papa comes home late all tired out and worn out, he can gather his little brood about him, including "Mama," Bess, little Willie, Dorothy, Annie and Susie and treat them to two murders, a train wreck, 'steen elopements and 5000 miles of the fastest horseback riding you ever saw, all for the sum of 5 cents each, but—"Watch! Look! Listen!" Along comes Mr. Impressario with more money and bigger ideas, and behold; he rents one of the biggest theatres in New York, handsomely furnished and gorgeous equipped, produces a big screen play and up goes the price of admission."

The conquering host in this respect reaches his ultimatum in "The Birth of a Nation," where orchestra chairs are $2 each (if you buy them through Tyson or McBride, they are $2.50 each), and would you believe it, with a performance every afternoon in the week and every evening you can scarcely get seats!

That is what Mr. David W. Griffith has done for the "moving picture" business in New York by producing "The Birth of a Nation."

And better still, I'll say this, "The Birth of a Nation" is worth the price, every cent of it, although as some old bum with half a dozen drinks under his belt said when he saw it.

"I'm disappointed; I thought they said this was 'The Breath of a Nation'—and it ain't!"

Even so, the old bum to the contrary notwithstanding, the picture is wonderful, and to Mr. Griffith, who has done one of the biggest things that has been done in modern photo-play, one feels like paying homage, not only to the man himself, but to American art as well, of which he is a magnificent exponent, and so we render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's, and rank "Birth of a Nation" with the big things of the world—the "eighth wonder," to speak.

"Birth of a Nation" is the last word in "movies"—it as reached and it is the apotheosis of the screen. Even the filmiest "film fans" acknowledge this.

HENRY WALTHALL
Former Birmingham boy, who plays the part of "The Little Colonel" (Ben Cameron) in "The Birth of a Nation"

Nothing so stupendous has ever before been attempted.

Eighteen thousand people are employed, and 3000 horses in the picture, and the music, which was written especially for the production by Joseph Carl Briel and played by an orchestra of 40 pieces, is not the least of the beautiful accessories to the drama.

Entering the Liberty theatre the guests are greeted by tall, slender young fellows as ushers dressed in uniform, the flashing blue and gold making a charming contrast to the pretty young women who dispense the programmes, gowned in lovely old fashioned Dolly Varden silks, ruffled and frilled over big hoop skirts, their hair done in old fashion ringlet style and as they "curtsey" to each person who enters, you feel as if you are transported back into the old days before the terrible war—when our mothers and our grandmothers were indeed and in fact the belles and beauties of the whole world, famed from southern clime to northern border, for their sweetness, their grace and their loveliness.

It took a southern man to furnish the text for "The Birth of a Nation," Dr. Thomas Dixon, around whose novel "The Clansman," the story is woven; it took a southern boy, Henry Walthall, a Birmingham boy, in fact, to play the leading role of "The Little Colonel" (Ben Cameron); and it took southern pride and southern chivalry, southern gallantry and southern courage to provide the real dramatic events which counted for so much in the terrible conflict between the north and the south.

When the band plays "Dixie" during "The Birth of a Nation," there is loud applause, showing how the southern people feel about this marvelous picture, no matter how it hurts their hearts and how many times they want to give a good, old rebel yell when something is shown on the screen that incenses them, although I must say there is little of that sort of thing.

When the band plays those beautiful, old songs so dear to our hearts, "In the Gloaming," "My Old Kentucky Home, Good Night," and the rest, you can't keep the tears back, if you are a full-blooded southerner—nor if you are any kind of a northerner for that matter—for the pathos of the music, the sadness of the scenes, the bitter conflict, the terrible undoing of the south's most cherished ideals make their way to every human heart, and it is not a matter of geography, but one of universal appeal.

Although it is called the "silent drama," it was far from silent, was "The Birth of a Nation," when I saw it; incessant murmurs of approval, roars of laughter, gasps of anxiety and outbursts of applause greeted every new picture that was thrown on the screen.

I cannot imagine a human emotion that is not included somewhere in the story from the biggest national psychology to the littlest girl; from the lowest depths of ruthless villiany to the utmost grandeur of patriotic ideal!

The story begins in the seventeenth century with the coming of African slaves to North America. Its further progress is closely related to varied phases of the slavery question and its bearing upon the history of the United States. In the wake of the abolition movement comes the civil war, with its terrific battles and the toll of death and broken hearts; Sherman's march to the sea; the burning of Atlanta; the downfall of Petersburg; Lee's surrender to Grant at Appomattox; the assassination of Abraham Lincoln; the ordeal of the reconstruction period; the Ku Klux Klan's solution of the problem; the establishment of an 'everlasting peace in the end. These historic scenes are given in accurate detail.

When I saw "The Birth of a Nation" I was so overwhelmed by its immensity, so overcome by its spectacular effect, so wrought up by its vivideness and beauty that I said to myself:

"It makes the biggest achievements of the real stage look like mere child's play; it reduces to littleness the hughest things the theatre has ever done or can ever hope to do."

Of course, size has little to do with art. That's true, we all admit; a perfect statuette like one of the exquisite figures of Tanagra is as great in a sense as the Vatican; a flawless sonnet of Byron's need not yield its place to a great epic like Dante's "Inferno;" a short story of de Maupassant's has nothing to fear from a cycle of Hugo's masterpieces; nor has the "Suwanee River" anything to be afraid of from a Wagnerian trology.

And yet, the spectator after seeing "The Birth of a Nation", cannot help feeling that a higher power has created the larger work, since the larger work includes the problems of the smaller and countless others.

"The Birth of a Nation" is a choral symphony of light—light in all of its magic; the sun flashing through a bit of brown-black lace, and giving immortal beauty to its pattern; or quivering in a pair of eyes; on a snowdrift of bridal veil, or on a moonlit brook or a mountain side.

The leagues of film uncoil and uncoil and pour fourth beauty of scene and face and expression, beauty of fabric and attitude and motion!

Here is the epic of a proud, brave people beaten into the dust but refusing to stay there.

The pictures shift from huge canvasses with hundreds and hundreds of the white capped Ku Klux Klan charging and thundering and rearing and galloping on superb horses, with a heart quickening glory of speed down road and lane, through flying waters, now the thrill of a charge or a plunging steed caught back on his haunches in sudden arrest—now the terror of a bestial mob, the hurrah of rescue, streets filled with panic and with carnival.

A moment later we see Abraham Lincoln brooding over his "Emancipation Proclamation," another moment and he is yielding to a mother's tears—poor, wretched, broken, tired Mrs. Cameron begging for her boy—the "Little Colonel;" later we are in a crowded theatre, watching the assassin making his way to and from the awful deed!

What could the stage give to rival this? What the novel? What the poem?

Nothing—everything else, music, poetry, song, depreciate into mere nothingness in comparison to such a marvelous portrayal of life and love and honor and patriotism.

Here we have hundreds of scenes in place of four or five; thousands of actors in place of a score; armies in landscape instead of squads of supers jostling on a platform among canvas screens; here was the evolution of a people the living chronicle of statesmen, a civil war, a racial problem, rising gradually to a puzzle yet unsolved; here was a whole gallery of scenery of humanity, of still life, and life in its wildest career. Here were portraits of things, of furniture, of streets, of homes, of wilderness; pictures of conventions, cabinets, senates, mobs, festivals, ballrooms, flower gardens, hypocrisy, jealousy, pride, humiliation, battlefields, hospitals, flirtations, anguish, devotion, treachery, self-sacrifice and tyranny; here were the luxurious southern homes, the wind-swept cotton fields; here were the dancers, and the soldiers riding away to battle, the soldiers trudging home defeated, cast down, with poverty ahead of them, and new and ghastly difficulties arising at every hand!

There is little left to tell after all this. To Ben Cameron and Elsie Stoneman, Phil Stoneman and Margaret Cameron, the sweethearts of the story, the sequel was a beautiful double honeymoon by the sea—to the American people it was the outcome of four years of fratricidal strife; the nightmare of reconstruction, and the establishment of the south, the glorious, proud, beautiful south, in its rightful place. "The Birth of a Nation," a new nation, destined to play its part in history with honor and glory to itself and its people, a new nation turned away forever from the blood-lust of terrible [illegible]

...has been closed at Clune's auditorium, ... steadily for sixteen weeks, ... expected to stand for some time ... one and will be followed by a

...graph June 13

...y last D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation," ...hundredth performance at ...eatre in this city, setting ...the first $2 motion picture

(N. Y.) CITIZEN

...3 1915

...TH PERFORMANCE.

...Run of "The Birth of a Nation."

...day last W. D. Griffith's ..., "The Birth of a Nation," ...hundredth performance at ...heatre in this city, setting ...or the first $2 motion pic...n which will likely stand ...e.

...ly interesting drama of his...ance, depicting in the new ...orm of art which it estab...ring incidents of our na...ment which cluster about ...djustment of the African ...on, has been the sensational ...e year. After an unex...remains as potent as ever ...ppeal, and the Liberty has ...continuously since the en...n there on March 3. ...ngements have been made ...e run through the summer ...vance bookings for the next ...n be arranged.

(N. Y.) Standard-Union

...3 1915

...hattan Theatres

MANHATTAN.—On Wednes...W. Griffith's great spectacle, ...Nation," passed its 200th ...at the Liberty Theatre, ...ing up a record for the first ...picture production, which will ...for a long time. This in...esting drama of history and ...picting in the new and graphic ...which it establishes, the stir...ts of the national development ...r about the rise and adjust...e African slavery question, has ...sensational success of the year. ...unexpected run it remains ...ever in its public appeal, and ...has been crowded continuously ...engagement, began there on ...Special arrangements have been ...continue the run through the ...mer season, and advance bookings ...eight weeks can be arranged.

...graph June 13, (N.Y.)

...like a manifestation of ...the part of the producers ...of a Nation" has been playing ...at the Liberty Theatre ...months, and the crowds continue ...When popular opinion is thus ...approve a photo-play the powers ...e not likely to interfere with ...ainment. A recent suit brought ...e producers of the film by the ...of an association who were op...its exhibition dragged wearily ...courts for a couple of months, ...ually postponed from week to ...finally fizzled out altogether. ...no reason to believe that the ...will pay much attention to this ...mpt to eliminate the picture.

...YN (N. Y.) EAGLE

...3 1915

A FIGHT FOR A FILM.

Struggles to Have "The Birth of a Nation" Shown.

Concerning the efforts made by various organizations to suppress or alter the film "The Birth of a Nation," D. F. Griffith has made public the statement of his difficulties with the various societies. He said:

"The Birth of a Nation' has now passed over every legal barrier placed in its way by the negro intermarriage societies opposed to its presentation in New York, Boston, Los Angeles and San Francisco and has been sustained in every instance, including the sanction of the National Board of Censors.

"The situation in Boston was unique and threatened the freedom of the stage and the press. Through the pressure of the negroes who are promoting the intermarriage of blacks and whites in this country Gov. Walsh of Massachusetts had a bill rushed through the Legislature creating a Board of Censors to pass upon the big picture now being presented in the Tremont Theatre. This law empowered a majority of the board to suspend or revoke any theatre license at their pleasure. The board consists of Mayor Curley, Commissioner of Police O'Meara and Chief Justice Bolster of the Municipal Court. The political phase of the case lies in the fact that the two last named officers are appointed by the Governor. After viewing the picture in an official capacity the board met Wednesday night and by a unanimous vote decided that the picture was in no way contrary to good morals and should not be suppressed. After having his photograph taken with a delegation of negro protestants on the State House steps Gov. Walsh, who had not seen the picture, promised the negroes that he would suppress it. In opposition to this political protest Attorney John F. Cusick, representing Mr. Griffith, filed with the board petitions signed by 8,000 citizens of Boston who had seen the play within ten days following the enactment of the new censorship law and who favored its continuance.

"As a result of the agitation caused by this extreme case it is said the moving picture people of New England are effecting an organization to have a sane law enacted which will repeal this special legislation and set up a safe standard by which all pictures and works of art can be judged in the future. In furtherance of this campaign it is said the moving picture houses will exhibit a series of editorials in pictures setting forth their standing in the community and showing up the political intrigues that have sought to hamper their business by underhanded and un-American methods."

BROOKLYN (N. Y.) EAGLE

Date ..... JUN 13 1915

On Wednesday last D. W. Griffith's great spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," passed its 200th performance at the Liberty Theater, setting a record for the first $2 motion picture production.

World. June 13

...At the Liberty Theatre, D. W. Griffith's ...mance, "The Birth of a Nation," ...and combines historical and ...Thomas Dixon's novel, "The Clans-...way." It was made from ...starting with the sixth period Broad-...Nation." It to complete on an equal ...manner. It remains its popularity, per-...picture, "The Birth of ...

On Wednesday last, D. W. Griffith's great spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," passed its 200th performance at the Liberty Theatre in this city, setting up a record for the first two-dollar motion picture production which will likely stand for a long time. This intensely interesting drama of history and romance has been the sensational success of the year. Special arrangements have been made to continue the run through the Summer season.

On Wednesday last, D. W. Griffith's great spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," passed its 200th performance at the Liberty Theatre, in this city, setting record for the first $2 motion picture production. This interesting drama, depicting the stirring incidents of our national development which cluster about the rise and adjustment of the African slavery question, has been one of the successes of the year. Special arrangements have been made to continue the run through the summer season, and advance bookings for the next eight weeks can be arranged.

N. Y. World. June 13, 1915

Griffith.

LILLIAN GISH.

LILLIAN GISH, who plays the Northern heroine in "The Birth of a Nation," was born in Springfield, O., and in her teens she was a fancy dancer, appearing with Sarah Bernhardt and other stars. She was introduced to D. W. Griffith by Mary Pickford. He at once detected the natural poise and power of expression possessed by Miss Gish and brought her forward rapidly. Among the most important productions in which she has been featured are "The Battle of the Sexes," "Home Sweet Home," "Enoch Arden" and "The Birth of a Nation."

PHILADELPHIA, (Pa.) INQUIRER.

June 13, 1915

"The Birth of a Nation" has at last been officially sanctioned by the new Censorship Commission, which was established by the Legislature at the investigation of the various negro organizations.

BALTIMORE (Md.) SUN

JUNE 13, 1915

The most sensational theatrical success of the past season was D. W. Griffith's venture in taking the Liberty Theatre and charging $2 a seat to see a photoplay. "The Birth of a Nation" has played to capacity for months, when most of the theatres devoted to drama were half empty. The $2 price didn't deter those who wanted to see this wonderful film. And it has been a big success in Boston, Chicago and San Francisco. Griffith's profits on "The Birth of a Nation" have poured in for months at the rate of $50,000 a week. The cost of the picture, it has been stated, was nearly $500,000, but it has earned that back and the net receipts are now clear profit. The Frohmans, Belasco and other producers have probably made as much the past season out of the picture rights as they have out of the plays themselves.

MILWAUKEE (Wis.) FREE PRESS 561

'BIRTH OF NATION" COMING

SPECTACULAR PHOTO PLAY IS BOOKED FOR DAVIDSON.

"The Birth of a Nation," heralded as the most extensive, costly and spectacular motion picture drama ever produced, has been engaged by Manager Sherman Brown for an indefinite run at the Davidson theater, beginning Saturday night, July 3.

Adapted from Thomas Dixon's vivid story, "The Clansman," the play reveals events in the history of the United States with thrilling scenes of the civil war period. Great battle scenes are reproduced. Realism is said to reach a high degree, and some of the chief events of the war which freed the slaves and reunited the country are depicted, including the assassination of President Abraham Lincoln. To get the proper atmosphere into the scenes, numerous authorities were consulted by D. W. Griffith, the producer.

Mr. Griffith was eight months making the entire production, and during that time he employed an army of men and women. Eighteen thousand people and 3,000 horses figure in the pictures, which are said to represent an investment of $500,000.

"The Birth of a Nation" was completed recently and Milwaukee will be the sixth city in which it is presented. It is now the reigning pictorial success in New York and four other cities, and capacity houses are reported attracted at prices ranging up to $2. This is the sixteenth record-breaking week of the play in New York, the seventeenth in Los Angeles, the tenth in San Francisco, the ninth in Boston and the first in Chicago.

The production is the first ever booked in Milwaukee for an indefinite engagement. Commencing Saturday night, July 3, two performances daily will be given, beginning at 2:15 ...

MILWAUKEE (Wis.) SENTINEL

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" FILM DRAMA AT DAVIDSON

Play, Beginning Saturday, July 3, Deals With Country's History in War Period.

"The Birth of a Nation," conceded the most spectacular motion picture drama ever produced, is engaged for an indefinite run at the Davidson theater beginning Saturday night, July 3.

Adapted from Thomas Dixon's vivid, gripping story, "The Clansman," the play reveals events in the history of the United States with thrilling scenes of the civil war period. D. W. Griffith, producer of the historical drama, was eight months making the entire production and during that time he employed an army of men and women. Eighteen thousand people and 3,000 horses figure in the pictures, which represent an investment of $500,000.

"The Birth of a Nation" was completed recently and Milwaukee will be the sixth city in which it is presented. It is now the reigning pictorial success in New York and four other cities and capacity houses are being attracted at prices ranging from 25 cents to $2. This is the sixteenth record breaking week of the play in New York, the seventeenth in Los Angeles, the tenth in San Francisco, ninth in Boston and the first in Chicago.

...NCOLN IN "BIRTH OF A NATION"

...picture is a photographic print ...a little piece of celluloid film, ...ore than 2x3 inches in size, one ...ny thousand little negatives that ...through the projecting machine ...he photo-play, "The Birth of a ...," at the Liberty Theater. It is ...from that section of half a ...of film that depicts with graphic ...y the assassination of President ...in. Perhaps there is no episode ...he Birth of a Nation" that makes ...profound impression and is re...with such reverent stillness ac...nied by stifled sobs and moist ...n this section of the picture the ...in, John Wilkes Booth, is seen ...his escape from the theater ...immediately after discharging ...tol. ...ite care and great ... were expended on this section of the picture. A reproduction of the interior of Ford's Theater in Washington was built, showing the stage, boxes and auditorium. The play, "Our American Cousin," is shown with E. A. Sothern and Laura Kene in the cast, also the arrival of the presidential party and the big audience showing a lively interest in every detail. So realistic is this scene that it has the complete illusionary effect of actually having been photographed on the fateful night.

Other familiar historical personages are shown in scenes reproducing with carefully studied detail eventful happenings of the Civil War. Lincoln is seen with his Cabinet issuing the call of troops, the big battle of the conflict for which thousands of people were drilled under the direction of the producer, David W. Griffith, and Grant and Lee shaking hands at Appomattox.

JUNE 13, 1915
N (O.) JOURNAL

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

Miss Mae Marsh, who plays the part of Flora Cameron, the pretty young sister, in this famous picture drama. It is one of the most elaborate film plays ever produced, and its remarkably realistic scenes of the civil war and of the turbulent period in the south that followed have created a sensation wherever it has been presented.

Birth of a Nation," recently joined the Reliance-Majestic players. This dainty actress immediately began work in the featured role of the two-part Majestic photoplay, "The Burned Hand." In "The Burned Hand," Miss Cooper is the daughter of parents who have domestic difficulties. She is kidnapped by her father, but has a college boy sweetheart who struggles for her. Eventually, the father is unable to part the lovers, since he depended for the identification of the youth upon a burned hand. Three of the hero's friends burn their hands to

LOS ANGELES (Cal.) EXAMINER
JUNE 13, 191

SCENE FROM "THE CLANSMAN" CLUNE'S AUDITORIUM

JUN 16 1915
NEW YORK DRAMATIC MIRROR

LIBERTY. — "The Birth of a Nation" passed the two hundred performance mark last week, and it's still going strong.

Westfield Leader
June 1915

Liberty—"Birth of a Nation."

At the Liberty, it is [illegible] markable picture, "The Birth of a Nation," resumes its [illegible] mitting it to complete [illegible] ing with the big [illegible] plays. It was made [illegible] on's novel, "The Clansman" [illegible] bines historical and [illegible]

STOCKTON (Cal.) [illegible]
JUNE 13, 1915

Herald. Washington (D.C.) June 15, 1915

It is as plain as the nose on your face that Manager Robins has a hankg to keep Keith's open all summer.

"What do you think of great big featured films?" he asked me one aftoon last week while we stood watching the long line of vaudeville dees file into the theater.

"Like 'The Birth of a Nation?'" I asked.

Whereupon he answered in the affirmative and I, recalling this wonful film which I saw a couple of weeks ago in New York, made a mental ervation, for there is but one "Birth of a Nation," and that one is worth e $2 asked for tickets to see it—worth it as much as any theatrical producon I ever saw in my life.

SAN FRANCISCO (Cal.) CALL & POST
JUNE 12, 1915

Se many demands have been made for the return of "The Clansman; or, The Birth of a Nation," the world's greatest picture, that the Alcazar will bring it back for a limited engagement, beginning Monday, June 21.

"The Clansman; or, The Birth of a Nation," the greatest achievement in motion picture plays, will return to the Alcazar Theater for a limited engagement, beginning Monday afternoon, June 21.

There will be a large symphony orchestra and a big chorus with the production of the world's masterpiece motion picture play, "The Clansman; or, The Birth of a Nation," at the Alcazar after next week.

MANCHESTER [illegible]

"The Birth of a Nation," the film which caused so much trouble in Boston, will probably find its way into Manchester theatres before the year is over. Just when the local managers will be able to book this feature is not known as yet. The crowds in Boston are increasing rather than diminishing and the picture will not be taken away until everybody has had an opportunity to see it.

[illegible] FROM Philadelphia, (Pa.) Public Ledger
Date .....

SEATTLE (Wash.) TIMES
JUNE 18, 1915

Film Warmly Praised.

In a late number of Everybody's Magazine James Shelley Hamilton says of the wonderful photoplay, "The Birth of a Nation:" "The tremendous battle scenes with its vast stretch of smoke-covered landscape, its long trenches, its thrilling charges and its throat-gripping bits of individual heroism, sweep the auditors out of all composure."

LOS ANGELES (Cal.) EXAMINER
JUNE 13, 1915

CLUNE'S AUDITORIUM — Tomorrow afternoon "The Clansman" will enter upon its sixteenth and positively last week, at Clune's Auditorium Theater. Since the first performance this remarkable production has been the most popular dramatic attraction of this city, and has established a record that has never been equaled. As a fitting close to this engagement, as a special added feature, Mr. Joseph Hazleton, who when a boy witnessed the assassination of President Lincoln, will appear at each performance and describe the events of that terrible night. As a program boy in the Ford Theater, Washington, he had seen John Wilkes Booth many times, and on occasion, noting Booth's peculiarities, he watched him closely. [illegible] saw what probably no [illegible] saw, the shot actually [illegible] was to prove so disastrous [illegible]

[illegible] has been closed at Clune's au[illegible] [illegible]ted steadily for sixteen w[illegible] [illegible] expected to stand for so[illegible] [illegible]ked one and will be followe[illegible]

$4,000,000 MOVIE COMPANY TO SHOW $2 A SEAT FILMS

Dissensions in Mutual Corporation Lead to Succession of Harry E. Aitken, D. W. Griffith and Mark Sennett.

The Mutual Film Corporation, known throughout the length and breadth of the land because its chief director is D. W. Griffith, filmer of "The Birth of a Nation," is in the throes of internal dissensions. It was announced today that Harry E. Aitken, its president, would secede and form a new corporation, backed by Wall street money. This in itself would not mean much, for anybody with enough money can film pictures, but Aitken is taking with him Griffith, Thomas H. Ince, another master director, and Mark Sennett, the wizard of comedies.

The new company is to have a capitalization of $4,000,000, with a pledged reserve of $20,000,000 to be used in case of need. The new company purposes the production of master films, which it will exhibit at its own theatres at $2 a seat, even as "The Birth of a Nation" is being shown in New York, Boston and Los Angeles.

In so far as the Mutual is concerned, it appears that John R. Freuler, president of the North American Film Corporation, is in control of the situation, but any changes that are contemplated now are wholly dependent upon the developments of the coming week and what efforts are made to bring about an amicable settlement of the differences of the warring factions.

The other faction is led by President Aitken, who is said to be backed by the New York Motion Picture Corporation. As head of two companies, the Reliance and the Majestic, and as backer of D. W. Griffith, maker of the Griffith features, Mr. Aitken's position is strong.

Also in this coterie would be Thomas H. Ince, the Keystone Comany, the Broncho Company, the Domino Company and the Kay-Bee Company of the New York Motion Picture Corporation, which is controlled by Adam and Charles Kessel and C. O. Baumann.

SEATTLE (Wash.) TIMES
JUNE 17, 1915

[illegible] Underlining.

It took eight months to complete the picture, "The Birth of the Nation." Two hundred thousand [illegible] of film were used in its manufacture. This later was boiled down to 12,000 feet. An army of 15,000 men was needed to get the desired effects in the battle scenes. This picture will be shown in Seattle soon.

Chaplin Produces New Laughs.

Charles Chaplin, arch enemy of

SAN DIEGO (Cal.) UNION
JUNE 17, 1915

[illegible] all three have exceptionally good voices.

Keystone comedy-creation pictures complete the program.

Empress

That "The Clansman," which will open at the Empress Theatre next Monday night was witnessed by over one million people in the first twelve weeks of its presentation is substantial proof of its value. Never before in history has a dramatic attraction proven so thoroughly popular as has his remarkable production of D. W. Griffith's. The romance which runs through the "before the war" days, through the actual strife of the rebellion, and through the tragic period of the reconstruction of a new South—has a genuine grip. The interest is unrelenting.

The big battle scenes are magnificent, the depicting of Ford's Theatre at the moment of Lincoln's [illegible] is most wonderful, and [illegible] charge through the [illegible] streets of a little [illegible] "The Clansman" has [illegible] its 12,000 [illegible] Five reels [illegible]

"The Birth of a Nation" will remain indefinitely at the Tremont Theatre, Boston.

SEMENTS

ISS MAE MARSH, who plays Flora Cameron, the younger daughter in the Southern household in "The Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty Theatre during her three as a photo play actress has ch attention by her elfish tive personality.

ways a touch of comedy or here Miss Marsh appears. lity lends itself to fine treatment of any part she expressive, ever changing ng face is one of the most ll the list of film favorites. iscovered by David W. Griffuicer of many films, long be- "The Birth of a Nation." Marsh, a freckled face "kid- some time been around the Angeles, meeting with many hoping that some day she he coveted chance to act be- ers.

th recognised the hidden ma- y beneath her quaintness and opportunity she sought. She ny of Lotta both in facial re- nd in the method of her work.

graph. (June 18, 1915

00,000 FILM CERN FORMED

Telegraph

Will Be Pictures to Be wn Only in the $2 Playhouses.

June 18

TREET MONEY IN IT

ement was made yesterday of tion of a $4,000,000 company E. Aitken as its head, which ace feature moving picture e combined into a weekly pro- and to be exhibited in a chain s where the $2 scale of prices all.

Street interests" are financing ct, acording to the announce- ich adds that David W. Griffith, H. Ince and Mack Sennett will film productions.

mbination is forming," said Mr. in which Messrs. Griffith, Ince, Bauman, Kessel and the West- rt Company of London, will be ing figures."

ew concern is said to have ac- ontrol of a theatre on Broadway, e films will have their first show- r which they will be exhibited in of theatres which the Aitken y is said to have obtained.

FREULER TO BE HOSEN PRESIDENT

the best information obtainable the informed in motion pictures y John R. Freuler will be elect- ident of the Mutual Film Cor- at the directors' meeting to be this city next Wednesday.

J. W. Smith of New York and Field of Milwaukee, the two new elected at the Richmond meet- in complete harmony with Mr. 's ideas and policies. Prior to nual meeting and the election of mith and Mr. Field the situation the hands of Harry E. Aitken, ent head of the Mutual. The made Freuler master of the situ- and it can be stated authorita- that he has mapped out his lection of Freuler, who is presi- the North American Film Com- nd vice president of the Ameri- m Manufacturing Company, would ne of the best equipped film men country in charge of the destin- he Mutual. He is a man of ideals, rocate of the clean picture and all, personally able to conduct any f the business.

ncis J. Crandon and Lester Scott, was recently announced, have the directing force of the (Mutual studios. The board er of directors actively engaged play producing up to [illegible] David Wark Griffith, [illegible]

N.Y. Times June 18, 1915

$2 THEATRE CHAIN OF MOVIE FEATURES

$4,000,000 Company, Headed by H. E. Aitken, Plans Output of 52 Pictures a Year.

FINANCED IN WALL STREET

D. W. Griffith, T. H. Ince, and Mack Sennett to Direct Productions—400 Houses Here, 200 in Europe.

A chain of theatres beginning in New York and stretching across the country and devoted exclusively to the presentation of motion pictures at a charge of $2 for the best seats—this is the program announced yesterday from the office of H. E. Aitken, President of the company which financed "The Birth of a Nation" and so gave to a somewhat surprised public the first of the $2 movies. To make this ambitious program possible its sponsors have gone to Wall Street for their money and to D. W. Griffith, Thomas H. Ince, and Mack Sennett for their pictures. A company with a capital of $4,000,000 will be incorporated today or tomorrow.

At Mr. Aitken's office yesterday afternoon it was said that some $20,000,000 had been pledged to the support of the undertaking and that this would make possible an expenditure of $2,000,000 a year in the production of fifty pictures. This would give an average of $100,000 investment for each film and would allow the producers to do big things on a big scale—particularly in the photographing of great spectacles too large for any stage on Broadway. It has been said that "The Birth of a Nation," the film now on exhibition at the Liberty, represented an outlay of $300,000, of which, roughly, one-third went into the cost of promotion.

400 Theatres in the Circuit.

The three movie directors named in the announcements of the new enterprise are now on the Pacific Coast, each at work on a new film, and Mr. Aitken is here entering into negotiations for theatres. The plan calls for the taking over of between 500 and 600 houses, 400 in this country, and the rest abroad. The acquiring of these, it was said, had been proving encouragingly easy. For some time past theatre have been more theatres than the producers could keep busy with popular plays, and such an enterprise as the one now proposed would, if successful, relieve the strain in many places. There is to be a Broadway theatre marked as the home of the chain, and Mr. Aitken and his associates are negotiating for one central in location and of quite recent construction. It was built for the spoken drama, and has been so used all the year.

The announcement speaks glibly of headquarters in New York and branch offices in London, Paris, Vienna, Petrograd, Rome, Barcelona, and South America. It speaks also of eminent stars of the American and European stage already engaged, of motion picture actors retained for the forthcoming productions, of celebrated authors at work on scenarios, and of celebrated composers at work on incidental music.

"The once lowly movie," so runs the statement, "has grown in ten years from a few scattered nickelodeons into a combination that ranks fourth or fifth among the great business enterprises of this country. The annual earnings of the film interests are not far short of a billion dollars at present. It is expected that this new arrangement will raise the figure above that high water mark. A detail of its scope is shown by the expert estimates for an advertising campaign of approximately $600,000 a week."

Heads of the Enterprise.

Besides those already mentioned, the associates in the enterprise include W. O. Bauman, Adam Kessel, and the Western Import Company of London, which has handled the European market for the films these men have prepared. From this personnel, it would seem that the new corporation, established to finance the $2 movie, is an outgrowth of the Mutual Film, of which Mr. Aitken is President. It was said yesterday that he would leave the Mutual to take up the engrossing work of the new enterprise.

Some such coalition was foreshadowed in an advertisement which occupies a prominent page in the current issue of The Saturday Evening Post. Under the caption "Underpaid at $100,000 Each" there is some account of Mr. Griffith, Mr. Ince, and Mr. Sennett. D. W. Griffith is widely known as the man who staged "The Birth of a Nation." He is the chief Director of the Reliance and Majestic companies. Mr. Ince has established a place called Inceville in California and has specialized in the Far West. Mack Sennett is known to the movie fans as the director of the Keystone comedies. The advertisement, which bears the signature of Mr. Aitken, closes with these intentionally significant words:

"From what I know of what is to come the fact that your theatre is headquarters for these brands will be worth thousands of dollars to you within the next few months."

It was explained that since this advertisement was written the scheme had widened in scope, so that the company managing the producers would have its own theatres a-plenty. Some of these will be leased outright and some will be rented on shares.

Herald (N.Y.) June 18

THREE FILM MEN IN BIG COMBINE

Messrs. Griffith, Ince and Sennett to Release Output Through Corporation.

Formation of a new motion picture producing and exhibiting corporation with a capital of $4,000,000, the object of which will be the promotion of the motion picture output of three of the leading directors, D. W. Griffith, who produced "The Birth of a Nation;" Thomas H. Ince, well known producer of Western pictures, and Mack Sennett, long identified with the Keystone Company, was announced yesterday.

H. E. Aitken is president of the new company. It is the purpose of the firm to have a central producing theatre in New York and a circuit throughout the country which will be in competition, as regards the prices of admission, with the legitimate theatres. A standard scale of $2 prices will maintain, according to the announcement.

The headquarters of the firm will be in New York and, it is said, there will be branches in London, Paris, Vienna, Petrograd, Rome, Barcelona and South America.

Messrs. Griffith, Ince and Sennett, each in his particular field, have attained a high mark in motion pictures. Mr. Griffith, even before he produced "The Birth of a Nation" was widely known as the man who invented the "cut-back," the familiar process by which the action of a picture is stopped while some other part of the story is told.

Mr. Ince's plays of Western life have been noteworthy. Mr. Sennett is considered master of the farce picture and it was under his direction that Charles Chaplin and others of the Keystone Company were developed.

American June

WALL ST. IN BIG "MOVIE" COMBINE

$4,000,000 Company Will Be Incorporated to Control Output of Three of World's Foremost Screen Play Directors.

FINANCIAL and theatrical circles were startled yesterday by reports of a powerful Wall Street group which is effecting a combination of motion picture productions to be placed in competition with the principal theatres of the country.

It develops that a company will be incorporated here in a day or two to control the output of the foremost motion picture directors of the world.

H. E. Aitken, president of the company which financed the motion picture sensation, "The Birth of a Nation," is credited with bringing about the deal. He has amalgamated the services of D. W. Griffith, creator of this big picture; Thomas H. Ince, whose work in producing Western scenes is well known, and Mack Sennett, creator of the famous Keystone Comedies. These directors will turn out pictures to be included in weekly programmes in a chain of theatres where the $2 scale of prices will prevail.

A $4,000,000 company has been formed with Mr. Aitken at its head and associated with him will be financiers who are making their entry into the motion picture business. Mr. Aitken yesterday admitted that a combination is forming in which Messrs. Griffith, Ince, Sennett, Bauman, Kessel, Wall Street interests and the Western Import Company of London will be the leading figures.

From a reliable source it is learned that the plan is to make the new organization the largest thing yet conceived to develop the motion picture business. The headquarters will be in New York with branch offices in London, Paris, Vienna, Petrograd, Rome, Barcelona and South America.

The new combination has acquired control of a chain of theatres throughout the world with a central house on Broadway, where the attractions will be first shown.

Prominent stars of the American and European stage have been engaged along with several motion picture stars. Celebrated authors and illustrators will provide Messrs. Griffith, Ince and Sennett with the required material for the screen. Famous composers will supply musical accompaniments to the different stories.

The once lowly "movie" has grown in ten years from a few scattered nickelodeons into a combination that ranks fourth or fifth among the great business enterprises of this country. The annual earnings of the film interests are not far short of $1,000,000,000. It is expected that this new arrangement will raise the figure above the high water mark. A detail of its scope [illegible]

$4,000,000 MOVIE CONCERN FORMED

Sun. June 18

Will Turn Out Own Pictures and Show Them Over Theatrical Route.

H. E. AITKEN IN SCHEME

For the first time in the history of the business motion pictures are to be placed on an equal plane with legitimate theatrical productions. A $4,000,000 company is being formed, with H. E. Aitken at its head, which has acquired the services of D. W. Griffith, Thomas H. Ince and Mack Sennett as producers, who will turn out pictures to be routed throughout the country in a chain of theatres precisely as regular productions have been handled by the leading theatrical producers of New York.

This announcement was semi-officially made yesterday following reports that Mr. Aitken, who is now president of the Mutual Film Company, has been deposed and was to start a new concern of his own. The company will be incorporated in a day or two and the pictures will be routed at the $2 scale of prices.

The combination virtually means a merger of the interests of the New York Motion Picture Corporation, which will sever its connection with the Mutual, the Reliance and Majestic companies, the Keystone Comedy Company and several subsidiaries of these.

Wall Street capital is behind the movement. The new combination will have besides the producers named C. O. Baumann, Adam and Charles Kessel and the Western Import Company of London as leading figures. Headquarters will be in New York with branches in London, Paris, Vienna, Petrograd, Rome, Barcelona and South America.

Control of a chain of theatres throughout the world with a central theatre on Broadway has been acquired, it is announced. The first showing of the pictures will be in New York. Prominent stars of the American and European stage, it is also announced, have been engaged. Messrs. Griffith, Ince and Sennett, the three artistic directors, will supervise all the productions. Each one has long been recognized as preeminent in his respective field. Everything they produce will be routed over the company's chain of theatres.

Striking figures in regard to the financial outlay for the new corporation are disclosed. It is expected that the annual cost of the weekly "programmes," or series of pictures to be produced, will approximate $5,000,000. This is justified by the assertion that at the present day the annual earnings of the film interests are not far from $1,000,000,000, the picture business now being ranked fourth or fifth among the great industries of the United States. It is expected that this new movement will raise the figure above that high water mark.

Although H. E. Aitken refused yesterday to discuss at length the deal, he admitted the formation of the combination. In other quarters there was a tendency to call the undertaking "premature," the idea prevailing that the deal was made for "effect" in the present impending split between the Mutual Film Company, its president, Mr. Aitken, and the New York Motion Picture Corporation.

There was an undercurrent of opinion, seemingly mostly in the minority, that the reported amalgamation would not be definitely consummated and was being used to overawe the Mutual into making certain important concessions relative to Mr. Aitken's position and the New York Motion Picture Corporation.

These reports were not entirely substantiated, but gave much ground for discussion as to how far the newly announced deal would be or had been actually carried.

N.Y. Press. June 18.

NEW MOVIE COMBINE.

Aitken Credited with Bringing About Big Deal.

A new $4,000,000 combination to control the output of the leading motion picture directors has been formed, according to a report yesterday. H. E. Aitken, president of the company which financed "The Birth of a Nation," is credited with bringing about the deal in which Thomas H. Ince, D. W. Griffith and Mack Sennett are some of the leading figures. Aitken yesterday refused to discuss the report, but admitted such a combination is forming.

The headquarters of the organization will be in New York, with offices in London, Paris and other foreign cities. The combination has acquired a chain of theatres throughout the world, it is said, with a central house on Broadway.

Journal of Commerce June 18 1915

NEW FILM COMPANY FORMED.

To Control Output of Prominent Motion Picture Directors.

It is announced that a new company will be incorporated in a few days to control the output of a number of prominent motion picture directors, a $4,000,000 company having already been organized for that purpose, and said to be backed by Wall Street interests.

H. E. Aitkin, president of the company which financed the production of "The Birth of a Nation," will be the head of the new concern and will be associated with him D. W. Griffith, [illegible] country, "The Birth of a Nation," Thomas H. Ince, [illegible] interests known for his work [illegible] $1,000,000,000 at [illegible] frontier scenes, and M[illegible] that this new [illegible] the Keystone [illegible]

BIG MOVIE COMBINE TO MAKE $2 PHOTO PLAYS

Griffiths, Ince and Sennett to Be Directors.

Creation of a chain of theatres across the United States for the presentation of photo plays at regular theatre prices is the plan of a new corporation just launched. To supply these houses with screen dramas that will be worth the prices the services of three of the greatest directors in the photo play world have been combined. D. W. Griffith, director of "The Birth of a Nation"; Thomas H. Ince, director of "The Alien," and Mack Sennett, who originated the Keystone comedies, are interested in the company.

H. E. Aitken, president of the company which financed "The Birth of a Nation," is credited with bringing about the deal. A $4,000,000 company has been formed with Mr. Aitken at its head, and associated with him will be a group of financiers who are now making their entry into the financial end of the motion picture business. It is known that Messrs. Griffith, Ince, Sennett, Baumann, Kessel, and the Western Import Company of London, England, will be other leading figures in the concern.

It is planned to make the new organization the biggest in the motion picture industries. The headquarters will be in New York, with branch offices in London, Paris, Vienna, Petrograd, Rome, Barcelona and South America.

The new combination has acquired control of a chain of theatres through the world, with a central house on Broadway, New York, where the attractions will be given their first hearings. These productions will be put forth on an elaborate scale and are to be presented at the same prices as are charged for the best class of spoken dramas.

The three directors who will supervise the new productions have long been recognized as eminent in their field. Prominent stars of the American and European stage have been engaged along with several favorite motion picture players. Authors and illustrators of note are to provide Messrs. Griffith, Ince and Sennett with material. Skilled composers will work in conjunction with these forces to supply the musical accompaniments to the plays. It is said that already sufficient material has been produced to launch the new campaign.

New York Tribune June 18, 1915

$2 FILMS, PLAN OF REEL COMBINE

$4,000,000 Company to Turn Out Pictures for Houses in U. S., Europe and South America.

Two dollar motion picture shows will become a common feature of American theatrical life if the plans now pending for a combination of several of the most powerful interests in the film play business materialize.

A company, capitalized at $4,000,000, is forming, with H. E. Aitken, who financed "The Birth of a Nation," at its head. This corporation intends to procure the services of D. W. Griffith, producer of "The Birth of a Nation"; Thomas H. Ince, who staged "The Battle of Gettysburg," and Mack Sennett, originator of the "Keystone Comedies."

These directors will turn out pictures which will be displayed in a chain of houses throughout the United States, Europe and South America at regular theatre prices. The headquarters of the concern will be in New York, with branch offices in London, Paris, Vienna, Petrograd, Rome, Barcelona and other chief cities of South America.

The organization of the new company is said to be most extensive and thorough. Under the guidance of the three directors will appear some of the best known actors on the American and European stage. Well known playwrights will contribute scenarios and composers of note will work to supply the musical accompaniment for the film plays.

The central photoplay house of the corporation will be situated on Broadway, and all of the films will have their first run here. It is said that the new directors already have enough pictures on hand to supply the immediate demands of the company. Everything that they hereafter produce will be controlled by the new concern.

New Buildings for Griffith Features

New buildings for printing, developing, washing, drying and cutting negatives and postives are now being erected on the Reliance-Majestic studio grounds in Hollywood, Los Angeles.

In the new buildings will be printed and developed all the prints of the D. W. Griffith features as well as the usual first prints of the Reliance and Majestic daily releases. When these new buildings are completed the capacity of these departments will be 200,000 feet of film per week. William C. Bitzer, head photographer of the Reliance and Majestic, has long since been compelled to increase his own quarters. The new factory gives him still more faciliites. He and Joseph Aller, who has been associated with Mr. Griffith for a number of years, believe that a new era of photoplay development will follow the installation of new devices. This installation has been made possible by the erection of the new buildings.

N. Y. Globe, June 18

BIG MOVING PICTURE CHAIN IS PLANNED

18

Two dollar moving pictures as a regular diet for theatre patrons all over the country, is the ambitious plan of H. E. Aitken, president of "The Birth of a Nation" company, which is presenting that startling feature at the Liberty Theatre, and is crowding the house at regular theatre prices. The plan includes a $4,000,000 company to be financed by Wall Street, with D. W. Griffith, Thomas H. Ince, and Mack Bennet, as the picture producers. The company will be incorporated immediately, as the money has been arranged for.

It is expected that a chain of 600 teatres will be formed, and $5,000,000 be spent each year in the production of great film plays, on a par with "The Birth of a Nation." According to the plans announced from Mr. Aitken's office, headquarters will be in New York with branches in London, Paris, Vienna, Petrograd, Rome, Barcelona and various South American countries.

Besides those already metioned, the associates in the enterprise include W. O. Baumann, Adam Kessel, and the Western Import Company of London, which has handled the European market for films these men have prepared.

BROOKLYN (N. Y.) EAGLE

JUN 18 1915

Stage and Screen

It is reported a new group of forces in Wall Street is effecting a combination of motion picture productions to be placed in competition with the principal theaters of the country. A company will be incorporated here in a day or two to control the output of the foremost motion picture directors of the world. H. E. Aitken, president of the company which financed the motion picture, "The Birth of a Nation," is credited with bringing about the deal. He has amalgamated the services of D. W. Griffith, the creator of this big picture, Thomas H. Ince, and Mack Sennett, creator of Keystone comedies. These directors will turn out pictures which will be included in weekly programmes in a chain of theaters where the $2 scale of prices will prevail. A $4,000,000 comedy has been formed, with Mr. Aitken at its head, and associated with him will be a group of financiers who are making their entry into the financial end of the motion picture business. Prominent stars of the American and European stage have been engaged, along with several motion picture stars. Celebrated authors and illustrators will provide Griffith, Ince and Sennett with the required material to be placed upon the screen. The annual earnings of the film interests are not far short of a billion dollars at present. It is expected that this new arrangement will raise the figure above that high-water mark. A detail of its scope is shown by the estimates for an advertising campaign of approximately $400,000 a year.

SAN FRANCISCO (Cal.) BULLETIN

JUNE 17, 1915

"Clansman" Photoplay to Return to Alcazar

D. W. Griffith's marvelous spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation; or, The Clansman," based on the remarkable novel by Thomas Dixon, is coming back to the Alcazar theater next week for a special limited season engagement. It will open at the matinee on next Monday afternoon, June 21, and from then on it will be given twice daily, once in the afternoon and once in the evening, and again [illegible] The Alcazar prices, [illegible] the same as on the occasion of its showing here, [illegible] seats for the matinees [illegible]

$4,000,000 "MOVIES" MAY CAUSE HOT FIGHT

18

Aitken and Griffith Announce They Will Have Great Picture House Chain.

Harry E. Aitken and D. W. Griffith, producers under the name of the Epoch Producing Company of "The Birth of a Nation," announced last night that they are organizing a company, to be incorporated at $4,000,000, to put a chain of motion picture houses across the continent, with a central theatre on Broadway. Seat prices will range from $2 down.

With the news of this declaration of war against theatres presenting plays came tidings that the Shuberts have leased the Metropolitan Opera House in Philadelphia, and intend to have a string of pretentious "movie" houses in New York, Philadelphia, Boston and Chicago next year. A Broadway theatre, the Boston Opera House, the Metropolitan in Philadelphia and probably the Auditorium in Chicago will be used. Lee Shubert said a high class programme, such as was presented recently at the Hippodrome, would be in effect at these houses, with music and spectacles in addition to feature pictures.

In the announcement from Aitken's office it was said that "a new group of powerful forces in Wall Street is effecting a combination of motion picture productions. This, and the fact that the new company says it will have a Broadway house, was considered significant, in view of the fact that Crawford Livingston and Felix Kahn, brokers, have control of the Rialto Theatre, which will be opened as a high class "movie" house in the fall on the site of Hamerstein's Victoria.

The leading figures in the combination, it is said, are Aitken, President of several film companies; Griffith, Thoms H. Ince, Mack Sennett, Director of the Keystone comedies; C. O. Baumann and Charles Kessel of the New York Motion Picture Corporation and the Western Import Company of London.

Well known authors and illustrators will supply the material for the pictures, it is announced, and prominent stars from the motion picture and "legitimate" [illegible] signed.

VARIETY (New York City)

JUN 18 1915

McINTOSH AFTER "NATION."

Negotiations are under way between D. W. Griffith and Chris Brown, the latter representing the Hugh McIntosh interests, for the Australian rights to "The Birth of a Nation" film. If the plans go through, McIntosh will play the spectacular film in his larger houses at a $2.00 admission scale, which will set a record for Australia.

McIntosh has played "Cabiria" throughout his Australian circuit, and the success of that picture at an increased admission suggested the prospective engagement of the Griffith film.

Globe, June 18

THREE BACK $4,000,000 MOTION PICTURE SCHEME

Formation of a new motion picture producing and exhibiting corporation with a capital of $4,000,000, the object of which will be the promotion of the motion picture output of three of the leading directors, D. W. Griffith, who produced "The Birth of a Nation;" Thomas H. Ince, well known producer of Western pictures, and Mack Sennett, long identified with the Keystone Company, was announced to-day.

H. E. Aitken is president of the new company. It is the purpose of the firm to have a central producing theatre in New York and a circuit throughout the country which will be in competition, as regards the prices of admission, with the legitimate theatres. A standard scale of $2 prices will maintain, according to the announcement.

The headquarters of the firm will be in New York and, it is said, there will be branches in London, Paris, Vienna, Petrograd, Rome, Barcelona and South America.

World, June 18, 1915

FILMS ON A LARGE SCALE.

A company with a capital of $4,000,000, backed by powerful interests in Wall Street, is soon to be incorporated to control the output of some of the foremost motion picture directors in the film business and to enter into direct competition with the regular $2 theatres. H. E. Aitken, President of the company which financed "The Birth of a Nation," is credited with bringing the deal about. He has amalgamated the services of D. W. Griffith, Thomas H. Ince and Mack Sennett. These directors will turn out pictures which will be included in a weekly programme in a chain of theatres where the $2 scale will prevail. It is stated that houses have been acquired, not only in this country, but abroad. Included among these is a theatre [illegible]

BROOKLYN (N. Y.) CITIZEN

Date JUN 18 1915

MILLIONS IN NEW MOVIE COMBINE

Two Dollar Scale of Prices to Prevail.

$4,000,000 COMPANY IS FORMED BY H. E. AITKEN

D. W. Griffith, T. H. Ince and Mack Sennett Directors—Hundreds of Theatres in This Country and Europe Secured.

18

Theatrical circles were startled to-day by reports of a new group of powerful forces in Wall street who are effecting a combination of motion picture productions. A company will be incorporated at once to control the output of the foremost motion picture directors in the world.

H. E. Aitken, president of the company which financed "The Birth of a Nation," brought about the deal. He has amalgamated the services of D. W. Griffith, the creator of this big picture; Thomas H. Ince, whose work in reproducing frontier scenes in the West is well known, and Mack Sennett, creator of the world-famous Keystone comedies. These directors will turn out pictures which are to be included in weekly programmes in a chain of theaters where the $2 scale of prices will prevail.

A $4,000,000 company has been formed with Mr. Aitken at its head and associated with him will be a group of financiers who are making their entry into the financial end of the motion picture business. Mr. Aitken yesterday admitted that a combination is forming in which Messrs. Griffith, Ince, Sennett, Baumann, Kessel, new Wall Street interests and the Western Import Company of London, England, will be the leading figures.

It was said that $20,000,000 had been pledged to the support of the undertaking and that this would make possible an expenditure of $5,000,000 a year in the production of fifty pictures. This would give an average of $100,000 investment for each film and would allow the producers to do big things on a big scale—particularly in the photographing of great spectacles too large for any stage on Broadway.

The three movie directors named in the announcements of the new enterprise are now on the Pacific Coast, each at work on a new film, and Mr. Aitken is here entering into negotiations for theaters. The plan calls for the taking over of between 500 and 600 houses, 400 in this country and the rest abroad.

The headquarters will be in New York, with branch offices in London, Paris, Vienna, Petrograd, Rome, Barcelona and South America. The new combination has acquired control of a chain of theaters throughout the world with a central house on Broadway, New York, where the attractions will be given their first hearing.

NEW YORK [illegible]

JUN 18 1915

BIG MOVING PICTURE [illegible]

Well-Known Producers Have $4,000,000 Company in Wall Street.

Wal Street men of wealth are [illegible] a combination of motion picture productions to be placed in competition with the principal theatres of the country. A company will be incorporated here in a day or two to control the output of the foremost motion-picture directors in the world. H. E. Aitken has brought about the deal, and has secured the services of D. W. Griffith, the creator of one of the biggest motion-picture of the day; Thomas H. Ince, whose work in reproducing frontier scenes in the West is well known, and Mack Sennett, creator of the popular Keystone comedies. These directors will turn out pictures which are to be included in weekly programmes in a chain of theatres where the $2 scale of prices will prevail. A $4,000,000 company has been formed with Mr. Aitken at its head, and associated with him will be a group of financiers, who are, for the first time, going into the motion-picture business, in which Griffith, Ince, Sennett, Baumann, Kessel, Wall Street interests and the Western Import Company, of London, England, will be the leading figures.

It is planned to make the new organization the largest thing yet conceived to develop the motion-picture industry. The headquarters will be in New York, with branch offices in London, Paris, Vienna, Petrograd, Rome, Barcelona, and South America. The new combination has acquired control of a chain of theatres through the world, with a central house on Broadway, where the attractions will be given their first hearing. These productions will be made on an elaborate scale, and are to be presented at the same prices as are charged for the best class of spoken drama.

The directors who will superviso the new productions have long been recognized as leaders in their respective fields. Prominent stars of the American and Eupropean stage have been engaged along with several motion-picture stars. Well-known authors and illustrators will provide the required material to be placed upon the screen. Famous composers will work in conjunction with these forces to supply the musical accompaniments to the different stories. The new directors are declared to have already produced sufficient material to supply the organization's immediate demands for the new campaign. Everything they produce will be under the exclusive control of the new company, and will be routed over the chain of theatres to be merged into the combination. The annual earnings of the film interests of the country are not far short of a billion dollars at present. It is expected that this new arrangement will raise the figure above that mark.

BROOKLYN, (N. Y.) TIMES

Date 18 1915

NEWS OF THE THEATRES

18

A CIRCUIT of between 500 and 600 theatres, starting in New York and stretching across the country, and devoted exclusively to the presentation of motion pictures at a charge of $2 for the best seats, is the ambitious plan of H. E. Aitken, President of the company which financed "The Birth of a Nation." To make this program feasible, he announces, he has gone to [illegible] for their money, and to D. W. Griffith, Thomas H. Ince and Mack Sennett for their pictures. A company with a capital of $4,000,000 will soon be incorporated.

At Mr. Aitken's office it was said this morning that [illegible] 000,000 had been pledged to the support of the undertaking, and that this would make possible an expenditure of $5,000,000 a year in the production of fifty pictures. This would give an average of $100,000 investment for each film, and would allow the producers to do big things on a big scale—particularly in the photographing of great spectacles too large for any stage on Broadway. It has been said that "The Birth of a Nation," the film now on exhibition at the Liberty, represented an outlay of $300,000, of which roughly one-third went into the cost of production.

PORTLAND (Ore.) [illegible]

708

A BIT OF "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" REPRODUCED IN PORTLAND STREETS.

Folks who were out on the street yesterday watching the many doings connected with the Moose gathering were startled by a sight that seemed to re-vivify the Civil war past of fifty years ago. Two young women in crinolines seated opposite a gallant Federal soldier and a bold handsome Confederate cadet were leisurely driving in an old fashioned barouche across the side of which was the emblem "The Birth of a Nation."

"Can it be a motion picture?" was asked eagerly by many who thought the motion picture people were having some scenes snapped during the crowded time.

It was not a motion picture however, but the advertisement of one of the greatest motion picture spectacles in the world, namely "The Birth of a Nation" which is now running in Portland at the Tremont theatre to packed houses twice a day. The [illegible] were dressed as the [illegible] captained by Frank J. [illegible] publicity promoter of wide [illegible] in all parts of the country.

David W. Griffith, who [illegible] Birth of a Nation," [illegible] that the future of dramas [illegible] in the screen rather than [illegible] fashioned stage drama. [illegible] 1914, he set to work [illegible] plans for this great picture [illegible] of expression seeking to [illegible] truths and beauties of life [illegible] made such progress [illegible] time as motion photography [illegible] this is because motion [illegible] realism and life itself [illegible] of the impulse of the [illegible] tion.

Griffith's poetic [illegible] across dreamy dales [illegible] trees, back to distant [illegible] their snow crested tops [illegible] sunlight. It reaches [illegible] waves of the deep blue [illegible] same to the end of the [illegible] one of these far away [illegible] forth the young [illegible] progresses until she [illegible] as a teardrop [illegible] before it falls to [illegible] in a flash you [illegible] on them nations [illegible] death thus [illegible]

...D. W. Griffith's ...of a Nation," ...reaches the 234th ... production in New York ...ting arrangements made ...keep the theatre on an ...e and make it one of the ...in town. This work un... ...d diversely the most ab... ...f historical and romantic ...shown. The historical in... ...erwoven with threads of ...ture, and a score of har... ...nship to the several thou... ...of the drama lends in... ...presentation.

...Liberty ...

This ... history and romance, depicting in the new and graphic form of art which it establishes, the stirring incidents of our national development which cluster about the rise and adjustment of the African slavery question has been the sensational success of the year.

Special arrangements have been made to continue the run through the summer season and advance bookings for the next eight weeks can be arranged.

Runs Into Summer

The Liberty Theatre holds into the summer with D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation." The current week reaches the 234th presentation of the production in New York.

Ventilating arrangements made early in the run keep the theatre on an even temperature and make it one of the coolest places in town.

World. June 19, 1915

"The Birth of a Nation," at the Liberty Theatre, reaches its 234th presentation on Monday. A new ventilating system keeps the theatre cool.

N. Y. Journal & Commerce June 19, 1915

"The Birth of a Nation" has thus far been presented ... times at the Liberty Theatre and there is still no visible slackening of public interest in D. W. Griffith's great spectacle. Special ventilation arrangements made early in the run serve to keep the theatre cool and comfortable during the hot days.

N. Y. Commercial June 19, 1915

The Liberty Theatre holds into the summer with D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation." The current week reaches the 234th presentation of the production in New York. Special ventilating arrangements made early in the run keep the theatre on an even temperature and make it the coolest place in town.

THE BEST MOVING PICTURE

LIBERTY.—The Liberty Theatre holds into the summer with D. W. Griffith's marvellous spectacle "The Birth of a Nation." Next week sees the 234th presentation of the production in New York. Special ventilating arrangements made early in the run keep the theatre on an even temperature and make it the coolest place in town. This work unfolds vividly and diversely the most absorbing tale of historical and romantic interest ever shown. The earlier episodes lead up to the civil war and reach their high points in reproductions of Sherman's March to the Sea, the last struggle before Petersburg, the meeting of Lee and Grant at Appomattox, and the assassination of President Lincoln in Ford's Theatre.

...entire summer. If you haven't been in, you are cheating yourself.

The Billboard, Cincinnati, Ohio June 19, 1915

After one of the greatest campaigns conducted against the irrational censorship, The Birth of a Nation got under way at the Illinois in Chicago, and its rumored J. J. McCarthy was right on the firing line day and night. It was a splendid triumph to achieve from those who don't realize that the life of Abraham Lincoln is further molded into the lives of those Americans who love to brush up their country's history knowledge with the exhibition of this feature film.

Following an ...

...FROM Review
...W YORK ~~TRIBUNE~~
6-19-15

$4,000,000 ...PORATION HAS ...G MOVIE PLAN

...ken of the Mutual Wants ...a Out Weekly Releases ...of $2 Features.

18

...HAIN OF THEATRES.

...the Concern Will Have ...uses All Over the World.

...l and theatrical circles were ... this week by reports of a ... of powerful forces in Wall ...o are effecting a combina... ...otion picture productions to ...in competition with the prin... ...tres of the country.

...ops that a company will be ...ted here in a day or two to ...e output of the foremost mo... ...re directors in the world.

...itken, president of the com... ...ch financed "The Birth of a ... is credited with bringing ... deal. He has amalgamated ...ces of D. W. Griffith, the cre... ...this big picture; Thomas H. ...se work in reproducing fron... ...s in the West is well known, ...k Sennett, creator of the fa... ...ystone comedies. The direc... ...turn out pictures which are ...cluded in weekly programs in ...f theatres where the $2 scale ... will prevail.

...00,000 company has been ...with Mr. Aitken at its head. ...ociated with him will be a ... financiers who are making ...try into the financial end of ...n picture business. Mr. Aitken ...that a combination is forming ...h Messrs. Griffith, Ince, Sen... ...aumann, Kessel, new Wall ...terests, and the Western Im... ...pany of London, England, will ...ading figures.

...an is to make the new organ... ...he largest thing yet conceived ...op the motion picture indus... ...he headquarters will be in New ...ith branch offices in London, ...Vienna, Petrograd, Rome, Bar... ...and South America.

...w combination says it has ac... ...control of a chain of theatres ...out the world with a central ...n Broadway, New York, where ...actions will be given their first ... These productions will be put ...n an elaborate scale, and are ...resented at the same prices as ...rged for the best class of spoken

...ree directors who will super... ... new productions have long ...ognized as pre-eminent in their ...e fields. Prominent stars of ...rican and European stage have ...aged, along with several mo... ...ture stars. Celebrated authors ...istrators will provide Messrs. ...Ince and Sennett with the re... ...material to be placed upon the ... Famous composers will work ...junction with these forces to ...the musical accompaniments to ...erent stories. It is said that ...y directors have already pro... ...sufficient material to supply the ...ation's immediate demands for ...ng the new campaign. Every... ...hey produce will be under the ...e control of the new company ...ll be routed over the chain of ...s to be merged into the combi...

The once lowly "movie" has grown in ten years from a few scattered nickelodeons into a combination that ranks fourth or fifth among the great business enterprises of this country. The annual earnings of the film interests are not far short of a billion dollars at present. It is expected that this new arrangement will raise the figure above that highwater mark. A detail of its scope is shown in the expert estimates for an advertising campaign of approximately $400,000 a week.

Mr. Aitken at present is president of the Mutual Film Corporation, but it is said that he will retire from that position to devote all his time to the new concern.

N. Y. Mail June 19, 1915

"The Birth of a Nation" ... its 200th performance at the Liberty Theatre this week, and the run has been extended for the entire summer. If you haven't been in you are cheating yourself.

BROOKLYN, (N. Y.) TIMES
June 19, 1915

MANHATTAN ATTRACTIONS

"The Birth of a Nation"

The Liberty Theatre holds into the summer with D. W. Griffith's marvelous spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation." The coming week reaches the 234th presentation of the production in New York. Special ventilating arrangements keep the theatre on an even low temperature.

This work unfolds vividly a most absorbing tale of historical and romantic interest. The earlier episodes lead up to the Civil War and reach their high points in reproductions of Sherman's March to the Sea, the last struggle before Petersburg, the meeting of Lee and Grant at Appomattox and the assassination of President Lincoln in Ford's Theatre. The succeeding narrative reveals the intensity of the reconstruction days and the reign of the carpetbaggers, the rise of the Ku Klux Klans and their efforts to reclaim the South.

The historical incidents are interwoven with threads of love and adventure and a score of harmonious relationship to the several thousand details of the drama lends intensity to the presentation.

Telegraph June 20

Harry Harris, treasurer of Coliseum Theatre, has rented "The Birth of a Nation" film for an eight weeks' run. It will be shown at Seattle commencing June 27 for five weeks, and finish with three weeks at Spokane, Wash.

Tribune June 20

The Liberty Theatre holds into the summer with D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation." The current week reaches the 234th presentation of the production in New York. Special ventilating arrangements made early in the run keep the theatre on an even temperature and make it the coolest place in town.

Telegraph June 20

The Liberty Theatre holds into the Summer with D. W. Griffith's spectacle "The Birth of a Nation." The current week reaches the 234th presentation of the piece in New York. Special ventilating arrangements made early in the run keep the theatre on an even temperature and make it one of the coolest places in town.

"The Birth of a Nation" unfolds vividly and diversely a most absorbing tale of historical and romantic interests. The earlier episodes lead up to the Civil War and reach their high points in reproductions of Sherman's march to the sea, the last struggle before Petersburg, the meeting of Lee and Grant at Appomattox and the assassination of President Lincoln in Ford's Theatre. The succeeding narrative reveals the dramatic intensity of the Reconstruction days and the reign of the carpet baggers.

American June 20

The Liberty Theatre holds into the Summer with D. W. Griffith's marvelous spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation." The current week reaches the 234th presentation of the production in New York. Special ventilating arrangements made early in the run, keep the theatre on an even temperature and make it the coolest place in town.

This work unfolds vividly and diversely the most absorbing tale of historical and romantic interest ... [illegible]

PORTLAND (Me.) PRESS
JUNE 19, 1915

...in a new comedy entitled "The New Butler."

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

A development no one would have believed possible a few years ago is seen in the establishment at the Tremont theatre, Boston, of D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" as a first class theatrical attraction crowding the house at "two dollar top" prices. The filmed spectacle is now in its fifth week, and patrons enthusiastically declare that it gives a bigger money's worth of entertainment than any of the old-fashioned shows.

"The Birth of a Nation" is indeed more than a film, for nearly one hundred persons are employed in the music and the mechanical effects during the unreeling of this 12,000 feet of celluloid; yet never a word is spoken from the stage during the two and three-quarters hours' performance. Mr. Griffith's photo entertainment combines a pictorial survey of Civil war history and of Reconstruction days with a love romance of the North and South. The battle scenes, engaging thousands of combatants drilled with the well known Griffith elan and realism, are particularly effective.

After seeing this marvellous production, many students of the subject predict that the historical novels of the future will be told in pictures rather than by words. Certainly the "indoor drama" cannot henceforth hope to cope with the photo play, so far as spectacular features are concerned.

The daily matinee performances given at 2.10 p. m. are exactly the same as those at night. Besides affording the advantage of cheaper prices, they give opportunity to out-of-town people to include a visit to the Tremont theatre with a shopping excursion, the late afternoon trains bringing them back from the city in time for supper.

Press. June 20, 1915

The Liberty Theatre holds into the summer with D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," and the current week reaches the two hundred and thirty-fourth presentation of the production in New York. Special ventilating arrangements made early in the run keep the theatre on an even temperature. This picture unfolds vividly an absorbing tale of historical and romantic interest. The earlier episodes lead up to the civil war and reach their high points in reproductions of Sherman's March to the Sea, the last struggle before Petersburg, the meeting of Lee and Grant at Appomattox and the assassination of President Lincoln in Ford's Theatre.

World. June 20,

To-night will see the 234th performance of "The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's remarkable motion picture, based on "The Clansman," Thomas Dixon's novel. The film is seen twice daily at the Liberty Theatre.

ST. PAUL (Minn.) NEWS
JUNE 20, 1915

$2 MOVIE IS SUCCESS

"Birth of a Nation" Celebrates 200th New York Performance.

The $2 motion picture seems to have come to stay, for "The Birth of a Nation"—the ... movie—has celebrated its 200th performance in New York.

It is announced that more than 2[illegible],000,000 persons have seen the big picture in New York alone. Of course, not all paid the $2 price—that is only the very highest ... seats.

CABLE ADDRESS CLIPBURO
CLIPPING FROM Chicago
NEW YORK ~~TRIBUNE~~
JUN 19 1915

"NATION" PASSES TWO HUNDREDTH PERFORMANCE.

Wednesday last, D. W. Griffith's great spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," passed its two hundredth performance at the Liberty Theatre, in this city, setting up a record for the first $2 motion picture production which will likely stand for a long time.

This intensely interesting drama of history and romance, depicting in the new and graphic form of art which it establishes, the stirring incidents of our national development which cluster about the rise and adjustment of the African slavery question, has been the sensational success of the year. After an unexpected run it remains as potent as ever in its public appeal, and the Liberty has been crowded continuously since the engagement began there on March 3.

COLUMBUS (O.) JOURNAL
JUNE 19, 1915

Press. Portland Me June 20, 1915

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

A notable victory was won in Boston, Mass., on Wednesday, June 2, by "The Birth of a Nation" management that has been presenting the play at the Tremont theatre in spite of the determined opposition of a group of white and colored agitators. The opponents of the play jammed through the Legislature the previous week the so-called "Three-Men" censor bill, which provided that any play could be stopped without any reason being assigned and simply at the pleasure of two out of the three following officials: the mayor, the chief justice of the Municipal court, and the police commissioner. The bill was promptly signed by Governor Walsh, and the opponents joyfully looked forward to the end they had aimed at, namely, the driving of the Griffith spectacle out of Boston.

Press. June 20, 1915

$4,000,000 CHAIN OF PICTURE THEATRES

Company to Control Over 600 Houses, Both in This Country and Abroad.

With plans already under way for the creation of a world-wide chain of at least 600 theatres devoted to the production of high grade motion pictures, a $4,000,000 company has been formed, headed by H. E. Aitken, president of the firm which financed "The Birth of a Nation."

At the office of Aitken it was said that some $20,000,000 has been pledged to support the extensive undertaking. This amount, it was pointed out, will make possible an expenditure of $5,000,000 for producing fifty photo-plays of the same quality as "The Birth of a Nation." In all the theatres in the chain a uniform charge of $2 for the best seats will prevail. Of the 600 theatres to be linked together, 400 will be in this country, the rest being abroad.

Aitken has brought together as directers three men who stand foremost, probably, in the film ranks. They are D. W. Griffith, creator of "The Birth of a Nation"; Mack Sennett and Thomas H. Ince. Griffith is the chief director for the Reliance and Majestic companies, and, like Ince and Sennett, is at present directing film players on the Pacific coast. Sennett is director of the Keystone comedies, and Ince is best known for his work in reproducing frontier scence in the West. Their co-operation, it is expected, will result in raising film standards to an incomparable level.

While headquarters for the new organization will be established in New York, where the home theatre of the chain will be, branch offices will be operated in London, Paris, Vienna, Petrograd, Rome, Barcelona and South American cities. Associates of Aitken in the enterprise will include Adam Kessel, W. O. Baumann and the Western Import Company of England. A group of financiers whose names at present are withheld are making their entry into the financial end of the picture field with the financing of this project. Aitken himself arrived in New York last week to complete negotiations for theatres.

Enthusiasm dominated the principals of the new combination when they were asked yesterday to discuss the prospects for success. Apparently there is no doubt that the chain is to succeed.

"The once lowly movie has grown in ten years," said one, "from a few scattered nickelodeons to a combination that ranks fourth or fifth among the great business enterprises of this country. The annual earnings of the film interests are not far short of $1,000,000,000 at present. It is expected that this new arrangement will raise the figure above ...

For Two-Dollar Movies.

Two-dollar motion picture shows will become a common feature of American theatrical life if the plans now pending for a combination of several of the most powerful interests in the film play business materialize.

A company, capitalized at $4,000,000, is forming, with H. E. Aitken, who financed "The Birth of a Nation," at its head. This corporation intends to procure the services of D. W. Griffith, producer of "The Birth of a Nation"; Thomas H. Ince, who staged "The Battle of Gettysburg," and Mack Sennett, originator of the "Keystone Comedies." These men are perhaps the three most gifted movie directors in America.

These directors will turn out pictures which will be displayed in a chain of houses throughout the United States, Europe and South America at regular theater prices. The headquarters of the concern will be in New York, with ...

brother of Hedwig, is directing the Blanche Sweet picture for the Lasky company.

N. Y. Telegram June 20, 1915

The Liberty Theatre holds into the summer with D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation." The current week reaches the 234th presentation of the production in New York. Special ventilating arrangements made early in the run keep the theatre on an even temperature and make it the coolest place in town.

MAE MARSH
"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"
LIBERTY THEATRE

Wisconsin Milwaukee, Wis. June 19, 1915

BIGGEST PHOTOPLAY COMPANY

"The Birth of a Nation," ... with being ... photoplay ... produced in this country, and ... eastern critics to exceed even the much praised "Cabiria," comes to the Davidson for an engagement opening Saturday night, July 3.

"The Birth of a Nation" is the ... work of David Ward Griffith, foremost of American photoplay producers, ... accredited with having brought this form of entertainment to the position it now holds. The offering is in twelve reels. It is based upon Thomas Dixon's novels, "The Clansman" and "The Leopard's Spots," but it is more than that. The ... stories form simply the theme of the film play. In it Mr. Griffith has attempted to portray the struggle of the north and south during the war of the Rebellion and the chaos that followed the period of reconstruction.

The cast is an unusual one. There are Henry Walthall, Mae Marsh, Lillian Gish, Mary Alden, Spottiswoode Aitken, Wallace Reed, Ralph Lewis, Lillian Gish, Robert Harron, Donald Crisp and others. More than 10,000 people and 3,000 horses were employed in filming the scenes.

"The Birth of a Nation" has met ... stringent opposition ... staged, but ... all enter...

MISS MAE MARSH in "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" LIBERTY THEATRE-WITZEL PHOTO

There is but slight abatement of interest in the elaborate picture play "The Birth of a Nation," produced by D. W. Griffith in the Liberty Theatre, where it has been presented more than two hundred times. In this play the history of the United States before and following the civil war is pictured realistically and the activities of the Ku Klux Klan are made the subject of several parts of the film. Miss Mae Marsh and Miss Lillian Gish have important rôles.

BROOKLYN, (N. Y.) CITIZEN

Date ..... JUN 2 0 1915

any hat. One cannot be too severe. It is clean-cut work, perfect in its smallest details, that makes for perfect illusion on the screen. I am [illegible] for such work."—Henrietta Crosman in Century.

THE LIBERTY THEATRE

234th Presentation of "The Birth of a Nation."

The Liberty Theatre holds into the summer with D. W. Griffith's marvelous spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation." The current week reaches the 234th presentation of the production in New York. Special ventilating arrangements made early in the run keep the theatre on an even temperature and make it the coolest place in town.

This work unfolds vividly and diversely the most absorbing tale of historical and romantic interest ever shown. The earlier episodes lead up to the Civil War and reach their high points in reproductions of Sherman's march to the sea, the last struggle before Petersburg, the meeting of Lee and Grant at Appomattox and the assassination of President Lincoln in Ford's Theatde. The succeeding narrative reveals the dramatic intensity of the reconstruction days and the reign of the carpet-baggers, the rise of the Ku-Klux Klans and their thrilling efforts to reclaim the South. The tale develops allegorically into an apotheosis of our national unity and the establishment of peace.

The historical incidents are interwoven with threads of love and adventure, and a score of harmonious relationships to the several thousand details of the drama lend intensity to the presentation.

BROOKLYN (N. Y.) EAGLE

Date ..... JUN 2 0 1915

The Liberty Theater holds into the summer with D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation." The current week reaches the 234th presentation. Special ventilating arrangements made early in the run keep the theater at an even temperature.

SEATTLE (Wash.) TIMES
JUNE 18, 1915

Film Hailed as "Eighth Wonder"

"The Birth of a Nation," which is soon to be shown in Seattle, has been called by critics, "the eighth wonder of the world." Those who have seen this wonderful production since its initial performance in New York a few weeks ago say that it is all that and more. Said Louis Sherwin in The New York Evening Globe: "Here is beyond question the most extraordinary picture that has ever been made—or seen—in America so far."

BALTIMORE (Md.) SUN

OF MOVING PICTURE FEATURES

To Spend $5,000,000 A Year On 50 Pictures—Dr. W. Griffith To Be Director.

A CHAIN of theatres beginning in New York and stretching across the country and devoted to the presentation of motion pictures at a charge of $2 for the best seats—this is the program announced from the office of H. E. Aitken, president of the company which financed "The Birth of a Nation." The sponsors have gone to Wall street for their money and to D. W. Griffith, Thomas H. Ince and Mack Bennett for their pictures. A company with a capital of $4,000,000 will be incorporated.

Some $20,000,000 had been pledged to the support of the undertaking, it is announced, and this will make possible an expenditure of $5,000,000 a year in the production of 50 pictures. This would give an average of $100,000 investment for each film and would allow the producers to do big things on a big scale—particularly in the photographing of spectacles too large for any stage on Broadway. "The Birth of a Nation" represented an outlay of $300,000.

600 Theatres In The Circuit.

The three "movie" directors named are now on the Pacific Coast at work on new films. The plan calls for the taking over of between 500 and 600 houses—400 in this country and the rest abroad.

The announcement speaks glibly of headquarters in New York and branch offices in London, Paris, Vienna, Petrograd, Rome, Barcelona and South America. It speaks also of eminent stars of the American and European stage already engaged, of motion picture actors retained for the forthcoming productions, of celebrated authors at work on scenarios and of celebrated composers at work on incidental music.

"The once lowly 'movie'," so runs the statement, "has grown in 10 years from a few scattered nickelodeons into a combination that ranks fourth or fifth among the great business enterprises of this country. The annual earnings of the film interests are not far short of $1,000,000,000 at present. It is expected that this new arrangement will raise the figure above that high-water mark. A detail of its scope is shown in the expert estimates for an advertising campaign of approximately $400,000 a week."

Besides those already mentioned, the associates in the enterprise include W. O. Baumann, Adam Kessel and the Western Import Company, of London. From this personnel it would seem that the new corporation is an outgrowth of the Mutual Film, of which Mr. Aitken is president.

Some such coalition was foreshadowed in an advertisement which occupies a page in a weekly magazine.

Under the caption "Underpaid at $100,000 Each" there is some account of Griffith, Ince and Bennett. D. W. Griffith is the chief director of the Reliance and Majestic companies. Mr. Ince has established a place called Inceville in California and has specialized in the Far West. Mack Bennett is known to the "movie" fans as the director of the Keystone comedies.

Tribune, June 20, 1915

A realistic battle scene in "The Birth of a Nation," showing thousands of soldiers fighting over an area of eight square miles.

LOCAL AM

BIRTH OF A NATIO

Folks who were out on the street yesterday watching the many dolnes connected with the Moose gathering were startled by a sight that seemed to be from the Civil War past of 60 years ago. Two young women in crinolines seated opposite a gallant Federal soldier and a bold handsome Confederate cadet were leisurely driving in an old fashioned barouche across the side of which was the emblem The Birth of a Nation.

"Can it be a motion picture?" was asked eagerly by many who thought the motion picture people were having some scenes snapped during the crowded time.

It was not a motion picture however, it the advertisement of one of the greatest motion picture spectacles in the world, namely The Birth of a Nation, which is now running in Boston at the Tremont Theater to packed house twice a day. The party who were dressed as the program girls and cadets are dressed in the Boston play, were here to distribute reading matter and formal invitations. They were captained by Frank A. Johnson, a publicity promoter of wide experience and parts of the Country.

Mr. D. W. Griffith, who made The Birth of a Nation spectacle, believes that the future of dramatic art lies in the screen rather than in the old fashioned stage drama. On April 1st, 1914, he set to work laying the ground plans for this great picture. No form of expression seeking to reveal the truths and beauties of life has ever made such progress within a given time as modern photography. Perhaps this is because motion is the essence of realism and life itself is but a part of the impulse of the universe, motion.

Griffith's poetic imagination stretches across dreamy dales, through swaying trees, back to distant mountains with their snow crested tops bearing in the sunlight. It reaches across the lapping waves of the deep blue sea, to what seems to be the end of the universe. From one of them far away vistas he takes a young girl and shows her whose with she comes so close as on a tandem quiver on her cheek. In order it calls to her cheek. And then in a flash you see great plains and in them soldiers grappling in their death throes and worlds battling for supreme supremacy. We say with pride that an American invented the technique required to produce them.—Advertisement.

CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK ~~WORLD~~
Date JUN 23 1915

...'s spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," has passed its 200th performance at the Liberty and still doing big business at $2 schedule.

...ues June 21, 1915

...OPPER IN THE MOVIES.

...n Said to Have Long Contract with Noted Comedian.

...Wolf Hopper has surrendered to ...movies and for the next twelve ...s will do all his work for the ...it of the camera. This is the sub... ...e of an announcement issued yes... ...y from the office of H. E. Aitken, ... of the Griffith-Ince-Sennett or... ...ation, which proposes to take over ...in of theatres across the country ...he exhibition of the $2 movie. ... announcement reports a year's ...act just signed, with the stipula... ...that the film producers can extend ... at the end of the first year, they ...o minded. It also states of the ...ous sum of $125,000 for the year's ... Reports of the rewards for serv... ...en the stage are generally taken ... about a cellar of salt, but the ...on picture business is done with ...sums.

... first spectacle in which Mr. ...per is to disport himself will be a ...n version of the opera "Don ...ote," with the comedian in the ...rôle. Film productions of "Wang," ...jandrum," and other favorites ... planned. If the motion picture ... is to take all Mr. Hopper's time, ...rday's announcement may mean ...the plans for a Fall revival of ...ng" have been abandoned, as far ...r. Hopper is concerned. A pro... ...on of that entertainment without ...seems improbable.

...e & Commercial

... Wolf Hopper is the first of ... American stars to be secured for ... new Griffith-Ince-Sennett com... ...tion, which is to present $2 mo... ... pictures in a chain of theatres ...ughout this country and Europe. ... Hopper will devote his exclusive ...vices for one year to a series of ...tacular productions, which will ... handled in person by D. W. ...ffith. This contract carries with ...n option for a further call on ... Hopper's services. Mr. Hopper ... receive a salary of $125,000 a year, ... will be seen in some of the finest ...entations Mr. Griffith is now ...nning for production. The first ...tacle in which the tall comedian ... to appear will be a screen version ...the opera "Don Quixote," with Mr. ...pper in the title rôle. One of the ...most composers in the country ... synchronize the score to suit the ...entures of the redoubtable knight ... Cervantes's fancy, together with ... inimitable aid, Sancho Panza.

...egraph June 21

...Wolf Hopper in Films.

...g to an announcement made ... De Wolf Hopper is the first of ...rican stars to be signed by the ...ffith-Ince-Sennett combination, ...as incorporated last week and ...tends to produce $2 motion pic... ... a chain of theatres throughout ...try. It is said that Hopper will ...n screen productions of many of ...esses with which he has been ..., such as "Wang," "Panjandrum," "The Merry Wives of Windsor" ...rs.

...ior to signing the new contract ...had been engaged for a revival ...g," but secured his release. It ...y reported that the film enterprise ...his for a salary of over $100,000 a

...Brooklyn, (N. Y.) Standard-Union

JUN 21 1915

...magnificent souvenir in the form ...an illustrated booklet, has been ...ed by the management of "The ...th of a Nation," the great photo ...y drama founded on Thomas ...on's story, "The Clansman," and ...y being presented to large audi... ...es at the Liberty Theatre, Man... ...tan, under the personal direction ...D. W. Griffith, who, with Frank ...Woods, is responsible for the ...nario. The music is by Joseph ...l Breil, and the photography by ...W. Bitzer. The play is given under ... auspices of the Mutual Film Cor... ...ation, while the Epoch Producing ...poration, of Manhattan, publishes ... souvenir. There are seven pic... ...es of the play and one full page ...oto of Mr. Griffith. The booklet ...of a highly artistic character and ... an ornamental cover, showing ... upper part of the Capitol at ...ington, D. C.

JUNE 21, 1915
...TSBURGH (Pa.) DISPATCH

...ed and the taxicab motor features ...ness. The ... straightened ... But it was a good day's ... for ...

...OVIE HOUSES.

... company with a capital of $...,000, ...d by powerful interests in Wall ..., is soon to be incorporated to ... the output of some of the foremost ...e directors in the film business ...ter into direct competition with the ...r $2 theaters. ... of the company, which formerly ... ...of a village, is credited with ... ...ction the deal. He has secured the ...vices of D. W. Griffith, Thomas ... and Mack Sennett. The ... ...n out ... in a ...

CLIPPING FROM
N. Times
Reading Pa
Jun. 21-15

BROOKLYN (N. Y.) EAGLE
Date JUN 21 1915

"BIRTH OF NATION" COMING TO BEACH

Manager Kemble Gets Big Picture Spectacle for Brighton Music Hall.

BID OF $65,000 WINS FILM.

Will Be Shown Here, Starting July 2. Louis Reinhard's Orchestra of Fifty Pieces.

Through a $65,000 bid made by William H. Kemble, manager of the Brighton Beach Music Hall at Brighton Beach, Brooklyn is to get the next set of films of D. W. Griffith's spectacle "The Birth of the Nation," instead of Philadelphia, which made an offer of $63,000. Cleveland, St. Louis, Detroit and Kansas City each made bids ranging from $52,000 to $60,000 for the film privileges. The Griffith interests have received more than 5,000 offers for the picture.

Manager Kemble announced today that he will produce the film for the first time in Brooklyn on Friday evening, July 2, at the Brighton Beach Music Hall and twice daily thereafter, including Sundays. In theatrical and motion picture circles Manager Kemble is credited with a great achievement in obtaining the right to produce "The Birth of the Nation" in Brooklyn at a time when it is running to capacity houses in Manhattan, and when all the big cities of the country are bidding for it.

"The Birth of a Nation" is the costliest film ever produced. Five hundred thousand dollars was expended to produce it. Three thousand horses were used, 18,000 persons were in the cast, 15,000 guns, 100,000 high explosive shells and gattling guns and howitzers were brought into play in producing it. The play depicts the history of the civil war in picture and gives a detailed view of the most stirring events including the assassination of President Lincoln in Ford's Theater, the surrender of Lee to Grant, the famous march of General Sherman to the sea, the last stand of Lee at Petersburg, the battle of Gettysburg and the destruction of Southern cities under bombbardment.

Because music is an indispensable accompaniment to the picture, Manager Kemble has organized an orchestra of fifty, which will be under the direction of Louis Reinhard. Arrangements are now being made to produce the film on the same elaborate scale that marked its first appearance in Manhattan a few months ago.

CLIPPING FROM
BROOKLYN, (N. Y.) CITIZEN
Date JUN 21 1915

$65,000 BID SUCCESSFUL.

Kemble Gets Film of "The Birth of the Nation."

Through a $65,000 bid made by William H. Kemble, manager of the Brighton Beach Music Hall at Brighton Beach, Brooklyn, is to get the next set of films of D. W. Griffith's famous photo spectacle, "The Birth of the Nation," instead of Philadelphia, which made an offer of $63,000. Cleveland, St. Louis, Detroit and Kansas City each made bids ranging from $52,000 to $60,000 for the film privileges. The Griffith interests have received more than 5,000 offers for the picture.

Manager Kemble announced to-day that he will produce the film for the first time in Brooklyn on Friday evening, July 2, at the Brighton Beach Music Hall and twice daily thereafter, including Sundays.

MILWAUKEE (Wis.) WISCONSIN
JUNE 21, 1915

Realistic army life and the tragic fierceness of big battles are striking features of "The Birth of a Nation," a pictorial drama, reported to be the finest ever produced, which will be exhibited at the Davidson beginning Saturday evening, July 3. Two performances will be given daily and if the interest of the people is equal to the interest manifested in other large cities, the attendance will establish a new record.

Gossip.

More than a score of the actors who appeared in the recent Lambs' Gambol at the Century Opera House, will take part in a minor gambol to be given on June 27, at Sing Sing, as one of Warden Osborne's entertainments for the convicts. The seating capacity of the chapel is so limited that the present plan is to have the gambol staged in the prison yard. George Mooser is arranging things, and the journey to the prison will be made by automobile.

Among those who have proffered their services are: Tom Wise, Frank Tinney, William Courtleigh, Eddie Foy, Nat Goodwin, De Wolf Hopper, Will Deming, William Collier, Robert Mantell and Wilton Lackaye. The screen record of the Coffey-Flynn fight will be part of the entertainment, but this will not be held till after dark.

"The Missing Link" will be the title of a new comedy by Paul Dickey and Charles Goddard, in which Miss Janis will appear next season. She will sail from England about July 1.

Wednesday last, D. W. Griffith's great spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," passed its two hundredth performance at the Liberty Theatre in New York City, setting upa record for the first $2 motion picture production which will likely stand for a long time.

Miss Florence Fisher, who has appeared with Otis Skinner, Walker Whiteside and Madame Nazimova, was married at Punxsutawney, Pa., to William Parry of Pittsburg.

It is reported that Ethel Barrymore will star in "Roast Beef, Medium," the George V. Hobert play that has been made of the Edna Ferber stories of Emma McChesney.

Elmer Brown Booth was in an automobile collision in Los Angeles last week. Mr. Booth for some time had been devoting his energies to moving pictures under the direction of D. W. Griffith.

Charles Cartwright, the well-known English actor, seen by American audiences in "The Lily" and in "Leah Kleschna" is dead in England from a stroke of apoplexy.

Lillian Lorraine, appearing in the Pathe production, "Neal of the Navy," was featured for several seasons in Ziegfield's "Follies."

RUTLAND (Vt.) HERALD
JUNE 21, 1915

The outcome of the controversy over Griffiths' great film drama, "The Birth of a Nation," was tame enough. The Boston board of censorship, solemnly authorized by the Legislature of Massachusetts, witnessed the show, most solemnly and declared that there was nothing in the film likely to cause riot, disorder or breach of the public peace. Meanwhile, the seats for the production are sold out weeks ahead.

Chronicle
San Francisco

THE Birth of a Nation," or "The Clansman," as it is more generally known, is coming back to the Alcazar Theater for a brief special return engagement, beginning with the matinee tomorrow afternoon. Two performance will be given daily, one at 2 o'clock in the afternoon and the other at 8 o'clock sharp at night. This stupendous production, created in the United States, is founded on Thomas Dixon Jr's remarkable story, "The Clansman." It was produced under the personal direction of D. W. Griffith, one of the world's foremost producers, at a cost of more than $500,000. It took eight months to complete the production. It is now running in New York, Chicago, Boston and Los Angeles to overflowing business.

WASHINGTON (D. C.) HERALD
JUNE 20, 1915

medal.

"Birth of a Nation."

"The Birth of a Nation" has played in New York to more than $10,000 weekly since February and its expenses, including the lease of the theater orchestra and advertising, are less than half that sum. The picture is also being shown in Chicago, San Francisco and Boston in first-class playhouses, which have been leased outright by the producer, and as the receipts in these cities are averaging the same as in New York, it will be seen that Grifith is piling up a weekly profit of approximately $20,000. By leasing the Liberty Theater outright Grifith is keeping all the profits to himself. He was anxious to put the picture in the theater on the usual percentage basis, but Messrs. Klaw & Erlanger refused, thinking that it would not attract patronage at $2 prices. Their decision made Grifith one of the big winners of the year.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS (New York)
JUN 26 1915

"NATION" ENTERS FOURTH MONTH OF NEW YORK RUN

D. W. Griffith's spectacle "The Birth of a Nation," is well in its fourth month at the Liberty theatre, where it remains the biggest attraction of the season. This wonderful film series of history and romance retains its drawing powers in every essential, and continues to unfold a narrative of thrilling interest touching upon scenes prior to and during the Civil War.

Great battlefields, enormous armies marching to conflict, the daring rides of the Clansmen and the thousand and one details of gripping heart interest which Griffith has crowded into his story set the whole production apart from the average and make it intensely real and life-like.

SAN JOSE (Cal.) MERCURY-HER'LD
JUNE 13

"Clansman" Greatest in History of Films

Over 1,000,000 People Saw Wonderful Play in First 12 Weeks.

That "The Clansman," now playing at Victory theatre, was witnessed by over 1,000,000 people in the first 12 weeks of its presentation is substantial proof of its merit. Never before in history has a dramatic attraction proven so thoroughly popular as has this remarkable production of D. W. Griffith's. The romance which runs through the "before the war" days, through the actual strife of the rebellion, and through the tragic period of the reconstruction of a new south—has a genuine grip. The interest is unrelenting.

The big battle scenes are magnificent, the depiction of Ford's theatre at the moment of Lincoln's assassination is wonderful, and no more stirring incidents have been filmatized than the moments when the masked white Ku-Klux riders charge through the barricaded streets of a little southern town. "The Clansman" has more thrills in its 12,000 feet of film than any other film displayed during the past five years of pictures.

Throughout the entire picture can be traced the master hand of D. W. Griffith. Big scenes are done in a big way. The little details—the human touches—hold up the interest. Everyone should see "The Clansman" and realize the possibilities of the photo-drama.

The present engagement at the Victory theatre is for the balance of the week with a matinee daily at 2:15. The evening performances begin at 8:15 and the last performance is Sunday evening.

PORTLAND (Me.) EXPRESS & ADV.
JUNE 19, 1915

CHARMING SCREEN ACTRESS

MISS LILLIAN GISH,
Is Seen as Northern Heroine in The Birth of a Nation at Tremont Th... Boston.

THE BIRTH OF A NATION.

A development no one would have believed possible a few years ago is seen in the establishment at the Tremont Theater, Boston, of D. W. Grifith's The Birth of a Nation, as a first class theatrical attraction. The filmed spectacle is now in its eleventh week, and patrons enthusiastically declare that it gives a bigger money's worth of entertainment than any of the old fashioned shows.

The Birth of a Nation is indeed more than a film, for nearly 100 persons are employed in the music and the mechanical effects during the unreeling of this 12,000 feet of celluloid; yet never a word is spoken from the stage during the two and three-quarters hours' performance, Mr. Griffith's photo-entertainment ... ...

romance of the North and South, ... battle scenes, engaging thousands ... combatants drilled with the ... known Griffith elan and realism, ... particularly effective.

After seeing this marvelous production, many students of the subject ... diet that the historical novels of ... future will be told in pictures ... than by words. Certainly the "... drama" cannot henceforth hope to ... with the photo play, so far as ... tacular features are concerned.

The daily matinee performance ... en at 2.10 are exactly the same ... at night. Besides affordi... vantage of cheaper prices ... opportunity to out-of-... include a visit to the ... with a shopping ...

AT THE LIBERTY THEATRE.

"Birth of a Nation" Still Drawing Thousands.

The Liberty Theatre holds into the summer with D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation." Special ventilating arrangements made early in the sun keep the theatre on an even temperature and make it one of the coolest places in town.

"The Birth of a Nation" unfolds vividly and diversely a most absorbing tale of historical and romantic interests. The earlier episodes lead up to the Civil War and reach their high points in reproductions of Sherman's march to the sea, the last struggle before Petersburg, the meeting of Lee and Grant at Appomattox and the assassination of President Lincoln in Ford's Theatre.

SAN FRANCISCO (Cal.) CHRONICLE
JUNE 19, 1915

Monday's presentation of "The Clansman" will be the beginning of motion picture history in this city, for no drama of the sort has ever made a fraction of the impression which this story, adapted by Griffith from Thomas Dixon's novel, has registered.

MILWAUKEE (Wis.) JOURNAL
JUNE 20, 1915

BIRTH OF A NATION COMES HERE JULY 3

Widely Argued Photoplay Is Booked for Week's Engagement at Davidson Theater.

CHAPLIN AT THE STRAND

Butterfly, Alhambra, Davidson and Majestic to Have Week of Unusual Features.

David Wark Griffith's much discussed and widely argued photoplay, "The Birth of a Nation," comes to the Davidson theater on Saturday, July 3, for an engagement of one week. Two performances will be given daily, starting at 2:15 and 8:15 o'clock.

On Your Next Visit to Boston Be Sure to See

THE BIRTH OF A NATION

SPECIAL NOTICE!

There is but One Authorized Production of "The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's Original and Immortal Masterpiece, Now being Shown at the Tremont Theatre, Boston, and Liberty Theatre, New York. All other Pretended Presentations are Cheap Frauds.

BEWARE OF PIRATES!

Flora Cameron, Flower of the South, as Played by Miss Mae Marsh in "The Birth of a Nation."

SEATS SELLING

AT THE

TREMONT THEATRE

ONE MONTH AHEAD

Daily Matinees

LOWER FLOOR	50c and $1.00
1st BALCONY	50c and $1.00
2nd BALCONY	25c

Evenings and Sat. Matinees

LOWER FLOOR	$1.00 and $2.00
1st BALCONY	50c., 75c. and $1.00
2nd BALCONY	25c and 50c.

JOIN THE BIG CROWDS

CONVENIENT EXCURSIONS FROM ALL NEW ENGLAND POINTS.

FOR ADDITIONAL PARTICULARS CONSULT LOCAL RAILWAY AGENT.

If you wish advance Reservations, your mail order, accompanied by stamped, self-addressed envelope, will receive prompt and careful attention.

The Libbie Printing Co., 242 Dover St., Boston

...ROOKLYN (N. Y.) EAGLE
June 23, 1915

...Griffith has just decided upon ...multiple reel feature, to fol... "Birth of a Nation," Its title ... "...and the Law." ...at the Reliance-Majestic ...in Hollywood, Los Angeles, ...the midst of preparations for ...film.

...Notes of the Stage," it was an...nounced yesterday, is to be the title of D. W. Griffith's next multiple reel motion picture feature to follow "The Birth of a Nation." He is now at the ...Majestic studios in California preparing it. Among the actors will be Miss Mae Marsh, Miss Miriam Cooper, Miss Mary Alden and Ralph Lewis, who played "The Birth of a Nation" for the camera, and Robert Harron, who has appeared in several of Mr. Griffith's large productions.

BROOKLYN, (N. Y.) TIMES
JUN 26 1915
Date .....

"THE BIRTH OF A NATIO..."

D. W. Griffith's ... of a Nation," is still breaking records at the Liberty Theatre. The current week will mark its turning into the fifth month of the run in New York. With the exception of the year's biggest musical comedy hit the receipts at the Liberty have exceeded those of any other attraction in town.

Great masses of people and thousands of horses are seen in this spectacle. Miles of cotton fields blooming in the poetical Southland frame its earlier views and then the quiet gives way to terrific battles stretching over ten square miles of territory. Artillery duels make nights seem terribly ...

SPOKANE (Wash.) CHRONICLE
JUNE 19, 1915 — 851

...ers July 18.

Color Line Creeps Up.

Several cities much closer to the ...son and Dixon boundary than Spokane which have color-line problems to ... are experiencing difficulties about "The Birth of a Nation," which the Clemmer has booked for a three-weeks' showing this summer.

Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," upon which the spectacle is based, was none too kind in its treatment of racial affairs and the Griffith production has been found by some censors to lean in the same direction. This was the case mainly in cities which banned also "The Nigger," exhibited here some weeks ago, or permitted it only when the name was changed to "The New Governor."

In Chicago the municipal film samplers tried the suppression act on "The Birth of a Nation." The exhibitors went into the courts, secured a temporary injunction and are running the films at the Illinois, one of the city's biggest dramatic houses.

In Boston, where the film is running, colored people have been fighting eight weeks to have it stopped. They protested to the mayor and the governor, rioted at the theater, and presented a petition bearing 6000 names. Finally a majority of the censorship committee officially approved the picture.

BROOKLYN (N. Y.) EA...
Date ..... JUN 18 ...

TWO DOLLAR MOVIES N...

It was inevitable that the great... cess of the moving picture "The ... of a Nation" should lead to an ... and ... combination has ... formed to run a circuit of moving ... ture theaters throughout the co... on the $2 scale of prices, which the ... plays bring. There is said to be $... 000 capital behind the plan, and ... volves a combination of the best ... ducers of big films as well as a ... of theaters over which they can ... shown.

No one believes that the moving ... tures have reached the end of ... development and they already do ... things which are beyond the ar... the best stage manager. For these ... sons, so long as the supply of subj... which require the treatment of ... masses hold out, these wonderful ... ing pictures may compete with the ... acting in popularity, so long as ... business is not over done and the ... films do not start in competing ... each other. That is the thing wh... has hurt the regular theatrical bu... ness, and sent some of its manag... into moving pictures. Big profit... the latter will open the same temp... tion and very likely lead to cutt... prices on movies as they have been ... in some theaters.

But there is one thing the movi... picture has not and cannot get—the ... man voice, the most appealing inst... ment in either nature or art. Mov... pictures have succeeded so far beca... they were much cheaper than the p... ular drama, and because the theat... with which they competed were ... often conducted in open contempt ... the art of the human voice and ... every other art save that of mak... realistic stage pictures. The me... dramas which were the first to yield ... the new competition depended for ... most part on one "big scene," s... mechanical effect which could be ...

on the billboards as well as ... stage. The actors were the c... in the market, whose "art," su... they had, was of the most eleme... sort. The cheap melodrama ap... to interest in mechanical effects j... the moving picture does and, of c... the moving pictures at one-tenth ... price drove them out.

The photoplays get personality ... the film and thus they are able ... compete with the drama, so long as ... sharp difference in prices is in the... favor and so long as actors are ca... for their looks and not for their skill. But there is an appeal in the theat... which is to the ear and not to the ey... Before that appeal the camera is hel... less and against it no amount of sp... tacle can altogether prevail. The le... son of this new invasion for act... managers is to give better actu... especially better reading, and ... plays which will give material fo... actors and good readers to work ... If this development of the screen sha... lead to a real and artistic fostering ... the drama instead of merely an easy imitation of it by pretty girls and handsome youth, it will not have been in vain. The real drama will be able to stand up against the biggest films because it has the human voice for its cornerstone, and the appeal of the human voice will never die. But if the new movement should drive those ac... ors who do not know how to use the voices to posing for the films it wou... not be a loss to art, any more th... the developments of the moving ... tures to date have been.

WASSILLON (O.) INDEPENDENT
JUNE 23, 1915

AT THE GRAND FRIDAY

D. W. Griffith, producer of "The Birth of a Nation", "Home Sweet Home" and other master pictures is responsible for the latest Mutual master piece "The Victim". This is a story in the true Griffith Vein and introduces the favorites, Mae Marshand and Rober Herron. Although not as long as some of Griffith's great works in strength of pl... and detail, not forgetting superb ... ing, it ranks with the best. ... News is a welcome addition to ... Victim" and rounds out and un... pleasing programme.

Lionel Barrymore is presente... at the Grand in a thrill... duel personality "The ... ject of Judge Legrand" ... the book by Vic...

Greatest Sensational Success in Stage Annals of the World

THE BIRTH OF A NATION

IS NOW BEING PLAYED AT THE

TREMONT THEATRE

TREMONT, NEAR BOYLSTON ST., BOSTON

TWICE DAILY EXCEPT SUNDAY

Matinees 2.10 P.M.
Evenings 8.10 P.M.

18,000 People!

3,000 Horses!

8 Months in the Making!

Cost $500,000!

Pinnacle of Filmed Spectacles!

Symphony Orchestra of 40 Pieces!

See Bewitching Lillian Gish as Sweet Elsie Stoneman, the Northern Heroine.

Love and Romance of History!

Tremendous Battle Scenes!

The Lincoln Tragedy!

Dauntless Rides of the Ku Klux!

Tender, Domestic Drama and Charming Comedy!

Blending into the Most Fascinating Story of CIVIL WAR and RECONSTRUCTION DAYS ever unfolded Before American Eyes.

N PRESIDENT FOR MUTUAL FILM WANTS PICTURES FOR MASSES

n R. Freuler Succeeds H. E. Aitken and Announces a Broad Programme.

t the annual election of officers of Mutual Film Corporation, held day afternoon at 71 West enty-third Street, John R. Freuler s chosen President to succeed H. E. tken, resigned. Other officers ected were Edwin Thanhouser, First President; Felix E. Kahn, Treasr, and Samuel M. Field, Secretary General Counsel. President Freuler appoint the Second and Third Presidents.

The Mutual's new head is a native Monroe, Wis., where he was born ty-two years ago. He is one of the eers of the motion picture business has made it his life work. Early in his career he formed a circuit of exchanges in Wisconsin with headquarters in Milwaukee. He soon extended his activities to St. Louis and other Western cities. Out of these exchanges really developed the idea of the Mutual Film Corporation. From the very beginning President Freuler's policy has been to help the exhibitor, and he asserts he will continue that policy as head of the Mutual. He understands every angle of the film business, having thoroughly learned both the manufacturing and selling ends.

In discussing his plans Mr. Freuler said: "The regular programme of the Mutual will be strengthened in every way. I am one of those who believe that the moving picture business is one of volume. When you consider that on an average of 18,000,000 people every day go to the movies in this country the importance of this volume angle will be apparent. While occasionally features of unusual nature may command $2 admission prices, one must not be confused over the real destiny of the moving picture business. It is essentially entertainment for the masses and not the classes. Hence it is our duty to furnish a programme that may be used in a big, broad way by threatres charging 15, 10 and 5 cents."

With S. S. Hutchinson, President Freuler planned the manufacture and distribution of the big, continued photoplay, "The Diamond from the Sky." Out of this grew the North American Film Corporation, of which he is the head.

H. E. Aitken, who retired as President of the Mutual, issued a statement last night expressing reluctance at severing his connections with that concern, yet, at the same time, admitting being glad to be free to work on his plans for the $4,000,000 Griffith-Ince-Sennett film combination which has just been formed. He stated he would become active at once on the new scheme of bringing out a series of $2 motion picture programmes.

Mr. Aitken announced that, up to date, his interests had contracted for the services of De Wolf Hopper, Weber and Fields, Douglas Fairbanks, Raymond Hitchcock, Eddie Foy and children, Helen Ware, Bert Clarke, Hale Hamilton, Frank Keenan, Jane Grey, Maurice Farqua, George Beban, H. B. Warner, Bessie Barriscale, Orrin Johnson, Dustin Farnum, Julia Dean, Kathryn Gaelred, W. S. Hart and others.

Herald (N.Y.) June 24

MUTUAL FILM ELECTION.

n R. Freuler Succeeds Harry E. Aitken as President.

ection of officers of the Mutual Film poration took place yesterday at the ices of the company, No. 71 West Twenrd street. As forecast in the HERALD erday, John R. Freuler was elected president and general manager to succeed ry E. Aitken. Other officers elected e Edwin Thanhouser, first vice president; Felix E. Kahn, treasurer; Samuel Field, secretary and general counsel; d Crawford Livingston to serve with officers named as member of the Exutive Committee.

Mr. Aitken, who was one of the organers of the Mutual Film Corporation, said st night he regretted his retirement. He ded:—

"In a broader sense I am glad to be free. his move gives me time to co-operate with ssrs. Bauman and Kesel in enlarging on arrangements for the new Griffithce-Sennett combination and the $2 motion ture spectacles and comedies."

A statement from the Mutual Film poration said the firm "will devote its vities to the selling end of the busi-

Messrs. Bauman and Kesel, mentioned Mr. Aitken, also have withdrawn from Mutual Film Corporation.

Press (N.Y.) June 24

AITKEN OUT OF MUTUAL.

President of Film Corporation Says He Needs More Time.

In confirmation of his retirement as president of the Mutual Film Corporation, along with W. O. Bauman and Adam Kesel of the same company, H. E. Aitken said yesterday:

"In acceding to the new directors of the Mutual I retire from the company with a feeling of reluctance, due entirely to the many fine associations I have enjoyed with the controlling influences there and with the exhibitors who have dealt with the organization.

"This move gives me complete control of my time in enlarging upon plans for the new Griffith-Ince-Sennett combination which has just been formed. We will begin activities at once upon the new scheme of bringing out a series of $2 motion pictures."

Up to date De Wolf Hopper, Weber and Fields, Douglas Fairbanks, Raymond Hitchcock, Eddie Foy and the seven little Foys, Helen Ware, Bert Clarke, Frank Keenan, Jane Grey, George Beban, Dustin Farnum, Julia Dean, Kathryn Kaelred and other famous stars have been contracted for by the new organization. It is also intended to build up a stock company for the film work.

Sun (N.Y.) June 24, 1915

AITKEN OUT OF MUTUAL FILMS.

Resigns Presidency to Conduct New Movie Venture.

Internal dissensions among some of the leading film producers, which have been reported for some time past, came to a head yesterday afternoon when at a meeting of the board of directors of the Mutual Film Corporation John R. Freuler, president of the North American Film Company, was elected president, succeeding H. E. Aitken, who withdrew, together with interests representing the New York Motion Picture Corporation. Mr. Aitken and his associates are forming a new concern to present moving picture spectacles throughout the country in a chain of first class theatres.

The Mutual Film directors elected Edwin Thanhouser vice-president, Felix E. Kahn treasurer and Samuel M. Field secretary and general counsel. John R. Freuler, Edwin Thanhouser, Felix Kahn, Samuel M. Field and Crawford Livingston were also named on the executive committee.

Late yesterday afternoon Mr. Aitken gave out a statement announcing the following theatrical stars thus far engaged for his new venture:

De Wolf Hopper, Weber and Fields, Douglas Fairbanks, Raymond Hitchcock, Eddie Foy, Helen Ware, Bert Clarke, Hale Hamilton, Frank Keenan, Jane Grey, Maurice Farkoa, George Beban, Henry Woodruff, H. B. Warner, Willard Mack, Bessie Barriscale, Orrin Johnson, Dustin Farnum, Julia Dean, Kathryn Kaelred and W. S. Hart.

"This move," said Mr. Aitken, referring to his withdrawal, "gives me complete control of my time to cooperate with Messrs. Baumann and Kessel in enlarging upon plans for the new Griffith-Ince-Bennett combination which has just been formed."

Commercial (N.Y.) June 24

...mussions among some of the leading film ...ers, which have been reported for ... time past, came to a head yesterday ...noon when at a meeting of the board ...irectors of the Mutual Film Corporation. ... R. Freuler, president of the North ...rican Film Co., was elected president ...ding H. E. Aitken who withdrew to-...r with interests representing the New ... Motion Picture Corporation. Mr. Aitt and his associates are forming a new ...ment to present moving picture spec...s throughout the country in a chain ...st class theatres.

...e Mutual Film directors elected Edwin ...hanhouser, vice-president, Felix E. Kahn ...asurer, and Samuel M. Field secretary ... general counsel. John R. Freuler, Ed... Thanhouser, Felix Kahn, Samuel M. ... and Crawford Livingston were al... ...ed on the executive committee.

... confirmation of his retirement as ...t of the Mutual corporation, ... E. ...ken gave out the following stat...nt: "In acceding to the new direc...s of the ...tual I retire from the com...y with a ...ing of reluctance due e...rely to the ...y fine associations I ha...enjoyed with ... controlling influences t...e and with the ...bitors who have deal...with the organ...on.

"In a broader sense I ...m very glad to be ... This move gives me complete control ... time to co-operate with Messrs. Bau... and Kesel in enlarging upon ...ns ... new Griffith-Ince-Sennett comb...ch ha... just been formed. We wi... ...activities at once upon the new schem... bringing out a series of $2 motion picture ...grams of film spectacles and comedies ...ted by these well known produ...rs. Up ...ate we have contracted for the serv...es ... film of such stars as De Wolf Hopper ...r & Fields, Douglas Fairbanks, Ray... Hitchcock, Eddie Foy and the seven ... Foys, Helen Ware, Bert Clarke, Hale ...milton, Frank Keenan, Jane Grey, Mau... Farkoa, George Beban, Henry Woodruff, ... B. Warner, Willard Mack, Bessie Barris...le, Orrin Johnson, Dustin Farnum, Julia ...an, Kathryn Kaelred and W. S. Hart."

Telegraph (N.Y.) June 24, 1915

Mr. Aitken's Statement.

Mr. H. E. Aitken gave out the following statement late yesterday afternoon:

"In acceding to the new directors of the Mutual I retire from the company with a feeling of reluctance due entirely to the many fine associations I have enjoyed with the controlling influences there and with the exhibitors who have dealt with the organization.

"It is also a pleasure to say that these arrangements were consummated with the friendliest feeling existing between the different parties concerned.

"In a broader sense I am very glad to be free. This move gives me complete control of my time to co-operate with Messrs. Baumann and Kessel in enlarging upon plans for the new Griffith-Ince-Sennett combination which has just been formed. We will begin activities at once upon the new scheme of bringing out a series of $2 motion picture programmes of film spectacles and comedies directed by these well known producers.

"Up to date we have contracted for the services on the film of such stars as De Wolf Hopper, Weber and Fields, Douglas Fairbanks, Raymond Hitchcock, Eddie Foy and the seven little Foys, Helen Ware, Bert Clarke, Hale Hamilton, Frank Keenan, Jane Grey, Maurice Farkoa, George Beban, Henry Woodruff, H. B. Warner, Willard Mack, Bessie Barriscale, Orrin Johnson, Dustin Farnum, Julia Dean, Kathryn Kaelred, and F. S. Hart.

"We are not at liberty to announce other names, but I can say that within the next forty-eight hours we will be able to add to this list other names of many of the greatest stars connected with the current drama. It is also our intention to build up the finest stock company for film work that has been gathered together in this country."

Mail - June 24

Aiken Quits Mutual.

As expected by motion picture men, H. E. Aitken retired as president of the Mutual Film Corporation at its meeting yesterday. To men associated with the movies Mr. Aitken's withdrawal was foreshadowed several days ago when he announced the formation of a company to produce films on the order of "The Birth of a Nation" to compete with $2 theatres.

In confirmation of his retirement as president Mr. Aitken gave out the following statement to-day:

In a broader sense I am very glad to be free. This move gives me complete control of my time to co-operate with Messrs. Baumann and Kessel in enlarging upon plans for the new Griffith - Ince - Sennett combination, which has just been formed. We will begin activities at once upon the new scheme of bringing out a series of $2 motion pictures programmes of film spectacles and comedies directed by these producers.

Up to date we have contracted for the services on the film of such stars as DeWolf Hopper, Weber and Fields, Douglas Fairbanks, Raymond Hitchcock, Eddie Foy and the seven little Foys, Helen Ware, Bert Clarke, Hale Hamilton, Frank Keenan, Jane Grey, Maurice Farqua, George Beban, Henry Woodruff, H. B. Warner, Willard Mack, Bessie Barriscale, Orrin Johnson, Dustin Farnum, Julia Dean, Kathryn Kaelred and W. S. Hart.

Mother and Law, New Griffith Film

D. W. GRIFFITH, the master producer, has decided upon his next multiple-reel feature to follow "The Birth of a Nation." Its title will be "The Mother and the Law." Mr. Griffith is now at the Reliance-Majestic Studios in Hollywood, Los Angeles, where the new motion feature will be made.

The plot has not yet been announced. The cast, however, has been selected and will include Mae Marsh, Robert Harron, Miriam Cooper, Mary Alden, Ralph Lewis and Walter Long.

Mr. Griffith is determined that "The Mother and the Law" shall maintain the same high standing of "The Birth of a Nation."

Philadelphia, (Pa.) Public Ledger

Date ..... JUN 25 1915

De Wolf Hopper has surrendered to the movies, and for the next year will do all his work before the camera. This is the announcement issued today from the office of H. E. Aitken, of the Griffith-Ince-Bennett organization, which proposes to take over a chain of theatres across the country for the exhibition of the $2 movie. It was reported that Mr. Hopper would receive $125,000 for the year's work, but this was taken with a grain of salt.

MILWAUKEE (Wis.) LEADER
JUNE 20, 1915

DRAMA OF CIVIL W... $1.50 MOVIES IS ...

"The Birth of a Nation," said to represent an investment of $500,000 and the services of 18,000 persons, will be the attraction at the Davidson for an indefinite period beginning July 3.

David W. Griffith produced the play using as a foundation Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman."

Romance and history are the themes of the play. The scenes are laid in the civil war period and the strife between the north and the south over preservation of the union and freedom of the ... The ... Abraham Lincoln ... to the ... the forces of the ... are shown.

In addition to the reconstruction ... portrayed, ... Klan.

The price of ... from $1 ... be two performances ... and 8:15 p. m. ... 13 reels.

Times Louisville Ky. 6-03-15

"The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's great photo-spectacle, is now well into its fourth consecutive month at the Liberty Theater in New York City, and is setting a record for the first $2 motion picture production which will in all likelihood stand for a long time.

CLIPPING FROM
VARIETY (New York City)

SELL SOLD PART OF "NATION."

H. E. Aitken has lisposed of part of his holdings in the rights of "The Birth of a Nation" to the Mutual, according to report. a short time ago. Twenty per cent. of his holdings brought $15,000, it is said

---

SPOKANE (Wash.) CHRONICLE
JUNE 23, 1915

With Mary Alden, A... as Star of "Man... rerogative" on Scree...

At the Liberty for the ... the week, starting today, ma... seen "Man's Prerogative," featu... Robert Edeson, supported by Mary ... who was also in "The Birth of ...tion." Following is a brief ... play:

...REE (Wis.) WISCONSIN
JUNE 23, 1915

...al music will theme "The Birth ...tion," when it opens its engage... the Davidson on the night of ... July 3. An orchestra of forty ...s been engaged, and a special ...setting, arranged by Joseph Cas... ...mpanies the scenes of war and ...rmances start daily at 2:15 ...k. The production is in

---

SEATTLE (Wash.) POST-INTEL.
JUNE 23, 1915

Nearly a hundred people were lined up at the box office of the Clemmer theater yesterday morning at 11 o'clock, the hour announced for the opening sale of tickets for "The Birth of a Nation." The interest is general in this Griffith masterpiece. Manager Clemmer is expecting to give five shows a day, which will mean opening at 9 a. m. and running until midnight.

...will not interfere with the ... at the Liberty ... will begin July 2, and ... indefinitely.

...en Near.
...une 26

Liberty.

...Griffith's remarkable film, ...h of a Nation," reached its ...esentation at the Liberty ...ast night. The picture un-...idly and diversely a most ... tale of historical and re-...nterests. The earlier epi-...d up to the Civil War and ...eir points in productions of ...'s march to the sea, the last ...before Petersburg, the meet-...e and Grant at Appomattox ... assassination of President ...in Ford's Theatre. The suc-... narrative reveals the dra-...ntensity of the Reconstruc-...ve and the reign of the car-...gers.

...n. June 26, 1915

...TY—D. W. Griffith's "The Birth ...on" is still breaking records at ...atre. The current week will ...turning into the fifth month of ...n New York. With the excep-...e year's biggest musical comedy ...said, the receipts at the Liberty ...ceeded those of any other at-...in town. Great masses of people ...mands of horses are seen in this

...N. June 26,

...th of a Nation" will be pre-...Brighton Beach Music Hall ...mer beginning on next Friday. ...ion there will not interfere with ...

...y of the pictures in the Liberty ...here.

...NCISCO (Cal.) CALL & POST
JUNE 22, 1915

...Griffith's wonderful photo-...spectacle, "The Birth of a Na-..., "The Clansman," returned to ... Theater last night. Jud-... the enthusiastic audience, ... the Alcazar it seems that ...ticular motion picture pro-...has lost none of its popular-...

...Griffith, an acknowledged ...f the photo drama, has placed ...supreme, with this reproduc-...the most potent events of our

Globe of Commerce
June 26, 1915

AT THE BEACH, ALSO.

Arrangements have been complet-...l by D. W. Griffith's forces for the presentation of "The Birth of a Nation" for a summer engagement at the Brighton Beach Music Hall, beginning next Friday night and continuing there indefinitely. This engagement is entirely separate from the run of the spectacle at the Liberty Theatre, where it also remains indefinitely. The seaside engagement at Brighton Beach will include afternoon and evening performances daily, the same as the New York run.

THE BEST MOVING PICTURES.

LIBERTY.—D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" is still breaking records at the Liberty Theatre. The current week will mark its turning into the fifth month of the run in New York. With the exception of the year's biggest musical comedy hit, the receipts at the Liberty have exceeded those of any other attraction in town. Its blend of history and romance, of stirring adventure and beautiful musical accompaniments to its action, are the salients which have made it the record breaking sensation of the current season.

Sun June 26

Arrangements have been completed by D. W. Griffith's forces for the presentation of "The Birth of a Nation" for a summer engagement at the Brighton Beach Music Hall beginning Friday night, July 2, and continuing there indefinitely. This engagement is entirely separate from the run of the spectacle at the Liberty Theatre, where it also remains indefinitely. The seaside engagement at Brighton will include afternoon and evening performances daily, the same as the New York run. The same scale of prices will prevail in both theatres.

SAN FRANCISCO (Cal.) BULLETIN
JUNE 22, 1915

"CLANSMAN" FILM AGAIN AT ALCAZAR

A film production of "The Clansman," or "The Birth of a Nation," opened a brief special return engagement at the Alcazar Theater last evening. This great picture play is founded on Thomas Dixon Jr.'s story, "The Clansman."

The play was produced under the personal direction of D. W. Griffith at a cost of more than half a million dollars. It took more than eight months to complete the production. It deals with the problems of race conditions and the history of the South during the reconstruction period immediately following the Civil War.

During the present engagement of "The Clansman" two performances will be given daily, one at 2 o'clock in the afternoon and the other at 8 o'clock in the evening.

...o. June 27, 1915

...W. Griffith, producer of "The ...of a Nation," has decided upon ...xt multiple reel feature, which ...e "The Mother and the Law." ...h is now at his headquarters, ...liance-Majestic studios in Holly-..., Cal., busying himself with prep-...ns for filming the forthcoming ...rpiece. Among those who have ...placed under contract to appear ...he Mother and the Law" are Mae ..., Robert Harron, Miriam Cooper, ... Alden, Ralph Lewis and Walter ... The same standard attained by ... Birth of a Nation" will be ...ed by the new photoplay, pre-... Griffith.

...egraph June 27

...W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Na-...s still breaking records at the ... Theatre. The current week will ...s turning into the fifth month of ...n New York. With the excep-...the year's biggest musical comedy ... receipts at the Liberty have ex-...those of any other attraction in ...Great masses of people and thou-...horses are seen in this spectacle. ...of cotton fields blooming in the ...nd frame its earlier views, and ... quiet gives way to terrific bat-...tching over ten square miles of ...y.

...ess. June 27

Liberty.

...Birth of a Nation" is still break-...rds in the Liberty Theatre. ...his week will mark its turning ... fifth month of the run in New ... Great numbers of people and ... horses are seen in this ... Miles of cotton fields blooming ...

Sun June 27

The success of D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" continues at the Liberty Theatre. It was the production of this picture play which most impressed the late Charles Frohman during the few weeks preceding his death.

"I have lived," he said one day, "to see what I had never expected would happen in my time. And that is a movie at $2 a ticket."

Tribune June 27

D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" is still breaking records at the Liberty Theatre. The current week will mark its turning into the fifth month of the run in New York. Great masses of people and thousands of horses are seen in this spectacle. Miles of cotton fields frame its earlier views, and then the quiet gives way to battles stretching over ten square miles of territory. Its blend of history and romance, of adventure and musical accompaniments to its action are the salients which have made it one of the record breaking attractions of the current season.

JACKSON (Mich.) PATRIOT
JUNE 27, 1915

"The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's great 12-reel production based on "The Clansman," which is generally conceded the greatest motion picture ever made, is well past its 200th performance at the Liberty theater, New York, where it is playing at

(Continued on Page Twenty)

...a $2 scale of prices. It is also in its fifth week at the Illinois, Chicago, at ... scale of prices. Henry Walthall, ...

...Beach Music Hall after July 2. The Brighton Beach engagement is entirely separate from the run of the photo-spectacle in Forty-second street.

Afternoon and evening performances will be given at the seaside resort, and the regular Liberty Theatre prices will prevail.

Journal of Commerce
June 26, 1915

"Birth of a Nation" at the Seaside.

D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" is still breaking records at the Liberty Theatre, and this week enters the fifth month of its run in New York, with the total receipts surpassing those of the majority of productions now being shown on the legitimate stage. The interest of the public in the great production shows no signs of flagging, and the end of its run is still a long way off.

Arrangements have been made by Mr. Griffith for the presentation of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Brighton Beach Music Hall for a summer engagement, beginning Friday night, July 2, which will be entirely separate from the run of the spectacle at the Liberty Theatre.

Times June 26, 1915

"The Birth of a Nation," the feature film which has been on exhibition in the Liberty Theatre for several months, will be shown in the Brighton Beach Music Hall beginning next Friday night. The picture will remain at the Liberty also indefinitely.

NEW YORK WORLD
JUN 27 1915

BRIGHTON BEACH—David W. Griffith's film, "The Birth of a Nation," a marvellous motion picture, will be shown for the first time at Coney Island next Friday evening in the Brighton Beach Music Hall, where William H. Kemble, the manager, will present it at a gala performance in which an orchestra of fifty pieces will furnish the music. This stirring picture version of Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman" portrays some of the most important events in American history, notably the assassination of President Lincoln, the surrender of Gen. Lee to Gen. Grant, the Battle of Gettysburg and Sherman's March to the Sea. The assassination of President Lincoln is one of the wonderful scenes. It is pictured from the description furnished by historians and men and women who were present when Booth fired the fatal shot. The battle scenes are realistic. Eighteen thousand persons, three thousand horses and thousands of shells were used in the staged conflicts.

The tragic events that followed the war are portrayed in pictures of bloodshed, of battle between negroes and whites and the organization and raids of the Ku Klux Klan. Throughout the whole picture are two love episodes in which the proud spirit of the Southern girl and the equally proud spirit of the Northern miss are displayed in a thrilling romance.

The picture will be shown twice a day, afternoon and evening, including Sundays.

"The Birth of a Nation" continues to compete on equal terms with the regular theatrical attractions. The Liberty Theatre is well filled twice a day.

Beginning to-day "The Alien" at American

June 27, 1915

D. W. Griffith's The Birth of a Nation is still breaking records at the Liberty Theatre. The current week will mark its turning into the fifth month of the run in New York. With the exception of the year's biggest musical comedy hit the receipts at the Liberty have exceeded those of any other attraction in town.

Great masses of people and thousands of horses are seen in this spectacle. Miles of cotton fields blooming in the poetical Southland frame its earlier views, and then the quiet gives way to terrific battles stretching over ten square miles of territory. Whole cities are built up only to be destroyed before your eyes. Artillery duels make nights seem terribly real.

Herald June 27,

At the National Exhibitors Convention, to be held in San Francisco at the Panama Pacific Exposition, from July 13 to July 16, every phase of the motion picture industry will be the subject of discussion and demonstration. The entire matter of picture censorship will be taken up by the exhibitors and producers. One of the speakers will be D. W. Griffith, producer of "The Birth of a Nation," who is a leader in the fight against censorship of films which are of a nature that compete with the legitimate theatre. He will relate the experiences of "The Birth of a Nation" in New York, Boston, Chicago and other cities.

"The Birth of a Nation," spectacle play produced by D. W. Griffith, is nearing its 250th consecutive presentation in the Liberty Theatre.

...been completed by ... Griffith's forces for the presentation of "The Birth of a Nation" for a summer engagement at the Brighton Beach Music Hall beginning July 2nd and continuing indefinitely. This engagement is separate from the run of the spectacle at the Liberty where it also remains indefinitely. The seaside engagement will include afternoon and evening performances the same as the New York run. This is the first time on record that a big Broadway hit has been duplicated for a summer engagement in the greater New York territory at the same time the original offering remains on Broadway. The same scale of prices will prevail in both theatres. The Brighton Beach Music Hall has been carefully remodelled to accommodate the attraction. Arrangements have also been made to run special trains from Brooklyn Bridge through to Brighton Beach.

N.Y. World. June 26

D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" is still breaking records at the Liberty Theatre. The current week will mark its turning into the fifth month of the run in New York.

There will be only one more week of Sir Douglas Mawson's remarkable Antarctic pictures at the Lyric Theatre.

SAN FRANCISCO (Cal.) CALL & POST
JUNE 17, 1915

Mae Marsh, (upper) as Florence Cameron in "The Birth of a Na... coming to the Alcazar next week, and Lea Leture at the Em...

ALCAZAR BOOKS "THE CLANSMAN"

D. W. Griffith's marvelous ...tacle, "The Birth of a Nation," ... Clansman," based on the ... Thomas Dixon Jr., is coming ... to the Alcazar Theater next week ... a special engagement.

This stupendous production has ...come the talk of the entire United States. It is now in its sixth month at the Liberty Theater in New York, its sixteenth week at the Auditorium in Los Angeles, and is successful at the Tremont Theater in Boston, and at the Illinois Theater in Chicago.

"The Birth of a Nation" stands to-day above all other productions. It ... the acme of dramatic ideal. It stands also as a chronicle of a chapter in ... nation's history. It is true to ... and thoroughly documented. It ... no sense an appeal to lynch law.

The picture is replete ... matic climaxes, battle scenes ... other producer has ever ... and plenty of comedy and ... roundings.

The cast in "The Birth of a Nation" depicts the lovable Abraham Lincoln, Colonel Ben Cameron; his ... Florence and Margaret; Mrs. Cameron, Dr. Cameron, Austin Stoneman and daughter, Elsie.

Telegram
June 27, 1915

MAE MARSH IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" LIBERTY THEATRE

D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" is still breaking records at the Liberty Theatre. The current week will mark its turning into the fifth month of the run in New York.

Great masses of people and thousands of horses are seen in this spectacle. Miles of cotton fields blooming in the poetical Southland frame its earlier views and then the quiet gives way to terrific battles stretching over ten square miles of territory.

...MBUS (O.) JOURNAL
JUNE 27, 1915

In spite of reports to the contrary the big historical picture, "The Birth of a Nation" has been allowed to play in Chicago, and has been at the Illinois Theater since June 5. The jury who decided the matter found there was no reason to believe that the picture would engender race animosity in Chicago, and in a matter of ... hasn't.

...at the opening performances ... of D. W. Griffith's $500,000 picture, "The Birth of a Nation," in the Brighton Beach Music Hall, at Brighton Beach, next Friday evening may have a military flavor, more than ... military men will be present and be reviewed by Mayor Mitchel in front of the Brighton Beach Hotel. There will be in line 700 members of the Twenty-third Regiment, under the command of Colonel Norton; the Old Guard under the command of former Mayor Ardolph L. Kline, and the officers of the Ninth Coast Artillery. There will also parade some 100 volunteers of the civil war who took part in some of the historic times that "The Birth of a Nation" depicts.

Journal of Commerce June 28

D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" is still breaking records at the Liberty Theatre. The current week will mark its turning into the fifth month of the run in New York. Its blend of history and romance, of stirring adventure and beautiful musical accompaniments to its action are the salients which have made it the record breaking sensation of the current season.

BROOKLYN, (N. Y.) CITIZEN

JUN 27 1915

STILL BREAKING RECORDS.

"The Birth of a Nation" at Liberty Theatre.

D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" is still breaking records at the Liberty Theatre. The current week will make its turning into the fifth month of the run in New York. With the exception of the year's biggest musical comedy hit the receipts at the Liberty, it is said, have exceeded those of any other attraction in town.

Great masses of people and thousands of horses are seen in this spectacle. Miles of cotton fields blooming in the poetical Southland frame its earlier views and then the quiet gives way to terrific battles stretching over ten square miles of territory. Whole cities are built up only to be destroyed before your eyes. Artillery duels make nights seem terribly real.

Wild riders dash over miles of country roads and condensed into the small space of two and one-half hours is told the great drama of a mighty nation trembling upon the brink of disolution and then finding itself stronger and finer than ever. Its blend of history and romance, of stirring adventure and beautiful musical accompaniments to its action are the salients which have made it the record-breaking sensation of the current season.

BROOKLYN, (N. Y.) CITIZEN

JUN 28 1915

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

Changes in Military Programme for Brighton Opening.

Several changes have been made in the military arrangements in connection with the first performance in Brooklyn next Friday night, of D. W. Griffith's spectacle, picturing the Civil War, "The Birth of a Nation" at the Brighton Beach Music Hall.

Mayor Mitchel, who will be the guest of honor at the opening, will review the Twenty-third Regiment, the Old Guard, led by former Mayor Ardolph L. Kline, and the officers of the Ninth Coast Artillery, before the performance, instead of after it, as was originally intended. At 8:15 700 members of the Twenty-third Regiment, under the command of Colonel Norton, the Old Guard and the officers of the Ninth Coast Artillery, will be in line east of the Brighton Beach Hotel and march in review before Mayor Mitchel, who will view them from the top step of the Brighton Beach Hotel ...

SYRACUSE (N. Y.) HERALD

JUNE 23, 1915

... corporation will go in order to keep the stars serene, Miss Gish was not deprived ... dainty. One of the burros which carried the party into the mountains had a compact ice cream freezer in the pack on its back.

Considerable agitation has been aroused over the showing of "The Birth of a Nation," the masterpiece of photography which is making D. W. Griffith famous as a director. This is the use of an alleged tendency to action, racial prejudice. This is vehemently denied by the majority of ... July 3. Birth of a Nation" shows has been emotion or the South after ... setting, arranged, being shown at $2 ... companies the ... theater in Boston ... formances start ... in New York ... The ... in Chicago.

DE WOLF HOPPER has gone into the movies. At first thought that might not strike you as precisely momentous, for, to name only a few, have not Bernhardt and Will Archie and Mrs. Fiske and Donald Brian surrendered to the screen? They have. Indeed, it would be easier to name the players who have never sought to wring a tear or coax a smile from the solemnly whirling camera. Yet this news of Mr. Hopper's accession to the ranks of the shadows is, all things considered, quite the most significant and important motion picture event of recent months.

For it is one thing for a distinguished actor to piece out a poor season with one wealthy week in the movies, for a player like Mrs. Fiske or Cyril Maude to allot a Summertime fortnight to an excursion into the films. It is quite another thing for one of such position to sign over all his time to the directors of movie destinies. And that is just what Mr. Hopper has done—what he did do on Thursday of the week just passed. For a whole year at the very least, for two years if D. W. Griffith and his associates so desire, the towering actor has left the stage. Though he has a great following and an honorable position, though he was making what most people would consider an exceedingly handsome income, he was willing to go for a time at least beyond all sound of applause, to give up that which to many must seem for any actor worth his salt the very breath of his existence—the immediate response of a delighted audience.

Why Mr. Hopper Did It.

Why should he be willing? Here at last, was a classic case. Why do actors go into the movies? Decidedly it seemed a matter for inquiry, and obviously, the person to ask was Mr. Hopper. So—just the other day I was—the question was put to him. Why?

"I think there were three reasons," he answered reflectively. "To begin with, after five seasons in Gilbert and Sullivan, we had largely exhausted the inviting territory and it would have had to lie fallow, for a while anyway. It is an open secret that we planned a revival of 'Wang' for next Fall. And I can only say that, after the rich privilege of speaking the immortal lines of W. S. Gilbert, there is no other work in light opera left for me, no other with which I can be happy. Once or twice I have tried it and it has been simple torture. I hope to come back to Gilbert from time to time. I hope never to speak or sing the words of any other librettist. This is reason No. 1.

"Then I have been tremendously impressed by the work that Mr. Griffith has done in motion pictures. He is a genius—make no mistake about that. It so happens that the offer came to me two days after I had first seen 'The Birth of a Nation.' Frankly, before I saw it I had not cared a rap for the movies. I went there under protest, at the persuasion of Mrs. Hopper and Digby Bell. I saw a wonderful thing. I saw an audience held spellbound as I have rarely seen an audience held in the theatre. I saw their excitement, saw their tears. The picture itself, with its many infinitely dramatic touches—strokes of genius—struck me as something big, something new, something important. I came out dazed.

The Third Reason.

"Even so, when the first envoy came to me in my dressing room I laughed. In fact, I said 'Tut! Tut!' and made a face or two. But the offer—and that was the third reason—was like a fact in a fairy tale. Here it was, no Broadway gossip, but figures set down in black and white. It would have been criminal for me to refuse it. Mr. Brady, who has been fine and loyal and helpful with our Gilbert and Sullivan ventures, released me at once. I have promised to come back to him when I come back to the stage. He said I would be a fool not to take this."

The Griffith office has mentioned $125,000 as Mr. Hopper's annual reward. You may take it or leave it. Evidently, he elected to take it.

"And yet," he said, with a shake of his head, "and yet, don't think I'm not feeling sad about it. I suppose I'm too large and healthy to sob, but I was pretty close to tears that last night I played. Oh, I shan't mind the wild junkets nor the getting up at 8 o'clock in the morning, though that does outrage my artistic conscience. I shan't mind being just a factory hand. But what I shall mind is that all my work will be rehearsal, that I shall have to give up the infinite reward of an audience."

And the big comedian looked very glum, indeed.

"However," he went on, "I'm really full of enthusiasm. The field has marvelous possibilities. I look forward with the keenest pleasure to working with Mr. Griffith. I have some ideas I want to try. I have some work in pantomime and facial expression I want to do. The pictures may send me back to the stage a better actor. Who knows? All things considered, I'm feeling very cheerful, indeed. And now," he concluded, "the great hour has come. It's time to go to the ball game."

MOTION PICTURE NEWS (New York City)

JUNE 22, 1915

SEATTLE (Wash.) POST-INTEL.

"BIRTH OF A NATION" SEAT SALE OPENS TODAY.

Manager Clemmer will put the tickets for "The Birth of a Nation" on sale in the box office of his theater today at 11 o'clock. The limited time the picture is to be here and the universal popularity of it will no doubt sell out the house days in advance. That has been the history of the picture in the cities where it has been shown. In New York speculators made a good deal of money buying up the tickets, so great was the rush to get in. Chicago is packing the Illinois theater right along at $2. Los Angeles and San Francisco had like experiences. The picture requires fully three hours to run, and critics say there is not a dull moment in it. In fact, those who have seen it in Los Angeles and California tell of the people standing for the last half hour and giving it ...

JUNE 22, 1915

SEATTLE (Wash.) TIMES

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

The central figure shows Henry Walthall as the Ben Cameron of the Confederate Army ... Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation," is to be ... Sunday.

JUL 3 1915

THE most startling news of the week lies in the details of the plans of H. E. Aitken, C. O. Baumann, Adam Kessel, Jr., D. W. Griffith, Thomas H. Ince and Mack Sennett. Those names mean a lot in the film business. Aitken financed the Mutual and made it what it is today, being its president and active head. Kessel and Baumann are the heads of the New York Motion Picture corporation and men who have always believed in making good pictures first and counting the cost later.

Griffith, Ince and Sennett are surely the best known and probably the best directors in the country. Griffith stands alone in drama and Sennett in comedy. Ince has been regarded purely as a director of spectacular subjects, but pictures like "The Alien" make one think that he is not so far behind Griffith in drama.

Everybody knows who they all are, anyway.

The point is that the formation of a $4,000,000 company to make fifty pictures a year at an average cost of $100,000 each and operate a chain of 400 two-dollar motion picture theatres in this country is announced by these gentlemen.

Stupendous is the only word.

In this shape, the plans must be a little idealistic. "Cabiria" and Griffith's "Birth of a Nation" are the only two-dollar moving pictures yet made. More than a year was spent in making "Cabiria" and more than eight months on "The Birth of a Nation." So it will require a large crew of very fine directors to make fifty two-dollar pictures a year. All this without touching on the work necessary to annex 400 houses fit to show two-dollar pictures.

For all that there is no doubt but that this combination will make more expensive pictures than anyone else has ever averaged and get better prices for them. Kessel and Baumann always believed in the high class picture. Mr. Aitken's ideas now reflect those of Mr. Griffith who has always believed in high class pictures and has done more than any other one man to advance the cause of the motion picture art.

This combination is an affiliation of men who will never balk at spending money, no matter how much, in the producing end (and shrewd marketers withal) with three men who are probably America's greatest directors.

Probably Messrs. Aitken, Kessel, Baumann, Griffith, Ince and Sennett do not expect to make fifty pictures classing with "The Birth of a Nation" in a year. But if any group will go ahead and make the very best pictures possible, regardless of expense or time, this is the bunch.

And the good motion picture theatre won't be overshadowed, not even by a chain of two-dollar theatres. The man who reaps the financial benefit of every boost given the artistic end of the industry is the exhibitor. He should remember that and be grateful.

Another important angle of this announcement lies in the fact that Aitken, Kessel and Baumann have been important factors in the business end of the Mutual Film corporation, for which company Griffith, Ince and Sennett have been making pictures.

Before this edition reaches the Mississippi, the names of the new officers of the Mutual Film corporation will be common knowledge. Barring the utterly unexpected they may be confidently forecasted as: President, John R. Freuler; third vice president, J. N. Nawley, a re-election; and treasurer, Felix Kahn, succeeding himself. This supposition is made on the strength of the first meeting of the board of directors held Wednesday, June 13, at Richmond, Va.; for the Mutual is a Virginia corporation. At that meeting Roy Aitken, brother of H. E. Aitken, and A. P. Gleichman, were replaced on the board by J. W. Smith, of New York, and S. M. Field, of Milwaukee, both Freuler men. So it seems that Freuler controls the situation and if he so sees fit, can elect himself president, which he will probably do.

The contract of the New York Motion Picture corporation with the Mutual expires in August. The entry of Kessel and Baumann upon their new venture will leave the Mutual with the Thanhouser, American, Beauty, Falstaff, Royal, Reliance and Majestic brands. But H. E. Aitken is a big factor in Reliance and Majestic and, even if the Mutual retains the brand names, the services of D. W. Griffith will be lost.

The hole made by the withdrawal of Kay-Bee, Keystone, Broncho and Domino must be filled some way. This paves the way for a further shake-up in the alignment of the producing companies of the industry.

Going from financial to international conflict without pausing for breath, Joe Farnham's talk on the European war at the Screen Club last Thursday evening was the most revealing and compelling discourse heard in many a long day. Joe's words were those of a man who has just returned with a view point gained through passports better than those of a newspaper correspondent.

COMMERCIAL
JUNE 22, 1915

GOOD MOVIE
ES OF HIGH CLASS

...ready under way for ... of a world-wide chain of ... theatres devoted to the ... of high grade motion pic... ,000,000 company has been ... New York, headed by H. E. ...sident of the film which fi... "The Birth of a Nation." ...office of Aitken it was said ...$20,000,000 has been pledged ... the extensive undertaking. ...nt, it was pointed out, will ...ble an expenditure of $5,... producing 50 photo-plays ...e quality as "The Birth of a ... In all the theatres in the ...atform charge of $2 for the ... will prevail. Of the 600 ...e to be linked together, 400 ... this country, the rest being

... has brought together as di... ...ree men who stand foremost ... in the film ranks. They are ...ith, greater of "The Birth ...tion;" Mack Sennett and ... Ince. Griffith is the chief ...r the Reliance and Majestic ..., and, like Ince and Sen... present directing film play... Pacific coast. Sennett is ... the Keystone comedies, and ...st known for his work in re... frontier scenes in the West. ...operation it is expected, will ...raising film standards to an ...ble level.

...eadquarters for the new or... will be established in New ...are the home theatre of the ... be, branch offices will be ...n London, Paris, Vienna, ... Rome, Barcelona and South ... cities. Associates of Aitken ...terprise will include Adam ... O. Baumann and the West... ...t Company of England. A ... financiers whose names, at ...re withheld are making their ... the financial end of the pic... with the financing of this ... Aitken, himself, arrived in ... last week to complete nego... ...or theatres.

...iasm dominated the princi... ...e new combination when they ...ed Sunday to discuss the ... for success. Apparently ...no doubt that the chain is to ...nce lowly movie has grown in ..." said one, "from a few scat... ...kelodeons to a" combination ...ks fourth or fifth among the ...siness enterprises of this coun... ...he annual earnings of the film ... are not far short of $1,000,... ...at present. It is expected ... new arrangement will raise ...res above the high-water

CONFEDERATES IN LAST STAND

SCENES FROM "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" AT THE BRIGHTON BEACH MUSIC HALL

SHERMAN MARCHING TO THE SEA

N.Y. World · June 27, 1915

SCENE in "The BIRTH of a NATION," BRIGHTON BEACH

Brooklyn, (N. Y.) Standard-Union

Date ..... JUN 27 1915

JUNE 27, 1915

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

To Be Shown at Brighton Beach Music Hall, Commencing Next Friday Evening.

With Mayor Mitchel, Rear-Admiral Usher, commandant of the Navy Yard; Brig.-Gen. John J. O'Ryan, head of the National Guard of the State of New York; 700 uniformed members of the Twenty-third Regiment and the Old Guard, and many public officials headed by Borough President Pounds, present, the initial production of the famous spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Brighton Beach Music Hall, next Friday evening, is to be made the occasion of a big celebration.

Not only will the audience at the initial performance be of a military character, but following the performance Mayor Mitchel will review the members of the Twenty-third Regiment and the Old Guard under command of ex-Mayor Ardolph L. Kline, as they march four abreast in front of the music stand of the Brighton Beach Hotel adjoining.

Because "The Birth of a Nation" is a pictorial reproduction of the Civil War, the events leading up to it and those that followed, and because it shows the assassination of President Lincoln, some of the greatest battles of the period, Sherman's famous march to the sea, and other historic incidents, William H. Kemble, manager of the Brighton, deemed it appropriate to give the first performance a military touch.

The 700 members of the Twenty-third Regiment who will attend will go to the music hall in a body from the armory at Atlantic and Bedford avenues, and will be seated in a section reserved for them. The Old Guard, in full uniform, and with Colonel Kline commanding, will sit close by. Rear Admiral Usher and his staff from the Navy Yard, Brigadier General O'Ryan and his staff, will occupy seats alongside of each other. The Ninth Coast Artillery, under the command of Lieutenant Colonel John J. Byrne, will be located in the centre.

The Mayor and his guests will arrive by automobile and will be met by a guard of military men who will act as an escort of honor. Borough President Pounds and his party will also go by automobile and he honored in the same way.

The atmosphere of the Music Hall will be exclusively military at the premier of the picture in this borough. The theatre will be decorated specially for the occasion. Hundred of American flags will fly from all parts of the building, while the interior will be almost hidden in an array of colors.

The ushers will be girls typifying Civil War days and the Blue and the Gray. Some of the girls will be dressed to represent the Union side of the conflict and others the Confederate. The programme distributors will be dressed in the uniform of the soldiers of those days.

An interesting feature of the occasion will be the presence of a score of aged veterans who served throughout the struggle that the pictures portray. The battle scenes, which were enacted on a field three miles in length and show guns, calvary, mortars and regiments and battalions in action, charges and counter charges and advances on trenches and bayonet assaults, are expected to revive in them the hard-fought days they passed [illegible]

Manager Kemble, upon receiving the film of "The Birth of a Nation" yesterday, had it thrown on the screen to determine whether it was perfect. Not a flaw was found in any one of the 5,000 scenes in which more than 18,000 persons took part. The scene in Ford's Theatre as Booth shoots President Lincoln, the meeting where Lee surrenders to Grant at Appomattox, the great battle scenes and Sherman's march to the sea, are all clear, and show every detail of these events as related by historians and eye-witnesses.

After the performance Mayor Mitchel, Rear Admiral Usher, Brig. Gen. O'Ryan, Borough President Pounds, and the other officials will be escorted to the Brighton Beach Hotel, adjoining, while the Twenty-third Regiment, the Old Guard, and the Ninth Coast Artillery will form in line and begin a march in review. As they leave the music hall Louis Reinhart's orchestra of fifty pieces will play martial airs.

Following the review of the soldiers there will be a reception at the Garden de Madrid. Dancing will be indulged in the rest of the evening.

Journal · Milwaukee Wis · June 26, 1915

Picture Film in Politics.

The B[illegible] big picture play to be produced by the Davidson theater beginning July [illegible], threatens to become an issue in the political campaign in Boston, throwing the negro vote of Massachusetts to [illegible] Walsh, the Democratic governor, should he be a candidate at the next election. As a picture of Thomas Dixon's novel, The Clansman, the Birth of a Nation, scored an instantaneous hit in Boston. However, opposition to the play by the negroes living in that city developed a week ago, when a riotous negro mob stormed the theater and was only prevented by the police reserved from stopping the play and destroying the film. On Patriots' day, last week, a negro delegation gathered at the capitol to ask Gov. Walsh to stop the production and hissed a band playing Annie Rooney. Gov. Walsh was sympathetic, but though he could not stop the play, his attitude pleased the negroes immensely.

The negroes are now asking a new law of such sweeping provisions that it is denounced even by the Republican press of the state as being so drastic that under its terms all films showing the evils of child labor, drunkenness, even the Merchant of Venice, could not be produced in Massachusetts. Protestations were made to them by [illegible] of its citizens.

Lieut. Gov. Cushing of Massachusetts, so says a Boston correspondent, is a candidate for the Republican nomination for governor this year, [illegible] danger of the negro vote going [illegible] in a year when the Republicans need every ballot they can [illegible] come out in favor of some [illegible] would prevent the exhibition of such plays as the Birth of a Nation. The opponent for the Republican nomination has also denounced the play in a vigorous letter read at a hearing on a pending bill in the legislature. So far is the political situation, and so [illegible] ried are some of the Republican leaders that the bill as things stand [illegible] has an excellent chance of enactment. That it would place art and literature in Massachusetts under a strict censorship has been lost sight of in the general hue and cry.

[illegible] use
[illegible] an [illegible] the [illegible] all the [illegible] ing the [illegible] acter and his [illegible] ndo for a gang

N FRANCISCO (CAL) EXAMINER
JUNE 23, 1915

ANIEL W. GRIFFITH, recognized as one of the most successful moving picture producers in the world, who returned to the St. Francis Hotel yesterday after a motor trip, is in California seeking New England scenery. Griffith intends to produce a feature film play in this State, and he is looking over the country. Yesterday he expressed himself as having been delighted at finding so many places in California that will permit of pastoral productions. F. A. Lathrop, a banker of Boston, and Day Baker, a large realty owner of Boston, are staying at the St. Francis.

BROOKLYN, (N. Y.) TIMES

Date ..... JUN 28 1915

NEWS OF THE THEATRES

EVERAL changes have been made in the military arrangements in connection with the first performance in Brooklyn next Friday night of D. W. Griffith's spectacle, picturing the Civil War, "The Birth of a ...ion," at the Brighton Beach Music Hall.

Mayor Mitchel, who will be the guest of honor at the opening, will re... ...w the Twenty-third Regiment, the Old Guard, led by former Mayor ...dolph L. Kline and the officers of the Ninth Coast Artillery, before the ...rformance, instead of after it, as originally intended.

At fifteen minutes past eight, 700 members of the Twenty-third Regi... ...ent, under the command of Col. Norton, the Old Guard and the officers of ...e Ninth Coast Artillery, will form in line east of the Brighton Beach Hotel ...d march in review before the Mayor. The soldiers will march directly into ...e Brighton Beach Music Hall and take the seats reserved for them in the ...chestra. They will be followed in by Mayor Mitchel, Borough President ...wis H. Pounds, Rear Admiral Usher, commandant of the Navy Yard, and ...s staff, other city and borough officials.

William H. Kemble, the manager of the Brighton Beach Music Hall, ...cided to have the opening performance savor of the military, because "The ...irth of a Nation," in which 18,000 persons played in the cast and 3,000 ...orses were used in 5,000 scenes, is in reality a pictorial history of the Civil ...ar, the stirring times preceding and following it, including the assassination ...f President Lincoln.

There have also been invited more than 150 veterans of the Civil War ...ho fought through the stirring times pictured. The veterans will also pass ... review before the Mayor.

The following committee has been named to receive the Mayor and ...ther guests [illegible] evening: William H. Kemble, Chairman; Lewis M. Swasey, ...dward [illegible], John H. McCooey, Jacob Livingston, Edward J. ...oughlin, [illegible] William Liebmann, Edward J. Reilly, George ...S. Dowling, [illegible] John Gale, William Reynolds, Cleveland Rodgers, ...ohn B. [illegible] Palmer, Louis J. Kihn, John Brockway, Walter M. [illegible] Harry W. Chase, W. Clarke Mooney, James [illegible]

SAN FRANCISCO (CAL) EXAMINER
JUNE 23, 1915

'THE CLANSMAN' CHEERED BY ALCAZAR AUDIECE

The return of D. W. Griffith's spectacular production, "The Birth of a Nation," or "The Clansman," to the Alcazar Theatre, last night, was greeted by an enthusiastic audience that taxed the capacity of the theatre.

Although "The Birth of a Nation" has been shown for nine successive weeks in San Francisco, the applause that greeted the production proves that it has lost none of its great drawing power.

The film may be called a dramatization of "The Clansman," but it is a pictorial and psychological diagram of the creation of the United States that has existed since the Civil War in place of the union of sovereign States that preceded that fearsome period.

D. W. Griffith, the author of the picture, has made Mr. Dixon's novel merely a background for an educative message that no written history can rival.

New York Herald June 27, 1915

...Brighton Beach Music Hall.—"The Birth of a Nation" and "The Melting Pot."
...Brighton Theatre.—Vaudeville.
...Park.—Coney Island.
...Parks.—Coney Island.
...—Vaudeville.
...—Vaudeville.

THE Birth of a Nation" is coming to Brooklyn. This will interest thousands who have been anxiously waiting to see this great picture play, which has thrilled other thousands in Manhattan. It will be produced at the Brighton Beach Music Hall and is booked for a long run.

BRIGHTON BEACH MUSIC HALL.—Mayor Mitchel, Rear Admiral Usher, commandant of the Navy Yard; Brigadier General John F. O'Ryan, head of the National Guard of the State of New York; 700 uniformed members of the Twenty-third regiment and the Old Guard and many public officials, headed by Lewis H. Pounds, Borough President, have been invited to attend the initial production of the spectacle "The Birth of a Nation" at the Brighton Beach Music Hall next Friday evening.

Not only will the audience at the first performance be of a military character, but following the performance Mayor Mitchel will review the members of the Twenty-third regiment and the Old Guard, under command of one-time Mayor Ardolph L. Kline, as they march four abreast in front of the music stand of the Brighton Beach Hotel, adjoining.

The seven hundred members of the Twenty-third regiment who will attend will go to the music hall in a body from the armory, at Atlantic and Bedford avenues, and will be seated in a section reserved for them. The Old Guard, in full uniform and with Colonel Kline commanding, will be seated close by. Rear Admiral Usher and his staff from the Navy Yard and Brigadier General O'Ryan and his staff will occupy seats alongside of one another. The Ninth Coast artillery, under the command of Lieutenant Colonel John J. Byrne, will be located in the centre.

After the performance Mayor Mitchel, Rear Admiral Usher, Major General O'Ryan, the Borough President, Mr. Pounds, and the other officials will be escorted to the Brighton Beach Hotel, while the Twenty-third regiment, the Old Guard and the Ninth Coast artillery will form in line and begin a march in review. As they leave the music hall Louis Reinhard's orchestra of fifty pieces will play martial airs.

Following the review of the soldiers there will be a reception in the Garden de Madrid. Dancing will follow for the rest of the evening.

The assassination of President Lincoln in Ford's Theatre, in Washington, is one of the most wonderful scenes ever staged. It is founded on the description furnished by historians and of men and women who were present when Booth fired the fatal shot. Lincoln is seen enjoying the performance, then putting a shawl around his shoulders as the temperature falls in the house, and finally collapsing as the assassin's bullet strikes him.

Wonderful as that picture is, it is hardly comparable with the battle scenes. Eighteen thousand persons, three thousand horses and thousands of shells, said to cost $180 apiece, were used in the conflicts. Mr. Griffith, who spent eight months and half a million dollars producing this picture, shows the soldiers fighting in trenches, battling at breastworks, charging over fields with bayonets flashing, fire flashes from the mouths of cannon and concealed batteries, a panorama of marching and counter-marching troops as they seek positions of vantage, men dropping from bullets, shells exploding in the air in a blaze of fire, friend meeting friend on opposite sides in the sanguinary conflict.

The battle scenes convey a realization of what the terrible conflict abroad means. The acting in the battles is so realistic that it all seems real. Cavalrymen fall from the horses and soldiers drop in their tracks with a suddenness and skill and abandon which indicate reality rather than acting.

These battles, reproductions of those of the civil war, were produced on a three mile front with the eighteen thousand soldiers quartered off into regiments and battalions. Modern guns and others of the type of civil war days were used to give the desired effect. The whole picture makes one feel, no matter how opposed he is to war, that he would enlist immediately if he found his country struggling in the throes of such a conflict.

"The Birth of a Nation" has the commendation of educators because it is a picture story of the most momentous part of American history and portrays, in accordance with history, the great events as they occurred. It is a picture of American history that leaves an indelible impression of what took place on the minds of children as well as adults and educates the onlooker.

No less remarkable than the battle scenes, the assassination of President Lincoln, who is wonderfully impersonated by Joseph Henabery; the surrender of Lee, Sherman's march to the sea and other scenes are the tragic events that followed the war when the carpetbaggers incited the negroes of the South to rise against the whites. There follow pictures, based on historical facts, of bloodshed, of battles between the negroes and the whites, the organization of the famous Ku Klux Klansmen and their midnight rides and deeds, which eventually led to the return of the domination of the whites and the restoration of peace throughout the South.

Throughout the whole picture are two love episodes in which a Colonel of the South loves the sister of an officer of the North and the officer of the North loves the sister of the Colonel in the South. The proud spirit of the Southern girl and the equally proud spirit of the Northern miss are displayed in as thrilling a romance as was ever staged. Love turns to hate and later to love again as each girl looks at the struggle with partisan eyes and remains loyal to the section of her birth.

The picture will be shown twice a day, once in the afternoon and again in the evening, including Sundays.

"The Melting Pot" will be the attraction this week at the Brighton Beach Music Hall until displaced by "The Birth of a Nation." More than 5,000 persons were engaged in the various scenes, in one of which is represented the city of Kishineff with all its terror when troops, with drawn sabres, committed a massacre which stirred the world.

The picture is made from Israel Zangwill's famous play. "The Melting Pot." Walter Whiteside, who achieved his greatest success on the legitimate stage in the leading rôle, is the "star" in the picturized version. The play would have been produced several years ago in picture form but for the refusal of Mr. Zangwill to give his permission for its use and the declination of Mr. Whiteside to appear in it. When the author's consent was finally obtained he stipulated that only Mr. Whiteside should play the leading rôle.

The play centres around the love of David Quixano, a young Jewish student of the violin, and Vera, the daughter of Baron Ravendal, Governor of Kishineff, who orders the massacre. David is wounded. He is arrested and exiled to the United States. Vera, who denounces her father for the massacre, is arrested and sent to Siberia, but escapes and reaches the United States, where she meets Quixano, and a romance follows, in which he turns against her because of her father's action and tells her that "A river of blood separates us forever." The climax is a tense situation.

Brooklyn, (N. Y.) Standard-Union

Date ..... FEB 27 1915

Manhattan Theatres

LIBERTY, MANHATTAN.—D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" is still breaking records at the Liberty Theatre. The current week will mark its turning into the fifth month of the run in Manhattan. With the exception of the year's musical comedy hit the receipts at Liberty have exceeded those of any attraction in town. Great masses of people and thousands of horses are in this spectacle. Miles of cotton blooming in the poetical southland of its earlier views, and then the quiet gives way to terrific battles stretching over ten square miles of territory. Whole cities are built up only to be destroyed before one's eyes. Artillery duels make battles seem terribly real. Wild riders march over miles of country roads, and condensed into the small space of two and one-half hours is told the great drama of a mighty nation trembling upon the brink of dissolution and then finding itself stronger and finer than ever. Its blend of history and romance, of stirring adventure and beautiful musical accompaniments to its action, are the salients which have made it the record breaking sensation of the current season.

...aroused over the showing of "The Birth of a Nation," the masterpiece of photography which is making Griffith famous as a director. ...of an alleged tendency ...tion, racial prejudice. This ...the Denied by the management ...July 3. Birth of a Nation ...has been entirely ...of the South ...setting, arrangements being afforded ...companies the great theater ...formances start ...ter in New ...k. The play in Chicago ...

Brooklyn, (N. Y.) Standard-Union

Date ..... JUN 29 1915

PLANS FOR FIRST NIGHT OF "THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

Several changes have been made in the military arrangements in connection with the first performance in Brooklyn next Friday night of D. W. Griffith's spectacle picturing the Civil War, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Brighton Beach Music Hall. It will succeed the present production, "The Devil's Daughter." Mayor Mitchel will review the Twenty-third Regiment, the Old Guard, led by ex-Mayor Ardolph L. Kline and the officers of the Ninth Coast Artillery, before the performance, instead of after it as originally intended. After the review the soldiers will march into the Music Hall and take the seats reserved for them in the orchestra. They will be followed in by Mayor Mitchel, Borough President Lewis H. Pounds, Rear Admiral Usher, commandant of the Navy Yard, and his staff, and other city and borough officials.

...in New York connecting arrangements for the presentation of D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," in London late in August or early in September. Mr. Davies saw the production for the first time yesterday and is enthusiastic about its prospects in England. He thinks it will be an especially timely subject for stage usage at the present state of affairs in England. Mr. Davies says that the young men available for service in England have not awakened to the perils of the war and for that reason have not enlisted as readily as had been expected. This wonderful picture, according to Mr. Davies's views, will serve to stimulate the national spirit and arouse the patriotism of the available men by its graphic illustrations of what an invasion can mean.

BROOKLYN, (N. Y.) TIMES

June 26, 1915

'BIRTH OF NATION' HERE ON FRIDAY

Will Be Shown at the Brighton Music Hall.

IS A $500,000 FILM

Manager Kemble Secures the World's Greatest Movie.

David W. Griffith's $500,000 film, "The Birth of a Nation," described by critics and experts as the most wonderful motion picture ever staged, will be shown to Brooklynites for the first time next Friday evening in the Brighton Beach Music Hall, where William H. Kemble, the manager, will present it at a gala performance, in which an orchestra of fifty pieces will furnish the music.

This stirring picturized version of Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman" portrays some of the most celebrated events in American history, notably the assassination of President Lincoln, the surrender of Gen. Robert E. Lee to Gen. U. S. Grant, the famous battle of Gettysburg, Sherman's never-to-be-forgotten march to the sea, the flight of the inhabitants from Atlanta when he approached, scenes of desolation on the battlefield, friends fighting against friends in trenches and on the plateau, families torn asunder by the terrible strife and other historic scenes which are unfolded to the astonished beholder as they occurred in the amazing and frightful chapter of American history.

The assassination of President Lincoln in Ford's Theatre, in Washington, is one of the most wonderful scenes ever staged. It is a remarkable scene, pictured on the description furnished by historians and men and women who were present when Booth fired the fatal shot. Lincoln is seen enjoying the performance, then putting a shawl around his shoulders as the temperature falls in the house, and finally collapsing as the assassin's bullet strikes him.

Wonderful as that picture is, it is hardly comparable with the battle scenes, conceded by such critics as Richard Harding Davis and others to be the most wonderful and realistic ever presented to the American public. Eighteen thousand persons, 3,000 horses and thousands of shells that cost $180 apiece were used in the conflicts. Mr. Griffith, who spent eight months and half a million dollars producing this now famous picture, shows the soldiers fighting in trenches, battling at breastworks, charging over fields with bayonets flashing, fire flashes from the mouths of cannon and concealed batteries, a panorama of marching and counter-marching troops as they seek positions of vantage, men dropping from bullets by the thousands, shells exploding in the air in a blaze of fire, friend meeting friend on opposite sides in the sanguinary conflict, and other scenes descriptive of the carnage of battle.

The battle scenes convey a realization of what the terrible conflict abroad means. The acting in the battles is so realistic that it all seems too real. Cavalrymen fall from the horses and soldiers drop in their tracks with a suddenness and skill and abandon which indicates reality rather than consummate acting.

"The Birth of a Nation" has the commendation of educators because it is a picture story of the most momentous part of American history, and portrays, in accordance with history, the great events as they occurred then. It is a picture of American history that lends an indelible impression of what took place on the minds of children as well as adults, and educates the onlooker in that part of American history.

Throughout the whole picture are two love episodes, in which a Colonel of the South loves the sister of an officer of the North, and the officer of the North loves the sister of the Colonel in the South. The proud spirit of the Southern girl and the equally proud spirit of the Northern miss are displayed in as thrilling and soul-gripping a romance as was ever staged. Love turns to hate, and later to love again, as each girl looks at the struggle with partisan eyes and remains loyal to the section of her birth.

The picture will be shown twice daily, including Sunday, at the matinee and evening performances.

N.Y. Press. June 27

"The Birth of a Nation" is entering upon its [illegible] in the Liberty Theatre, with every sign of continued popularity.

IMPRESSIONS OF THE PLAY

Globe June

By CORA MOORE

"The Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty Theatre

As you sit before the screen in your two-dollar seat at the Liberty Theatre and watch the 136,000 feet of film unfold the story of "The Birth of a Nation," if you are a living, breathing human being and not an automaton you experience a series of thrills such as the cartoonist assures us come but once in a lifetime. At any rate your emotions run the whole gamut from intense interest to the highest pitch of excitement. You smile, laugh, hold your breath, feel terror, fear, each in turn, according to the text of the story, for the action in the picture literally carries you along with it. It is only the body that occupies the space in the theatre that you paid for. You yourself are back there in the strenuous days when history was in the making.

Realism may be decried for the legitimate drama, so-called, as averse to art, but it holds good in film plays, and in the portrayal of the most exciting period of our country's existence art and realism have "met" in a most satisfactory manner.

The romance connected with "The Birth of a Nation" is not all connected with the story. It took a hand in the making of the production. In fact, Romance perched herself on David Griffith's idea right from its inception in his fertile brain. As the idea grew and took definite shape the known and used devices of film building were each in turn exhausted and new ones required, but the resourcefulness of the most talked-of man in the moving picture industry seemed to have no bounds. As fast as a demand came he supplied it, whether it were the necessity of refocusing a scene on the screen, the enlarging of a character or scene, the slow fading and then brightening of a picture to portray some incident of the past—there was Mr. Griffith with the supply—the "switchback," the "close-up," the "fade-out"—the Griffith innovations ready on demand.

Or perhaps it was that the expression of a face was not what the story called for, the pose of a figure or a gesture—Mr. Griffith on the tour of the moment had ready some suggestion for obtaining that expression. If a "look of terror" happened not to possess all the elements of terror in approved degree, a wriggly snake let loose at close range, a gun fired in close proximity, or some similar startling incident promptly produced the desired effect for Mr. Griffith and the camera men thoroughly understood each other, and are always in close touch when pictures are being made.

From Mary Pickford, who was under Mr. Griffith's management in the early days of her career, the necessary expression could always be obtained by arousing her temperament. Lillian Gish, who is Elsie Stoneman in "The Birth of a Nation" production, has naturally such a serious countenance that she could only be induced to show irritation by actually being made exasperated, and many are the tales of the methods to arouse ...

...O (Cal.) UNION
JUNE 21, 1915
820

...sman to Open Tonight
...today Thrilling Drama

...rah as Florence Cameron in "The Clansman" at the Empress.

...st Chapter in American History to Be Shown At Empress.

...ying the darkest chapter in ... history, "The Clansman," ... at the Empress ... "The Clansman" has ... popular appeal than any pi... ...ver made. This is proven ... ...t that more than 200,000 pe... ...itnessed this masterpiece ... Auditorium in Los Angele... ... the twelve weeks of its ... the finest detail shown in ... scenes to the utter magni... ... big scenes, "The Clansman" ... unequalled. The direction ... ...rity. D. W. Griffith is a ... ...r of depth and detail. Th... ... of light and shade, the use ... "close-up," the trick of doubl... ...ure, are handled as only he ca... ...s them.

...re are big battle scenes th... one through and through, an... portrayal of Lincoln's assassi... in Ford's Theatre is graphic ... fairly holds his breath whi... ...ing the Ku-Klux riders ... through the barricade... ...s of the little Southern town... ... every standpoint "The Clans... stands alone in sustained in... ...t.

...storically "The Clansman" is ...ct. A student of history can ... more from the few hours nece... ... to witness this wonderful pr... ...ion than from months of ex... ...tudy of books.

SEATTLE (Wash.) POST-INTEL
JUNE 20, 1915

Scene From "The Birth of a Nation"

D. W. Griffith's historical motion picture drama which is coming to the Clemmer Sunday, June 27, has aroused universal comment and controversy. The above scene is one from "The Clansman" part of the play.

COLUMBUS (O.) CITIZEN
JUNE 25, ...

$4,000,000 ...

Probably the most ... news in the motion picture ... this week is the announce... a $4,000,000 corporation ... formed with D. W. Griffith ... guiding spirit for the produ... pictures to be shown at $2 ... the principal theaters of the co... try.

This has been anticipated for long time—ever since Griffith ... ceeded in proving that the ... really would pay $2 a seat in ... motion picture. His photo-dra... zation of Thomas Dixon's "... Clansman," called "The Birth ... Nation" is still drawing crowds ... the Liberty theater, New York ... the $2 price scale.

The motion picture men ass... ated with Griffith in the enterp... are Thomas H. Ince and Mack S... nett.

BROOKLYN, (N. Y.) TIMES
JUN 27 1915

Paid $65,000 for Film.

"Birth of a Nation" Finally Secured by Manager Kemble, of the Brighton Beach Music Hall.

Through a $65,000 bid made by William H. Kemble, manager of the Brighton Beach Music Hall, at Brighton Beach, Brooklyn is to get the next set of films of D. W. Griffith's famous "The Birth of the Nation," instead of Philadelphia, which made an offer of $63,000. Cleveland, St. Louis, Detroit and Kansas City each made bids ranging from $52,000 to $60,000 for the film privileges. The Griffith interests have received more than 5,000 offers for the picture.

Manager Kemble announced to-day that he will produce the film for the first time in Brooklyn on Friday evening July 2, at the Brighton Beach Music Hall, and twice daily thereafter, including Sundays.

In theatrical and motion picture circles, Manager Kemble is credited with a great achievement in obtaining the right to produce "The Birth of the Nation" in Brooklyn at a time when it is running to capacity houses in Manhattan, and when all the big cities of the country are bidding for it.

"The Birth of a Nation" is the costliest film ever produced. $500,000 was expended to produce it. 3,000 horses were used, 18,000 persons were in the cast, 15,000 guns, 100,000 high explosive shells and gattling guns and howitzers were brought into play in producing it.

The play depicts the history of the Civil War in pictures, and gives a detailed view of the most stirring events, including the assassination of President Lincoln in Ford's Theatre, the surrender of Lee to Grant, the famous march of Gen. Sherman to the sea, the last stand of Lee at Petersburg, the battle of Gettysburg and the destruction of Southern cities under bombardment.

Because music is an indispensable accompaniment to the pictures, Manager Kemble has organized an orchestra of fifty, which will be under the direction of Louis Reinhard. Arrangements are now being made by Manager Kemble to produce the film on the same elaborate scale that marked its first appearance in Manhattan a few months ago.

BROOKLYN, (N. Y.) TIMES
6 1915
Date .....

Amusements

THE BIRTH OF A NATION
BRIGHTON BEACH MUSIC HALL

SAN FRANCISCO (Cal.) EXAMINER
JUNE 21, 1915

"The Clansman" Comes Back to the Alcazar to Stay During This Week.

"The Clansman," D. W. Griffith's famous dramatization of the days of war and reconstruction in the South, comes back to the Alcazar this afternoon and will remain during the week. Two daily performances will be given, at 2 o'clock and 8 o'clock. The production requires three hours. All seats are reserved, and may be obtained in advance. The same as in the regular dramatic engagements. This matinee continues the popular demand for the Ku Klux Klan. More than 100,000 persons saw the play during its first week and the demand ...

SEATTLE (Wash.) TIMES
JUNE 25, 1915

Big Film in Two Acts.

"The Birth of a Nation," to be shown in Seattle soon, is divided into two acts of six parts each. There is an intermission of ten minutes between acts, during which a special twelve-piece orchestra will play. Owing to the length of the picture, only two performances each day are possible, one at 2:15 and another at 8:15 o'clock.

FRANCISCO (Cal.) CHRONICLE
JUNE 21, 1915

"The Birth of a Nation" Returns to the Alcazar

...ar is ... the matinee today, ... W. Griffith's spectacular ... "The Birth of a Nation," or "The Clansman," will return to the Alcazar for a brief engagement. Two performances will be given every day ... daily matinee at 2 sharp ... performance at eight, beginning at ...

MILWAUKEE (Wis.) FREE PRESS 561
JUNE 8, 1915

...AND THE DIXON FILM.

Chicago's ban on "The Birth of a Nation" has been removed, and the public is flocking to see a photoplay which surveys a menacing and history-distorting doctrine by means of the grandest and most artistic spectacle yet realized by means of the motion picture.

In the advertisements of this attraction its sponsors print a number of testimonials, but it is significant that these encomiums, with one exception, relate wholly to the artistic and spectacular triumph of the film. There is not one word as to the social significance of the play, and the one person who comments upon its historical value is not an authority.

Let us quote some opinions on these aspects of "The Birth of a Nation":

Joseph Lee, the eminent social worker, in the Survey: "Is lynching negroes immoral? That seems to be the question raised by the approval of the Ku-Klux and anti-negro features of 'The Birth of a Nation' film. Appealing to the strongest race prejudice in the most vivid possible way at the precise point where it has led to wholesale murder in the South is, of course, an incitement to continued murder."

Dr. Samuel McChord Crothers, the distinguished preacher and aut... "It is not a work of art for art's sake to be so enjoyed; it is not history as an impartial historian understands history. It is a deliberate and skillful bit of treachery."

Dr. Jacques Loeb of the Rockefeller Institute: "It is a glorification of homicidal mania."

Prof. Albert Bushnell Hart, the foremost teacher of American history: "A prime objection to the whole thing is its caricature of the Union army and Union soldiers; and particularly its absolutely unfounded series of pictures intended to leave upon the mind the conviction that in Reconstruction times negro soldiers freely plundered and abused the white people of the south, and were encouraged so to do by their white officers. No such thing ever occurred in the whole history of Reconstruction."

The Hon. Albert E. Pillsbury of Boston, lawyer and educator: "The play, like the book, 'The Clansman,' on which is it founded, is a gross perversion of a period of our history about which the people have been persistently lied to for a generation."

The Outlook: "The evil in 'The Birth of a Nation' lies in the fact that the play is both a denial of the power of development within the free negro and an exaltation of race war."

The New York Globe: "The very name of 'The Birth of a Nation' is an insult to Washington, who believed that a nation, not merely a congeries of independent states, was born during the Revolutionary war, and devoted himself to cementing the union. It is an insult to Lincoln and the great motives inspiring him when he was called on to resist the attempt to denationalize a nation. This nation was not born between 1861 and 1865, and no one will profit from trying to pervert history."

These are but a few of many similar statements that might be adduced, nor are they the strongest utterances against this photoplay.

The Free Press is not prepared to believe that "it is a deliberate and skillful bit of treachery," but rather that the play represents the conviction of a fanatical partisan equipped with what the Outlook calls "a single-track mind." But admitting the sincerity of the author's motives does not render his doctrines and representations any the less dangerous.

Nor do they become any the less dangerous because they are invested and purveyed by a wonderful and realistic picture spectacle; in fact, this wonder and this realism render the evil influence of the drama all the more potent.

Not all the teaching of the truth about the reconstruction period by means of books, not all the historian and social instruction concerning the qualities of the negro, his true character and his fair chance, can hope to undo for a generation the ...

MILWAUKEE (Wis.) LEADER
JUNE 26, 1915

WHEN THE WHITE-SHROUDED CLANS GATHERED TO FIGHT NEGRO RISE

Night gathering of the Ku Klux Klan in "The Birth of a Nation."

July 3, Milwaukeeans will have an opportunity to witness "The Birth of a Nation," proclaimed as the most masterly and the most extensive motion picture production in the history of the pictorial art. This war drama of civil war times is exhibited in but two cities in the country, Milwaukee being the sixth to engage it.

Because it deals with the race problem and relations of the Caucasians and negro, showing what conditions were, according to the most authentic histories and eye witnesses, in war times, it is now the subject of national discussion.

There are more than a score of principal characters in the play, the thousands of persons pictured being soldiers in the war. In addition, the interesting scenes disclose cabinet officers, generals, military aides, attaches, secretaries, senators, representatives, abolitionists, southern planters and hundreds of members of the Ku Klux Klan, the famous organization of southerners who fought for their rights in the reconstruction period.

Based upon Thomas Dixon's historical novel, "The Clansman," but exceeding it in its numerous fascinating spectacles, including thrilling war scenes, the film tells a human interest story in connection with its history.

Mus
Galveston Tex
6 & 8 7-11

---

ment a government pension of 150,000, which is the approximate amount which will be paid her in Danish kronen of the realm.

"Birth of a Nation" Starts on What May Be Long Run in Chicago

Chicago, Ill., June 24.—False reports spread broadcast that D. W. Griffith's great civil war and reconstruction spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," would not be allowed to play in Chicago, were dissipated when the drama started a run at the Illinois Theater there which may continue for the next six months or a year. The enemies of the play made much of the Chicago opposition, just as they asserted that Massachusetts would find the means to expel the play from Boston by special legislation. The special legislation of a new censor board to judge the Boston production was indeed adopted, but the board itself astonished the factionists by approving "The Birth of a Nation." The facts regarding Chicago are as follows:

A legal permit for the Chicago production of the play was granted three months ago by the then mayor, Carter Harrison and the censor board under his direction. This permit was subsequently "revoked" by the new mayor, William Hale Thompson, and Police Chief Haley. Joseph J. McCarthy, general manager of the production, then took the matter to the courts. His prayer for an injunction to restrain Mayor Thompson and Chief Healey from interfering came before Judge William Fennimore Cooper of the superior court. Much testimony was given and much argument adduced on both sides. The result of the court proceedings was a complete victory for "The Birth of a Nation." Judge Cooper said:

Item
Allentown Pa
6 & 6 11

LEADING MOVIE PRODUCERS TO FORM COMBINATION

LOS ANGELES, June 25.—The three foremost producers of motion pictures in the world, namely, T. H. Ince, Mack Bennett and David W. Griffith, are to combine for the purpose of producing bigger film-features than have yet been attempted.

Official announcement to this effect was made by Thomas H. Ince, director general of the New York Motion Picture Corporation, and by Mack Bennett, producing head of the Keystone Film Company, whose comedies are known the world over.

It is understood that the new venture, which is backed by immense capital, is to be formed for the purpose of getting our bigger features and facilitating their release throughout the world. The headquarters of the new corporation will be in New York city. New studios, on a larger scale than at present, are to be constructed in the vicinity of Los Angeles.

Rumors of the proposed merger have been rife here for several weeks, but they have been consistently denied by the interested parties. The first information of a creditable nature leaked out yesterday with the return of D. W. Griffith from New York city who intimated in an interview that negotiations with Ince and Bennett had been pending for some time, but that nothing of definite character had yet taken place.

It is declared there will be three separate, individual companies, under the head of Ince, Bennett and Griffith, respectively, and controlled by the New York Motion Picture Corporation and the Griffith-Reliance Corporation. The new releasing corporation will be capitalized for $4,000,000 and begin operations August 1 with the expiration of the present contract with the mutual Film Corporation.

"Negotiations between Messrs. Kessel and Bauman, Mr. Bennett and myself and Mr. Griffith have been going on for some time, but we have considered the time, up to today, inopportune for making them public," declared Thomas H. Ince, today at the Santa Monica studios.

"We feel that by combining with the object of creating a better releasing service, we will be in a position also to produce pictures of a bigger scale than ever. We expect to work in absolute harmony. Each of us has his peculiar style and ideas about film pictures and there will be no friction."

Mack Bennett, when interviewed today at the Keystone studios in Edgewater, declared the merger would result in incalculable benefit to the motion picture industry in general. He said:

"The merger will place us in a position where we will have the benefit of additional capital and the consequent enlargement of our film producing service." Film comedies have come to the front with such rapid strides of late that such a combine was really imperative. The public can now look forward to seeing, in the very near future, some of the largest feature films that this country has yet produced.

BROOKLYN (N. Y.) EAGLE
JUN 26 1915

Several changes have been made in the military arrangements in connection with the first performance, next Friday night, of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Brighton Beach Music Hall. Mayor Mitchel, who will be the guest of honor, will review the Twenty-third Regiment, the Old Guard, led by former Mayor Ardolph L. Kline, and the officers of the Ninth Coast Artillery before the performance instead of after it, as originally intended. At 8:15 700 members of the Twenty-third Regiment, under the command of Colonel Norton; the Old Guard and the officers of the Ninth Coast Artillery will form in line east of the Brighton Beach Hotel and march in review before Mayor Mitchel, who will view them from the top step of the Brighton Beach Hotel. The soldiers will march directly into the Brighton Beach Music Hall, adjoining the hotel, and take seats reserved for them in the orchestra. They will be followed in by Mayor Mitchel, Borough President Lewis H. Pounds, Rear Admiral Usher, commandant of the Navy Yard, and his staff, and other city and borough officials. There have also been invited more than 150 veterans of the Civil War who fought through the stirring times pictured. The veterans will also pass in review before the Mayor.

The following committee has been named to receive the Mayor and other guests Friday evening: William H. Kemble, chairman; Lewis M. Swasey, Edward J. Reigleman, John H. McCooey, Jacob Livingston, Edward J. O'Loughlin, Thomas Brannan, William Liebermann, Edward J. Reilly, George J. S. Dowling, Carter Childs, John Geis, William Reynolds, Cleveland Rodgers, John B. Creighton, Eric Palmer, Louis J. Kuhn, John Brockway, Walter H. Oestreicher, Alexander McKinny, Harry N. Christ, H. Clarke Mooney, James McCarthy, Harry Tower, John N. Harman and Hugh H. Hanf.

As a result of the posting of the wrong set of advertisement bills on the elevated railroad stations bearing the announcement that "The Birth of a Nation" is now running at the Brighton Beach Music Hall, several thousand persons were disappointed at the matinee yesterday and last evening.

JUNE 26, 1915
MINNEAPOLIS (Minn.) NEWS

The two dollar motion picture seems to have come to stay, for "The Birth of a Nation"—the first two dollar movie—has celebrated its two-hundredth performance in New York recently. It is announced that more than 285,000 persons have seen the big picture in New York alone. Of course, not all paid the two dollar price—that is only the very highest price for the very best seats.

Griffith's Birth of a Nation has engaged in the greatest newspaper ad space ever conducted in Chicago, or in any other city for that matter, since the wonderful spectacle got under way at the Illinois. Of course we mean for theatrical ads.

DETROIT (Mich.) NEWS
JUNE 26, 1915

MOVIE PHOTOGRAPHY AT NIGHT IS NOW POSSIBLE

Motion picture night photography as a practical invention is said to be exclusive to D. W. Griffith, the producer, and G. W. Betzer, the cameraman of "The Birth of a Nation" spectacle. It was tried out during the production of the play near Los Angeles about a year ago. The light is produced by an illuminating rocket shot all as by ground illumination. It was successfully used to record a night battle in this historical production, several other directors have sought to imitate the process with war [illegible] July 4. [illegible] been [illegible] setting, [illegible] company [illegible] Germany [illegible] York. [illegible]

WATERBURY (Conn.) AMERICAN
JUNE 23, 1915

POLI'S GARDEN THEATRE

"Ghosts," the five-act Mutual masterpicture, made by the Majestic Motion Picture Company, with Henry Walthall and Thomas Jefferson playing leads will be shown at Poli's Garden Theater, Sunday evening. Here is a play claimed to be remarkable for its construction, settings and the acting of Henry Walthall, whom [illegible] will be remembered played lead in "The Birth of a Nation," one of the greatest [illegible] motion pictures ever produced, will be a revelation to students of the drama. This is generally conceded to be Ibsen's greatest achievement and one of the strongest dramas ever written. The subject, Heredity, has furnished subject matter for controversy almost since the world began. That the sins of the fathers shall be visited on the children is an old [illegible]

Alcazar

The eleventh big week of "The Birth of a Nation," or "The Clansman," D. W. Griffith's wonderful film spectacle, will start at the Alcazar Theater Monday.

"The Birth of a Nation" is a revelation in the new art of motion pictures. It is now being shown in New York, Chicago and Boston to capacity houses.

In its novel form, "The Clansman," by Thomas Dixon Jr., was a great success, and in its dramatic presentation it is even more sensational in its appeal.

"The Birth of a Nation" is the last word in motion picture photography. Nothing like it has heretofore been seen.

Aside from the merit of its picture story, the picture is historically correct and therefore valuable, and the [illegible] laid during the period of the civil war [illegible] are [illegible]

SAN FRANCISCO (Cal.) CALL & POST
JUNE 21, 1915

SAN FRANCISCO (Cal.) BULLETIN
JUNE 26, 1915

BROOKLYN (N. Y.) EAGLE
Date JUNE 20 1915

Owing to the interest displayed in the film presentation in Brooklyn next Friday evening of D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Brighton, Superintendent Dempsey of the traffic department of the Brooklyn Rapid Transit has arranged to put on extra trains on the Brighton Beach line to accommodate the guests.

SEATTLE (Wash.) POST-INTEL.
JUNE 21, 1915

'BIRTH OF NATION' COMING TO CITY

Photoplay Which Has Stirred Critics to Praise to Show Five Weeks.

IS STORY OF SLAVERY.

Union Following the Settlement of Great Problem Is Theme of Story.

By CHARLES HUGHES BANKS.

"The Birth of a Nation," a motion picture drama, which has set the world talking, won admiration, aroused hatred and love, and caused vigorous protests from many people, will be shown in Seattle soon. The picture has been running for months in New York at $2 prices. For several months it ran in Los Angeles at $1 for the best seats. In Chicago it has filled the Illinois theater, one of the handsomest in the city, for weeks at $2 prices.

Of course, the price paid for a show might not argue for its value as an educational or even as an amusement feature. But in a general way it does. People who will not pay 50 cents to see an ordinary show were glad to pay $2.50 to see Pavlowa. And they were wise at that.

The picture will be shown here for only five weeks. If it creates one-half the enthusiasm in Seattle that it has in New York, Chicago, San Francisco or Los Angeles, not more than 20 per cent. of those who try will be able to see the drama. As to its worth, Burns Mantle, conservative dramatic critic of the New York Mail, says the picture defies description. Some of the scenes he declares to be tremendous poems. All other critics, so far as noticed, are equally enthusiastic.

Not Always Pleasant Story.

The picture is not pleasant at all stages of the story. How could it be? The sins of the fathers are visited on the children. Slavery is a curse because it breaks the fundamental law of nature. Not only man, but all forms of life are born free. It was not the cavalier more than the roundhead element in the American colonies that traded rum for the first Africans and brought them in chains to this country. And the best blood of both roundhead and cavalier was shed in the end over the slavery question. They paid alike, no matter on which side they fought, for the sin of their ancestors.

The claim that this picture arouses race prejudice does little honor to the temper of our people. Shall we fear to look our own history in the face? A hundred Griffiths with $10,000,000 at command could not picture one-half the horrors that were rooted in slavery. And how could the great love of Lincoln be shown so well as by a pictured history of the events with which he was so closely connected, and those other events that followed his sad death? Had Lincoln lived, the greedy politicians could never have got the South in chancery. The days of reconstruction must have been far different days under his tender and compassionate guidance. But he did not live. The terrible events did come. Why turn our backs upon the facts? Why not look them in the face and learn by them to trek a better road?

Those who have described the picture from a dramatic standpoint have no reason for lying about it. The reports are all to the effect that it is wonderful. No motion picture hitherto has attempted to tell such a wealth of historic movement, either as to length of time or event, as this one. None of the critics express themselves as being disappointed after having seen it.

An Earnest of Nature.

"The Birth of a Nation" is an earnest of what will be done in future with motion pictures. Perhaps the historical records of the States will be filmed and filed away for future generations. Children could get more from ten reels of film of such character shown during their studies than from many books of dry history.

Director Griffith, in sending an invitation to a private view of these pictures given in Washington, D. C., under the auspices of the National Press Club, and at which the chief justice of the supreme court of the United States was guest of honor, said:

"Among our fathers lived a poet-leader who dreamed a new vision of humanity—that out of conflicting interests and character of thirteen American states, stretching their territories from the frosts of the North to the tropic jungles of Florida, there could be built one mighty people. For eighty years this vision remained a dream—sectionalism and disunity the grimmest realities of our life.

"Through seventy-five years of growth and conflict these states clung to their individual sovereignty, feeling with jealous alarm the slow but resistless growth of a national spirit within the body of a federal Union. This new being stirred at last into conscious life by Daniel Webster's immortal words, 'Liberty and union, one and inseparable, now and forever!'

United By An Issue.

"The issue, which our fathers had not dared to face—whether the state or the Union should ultimately have supreme rule—was joined in 1861 over the problem of the negro.

"Until Lincoln's day the right of each state to peaceful secession was scarcely disputed, North or South. New England had more than once threatened to withdraw long before South Carolina in her blind rage led the way.

"And yet unconsciously the new being within had grown into a living soul, and in the mortal agony of four years of civil war and eight years of more terrible reconstruction a nation was born."

A man who could give utterance to such thoughts is worthy the task of attempting to put the spirit of his words into a motion picture. We shall soon know by actual demonstration how well he has succeeded.

SAN FRANCISCO (Cal.) EXAMINER
JUNE 20, 1915

"CLANSMAN" AT ALCAZAR.

"The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's wonderful photographic spectacle in twelve reels, continues to attract capacity audiences at the Alcazar Theatre, where it is being shown twice daily. Among the features are Lincoln's call for volunteers, the siege before Petersburg, the bombardment and burning of Atlanta, Sherman's march to the sea, Lee's surrender to Grant, the assassination of Lincoln, the rise to power of Thaddeus Stevens, the great commoner, and the formation of the famous Ku Klux Klan. Owing to popular demand, "The Birth of a Nation" will be shown all next week.

SAN FRANCISCO (Cal.) EXAMINER
JUNE 20, 1915

costumes are so many that the show has become a parade of lingerie and [illegible] tour."

* * *

"CLANSMAN" AT THE ALCAZAR.

"THE Birth of a Nation," or "The Clansman," as it is more generally known, is coming back to the Alcazar Theatre for a brief special engagement, beginning with the matinee to-morrow. Two performances will be given daily, at 2 o'clock and 8 o'clock. This photo-drama, created in the United States, is founded on Thomas Dixon Jr.'s story, "The Clansman." It was produced under the personal direction of D. W. Griffith at a cost of more than $500,000, and the work occupied eight months. It is now running in New York, Chicago and Boston to overflowing business, with prices as high as $2. At the Alcazar popular prices will be charged.

"The Birth of a Nation" deals more broadly on its historical side with the life of the American nation than does the Dixon book on which it is based. It presents a problem which is still unsolved in the South, the problem of race conditions; and if it also conveys to the mind the ravages of war it is to the end that war may be abhorred and universal peace promoted. The history of the South during the reconstruction period, immediately following the Civil War, showing the organization of the Ku Klux Klan, presents one of the most interesting periods in the entire history of the United States, and this is vividly pictured.

SAN DIEGO (Cal.) UNION
JUNE 20, 1915

820

POWERFUL MOVIE DRAMA OF CIVIL WAR PERIOD WILL OPEN AT EMPRESS MONDAY

"The Clansman" will open at the Empress Theatre tomorrow night. This production in twelve reels was directed by D. W. Griffith, the world's foremost motion picture producer. It is an adaptation from Thos. Dixon, Jr's. popular novel of the same name, and is the costliest motion picture ever produced.

"The Clansman" deals with the civil war period. It shows the cause that led up to this conflict and carries the spectator through the war. In "The Clansman" are shown the most marvelous battle scenes that have ever been staged. The siege before Petersburg with thousands of soldiers in action, is realistically shown in the picture. The battle fields were laid out and trenches dug under the direct supervision of seven G. A. R. army veterans who took part in the original conflict. These veterans, two of whom were commissioned officers, remained with Mr. Griffith during the entire period that the scenes were being staged.

Artillery duels, in which explosive shells are hurled by both the Northern and Southern troops, from huge mortars, are shown in motion pictures for the first time in "The Clansman." The artillery used is the same that was used during the Civil war and borrowed from the United States government for the occasion.

In directing the battle scenes, Griffith used field telephones, flag signals, field couriers and even a captive balloon. These methods were not used as part of the army equipment, but were merely used by Griffith in staking the production. He used the modern war methods to better execute the methods of 1861-65.

Two artillery duels present one of the most striking features of the picture. "The Clansman" describes the organization and motives of the famous Ku Klux Klan, and shows more than 2000 of these white-hooded riders in their raids on the negroes.

General Sherman's historical march to the sea, together with the burning of the entire city of Atlanta, is shown in the picture. The burning of Atlanta is shown at night. The entire city with its countless number of buildings and dwellings is shown in the destruction. A terrific battle between Ku Klux [illegible] and negro troops, provides a thrilling feature.

The assassination of President Lincoln by Wilkes Booth, is shown for the first time in the history of motion pictures.

The final scenes of "The Clansman" provide the most powerful sermons that could possibly be preached against the horrors of war.

"The Clansman" is presented by an all-star cast including Henry Walthall, Mae Marsh, Miriam Cooper, Josephine Crowell, Spottiswoode Aitken, Ralph Lewis, Lillian Gish, Elmer Clifton, Robert Harron, George Seigmann, Walter Long, Mary Alden, Joseph Henneberry, Sam de Grasse, Howard Gaye, Donald Crisp, Wm. DeVaull and Jennie Lee.

BERKELEY (Cal.) GAZETTE
JUNE 26, 1915

"CLANSMAN" TO RETURN TO THE MACDONOUGH SOON

Mae Marsh, the attractive motion picture star, who takes the part of Florence Cameron, one of the leading characters in D. W. Griffith's spectacular photo-play, "The Clansman, or The Birth of a Nation," which is returning to the Macdonough theater soon, has gone through a tragic death scene almost one hundred times for the benefit of the motion picture camera.

Miss Marsh has been in motion pictures almost three years, starting with Griffith as an extra.

In Director Griffith's first picture, Miss Marsh was supposed to die. She did this so realistically and displayed such wonderful ability for enacting a death scene, that in almost every picture in which she has appeared since, she died a tragic death.

In "The Clansman," Miss Marsh plunges to her death over a steep cliff. This is one of the leading dramatic features to "The Clansman."

Matinees will be held daily starting at 2:10 o'clock, with the evening exhibition taking place at 8:15 sharp.

ALAMEDA (Cal.) STAR
JUNE 26, 1915

"BIRTH OF A NATION" TO RETURN TO MACDONOUGH

Miriam Cooper, the dark-eyed beauty, who plays the part of Margaret Cameron in D. W. Griffith's wonderful play, "The Birth of a Nation," which is to be the attraction at the Macdonough theater soon, suddenly found that she could be an emotional actress, only when her feelings were hurt and she began to cry.

Miss Cooper was the exact type that director Griffith needed to portray the role of the southern girl but while the picture was being taken, it seemed almost impossible to get her to display any facial emotion.

For several hours director Griffith scolded, coaxed, and pleaded with the young woman in the effort to get the expression of horror and fear into her face that was simply imperative for the characterization of the part.

Finally Griffith said sharply, "Miss Cooper, I fear there is no use of your trying any more, as I fear that you will never become a motion picture actress."

At these words, Miss Cooper became bitterly as she had not

While Miss Cooper was crying, the camera man began turning the crank on his motion picture camera and caught the entire action on the film.

Matinees will beheld daily starting at 2:10 o'clock, with the evening [illegible] taking place at [illegible]

...YN, (N. Y.) CITIZEN
JUN 30 1915

...d the fourth $5. At the end ... all of the winners of the ... will compete in a contest in ... in gold will be ...

... the great interest displayed ... presentation in Brooklyn ... evening of D. W. Griffith's ... spectacle, "The Birth of a ..." ... the Brighton ... Mayor Mitchel will attend, ... Dempsey of the Traffic ... of the Brooklyn Rapid Transit ... ranged to put on extra trains ... ghton Beach line to accommodate ... guests.

...ars will be provided for the ... red members of the Twenty-... ment, under Colonel Norton; ... of the Old Guard, under ... and of Colonel Ardelph L. ... officers of the Ninth Guard ... and the Civil War Veterans ... be the guests at the speaking ... and who will pass into the ... following a review of them ... Mitchel in front of the ... ach Hotel.

...ectation that there will be a ... ing of persons to see the ... w the soldiers, the passenger ... the Brighton Beach line and ... lin avenue-Smith street ... vice will also be increased. ... y, Sunday and Independence ... the service will be maintained.

...ner L. Los Angeles
...26, 1915

... Otheman Stevens

... is it.

The Photo play is symbolism.

... stage directors who ... their productions with ... fertility are uncon-... Maeterlinckians and d'An-...

New York reviewer who saw ... Griffith's "The Birth of a ..." has made this discovery ... he happens to be largely cor-...

... few instances, for it is ... true that the movie ... ers still do not quite com-... and what they are doing. ... fail to grasp the commercial ... of aesthetic principles.

Therein the Movies hold the ... hand of the speaking drama ... the application of a combi-... of realism and idealistic ... its.

The "fadeaway," the "close-..." the "flashback" produce ... tal reflexes on what is shown ... no resort of stage direction, ... elasticity of the stage can do ... all with the spoken play.

Allusion, deduction, dramatic ... gress, with the listener of a ... are dependent entirely on ... mentality of the auditor; this ... ries with varying degrees of ... dividual capacity of mind.

But by these devices in the ... ovie, nothing of plot or psy-... ological value can possibly ... cape the attention of the spec-... tor; it is all made understand-... ble, mathematically complete ... ith no use of illusion-destroy-... obviousness.

There are some directors of the ... ovies who now appreciate the ... arket value of dignity of pur-... se, in short of Art in producing ... ictures; Mr. De Mille, Mr. Neill, ... olonel Selig are some of these ... roducers beside Mr. Griffith; ... t unhappily there are many ... ho fail to realise that a picture ... hich will run for many weeks ... ecause it has the quality of ... eauty is more worth while mak-... ng, than one which will "get ... ver" for a conventional time be-... ause of conventional brains used ... the making.

Truly the photo play at its ... est is and must be largely a ... ymbolistic drama, for the very ... ason of showing in the picture ... tuations, thought and plot re-... itions, which in the spoken play ... re left entirely to the deductive ... ower of the spectator.

Reasoning from this basis, it ... comes evident that the only ... hoto drama, perhaps, who can ... his work well, is one who can ... t a picture play that will en-... ... imagination ... ... ature is the ... ...

...ESS ADDRESS ... CLIPBURO
...PING FROM
...ed
...Central
...1915

THE most thrilling, the ... the most tremendous ... story ever pictured on the screen ... Paul Armstrong's great play, "The ... cape." It is put into seven ... reels by D. W. Griffith, the ... mous director in the world, and is ... ceded by a wonderfully interesting ... informative prologue showing ... Origin of Life" in a series of pic... by and under the direction of Dr. ... iel Carson Goodman, the famous ... thor of "Hagar Revelly."

Every man and woman in Americ... every youth and girl over 15 ye... should see "The Escape" and ... what life is for thousands—perh... millions of people in the larger cit... No adult has a right to be ignoran... these conditions. We boast of fr... dom and liberty, and glory that ... belong to all, while the most horrib... slavery that the world has ever kn... is daily torturing hundreds of th... sands—and may exist on the other ... of a wall from us. "The Escape" ... picture of life as it is. It is the ... labor and love story of two sister... New York's "East Side."

The whole marvelous picture th... with one vital question to pa... "Who is the man your daughter ... ing to marry?" Do you judge h... his "money," his earning capac... his "character" and "fitness" to ... daughter's husband? Is it the ... shouldered bully who makes ... the one sister, who escapes just ... the wedding? Is it the wealthy "fri... she finds after her flight from ... "brute" whom her poor deficient ... admires and wins? Or is it the y... ambulance surgeon, whose silver ... of true love shines through the ... fying brutality of the East Side ... and helps her accomplish the ... "escape" from the roacherous ... wealth?

The whole story is te... thrills and excitement, bu... portray the greatest climax ... rescuers raid the dive of th... when is shown the most thril... realistic fight of guns, fists, ... jacks and night sticks ever show... on motion picture screen.

The New York Dramatic Mirror sa... "D. W. Griffith's film masterpie... "The Escape," by Paul Armstrong, ... addition to its masterly productio... rare acting and heart clutching int... est, has a direct message to humanit... It deals with the vital subject of th... duty we owe to unborn children, a... the care which should be given to d... veloping their best, rather than the... worst traits after birth. All this ... pointed out in the prologue, and th... story itself unfolds logically and ... tensely. It is a fine example of ... powerful effects which can be produc... on the screen and which are impossi... on the stage."

This masterly portrayal of Paul Ar... strong's great story of "The Escape" ... will be shown at the Liberty theatre ... seven reels for one week, beginni... Sunday, June 20. Continuous perfor... ances will be given from 1 to ... o'clock daily with admission prices ... 20 cents for adults and 10 cents for ... children under ...

MINNEAPOLIS (Minn.) TRIBUNE
JUNE ...

"The Birth of a Nation" Is Coming to Minneapolis

Jack Elliot and Mary Sherman, ... have leased rights for this section ... the country for "The Birth of a ... tion," the historical romance w... tells a story dealing with the ... struction period following t... war, expect to offer invited ... advance view this week of ... which, however, will not ... here until later in the ... picture will be brought h... ernoon only to be sho... to which admission ... tion. An orche... play ...

AMERICAN FEDERATIONIST

Now Playing LIBERTY THEATRE, NEW YORK CITY
TREMONT THEATRE, BOSTON
ILLINOIS THEATRE, CHICAGO

Also Record-Breaking Engagements in San Francisco and Los Angeles

D. W. GRIFFITH'S Gigantic Spectacle

The

BIRTH OF A NATION

A Motion Drama of History and Romance covering the most vital period of American Progress. Founded in part on Thomas Dixon's story, "THE CLANSMAN"

18,000 People 3,000 Horses Cost $500,000

Has been seen and approved by 200,000 Theatregoers in New York City
At prices ranging from 25c to $2

ORCHESTRA OF FORTY SEATS FOUR WEEKS AHEAD

Auspices of the Mutual Film Corp.—H. E. Aitken, Pres.

That the "reading" performances at Brooklyn's Alhambra theatre and picture, "The Birth of a Nation," in the Brighton Beach Music Hall, at Brighton Beach, to-morrow evening may have a military flavor, more than 1,000 military men will be present and be reviewed by Mayor Mitchel in front of the Brighton Beach Hotel.

There will be in line 700 members of the Twenty-third regiment, under the command of Col. Norton; the Old Guard, under the command of former Mayor Ardolph L. Kline, and the officers of the Ninth Coast Artillery.

St. Paul Dispatch
June 26, 1915

MILWAUKEE (Wis.) WISCONSIN
JUNE 28, 1915

SHOW FILM TO NEWSMEN

Private Run of "Birth of Nation" to Be Given Friday Night.

"The Birth of a Nation" opens its engagement at the Davidson theater Saturday night. Previous to this, a private performance will be given on Friday night, at which newspapermen of the city and their wives will be guests. The film will be reviewed by the Milwaukee board of censors at that time. Performances will be given daily at 2:15 and 8:10 o'clock. The offering is in twelve reels and starts promptly on time. The seat sale opens at [redacted] day

Mad. July 2, 1915

562

"The Birth of a Nation" is to run at Brighton Beach Music Hall for an indefinite number of weeks while the summer season is on. The big film spectacle is still crowding them in at the Liberty on Forty-second street and still stands as one of the really big hits in town although it is now in its fifth month. And to think how we laughed when some one said we were to have a film showing at $2!

BROOKLYN, (N. Y.) CITIZEN
Date July 1, 1915

That the carpenters, decorators, stage hands and carpet layers may have a chance to work without interruption in preparing the house for the first performance of D. W. Griffith's $500,000 spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation" on Friday night, William D. Kemble, the manager, has decided to close the Brighton Beach Music Hall this afternoon and evening and to-morrow's matinee.

The Brighton Beach Music Hall is being overhauled for the run of "The Birth of a Nation" there. The carpenters are making a number of alterations on the stage and in some of the rows of seats, while the stage hands are changing the stage effects to make them harmonious with the character of the film. New carpets are being laid. In view of the fact that the film picturizes the stirring events of American history in the Civil War period, and that Mayor Mitchel will review 1,000 soldiers on the opening night, has induced the management to decorate the house with American flags and bunting.

Scene of Assassination of Lincoln Is Reproduced

One of the most interesting sets built for "The Birth of a Nation," the Griffith photospectacle, was the Ford theater interior constructed for the purpose of reproducing the assassination of President Lincoln.

While the exteriors were taken before the original Ford, now a Lincoln museum, in Washington, the interior sets were taken in the studios of California. The theater was built in the open air, and the accompanying picture shows quite clearly the stretch of mountains in the distance above the top of the roofless structure. The edge, of course, was [illegible] the camera man filmed the scene, and the interior is a striking reproduction of the original. Details were followed completely. The boxes were reproduced, both the sides fronting the stage, and the entrances to rear, and the door through which the assassin watched the president before entering the box is shown, with the bar and hole bored by him the day of the murder.

Proportions were followed out to the inch. The stage was reproduced with fac simile sets of "Our American Cousin," as Laura Keane played it that night, and portion of this famous old comedy that was given before the tragedy. Booth's leap from the twelve foot box to the stage forms a dramatic moment, and the 900 people who appear in the scene as audience, actors, and orchestra, offer a vivid reproduction of the scenes of that famous April night.

Twelve candidates were tried out before a satisfactory Lincoln was found.

"The Birth of a Nation" comes to the Davidson, on Saturday, July 3. On the previous evening, a private exhibition will be given for newspapermen, and the board of censors.

MILWAUKEE (Wis.) [illegible] 561

"The Birth of a Nation" Comes to the Davidson

"The Birth of a Nation," David Wark Griffith's masterpiece of photodrama, for so long looked upon as the acme of motion picture art, comes to the Davidson theater, Saturday, July 3, for its first and only engagement in Wisconsin.

The production is in twelve reels, and its presentation occupies an entire afternoon or evening. Presentations will start promptly at 2:15 and 8:10 o'clock each day, and the exhibition will be accompanied by an orchestral setting rendered by forty musicians. The music was written for this offering under Griffith's direction by Joseph Carl Briel, and the instrumentation is a feature of this gigantic spectacle.

"The Birth of a Nation," which occupied Griffith many months in the taking, is a comprehensive story of the war of the rebellion; starting in the antebellum days, continuing to the assassination of President Lincoln, and finding expression of the trials and troubles of the south during the awful nightmare of reconstruction. More than 18,000 people and 3,000 horses were employed in its taking. There are scenes showing the siege of Petersburg; the evacuation of Vicksburg; Sherman's march to the sea; the surrender of Lee at Appomattox; the assassination of Lincoln at Ford's theater; the work of the Ku Klux Klan; all these are vividly realized in the comprehensive picture that stretches through the telling of the tale. The battle scenes were taken on a five mile field from the top of a sixty-foot tower and the actual battles were re-enacted in every detail.

For a love theme upon which to connect his story, Griffith chose Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman" and "The Leopard's Spots." The cast includes such favorites as Henry Walthall, Mae Marsh, Spottiswoode Aiken, Ralph Lewis, Lillian Gish, Robert Harron, Mary Alden, Donald Crisp, Miriam Cooper, Wallace Reed, and many others.

"The Birth of a Nation," will be shown only in the highest class theaters. This is Griffith's determination, and he holds all rights to the booking selection. Prices range from 25 cents to $1.50. Seats on sale Tuesday morning.

—Advertisement.

SEATTLE (Wash.) POST-INTEL.
JUNE 26, 1915

"BIRTH OF A NATION" [illegible] WONDERFUL PROGRAM

D. W. Griffith's stirring [illegible] in the motion picture field, "The Birth of a Nation," will come to the Clemmer. A private showing of the picture [illegible] written about it [illegible] ing of it, [illegible]

"When I saw 'The Birth of a Nation' the first time I was so [illegible] by the immensity of it that it makes the most [illegible] of drama look like the [illegible] stage amateurs. It [illegible] more like the biggest [illegible] tion that is not [illegible] this story from the [illegible] psychology to the [illegible] perfection. [illegible] of exhibition [illegible] Birth of a Nation [illegible] immortalized [illegible]

CLIPBURO

...ESS

...ROM

...YORK MAIL

...L 3 - 1915

...ENTS have been completed by D. W. ...ces for the presentation of "The Birth ...n" for a Summer engagement at the ...ren Music Hall beginning Friday night, ... continuing there indefinitely. This en... entirely separate from the run of the ... the Liberty Theatre, where it also re... definitely. The seaside engagemnt at ...ill include afternoon and evening per... daily, the same as the New York run. ... first time on record that a big Broad... has been duplicated for a Summer engage... the Greater New York territory at the ... the original offering remains on Broad... same scale of prices will prevail in both ... The Brighton Beach Music Hall has ...ally remodeled to accommodate the new ... Arrangements have also been made fo... al trains from Brooklyn Bridge through ...n Beach during the run of the spectacle ...idely known Summer amusement resort.

...FROM

...W YORK MAIL

JUL 3 - 1915

...TH'S NEXT BIG FEATURE "THE ...OTHER AND THE LAW."

...Griffith, the master producer, has just de... next multiple reel feature to follow "The ... Nation." Its title is to be "The Mother ...Law." He is now at the Griffith head... the Reliance-Majestic studios, in Holly... Angeles, Cal. He is in the midst of ...ns for the filming of "The Mother and

...t and the theme other than as indicated ...e have not been announced, but will be ...wn at the proper time. Mr. Griffith has ...selected his cast. Prominent among the ...layers who are to appear before the ... "The Mother and the Law" are Mae ...e Griffith actress, who will be remembered ...ee Cameron in "The Birth of a Nation;" ...arron, who has appeared in the Griffith ..."The Battle of the Sexes;" "Judith of Be... "The Escape;" "The Avenging Conscience" ...me, Sweet Home;" Miriam Cooper, who ...minent role in "The Birth of a Nation;" ...en, remembered for the performance of ...tto in "The Birth of a Nation," and ... ...er in "The Battle of the Sexes;" Ralph ... "Stoneman" in "The Birth of a Nation," ...er Long, the "Gus" in "The Birth of a

...ffith is determined that "The Mother and ... shall maintain the same high standing ... Birth of a Nation," which is playing to ...r prices in some of the principal cities ...untry.

...f Mr. Griffith's experiences subsequent to ...g of "The Birth of a Nation" will be re... him at the National Exhibitors' Conven... ...ch is to be in session at San Francisco, ...y 13 to July 16. Mr. Griffith is to speak ...ship and the rise and fall of free speech ...nal liberty in America.

...eclared that it is his intention to cite his ...periences in Chicago and New York with ...orship Board when an effort was made ...t the showing of "The Birth of a Na... ...espite the opposition it will be recalled ... Birth of a Nation" is now showing at ...ont Theatre, in Boston, at the Liberty ... in New York, and the Illinois Theatre, ...go, at two dollar prices.

MILWAUKEE (Wis.) WISCONSIN
JUNE 26, 1915

COMING TO DAVIDSON

"The Birth of a Nation," the histor... photod... ...d on "The Clans... ...n" and "The Leopard's Spots," comes ... the Davidson Saturday night, July 3. ... private exhibition for newspapermen ... the Milwaukee board of censors will ... given the night before. Following ... opening performances will be given ...ice daily, starting at 2:15 and 8:10 ...clock.

An orchestra of forty instruments has ...en engaged, and will render a musical ...tting, arranged especially by Joseph ...rl Briel. During the coming week ... Davidson will be dark, while a con... ...ete flooring and fireproofed operating ...om are installed.

"The Birth of a Nation" is the work ... David Wark Griffith, and was pro... ...ced by him on the actual scenes of ...e historical incidents involved. The ...ory starts with the importation of the ...st slaves into America, jumps to the ...te-bellum days; covers the war, with ...e siege of Petersburg and the sur... ...nder of Lee; shows the assassina... ...on of President Lincoln in Ford's the... ...er, Washington, and then turns to ...e incidents of the carpetbag days, the ...rrors of negro enfranchisement, and ...e Ku Klux Klan of South Carolina. ...n all-star cast has been requisitioned ... present the story and more than ...,000 people and 3,000 horses were em... ...oyed in making the ensembles of the ...g scenes. Some of these were taken ...om the top of a sixty-foot tower over ... area of five miles.

What is, beyond question, the most ...rilling scene of "The Birth of a Na... ...on" is the reel devoted to the assassina... ...on of President Lincoln.

The action of this portion of the ...rama was taken in two spots. The ...st was in Washington, where the front ... the historic Ford's theater, now a ...incoln museum, was employed for the ...terior scenes previous to the action ...ithin. The interiors were taken in a ...pen air studio in a reproduction of the ...eater. Every detail of the building ...as reproduced. The boxes were built ...d arranged, so that the runways and ...ors leading to them could be photo... ...aphed to show the approach of John ...ilkes Booth, his entrance, barricading ...e door and the actual shooting. "Our ...merican Cousin," the play which ...aura Keene was playing that night, ...as restaged on the stage of the the... ...er. Photographs of cast and sets were ...und and used. The result is a won... ...fully realistic depiction of this trag... ... that rocked the United States at ... end of the Civil war.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS (New York City)

JUL 10 1915

"NATION" CONTINUES TO DRAW BIG IN NEW YORK

D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" is still breaking records at the Liberty theatre, New York. The current week will mark its turning into the fifth month of the run in New York.

With the exception of the year's biggest musical comedy hit, the receipts at the Liberty have exceeded those of any other attraction in New York City.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS (New York City)

JUL 10 1915

SPECIAL MAINE TRAINS TO BOSTON FOR "NATION"

On July 8 a special train will be run from Portland, Me., to Boston for the benefit of Maine people who to see "The Birth of a Nation." The film will not be shown anywhere else in New England it is announced.

...IPPING FROM

NEW YORK MAIL

...ate .....JUL 3 - 1915.....

cut that he does every part creditably.

"The Clansman" is spreading over the country gradually, and the more it spreads the more people understand why the Essanay people paid Henry Walthal a big salary to go with them. As "The Little Colonel," Walthal gave one of the finest performances ever seen on the screen. a clear cut cameo impersonations. His facial play is alone a study and an education to young actors. Walthall is a Southerner, and this has helped, and it would appear as though he had put his being into his work. His Little Colonel will surely live for all time.

CABLE ADDRESS CLIPBURO

CLIPPING FROM

NEW YORK POST

Date .....

"The Birth of a Nation" will be shown in London early in the Autumn.

MILWAUKEE (Wis.) SENTINEL
JUNE 23, 1915 562

Slave Mart Scene in "The Birth of a Nation"

One of the most interesting propositions developed in "The Birth of a Nation," Griffith's presentation of "The Clansman" and "The Leopard's Spots" in photoplay form, is that dealing with the slave trade in America.

This phase of political conditions is traced from the importation of the first slaves to the troubles that grew through their enfranchisement and the subsequent tribulations of the south under carpet bag rule. As a sort of prologue to the drama, the arrival of the first cargo of slaves is presented with historic fidelity. From this the scene changes to ante-bellum days, presenting the conditions of the negro in the south at that time. Then comes the turmoil of war; and, finally, the rule of black over white, with a mulatto lieutenant governor in the capitol of South Carolina, and the Ku Klux Klan riding through the countryside to rescue their women and preserve their tradition.

It is expected that the film of "The Birth of a Nation" will reach Milwaukee late Friday afternoon. Its first presentation, a private one, will be to the Milwaukee board of censors at 8 o'clock Friday night. Newspapermen of Milwaukee are invited guests of Manager Sherman Brown of the Davidson.

So valuable is this film that Griffith keeps it in the charge of one man. Harry A. Sherman of Minneapolis, general manager of the Elliott-Sherman Film company of that city, went to Los Angeles to complete arrangements for the handling of this offering. He will bring it back to Milwaukee and will remain here exercising personal supervision over the twelve reels during the local engagement. This is done to preserve the prints from loss or reproduction in any way.

"The Birth of a Nation" opens at the Davidson Saturday night, July 3. Two daily performances will be given there.

Brooklyn Life. Brooklyn. N.Y.
June 26, 1915

At the Brighton Beach Music Hall.

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."—David W. Griffith's $500,000 film, "The Birth of a Nation," described by critics as the most marvelous motion picture ever staged, will be shown to Brooklynites for the first time next Friday evening in the Brighton Beach Music Hall, where William H. Kemble, the manager, will present it at a gala performance in which an orchestra of fifty pieces will furnish the music. This stirring picturized version of Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman" portrays some of the most celebrated events in American history, notably the assassination of President Lincoln, the surrender of General Robert E. Lee to General U. S. Grant, the famous battle of Gettysburg, Sherman's never-to-be-forgotten march to the sea, the flight of the inhabitants from Atlanta when he approached, scenes of desolation on the battlefield, friends fighting against friends in trenches and on the plateau, families torn asunder by the terrible strife and other historical scenes which are unfolded to the astonished beholder as they occurred in the amazing chapter of American history. Throughout the whole picture are two love episodes in which a Colonel of the South loves the sister of an officer of the North and the officer of the North loves the sister of the Colonel in the South. The proud spirit of the Southern girl and the equally proud spirit of the Northern miss are displayed in this pretty romance. The picture will be shown every afternoon and evening.

...ureaus, dr... door knobs.

MOVIES SHOW TWO MOODS TOMORROW

Tragic Plots at Alcazar and Tivoli; Comedy at Portola and Imperial.

"The Birth of a Nation," or "The Clansman," D. W. Griffith's wonderful photographic spectacle in twelve reels, continues to attract great audiences at the Alcazar Theater, where it is being shown twice daily.

For almost three hours the audience sits enthralled as page after page of the most potent events in American history is unfolded on the motion picture screen. A double romance running through the episodes appeals to young and old alike.

It is seldom that audiences applaud motion pictures, but the constant cheering and hand-clapping that greeted various features of "The Birth of a Nation" proved conclusively that at last a motion picture has been produced which, in spite of suspense and dramatic intensity, [illegible]

...CE 27, 1915

"BIRTH OF A NATION" STORY OF HISTORY

Scenes Attendant Upon Assassination of Lincoln Are Enacted in Feature Photo Drama.

"MOONSTONE" AT STRAND

John Barrymore to Appear in Comedy at Alhambra—"Sea Ghosts" at Butterfly.

Reproducing history, in all its detail, was elaborately done in "The Birth of a Nation," when David Wark Griffith presented for the camera the details and events preceeding the assassination of Abraham Lincoln in Ford's theater. The incident in this firm—for it is but an incident in the twelve reels that make the story—was the product of many months of research in museums and historical libraries. Persons who witnessed the tragedy were called upon; those who participated in the event, in one way or another, were interviewed. Twelve candidates were found to portray the role of the martyred president; and the one finally selected was not accepted until he was letter perfect in the part.

The exterior scenes were taken near Ford's theater, Washington, now a Lincoln museum, which still stands exactly as it did on that fatal night. The interior scenes were reproduced in studio settings, copied after the interior of the old house. The presentation of the murderer, John Wilkes Booth, was comparatively simple. It was not difficult to find an actor to portray the ultradramatic and affected attitudes of this matinee idol. The details of the assassination are reproduced with exactitude. The most tremendous scenes are shown in the battles about Petersburg. These scenes were taken from the top of a sixty foot tower.

An orchestra of forty will render a musical accompaniment to "The Birth of a Nation," when this photospectacle is presented at the Davidson theater, Saturday, July 3, for the first time in Wisconsin. The orchestra will be a feature of every performance during the run of the offering in this city. There is a special orchestration for the photoplay, arranged as an accompaniment to the scenes, and the result adds much to the effectiveness of the spectacle.

It is said that this offering is the most tremendous ever staged for a motion picture. More than 5,000 scenes are required to tell the story, and 18,000 people and 3,000 horses appear as actors. There is a story of the north and south previous to the war; of the outbreak of the rebellion; of Sherman's march to the sea, the siege of Petersburg, the assassination of Lincoln; and, woven through for the love there, the plot of Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman" and "The Leopard's Spots." The cast includes Henry Walthall, Mae Marsh, Robert Harron, Ralph Lewis, Mary Alden, Lillian Gish, Donald Crisp and others.

SAN FRANCISCO (Cal.) BULLETIN
JUNE 26, 1915

AT THE ALCAZAR

THE eleventh big week of "The Birth of a Nation," or, as it is more generally known, "The Clansman," D. W. Griffith's film spectacle, will start at the Alcazar Theater Monday.

As a novel form, "The Clansman," by Thomas Dixon, Jr., was a great success, and in its dramatic presentation it was even more sensational in its appeal, but it remained for D. W. Griffith to bring out from the plot its ultimate thrill and picturesque possibility.

Aside from the grip of its pictured story, "The Birth of a Nation" is historically perfect, therefore valuable, and the war scenes laid during the period of the struggle between the brothers of the North and South are the acme of complete realism. "The Birth of a Nation" is history visualized.

BROOKLYN (N. Y.) TIMES
JUL 1 - 1915

NEWS OF THE THEATRES

THE carpenters, decorators, stage hands and carpet layers may have a chance to work without interruption in preparing the house for the first performance of D. W. Griffith's $500,000 spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation" to-morrow night. William D. Kemble, the manager, has decided to close the Brighton Beach Music Hall this afternoon and this evening and to-morrow's matinee.

The theatre is being overhauled for the run of "The Birth of a Nation" there. The carpenters are making a number of alterations on the stage and in some of the rows of seats, while the stage hands are changing the scenery to make them harmonious with the character of the film. New carpets are being laid. In view of the fact that the film pictorises the stirring events of American history in the Civil War period and that Mayor Mitchel will review 1,000 soldiers on the opening night, he induced the management to decorate the house with American flags.

MILWAUKEE (Wis.) LEADER
JUNE 29, 1915

HISTORICAL SCENES SHOWN IN FILM DRAMA

SLAVE MARKET SCENE IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

Realistic battle scenes are striking features of "The Birth of a Nation," called the most remarkable motion picture ever staged, which will be presented in the Davidson with an opening performance Saturday night, July 3.

Music is also an important feature of the production, played by an orchestra of 40 pieces.

No less than 18,000 persons and 3,000 horses figure in the big battle scenes. The pictures, which required eight months to complete, show soldiers fighting in trenches, charging over fields, fire flashing from roaring cannons, men dropping, shells exploding, friend meeting friend on opposite sides in the conflict, and other scenes descriptive of the carnage of battle.

These battles, exact reproductions of battles of the civil war, were produced on a five-mile front with 18,000 soldiers in action. Modern guns and guns of the type of civil war days were used to give the desired effect.

MILWAUKEE (Wis.) WISCONSIN
JUNE 29, 1915

MARY ALDEN, WELL KNOWN ACTRESS, APPEARS IN "BIRTH OF NATION"

Mary Alden, who plays the part of the mulatto housekeeper in "The Birth of a Nation" at the Davidson, starting July 3, is one of the most competent of moving picture actresses in the work.

She was seen here recently with Nazimova, playing the part of one of the sisters in "War Brides." Her work as Mrs. Alvin in "Ghosts" established her as a character actress, and as the wife and the mother in Griffith's dramatization of Thomas Nelson Page's "The Out-

JUNE 27, 1915
BIRMINGHAM (Ala.) NEWS

GOSSIP OF THE MOVIES

By PETTERSEN MARZONI

REGULAR $2 photoplays in a chain of houses all over the United States are to be instituted within the next few months, according to the latest reports from New York, where H. E. Aitken, President of the Mutual Film Corporation; D. W. Griffith, Thomas H. Ince and Mack Sennett, master directors, have just completed negotiations for forming a $4,000,000 corporation for handling the productions.

Two of these men, Aitken and Griffith, brought the first $2 movie in the world, "The Birth of a Nation," to New York, and it has now played over 200 performances to crowded houses. What will happen to the new scheme is a matter of conjecture. If it does succeed there should be some wonderful pictures shown through the new organization, and at least a few will be turned out in the experiment.

The plans of this new development in motion pictures are not quite complete yet, but it is announced the pictures will be shown in a chain of theaters, each picture running for a week at each of the houses. The runs in the larger cities will be determined by the success of the production.

The productions themselves will be on the order of "The Birth of the Nation," the picture that has caused more comment than any picture or drama, for the matter of that, in recent years. D. W. Griffith, producer of this great drama, has already withdrawn from the Mutual, and probably is getting his company together.

Thomas H. Ince and Mack Sennett are with the New York Motion Picture Corporation, which has been affiliated with the Mutual, and it is presumed this producing organization will withdraw from the distributing company when the plans of the new, and as yet unnamed, $4,000,000 corporation has its plans in definite shape.

Whether H. E. Aitken can make all the people pay $2 to see a movie is a question, but these fine pictures should

DENVER (Colo.) POST
JUNE 27, 1915

"The first of the $2 movies has not yet lost its power to interest the public, and crowds still visit the Liberty theater, New York, to see "The Birth of a Nation."

ALAMEDA (Cal.) TIMES-STAR
JULY 1, 1915

MACDONOUGH THEATRE

"The Birth of a Nation," or "The Clansman," as it is more generally known, is coming back to the Macdonough theater for a brief special engagement. This photo-drama, created in the United States, is founded on Thomas Dixon Jr.'s story, "The Clansman." It was produced under the personal direction of D. W. Griffith at a cost of more than $500,000 and the work occupied eight months. It is now running in Chicago and Boston to overflowing business, with prices as high as $2. At the Macdonough popular prices will be charged.

"The Birth of a Nation" deals more broadly on its historical side with the life of the American nation than does the Dixon book on which it is based. It presents a problem which is still unsolved in the South, the problem of race conditions, and if it also conveys to the mind the horrors of war it is to be said that war may be avoided and universal

SEATTLE (Wash.) POST-INTELLIGENCER
JUNE 27, 1915

"BIRTH OF A NATION" OPENS AT THE [illegible]

Advance sales for D. W. Griffith's sensational picture of certain phases of national history, "The Birth of a Nation," indicate as great a desire here to see the picture as has been shown in New York, Chicago and Los Angeles. The production is quite as wonderful as it has been described to be. In fact, it defies adequate description. It tells a story of centuries in three hours; tells it to the eye, but in such a marvelously correlated grouping of pictures that a year's careful reading on the subject would scarcely supply the information conveyed. As for lively interest, no historian could hope to picture events with such thrilling sequence and with such a familiar manner. The show will have but two performances a day, afternoon and evening.

...lyn, (N. Y.) Standard Union
JUL 2 1915

...WS OF THE THEATRES

...to the great interest displayed in the first presentation in Brooklyn ...evening of D. W. Griffith's wonderful spectacle, "The Birth of a ...n" in the Brighton Beach Music Hall, which Mayor Mitchel will ...Superintendent Dempsey, of the traffic department of the Brooklyn ...ransit, has arranged to put on extra trains on the Brighton Beach ...commodate the guests.

...l cars will be provided for the 700 members of the Twenty-third ...under Col. Norton, the members of the Old Guard, under the ...of Col. Adolph L. Kline, the officers of the Ninth Coast Artillery ...Civil War veterans, who are to be the guests at the opening per-... and who will pass into the music hall, following a review of them ...Mitchel in front of the Brighton Beach Hotel.

...e expectation that there will be a great gathering of persons to see ...r review the soldiers, the passenger service on the Brighton Beach ...the Franklin avenue-Smith street Brighton Beach service will also ...ed. On Saturday, Sunday and Independence Day the same in-...rvice will be maintained.

BROOKLYN, (N. Y.) EAGLE
JUL 2 - 1915

...TH OF A NATION" TONIGHT

...ceded by a parade, in which 700 ...bers of the Twenty-third Regi-... the Old Guard and the officers ...the Ninth Coast Artillery will ...h and be reviewed by Mayor ...hel, Borough President Lewis H. ...nds and officers from the Army ...Navy Club, in front of the Bright-...Beach Hotel, the first perform-... in Brooklyn of D. W. Griffith's ...,000 film, "The Birth of Nation," ...be given this evening in the ...hton Beach Music Hall.

...he audience tonight will be one ...resentative of the leading citizens ...he city. Practically all of the of-...ls of Brooklyn will be present, as ...l as justices and judges. The col-...ing committee has been named to ...eive the Mayor and the other ...ests: William H. Kemble, chair-...n; Lewis M. Swasey, Edward J. ...gelman, John H. McCooey, Edward ...Goate, Jacob Livingston, Register ...ward J. O'Loughlin, Thomas Dren-...n, William, Liebermann, Edward J. ...lly, George J. S. Dowling, F. Carter ...ilds, John Geis, William Reynolds, ...veland Rodgers, John B. Creighton, ...ic Palmer, Louis J. Kuhn, John ...ockway, Walter M. Oestreicher, ...xander McKinny, Harris M. Crist, ... Clarke Mooney, James McCarthy, ...rry Tower, John N. Harman, Hugh ...Hanf and Jacob Brenner.

SAN FRANCISCO (Cal.) EXAMINER
JULY 1, 1915

CLANSMAN THRONGS ALCAZAR.

D. W. Griffith's famous spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation or The Clansman," continues to be greeted by enthusiastic audiences that pack the Alcazar Theatre twice daily. It has been called by reviewers the most potent drama of the times. While it is an epic of pictures, it is always intimately human. While tragic, it is illumined by constant natural comedy and illumined by a beautiful romance which threads the series of historical events.

OAKLAND (Cal.) TRIBUNE
JULY 1, 1915

FASHION SHOW

"The Birth of a Nation," or "The Clansman," D. W. Griffith's wonderful picture of the Civil war period, is to carry to the Macdonough Theater next week a special entertainment.

Following like "The Clansman" has given to packed houses for a month, it holds the audience enthralled for almost three whole reels after page of the leading events in American history, illustrated with remarkable realism and dramatic, is thrown on the screen.

There will be 100 persons and 2000 horses take part in the film.

The scene showing the assassination of President Lincoln by John Wilkes Booth is perhaps the most tragic beauty than any shown on the legitimate stage.

Based on the principals in the action of the drama the same movements that the country did half a century ago. The picture contains the most practical plan for universal peace that could possibly be devised.

The specially arranged musical program of old Southern airs and the singing of the world famous choir, simultaneously with the showing of the film.

Mrs. Patrick Campbell, "The Henrietta," with William Crane, Amelia Bingham and Miss Tallifero, and Cyril Maude in "Grumpy," are all booked for the Macdonough Theater.

...IEGO (Cal.) UNION
JULY 1 1915

...ue has ever written a stronger plea ...ricans stand by their ... President Woodrow Wilson. In the ...now being than that contained ...picture, "The Clansman," ...is now being shown ... of San Diego in the Empress ...e.

...ny argument is needed to in-...mericans to endorse the policy ... makes for peace, and which ...g advocated by President Wil-... "The Clansman" has ... attention to the dangers ... the pictured story ... situation today ... in common, ... the consequences ... as well as ... peoples with which he ... relationship to speak ...ar at home, spilling ... alien ... but that of our sons, our hus-... and our brothers.

...e Clansman" is a really great ...e. It teaches a lesson and ...nes a sermon the like of which ...eldom been heard from any ... It brings a lesson the time ...ance of which could hardly ... been borne to our minds in any ... way. People who have read ...ook and seen the play have no ...e for not seeing the picture. ...people of San Diego are to be ...atulated on being given this ...tunity—and that they appreci-...the privilege and are availing ...selves of it is apparent from ...crowds which test the seating ...city of the Empress at ...rmance.

SAN FRANCISCO (Cal.) CALL & POST
JULY 2, 1915

'CLANSMAN' STILL WINS AT ALCAZAR

"The Birth of a Nation," or "The Clansman," D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle, continues to draw capacity houses at the Alcazar Theater, where it is being shown twice daily.

This tremendous photo drama, based on Thomas Dixon's novel, "The Clansman," made by that wonderful producer, D. W. Griffith, is full of emotional intensity.

The periods included in this picture are those immediately preceding the Civil War, the war itself and the reconstruction period, with a finale showing the united people forming a nation. There is universal accord given to this production by observers as the greatest ever made.

Taken together, the pictures and the music, the whole becomes something of a national grand opera of such simple beauty and power that it satisfies all.

No American can thoroughly comprehend the history and the development of his country until he has seen this drama.

Matinees are held daily at 2 o'clock, with the evening exhibition taking place at 8:15.

Times, Seattle, Wash.
July 1, 1915

"Birth of Nation" at Clemmer

All Seattleites talking about "The Birth of a Nation," the half million dollar Griffith masterpiece which is being shown at The Clemmer to packed houses. It is without any question the most marvelous motion picture ever made and there is no wonder that it is creating such a sensation, and that the people are flocking to see it. In the perfecting of "The Birth of a Nation" there was the public exhibition of 1000 actually taken photos ...

...WAUKEE (Wis.) LEADER
JUL 1 1915

...program.

...HE BIRTH OF A NATION."

...of the first performances of ... Birth of a Nation," the movie ...a of the Civil war that will be ...in the Davidson, Saturday night, ...attended by Washington officials. ... this graphic play serves no other ...se, its message of universal ... marks it of great importance," ...an elderly senator who fought in ...Union ranks. "It establishes the ...ity of armed conflict."

...e play is a visual lesson in Civil ...history, the freeing of the slaves ...the horrors of the period of re-...truction in the south after the ...nder of Gen. Lee to Gen. Grant ...h is depicted in a scene true to

Brooklyn, (N. Y.) Star
JUL 2 - 1915

MAYOR TO GREET 'BIRTH OF NATION'

Will Review Parade to Brighton Beach Music Hall.

700 MILITIA TO ATTEND

Army Officers to Be Guests of Manager Kemble.

Preceded by a parede in which 700 members of the Twenty-third Regiment, the Old Guard and the officers of the Ninth Coast Artillery, will be reviewed by Mayor Mitchel, Borough President Pounds and officers from the Army and Navy Club, in front of the Brighton Beach Hotel, the first performance in Brooklyn of D. W. Griffith's $500,000 film masterpiece, "The Birth of a Nation," will be given this evening in the Brighton Beach Music Hall.

The soldiers will march to the door of the Brighton Beach Music Hall, adjoining the hotel, and then form into a single file and march to seats reserved for them. The Mayor and his party, followed by the Borough President, the officer sof the Army and Navy Club and other distinguished guests, will follow in order. As the yarade takes place, the beach will be illuminated with red, white and blue lights.

The members of the Twenty-third Regiment, under the command of Col. Norton, will march from the armory at Bedford and Atlantic avenues to the Dean street station of the Brighton Beach road, and there board two special trains, which the Brooklyn Rapid Transit will provide.

The members of the Old Guard and the Ninth Coast Artillery officers will board special trains at the Boerum place station of the Fulton street "L" and proceed direct to the beach under the direction of George J. S. Dowling, a member of the Reception Committee. The men will form in line at the Pike at 7:50, and ten minutes later begin the parade, which will take them along the board walk, around the hotel and then in front of the main entrance, where Mayor Mitchel and the other reviewing officials will be stationed.

Manager William H. Kemble arranged for a patriotic opening because of the approach of Independence Day and the fact that "The Birth of a Nation" is an edifying pictorial and complete history of the Civil War and the events that followed it, especially in the famous reconstruction period in the South after the assassination of President Lincoln.

Patriotic organizations, veterans' associations, eductors and members of historical societies have reserved hundreds of seats because of the character of the film which shows such stirring events of the Civil War period as the assassination of President Lincoln, scenes in the South as men and boys left home to fight for the Confederate cause; Sherman's famous march to the sea; and the burning of Atlanta; the surrender of Gen. Robert E. Lee to Gen. U. S. Grant; a wonderful battle scene of the last stand at Petersburg; the uniting of the North and the South; the reconstruction period, and several love episodes which add a flavor of romance to the wonderful film.

The Mayor will be accompanied by his secretary, Theidore D. Rousseau, and several city officials. Practically all of the officials of Brooklyn will be present including many Justices of the Supreme Court, Judges Fawcett, Hylan and Roy of the County Court, Deputy Police Commissioner Leon Godley, Lewis M. Swasey, Public Service Commissioners George V. S. Williams, Robert C. Wood and Cram, Charles S. Dewey and hundreds of others.

The Brooklyn Rapid Transit has decided to increase its service on the lines running to Brighton Beach tonight in view of the opening. The Franklin avenue and many of the Smith street surface lines will be run direct to the theatre.

The following committee has been named to receive the Mayor and the other guests: William H. Kemble, chairman; Lewis M. Swasey, Edward J. Riegelman, John H. McCooey, Edward B. Goate, Jacob Livingston, Register Edward T. O'Loughlin, Thomas J. Drennan, William Liebermann, Edward J. Reilly, George J. S. Dowling, Carter Childs, John Geis, William Reynolds, Cleveland Rodgers, John B. Creighton, Eric Palmer, Louis J. Kuhn, John Brockway, Walter M. Oestreicher, Alexander McKinney, Harris N. Crist, H. Clarke Mooney, James McCarthy, Harry Tower, John N. Harman, Hugh H. Hanf, Jacob Brenner.

MILWAUKEE (Wis.) SENTINEL
JULY 1, 1915

"BIRTH OF A NATION" STAR KNOWN TO MILWAUKEEANS

Henry Walthall Appeared Here in 1909 in "The Great Divide"—Attractions at the Theaters.

Henry Walthall, who plays the role of Cameron in "The Birth of a Nation," is one of the best known moving picture stars. He was last seen here in 1909, when he appeared in person with Henry Miller at the Davidson theater in "The Great Divide." Soon after Walthall joined the Bograph players, and until recently, he worked under Griffith's direction. Then he left the west and is now with the Essanay studio. David Wark Griffith, who conceived and produced this film, was last seen here when Nance O'Neil played this city under the management of McKee Rankin. Griffith was her leading man. "The Birth of a Nation" opens Saturday night and two performances will be given daily thereafter, starting at 2:10 and 8:10 o'clock.

Henry Walthall.

JULY 3, 1915
SEATTLE (Wash.) POST INTEL.

"BIRTH OF A NATION" WINS LONGER TIME.

Advance sale of seats for "The Birth of a Nation" has been so general and insistent that Manager Clemmer will keep the picture running into next week. The fact is that this picture has just begun to be appreciated in the city. It is of such a character that it cannot be described to give any near idea of its magnitude. It has to be seen to be understood. And many who see it once are impelled by its vitality to go again, some three or four times.

It is doubtful if any theater has presented Griffith's masterpiece with more elaborate and harmonious surroundings than has Mr. Clemmer. His pretty theater has the old-time atmosphere of the time of the play. The orchestra, the extra scenes he has introduced, the singing by the negro quartet, the costumed ushers the flag decorations, potted plants and portraits of the three great historic figures, Lincoln, Lee and Grant, form a setting for the drama that is very satisfying. It is pleasant to record that the patronage has tested the capacity of the house since the opening.

JULY 1, 1915
SAN FRANCISCO (Cal.) BULLETIN

"Clansman" Filmplay Continues Record Engagement at Alcazar

"The Birth of a Nation," or "The Clansman," [redacted] draw capacity houses at the Alcazar Theater, where it is being shown twice daily. This photo drama is based upon Thomas Dixon's novel "The Clansman." The periods included in this picture of seething combat, sparkling romance, destruction and construction are those immediately preceding the Civil War, the war itself, and the reconstruction period, with a finale showing the united people forming a nation, the striving peoples of the past becoming a unit, as Americans, with no North nor South of Sentiment.

SEATTLE (Wash.) TIMES
JULY 2, 1915

Birth of Nation at Clemmer

"The Birth of a Nation" at The Clemmer is the big attraction in Seattle. It is the talk of the town and is playing a crowded house at both the afternoon and the evening performances. Judging from the enthusiasm with this wonderful production is received it is safe to say that "The Birth of a Nation" has struck a popular note with Seattle people. As a marvelous motion picture achievement of motion photography upon a tremendous scale, a marvelous panorama of the Civil and reconstruction periods ...

LIPPING FROM Review
NEW YORK HERALD
Date JUL 3

Fifth Month of "Birth of a Nation"

D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," has started in on the fifth month of the run at the Liberty Theatre. Summer weather has not interfered with its popularity, as the theatre is kept at an even temperature by special arrangements which do not mar the presentation of the wonderful film story in any degree. This massive pictorial representation of striking incidents in American history remains the most potent offering of the season in town. In addition to the run at the Liberty Theatre Mr. Griffith has installed a second production at the Brighton Beach Music Hall where visitors to the seaside resorts in the Coney Island territory can see the picture without hurrying up town and abandoning the cool ocean breezes. This is the first time that a theatrical presentation of this importance has been booked for two consecutive runs in greater New York.

LIPPING FROM Review
NEW YORK HERALD
Date

Griffith's Masterpiece at Brighton Beach

Arrangements have been completed by D. W. Griffith's forces for the presentation of "The Birth of a Nation" for a summer engagement at the Brighton Beach Music Hall, beginning tonight and continuing there indefinitely. This engagement is entirely apart from the run of the spectacle at the Liberty Theatre, where it is in its fifth month. The results at Brighton will include afternoon and evening performances daily, the same as the New York run. This is the first time in record that a Brooklyn audience has been approached for an engagement in the New York territory at the same time as the original offering is in progress. The same scale of prices will prevail in both theatres. The Brighton Beach Music Hall has been totally remodelled to accommodate the new attraction. Arrangements have been made to run special trains from Brooklyn Bridge connecting with Brighton Beach during the run of the spectacle at this widely known amusement resort.

BROOKLYN (N. Y.) EAGLE
July 3, 1915

Griffith's Masterpiece at Brighton Beach

Pity the blind—for the blind will never see, D. W. Griffith's magnificent film, "The Birth of a Nation." Mere words will never begin to give them a realization of the dramatic scenes, the beautiful photography, the vivid portrayal of historic incidents and conditions as are seen in this truly remarkable production. No person, from the school boy and girl getting their first knowledge of the history of the United States, to the grizzled veteran of the Civil War, can afford to miss the production.

"The Birth of a Nation" was shown for the first time in Brooklyn last night, when the Brighton Beach Music Hall presented the film to a representative gathering. The Twenty-third Regiment, the Old Guard and the Ninth Coast Artillery and men and women from every walk of life, were the guests of Manager H. Kemble for the first showing of the film. And some idea of the strength of the film may be seen from the fact that at frequent intervals the spectators burst into spontaneous applause, or wiped away tears from their eyes.

Realism is the keynote to which "The Birth of a Nation" owes its success; and to obtain that realism Griffiths, who directed the taking of the film, spent $500,000, used thousands of men and women, hundreds of horses, and properties in so large a scale that the spectator's breath is fairly taken away.

The audience at the Brighton Beach Music Hall last night was not viewing a motion picture—the hands of the clock had been pushed back fifty years or so and the Civil War with its causes, its horrors and its results, was reacted before their very eyes. Those who sought to repress their cheers or tears by telling themselves that, after all, it was just a picture and the people were just actors and actresses, had extreme difficulty in stifling imaginations.

The film is an historical drama in two acts founded on Thomas Dixon's story, "The Clansman." Mr. Dixon himself appeared on the stage during the intermission last night and made a brief speech of thanks to those who had financed the film and to D. W. Griffith, who directed its taking.

The opening scenes are those of the peaceful South, with the negroes contented in their work on the plantations, the whites, prosperous and happy.

The war cloud appears on the horizon and before the audience has time to get its breath the men of the South and of the North are snatched from their peaceful homes and loved ones, and thrust into the fires of cruel war. The Union and the Confederate armies struggle in vivid hand-to-hand battles. Then comes peace and the vision of a new prosperity for the South, deluged with war.

Booth assassinates Lincoln as the latter sits in the theatre. Carpetbaggers scurry through the South, rousing the negroes and placing them on an inflated equality with the whites. Atrocities, horrible to contemplate, drive the whites to desperation and the Klu Klux Klan springs into existence to terrorize the negro back to his normal state.

With these conditions for surroundings, two love stories are beautifully told. Scenes of extraordinary pathos and historic accuracy follow one another, and some of the scenes in the [illegible]

CABLE ADDRESS CLIPBURO
LIPPING FROM Review
NEW YORK HERALD
Date JUL 3 - 1915

"BIRTH OF A NATION" IN GREAT DEMAND

Rights to Fourteen States Is Offered for the Sum of $75,000.

State rights for "The Birth of a Nation" are bringing big sums of money.

The rights of fourteen States were offered for $75,000 this week. The States are Minnesota, Iowa, South Dakota, North Dakota, Arizano, New Mexico, Colorado, Utah, Wyoming, Idaho, Nebraska, Kansas, Montana and Nevada. In this territory there are 885 playing points with 938 theatres and a population of 10,983,103.

NEW YORK (N. Y.) WORLD
JUL 3 - 1915

MILITIAMEN AT MOVIES.

The Old Guard of New York, 150 strong, under the command of Col. Ardolph L. Kline, with the Twenty-third Regiment, N. G. N. Y., and a detachment of the Ninth Coast Artillery, were the guests of William H. Kemble of the Brighton Beach Music Hall, on the first [redacted] of "The Birth of a Nation" at the music hall last night. Police Commissioner Woods and members of the Army and Navy Club also were present.

Two hundred and fifty census enumerators, who were holding a dance at Brighton Beach, also attended the performance. It was said at the dinner that the census of Brooklyn undoubtedly would pass the 2,000,000 mark.

BROOKLYN, (N. Y.) CITIZEN
Date JUL 3 - 1915

MILITIA SEES "MOVIES."

Army Men Guests at "Birth of a Nation" Show.

The presence of the Old Guard of New York, with its 150 members, and many public officials and army men in the Brighton Beach Music Hall, last night, marked the initial exhibition there of "The Birth of a Nation." The army men and officials were the guests of William H. Kemble, head of the Music Hall.

The Old Guard of New York was in charge of Colonel Ardolph L. Kline, former Mayor of New York, as commanding officer. A detachment of the Ninth Coast Artillery was also present and enjoyed the film entertainment. The public officials who were among the guests of the evening included Police Commissioner Woods and a number of members of the Army and Navy Club.

The picture, which is a "movie" interpretation of Thomas Dixon's famous novel, "The Clansman," is a striking portrayal of several critical periods in American history. It ran for months in Manhattan with much success.

Journal of Commerce
July 3, 1915

"Birth of a Nation" Popular.

D. W. Griffith's photo-spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," has started on its fifth month at the Liberty Theatre and the hot weather has not interfered with the attendance. The theatre is kept at an even temperature by means of a special cooling plant, so that the audience can enjoy every minute of the picture. There is also a second production of the film at the Brighton Beach Music Hall, which is drawing crowds at both places.

N. Y. Eve. World.
July 3, 1915

"The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's stirring pictorial triumph, attracted a large audience last night, attracted a large audience last night at Brighton Beach Music Hall. It will be presented twice daily for several weeks.

BROOKLYN, (N. Y.) TIMES

'BIRTH OF NATION' STIRRING FILM

Vivid Civil War Production at Brighton Music Hall.

CHEERED BY GUARDSMEN

23d Reg't and Old Guard the Guests of Kemble.

Pity the blind—for the blind will never see, D. W. Griffith's magnificent film, "The Birth of a Nation." Mere words will never begin to give them a realization of the dramatic scenes, the beautiful photography, the vivid portrayal of historic incidents and conditions as are seen in this truly remarkable production. No person, from the school boy and girl getting their first knowledge of the history of the United States, to the grizzled veteran of the Civil War, can afford to miss the production.

"The Birth of a Nation" was shown for the first time in Brooklyn last night, when the Brighton Beach Music Hall presented the film to a representative gathering. The Twenty-third Regiment, the Old Guard and the Ninth Coast Artillery and men and women from every walk of life, were the guests of Manager H. Kemble for the first showing of the film. And some idea of the strength of the film may be seen from the fact that at frequent intervals the spectators burst into spontaneous applause, or wiped away tears from their eyes.

Realism is the keynote to which "The Birth of a Nation" owes its success; and to obtain that realism Griffiths, who directed the taking of the film, spent $500,000, used thousands of men and women, hundreds of horses, and properties in so large a scale that the spectator's breath is fairly taken away.

The audience at the Brighton Beach Music Hall last night was not viewing a motion picture—the hands of the clock had been pushed back fifty years or so and the Civil War with its causes, its horrors and its results, was reacted before their very eyes. Those who sought to repress their cheers or tears by telling themselves that, after all, it was just a picture and the people were just actors and actresses, had extreme difficulty in stifling imaginations.

The film is an historical drama in two acts founded on Thomas Dixon's story, "The Clansman." Mr. Dixon himself appeared on the stage during the intermission last night and made a brief speech of thanks to those who had financed the film and to D. W. Griffith, who directed its taking.

The opening scenes are those of the peaceful South, with the negroes contented in their work on the plantations, the whites, prosperous and happy.

The war cloud appears on the horizon and before the audience has time to get its breath the men of the South and of the North are snatched from their peaceful homes and loved ones, and thrust into the fires of cruel war. The Union and the Confederate armies struggle in vivid hand-to-hand battles. Then comes peace and the vision of a new prosperity for the South, deluged with war.

Booth assassinates Lincoln as the latter sits in the theatre. Carpetbaggers scurry through the South, rousing the negroes and placing them on an inflated equality with the whites. Atrocities, horrible to contemplate, drive the whites to desperation and the Klu Klux Klan springs into existence to terrorize the negro back to his normal state.

With these conditions for surroundings, two love stories are beautifully told. Scenes of extraordinary pathos and historic accuracy follow one another, and some of the scenes in the [illegible]

SAN FRANCISCO (Cal.) [illegible]
JULY [illegible]

LIBERTY—D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" is still [illegible] records at this theatre. Last [illegible] marked its turning into the fifth month of the run in New York. With the exception of the year's biggest musical comedy hit, it is said, the receipts at the Liberty have exceeded those of any other attraction in town. Great masses of people and thousands of horses are seen in this spectacle.

In keeping with the masterly directing, the drama's strength is gained by the actors and actresses employed. Such film stars as Henry Walthall, Mae Marsh, Lillian Gish, Ralph Lewis, Miriam Cooper, Josephine Crowell, George Beltzmann and Spottiswoode Aiken, leaving nothing to be desired in their work.

Never was a moral or a lesson more graphically presented. The film is a plea for universal peace, establishing as it does the utter futility of armed conflict. The battle scenes, despite their realism, their strength, their awfulness, are in no sense of the word glorified. In place of that glorification, there is a note of terror and desolation. The battle scenes were not those applauded last night; the audience clutched the arms of their seats and viewed the struggles with horror and amazement. It was the victorious ride of the cloaked Klan, dashing on their horses to avenge and prevent atrocities, that wrung from the lips of the audience last night, cheer after cheer; and when the film ended, all rose and sang "The Star Spangled Banner," as no theatre audience had ever sung it before.

"The Birth of a Nation" will run at the Music Hall indefinitely. The music by a band of forty pieces, added no small part in the presentation of the film. The usher girls are dressed in quaint 1860 styles which are unusually becoming to them.

[illegible]EM (O.) HERALD
JULY 3, 1915

FOUR MILLION DOLLAR NEW MOVIE CONCERN

New York, July 3.—A new movement in the movie world that will revolutionize even that startling and sensational industry is about completed and the plans of the organization entertain an extension of the moving picture business on a scale heretofore not even dreamed of. H. E. Aitken is the leader behind the movement and associated with him are D. W. Griffith, producer of "The Birth of A Nation," Thomas H. Ince and [redacted]ett, the producer of the funny movies. Sennett has organized more comics on the screen than any other man in the business.

The plan is to book movie productions in a regular chain of theatres throughout the country, the same as legitimate shows are now seen. This will raise the movies to the level of regular theatrical plays and will assure people in every section of the country an opportunity of seeing the best screen pictures that are being made anywhere today. The price of admission probably will also be raised but the backers of the new combination believe their productions will be worth the new price scale.

Aitken has announced that a big Broadway theatre has been acquired and that others in every large city in the country are under consideration. The first showing of the new combination's plays will be in New York and then will start on the round of other cities, the same as road companies do.

It is predicted by Aitken the new departure will overshadow anything of the kind ever before attempted and that the weekly cost of the films released will be near $5,000,000. Wall street is behind the movement in a financial way and large sums of money will be expended on branch offices in London, Paris, Vienna, Petrograd, Rome, South America and all big American cities which will also act as producing centers.

Press.
Cleveland, Ohio
July 3, 1915

Film Play "Birth of a Nation" Draws Big Crowds at $2 Per in Chicago.

"Birth of a Nation" [illegible] Chicago with seats $2.00. It is running under an injunction to prevent interference by cowboys while [illegible]

N BEHIND "THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

who have witnessed the e motion picture spectacle the civil war and reconstruc-, "The Birth of a Nation," are inclined to imagine the making of the films as being directed by a raving individual constantly on the verge of insanity. Such would in all probability be the mental state of almost any man who attempted to evolve order out of the chaos of thousands of untrained actors and three thousand equally unmanageable horses.

D. W. Griffith, in whose brain originated the great battle scenes pictured in "The Birth of a Nation," some of them extending over an open air stage five miles wide, is not in an asylum. He is not even ruffled in temper nor was he seriously ruffled at any stage of the eight months work of producing the spectacle.

It has been said of Griffith that he has the faculty of doing big things without seeming at the time to be accomplishing anything. The humblest pickaninny in one of the scenes, whose sole dark mission is to supply a minute bit of local color, in all probability displayed more concern about the making of the picture than did Griffith.

While directing he appears to be thinking about almost anything but the work in hand. During a big scene he is apt to be found chatting with bystanders, indulging in light hearted horseplay with members of the company, doing almost anything, in short, but directing. But if the slightest variation is made in the picture as he has built it up in his mind his eye instantly detects the error. And then he is patient until it comes right.

It is related of the managers of the company that gave him his first big salary contract, commonly reported to be $100,000 a year, that they almost had heart failure when they saw him directing his first picture. He strolled into the studio late, chatted a while with the company, danced with the girls and passed jokes with the men. Unconcernedly he posed a few apparently unimportant scenes and then, to the horror of the managers, dismissed an expensive company for the day with hours of daylight still available.

Only his contract saved him from being fired on the spot. But when the picture was produced and the public began to show, in box office returns, its appreciation of the symmetry of the work and the delicate little touches of which Griffith is so fond, the managers' attitude toward the new director changed. Before long they were ready to back Griffith to the extent of their ability in anything he might propose.

W. Griffith directing a scene. A characteristic pose of the producer of the great Civil War spectacle.

erald July 4, 1915

Y.—"The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's production of a war ectacle play, suggested by "The Clansman."

ess. July 4, 1915

D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," has started in on the fifth month of its run in the Liberty Theatre. Summer weather has not interfered with its popularity, as the theatre is kept at an even temperature by special mechanical arrangements. This pictorial representation of stirring incidents in American history remains one of the most potent offering of the season in town. In addition to the run in the Liberty Theatre, Griffith has installed a second production in the Brighton Beach Music Hall, where visitors to the seaside resorts in the Coney Island territory can see the picture without hurrying up town. This is the first time that a theatrical presentation of this importance has been booked for two summer runs in Greater New York.

.Y. World July 4, 1915

IGHTON BEACH—Seat reser-ons have been made by many e, patriotic, social and other nizations at the Brighton Beach ic Hall to see D. W. Griffith's t photo play, "The Birth of a tion," which opened there Friday t with the presence of distin-hed public officials and 700 mem-of the National Guard. Every f available room in the big play-e, by the seashore has been ed to make room for the crowds h are expected to attend the per-ances this afternoon and evening on Independence Day. Through-the week and while "The Birth Nation" is playing, both a nee and an evening performance, ding Sundays, will be given.

he historic features of the pre-tation have attracted the attention ducators, children's leagues, so-ies which favor world peace, riotic organizations and other ies, some of which have made ar-gements to see special perform-es.

he photo play presents stirring ts of American history, including assassination of President Lin-n, the surrender of Lee to Grant Appomattox, the last stand of the nfederates at Petersburg, and an ct reproduction of Ford's Theatre the scenes attending the on that fatal night.

Birth of a Nation" h's picture version of s novel, "The Clansman," at the Liberty

NEW YORK (N. Y.) WORLD

JUL 4 - 1915

LINCOLN SIGNING CALL FOR VOLUNTEERS

W.J. Sun July 4, 1915

D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," has started in on the first month of the run at the Liberty Theatre. Summer weather has not interfered with its popularity, as the theatre is kept at an even temperature, which does not mar the presentation of the film story in any marked degree. This pictorial representation of stirring incidents in American history remains a potent offering of the season in town.

Herald July 4, 1915.

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" is certain to increase to notable dimensions the daily temporary population of Brighton Beach. The great picture play of the civil war period is attracting immense crowds daily to the Brighton Beach Music Hall and is not only a wonderful entertainment but a tremendous educational feature.

BRIGHTON BEACH MUSIC HALL.—Seat reservations have been made by many peace patriotic, social and other organizations at the Brighton Beach Music Hall to see D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation," which was opened there Friday night with the presence of distinguished public officials, 700 members of the Twenty-third regiment, the Old Guard and the officers of the Ninth Coast Artillery, and which is to be continued.

Every bit of available room in the big playhouse by the seashore has been utilized to make room for the crowds which are expected to attend the matinee and the evening performances this afternoon and this evening and on Independence Day. Throughout the week and while "The Birth of a Nation" is playing both a matinee and an evening performance, including Sundays, will be given.

The historic features of the presentation have attracted the attention of educators, children's leagues, societies which favor world peace and the end of war, patriotic organizations and other bodies, some of which have made arrangements to see special performances, that the members may see, in picture form, those stirring events of American history, including the assassination of President Lincoln, the surrender of Lee to Grant at Appomattox, the last stand of the Confederates at Petersburg, Lincoln in a tender scene, where he grants the mother of a Confederate soldier her plea to save him from execution, and an exact reproduction of Ford's Theatre and the scenes attending the shooting on that fatal night. Booth is not only shown firing the shot, but leaping from the box to the stage and shouting defiance as he makes his way out.

Critics have stated that all of the scenes are truly realistic. Sherman's famous march to the sea, which is reproduced, is regarded as a master stroke in film wizchery, while the last stand at Petersburg has been described as the greatest scene of its kind ever staged. The famous rides of the Ku Klux Klan, which was such an important factor in the reconstruction of the South after the war and which brought order out of chaos, are pictured with startling effect.

Telegraph July 4, 1915

Didn't Want Actors.

Be it known that Walter Long, who played the part of Gus in the "Clansman," is not a bloodthirsty individual, but at all times quite rational. Recently Long tired of the location where he was living and went out and found another which suited him well. Immediately friend wife went out to overlook the new place and make the last preparations for occupying the new home. Up to this time neither Long or his wife had mentioned their name. When the time came for signing the lease the family name was signed and everything looked nice till the man who was renting the place wanted to put another clause into the paper to the effect that they would not entertain actors in their home as he would rent no property to that class of people. Then it started. When Long told him that he himself was an actor and that he had played Gus in the "Clansman," the old man nearly died. At first he would not believe that Long had the role, as he was sure that it was done by a negro. However, he called up the studio and they verified Long's statement. That clinched it. Walter is still living at the same place. That is the strangest part of California. Evangelists exhort the picture people to come to church, as they consider all of them lost, and when they get them in the edifice they pan the life out of them. Besides that, there are a great many homes in Hollywood that will not be leased to actors, as they are considered undesirables; yet every time a benefit of any kind is held the profession is the first called on and the first to respond. Some day the people out here will realize that the picture people are responsible for the prosperity of this place and will be accepted as human beings and not as crooks.

BROOKLYN, (N. Y.) EAGLE

1915

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" AROUSES INTEREST HERE

Seat reservations have been made by many peace, patriotic, social and other organizations at the Brighton Beach Music Hall to see D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which opened Friday night with the presence of distinguished public officials, members of the Twenty-third Regiment, the Old Guard and the officers of the Ninth Coast Artillery, and which is to be continued indefinitely. Every bit of available room in the big playhouse has been utilized to make room for the crowds which are expected to attend the matinee and the evening performances, this afternoon and this evening, and on Independence Day. Throughout the week and while "The Birth of a Nation" is playing both a matinee and an evening performance, including Sundays, will be given.

The historic features of the presentation have attracted wide attention and educators, societies which favor world peace and the end of war, patriotic organizations and other bodies have made arrangements to see special performances. In true picture form, stirring events of American history, including the assassination of President Lincoln, the surrender of Lee to Grant at Appomattox, the last stand of the Confederates at Petersburg, Lincoln a tender scene where he grants the mother of a Confederate officer her pleas to save him from execution, an exact reproduction of Ford's Theater and the scenes attending the shooting on that fatal night are among the scenes. Booth is not only shown firing the shot but leaping from the boxes to the stage and shouting defiance as he made his way out and escaped.

Sherman's famous march to the sea, which is reproduced, is regarded as a masterstroke in film work, while the last stand at Petersburg has been described as the greatest battle scene of its kind ever staged. The rides of the Ku Klux Klan, which was such an important factor in the Reconstruction of the South after the war and which brought order out of chaos, are pictured with startling effect.

D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," has started in on the fifth month of its run at the Liberty Theatre. Summer weather has not interfered with its popularity, as the playhouse is kept at an even temperature by special mechanical arrangements which do not mar the presentation of the wonderful film story. This massive pictorial production of stirring incidents in American history remains the most potent offering of the season in motion picture season in New York. In addition to the run at the Liberty Theatre Griffith has installed a second production at the Brighton Beach Music Hall, where visitors to the seaside resort can see the picture without hurrying up town. This is the first time a theatrical presentation of importance has been booked for two summer runs in the greater city.

Telegraph July

D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," has started in on the fifth month of the run at the Liberty Theatre. Summer weather has not interfered with its popularity, as the theatre is kept at an even temperature by special mechanical arrangements which do not mar the presentation of the wonderful film story in any degree. This massive pictorial representation of stirring incidents in American history remains the most potent offering of the season in town. In addition to the run at the Liberty Theatre, Mr. Griffith has installed a second production at the Brighton Beach Music Hall, where visitors to the seaside resorts in the Coney Island territory can see the picture without hurrying up town and abandoning the cool ocean breezes.

Herald July

D. W. Griffith's spectacle "The Birth of a Nation" has entered upon its fifth month in the Liberty Theatre. Summer weather has not diminished interest in this film story. In addition to the presentation in the Liberty Mr. Griffith has installed a second production in the Brighton Music Hall. This is the first time that a screen feature of this importance has been booked for two summer runs in New York.

Times July

A Double Run.

"The Birth of a Nation," the film of the $2 movies, is being shown now in various cities, but New York has two theatres devoted to the one film. The fifth month of the engagement has been reached at the Liberty, and in addition the big Kuklux Klan film is on exhibition for the shore folk at the Brighton Beach Music Hall.

N.Y. Telegraph July 4, 1915

GEORGE A. BERANGER

Griffith Features, Appearing in "The Birth of a Nation," Adapted From "The Clansman."

H PLAY

THE MORNING TELEGRAPH, SUNDAY, JULY 4, 1915.

Mightiest Triumvirate in the History of Films

Underpaid at $100,000 a year each

Three men acknowledged the world over to be its greatest Producers of Moving Pictures

D. W. GRIFFITH.
Producer of The Birth of a Nation, General Director of Reliance and Majestic Companies.

I have watched 100,000 people pay $2.00 each to see Griffith's wonderful moving picture, "The Birth of a Nation." Quite aside from the money—for $2.00 a seat in a large theatre comes to a biggish sum every night—I am free to admit that there's a considerable satisfaction in being President of the Company that produced "The Birth of a Nation."

To be part of a success is a good deal.

When the success comes in spite of the warnings of well wishing friends (and wise ones) by the score, it is more.

And when the success is so stupendous as to revolutionize an industry over night, it is pretty nearly overwhelming.

Night after night I have stood in the shadow beside the entrance of the Liberty Theatre and watched New York's smartest motors roll up and deliver into the theatre,—the most brilliant and most critical audience in the world. The audience that has demanded (and got) the greatest operas and greatest plays ever produced.

Then, I have gone into the theatre and watched that audience,—that chatters and laughs through any but the finest music; that is bored by the play that is only ordinarily good,—sit for two hours and a half spellbound by a moving picture.

Of the picture itself I shall say nothing.

Newspapers and magazines the country over printed column after column about it on their editorial pages and over the signatures of their best dramatic critics.

It has lifted the moving picture from mere entertainment into the realms of serious art.

None has questioned the fact that "The Birth of a Nation" is quite the most stupendous spectacle ever shown in a theatre.

D. W. GRIFFITH—Producer of The Birth of a Nation, Chief Director of the Reliance and Majestic Companies.

It isn't the action—though every principal character is played by a star of the film drama.

It isn't the 18,000 people, the 3,000 horses, the miles of carefully laid out countryside which made the "stage" of the piece.

duced "The Birth of a Nation"—more than it can ever pay in mere dollars, which it is showering on him by hundred thousands.

SAN DIEGO (Cal.) TRIBUNE
JULY 2, 1916

THOS. H. INCE.
Managing Director of Domino, Broncho, K. B. and Fulton Companies.

THOS. H. INCE—who made the Far West real—and used an active volcano as a stage property.

For every thousand who have seen "The Birth of a Nation," probably ten thousand have seen the photo plays of Thomas H. Ince. It was he who first immortalized the Wild West through moving pictures.

Of course you know films marked K. B., Broncho or Domino?

The rattling, smashing, outdoor films with Cowboys and Indians, wild rides and wilder battles?

It was Thomas H. Ince who made the 101 Bison Ranch as familiar as Broadway.

"The Battle of Gettysburg," one of the first really great moving pictures, was conceived and made famous by Thos. H. Ince.

And it was Thos. H. Ince who produced "The Wrath of the Gods," the amazing Japanese picture with a volcano in full eruption.

The "Cup of Life" is his, too, and "The Devil" and "On the Night Stage."

MACK SENNETT—Laugh Maker—Director of Keystone Comedies.

MACK SENNETT
Managing Director of Keystone Comedies.

Reader—did you ever see a "Keystone Comedy"?

If not, you are one of the very few people in the world who have not roared with laughter at the impossibly ridiculous situations in Mack Sennett's famous productions.

If you have missed "Dough and Dynamite,"—or "Tilly's Punctured Romance,"—or "Guzzle's Rival Jonah,"—

If the Keystone Comedians and Police Force are not friends of yours,—you have lost some happy half hours.

Many companies have tried; not one has ever succeeded in equalling the clean, rollicking merriment that, by the grace of Mack Sennett, Laugh Maker, ripples in a happy, never-ending stream from the Keystone Studios.

"Laugh and the world laughs with you" tells the story of Sennett in seven words. There are more people laughing at this minute because of Mack Sennett than because of any other man on earth.

In England, France, Australia; in Japan, China and Chili—in countries at peace and still more in countries at war, Keystone Films make their daily contribution to the gaiety of nations.

And the records show that the sales of Keystone Films abroad exceed those of any other brand.

THE PROPHECY— Two years ago I saw the trend of Moving Pictures—saw that Griffith and Thos. H. Ince in the direction of great spectacles; Sennett as the world's greatest laugh maker, were working in the spirit of the trend; but away ahead of it. Today I prophesy still greater things for the productions of these three men and their associates.

TO THEATRE MANAGERS

From what I know what is to come, the fact that your theatre is headquarters for these brands will be worth thousands of dollars to you within the next few months.

Very Sincerely,

H. E. Aitken

IN CO-OPERATION WITH MESSRS. KESSEL AND BAUMANN
THE NEW YORK MOTION PICTURE CORP.

71 W. 23rd ST., NEW YORK

OF BIG CROWD

MILWAUKEE (Wis.) JOURNAL
JULY 3, 1915

CUTS ORDERED IN

JULY 3, 1915
SAN FRANCISCO (Cal.) BULLETIN

AT THE ALCAZAR

HIS IS A REPRODUCTION OF AN ADVERTISEMENT WHICH APPEARED IN THE SATURDAY EVENING POST OF JUNE 19th, 1915

[illegible] "The Birth [illegible] in on the fifth [illegible] Liberty. The [illegible] has not inter[illegible], as the theatre [illegible] feature by special [illegible] which do not [illegible] of the wonderful [illegible] dramatic representation [illegible] in American history [illegible] potent offering of the [illegible] town. In addition to the run [illegible] Liberty Theatre, Mr. Griffith has [illegible] production at the [illegible] Beach Music Hall.

MOTION PICTURE WORLD (N. Y. City)
July 3, 1915

"The Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty.

D. W. Griffith's marvelous spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," still continues to attract crowds to The Liberty Theater.

Democrat
Waterbury Ct.
7-3-15

TULLY MARSHALL TO STAR

Well Known Theatrical Figure to Be Filmed in "The Sable Lorcha."

Activities at the Reliance-Majestic studios, the Griffith headquarters on the coast are increasing speedily. Immediately following the announcement that D. W. Griffith would follow "The Birth of a Nation" with "The Mother and the Law" as his next mutiple reel production, comes the further announcement that Tully Marshall, one of the best known figures in theatricals in America, has been added to the group of photoplayers at the Reliance-Majestic studios.

JULY 3, 1915
SAN FRANCISCO (Cal.) BULLETIN

MAE MARSH
"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"
MECCA

Wis - Milwaukee Wis
July 3, 1915

DAVIDSON.

To-night Milwaukee sees the opening of what is considered the biggest photoplay ever produced, "The Birth of a Nation," which opens its first performance at the Davidson theater at 8:10 o'clock. Owing to the length of the offering, the presentation will begin on the minute.

The twelve reels that constitute the [illegible] reached Milwaukee late Thursday [illegible] in charge of Harry Sherman, of [illegible] Ziegfeld-Sherman Film company of [illegible]apolis and St. Paul. Mr. Sher[illegible] the personal representative of [illegible] Wark Griffith, the producer. [illegible] the box containing the reels in [illegible] Pullman compartment from Los An[illegible]. They did not leave his sight until [illegible] Treasurer William C. Schnell of [illegible] Davidson had carried them to the [illegible] and locked them in the safe. The [illegible] is insured against theft for $50,000 [illegible] Lloyds of London. The same amount [illegible] carried on the two other leases, one [illegible] New York and the other in Chicago. [illegible]waukee is the third city in the coun[illegible] to see this offering.

More than 18,000 people and 3,000 [illegible]ses were employed in filming this of[illegible]ng. The action ranges from the pro[illegible], showing the coming of the first [illegible]s to America, to the ante-bellum [illegible], the election of Lincoln, the decla[illegible] of war, the siege of Petersburg, [illegible] fall of Vicksburg, the flight from [illegible]ta, the surrender of Lee at Ap[illegible]tox, and the assassination of Lin[illegible] Ford's theater, Washington.

[illegible]y of the scenes were taken from [illegible] of a sixty-foot tower, and cover [illegible] of five miles, shown by the [illegible] with the aid of the telephoto[illegible] actors as Henry Walthall, [illegible] Mae Marsh, Spottiswoode [illegible], Wallace Reed, Ralph Lewis, and [illegible] well known to the photoplay [illegible] are included in the leading roles. [illegible] battle scenes were reproduced in [illegible] of the actual battles, and [illegible] the big scenes were taken at [illegible] light of bombs.

[illegible] was accompanied by an or[illegible] instruments and the

BIRTH OF NATION STIRRING FILM

Vivid Civil War Production at Brighton Music Hall.

CHEERED BY GUARDSMEN

23d Reg't and Old Guard the Guests of Kemble.

Pity the blind—for the blind will never see, D. W. Griffith's magnificent film, "The Birth of a Nation." Mere words will never begin to give them a realization of the dramatic scenes, the beautiful photography, the vivid portrayal of historic incidents and conditions as are seen in this truly remarkable production. No person, from the school boy and girl getting their first knowledge of the history of the United States, to the grizzled veteran of the Civil War, can afford to miss the production.

"The Birth of a Nation" was shown for the first time in Brooklyn last night, when the Brighton Beach Music Hall presented the film to a representative gathering. The Twenty-third Regiment, the Old Guard and the Ninth Coast Artillery and men and women from every walk of life, were the guests of Manager H. Kemble for the first showing of the film. And some idea of the strength of the film may be seen from the fact that at frequent intervals the spectators burst into spontaneous applause, or wiped away tears from their eyes.

Realism is the keynote to which "The Birth of a Nation" owes its success; and to obtain that realism Griffiths, who directed the taking of the film, spent $500,000, used thousands of men and women, hundreds of horses, and properties in so large a scale that the spectator's breath is fairly taken away.

The audience at the Brighton Beach Music Hall last night was not viewing a motion picture—the hands of the clock had been pushed back fifty years or so and the Civil War with its causes, its horrors and its results, was reacted before their very eyes. Those who sought to repress their cheers or tears by telling themselves that, after all, it was just a picture and the people were just actors and actresses, had extreme difficulty in stifling imaginations.

The film is an historical drama in two acts founded on Thomas Dixon's story, "The Clansman." Mr. Dixon himself appeared on the stage during the intermission last night and made a brief speech of thanks to those who had financed the film and to D. W. Griffith, who directed its taking.

The opening scenes are those of the peaceful South, with the negroes contented in their work on the plantations, the whites, prosperous and happy.

The war cloud appears on the horizon and before the audience has time to get its breath the men of the South and of the North are snatched from their peaceful homes and loved ones, and thrust into the fires of cruel war. The Union and the Confederate armies engage in vivid hand-to-hand battles. Then comes peace and the vision of a new prosperity for the South, deluged with war.

Booth assassinates Lincoln as the latter sits in the theatre. Carpetbaggers scurry through the South rousing the negroes and placing them on an inflated equality with the whites. Atrocities, horrible to contemplate, drive the whites to desparation and the Klu Klux Klan springs into existence to terrorize the negro back to his normal state.

With these conditions for surroundings, two love stories are beautifully told. Scenes of extraordinary pathos and historic accuracy fairly live before the eyes of the spectator on the screen. Each scene is a photographic masterpiece.

In keeping with the masterly directing, the drama's strength is gained by the actors and actresses employed. Such film stars as Henry Walthall, Mae Marsh, Lillian Gish, Ralph Lewis, Miriam Cooper, Josephine Crowell, George Seigmann and Spottiswoode Aiken, leaving nothing to be desired in their work.

Never was a moral or a lesson more graphically presented. The film is a plea for universal peace, establishing as it does the utter futility of armed conflict. The battle scenes, despite their realism, their strength, their awfulness, are in no sense of the word glorified. In place of that glorification, there is a note of terror and desolation. The battle scenes were not those applauded last night; the audience clutched the arms of their seats and viewed the struggles with horror and amazement. It was the victorious ride of the cloaked Klan, dashing on their horses to avenge and prevent atrocities, that wrung from the lips of the audience last night cheer after cheer; and when the film ended all rose and sang "The Star Spangled Banner," as no theatre audience had ever sung it before.

"The Birth of a Nation" will run at the Music Hall indefinitely. The music by a band of forty pieces, which [illegible] small part in the presentation of the [illegible]

To properly celebrate the coming to Brooklyn of the wonderful film, "The Birth of a Nation," which is now showing at the Brighton Beach Music Hall, Manager William H. Kemble, Vice President H. Clark Mooney and Treasurer Mark Nathan, of that theatre, entertained on a luxurious scale last night. Attendance at the Music Hall was on their invitation and they gave a reception, supper and dance to several hundred persons in the Madrid Gardens of the Brighton Beach Hotel after the show.

Preceding the showing of the film a military review was held before the hotel, with Col. Ardolph L. Kline, Col. Norton and Public Works Commissioner Edmund H. Veerhies, who represented the city government, reviewing. The Twenty-third Regiment, the Old Guard, and the officers of the Ninth Coast Artillery paraded around around the boardwalk while hundreds of onlookers cheered them.

Seats were provided for all in the Music Hall, and the soldiers marched in, lending an unusual touch to the theatre. Manager Kemble arranged this patriotic audience, for "The Birth of a Nation," is a pictorial story [illegible] the Civil War and its [illegible] intensely graphic. [illegible] tary organizations, the [illegible] had as its guests [illegible] societies, and men and [illegible] nent in every walk of life, [illegible] a first opportunity of viewing [illegible] fifth masterpiece.

The guests showed their [illegible] of both their hosts' courtesies [illegible] excellence of the film, and to [illegible] all felt repaid for the trip to [illegible] on a foggy night would be to put [illegible] mildly.

Seemingly that was not good [illegible] Manager Kemble and his [illegible] The reception in the hotel [illegible] brilliant social function, and the [illegible] uniforms of the officers made it a [illegible] long to be remembered. With [illegible] Goate as the man in charge, all the guests were well taken care of.

The grand march formed about midnight, with Col. Kline, of the Old Guard, leading with Mrs. Harry Ottsohn. Col. Norton, of the Twenty-third, was next, with Mrs. Leon Godley, wife of the Deputy Police Commissioner, on his arm.

Manager Kemble, who is a [illegible] besides being a manager, was in dress uniform. He was well up in the [illegible] of the grand march. A "[illegible]" interpolated between the [illegible] dances, furnished loads of fun.

BERKELEY (Cal.) GAZETTE
JULY 3, 1915

$500,000 "MOVIE" FIRM IS ORGANIZED

NEW YORK, July 3.—A new movement in the movies world that will revolutionize even that startling and sensational industry, is about completed and plans of the organizers entertain an extension of the moving picture business on a scale heretofore not even dreamed of. H. E. Aitken is the leader behind the movement and associated with him are D. W. Griffith, producer of "The Birth of a Nation," Thomas H. Ince and Mack Sennett, the producer of the famous funny movies. Sennett has organized more comics on the screen than any other one man in the business.

The plan is to book movie productions in a regular chain of theaters throughout the country, the same as legitimate shows are now seen. This will raise the movies to the level of regular theatrical plays and will assure people in every section of the country an opportunity of seeing the best screen pictures that are being made anywhere today. The price of admission probably will also be raised but the backers of the new combination believe their productions will be worth the new price scale.

Aitken has announced that a big Broadway theatre has been acquired and that others in every large city in the country are under consideration. The first showing of the new combination's play will be in New York and then will start on the round of other cities, the same as road companies do.

It is predicted by Aitken the new departure will overshadow anything of the kind ever before attempted and that the weekly cost of the films released will be near $[illegible]. Wall street is behind the movement to a financial way and large sums of money will be expended on branch offices in London, Paris, Vienna, Petrograd, Rome, South America and all big American cities, which will also act as producing centers.

ALAMEDA (Cal.) TIMES-STAR
JULY 3, 1915

"THE CLANSMAN" COMES BACK TO MACDONOUGH

D. W. Griffith has filmed a special photo-drama, "The Clansman," or "The Birth of a Nation," which returns to the Macdonough shortly soon, which pictures the era previous to the war, the war time, and the reconstruction epoch.

Griffith has interwoven with the history of the nation, a history of individuals and a love story of [illegible] nature.

This romance begins before the fatal shot on Sumpter; it blooms in President Lincoln's hand to [illegible] the die of combat; it suffers and [illegible] with [illegible] and it smiles and is truly confident during the assault on and reduction of Petersburg. Then the horror of the "reconstruction" period comes, while the men and women of the South are delivered shackled and bereft of the maddened carnage of the black man, this lovely romance steadfastly moves forward and [illegible] to a florescence as the curtal [illegible] of the ages ends in a [illegible] allegory of peace, [illegible] progress.

The film always plays to capacity houses, and will be shown [illegible] daily at the Macdonough, the matinees taking place at 2:15 and the evening exhibition at 8:15.

JUNE 12, 1915
MOTION PICTURE NEWS (New York City)

ST. LOUIS POLICE WILL PAN ON "NATION"

Charlotte Rumbold, head of the park recreation department in St. Louis, says that she is opposed to the exhibition of the "Birth of a Nation" in St. Louis. She says she bases her opposition on reviews of the play she has read in New York and Boston newspapers.

She said that she understood that the second act of the film deals with the reconstruction period of the South, and she believes that because St. Louis is a city where the sentiment between the North and the South was narrowly divided it would be inadvisable to present such a show. The members of the board of police commissioners will decide whether or not the "Birth of a Nation" is to be presented in St. Louis.

MOTION PICTURE WORLD (N. Y. City)
[illegible]

"The Birth of a Nation" continues to draw record-breaking crowds to the Illinois theater.

HALL RECEPTION WITH BAKER

...ssioner Voor-...ugh President ...chel, made a ... of the Music ... performance. ...s. Mooney and ... a huge bunch ...roses to Mrs. ...ce of the lat-...er, Edna, car-

...were: ... Capt. H. A. ...k, Capt. A. A. ... Kanbel, Lieut. ...dendburg, Capt. ... Fred L. Adler, ..., Capt. Charles ...E. Rodd, Capt. ...t. Benjamin P. ... Joyce, Col. A. ... D. Bemheimer, ...t. R. A. Butler, ... Lieut. C. G. ... Lieut. L. O. ... Walton, Lieut. ...Lieut. John L. ...k Gardis, Sergt. ...t. D. A. O'Mara, ...rgt. C. H. Cutter, ... Sergt. Bernard ...Masterson, Sergt. ... Sergt. Frank ...l. Cooper, Sergt. ...and Corp A. E.

...enty-third Regiment were: Colonel Morton, Lieut. Col. Wells, Major Kevin, Major Blanton, Capt. Addrason, Capt. Coffin, Capt. De Mott, Capt. Walker, Capt. Robbins, Capt. Stoll, Capt. Ward, Capt. Kloer, Capt. Liebman, First Lieut. Bogardus, First Lieut. Hall, First Lieut. Kunzman, First Lieut. Simonson, Second Lieut. Enderle, Second Lieut. Cook, Second Lieut. Simonson, Second Lieut. W. Hoyt, Second Lieut. A. M. Ulrichs, Second Lieut. Peters, Second Lieut. Jones, Second Lieut. Stevens and Second Lieut. Pierce.

Others present were: First Deputy Police Commissioner Leon Godley and wife, Congressman Daniel J. Griffin, Mr. and Mrs. Ralph J. Voorhies, Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Bottscher, D. J. Laur- and and Miss W. Thane, Mr. and Mrs. William H. Kemble, Mrs. Leonhardt Wall, Miss Eleanore Beahie, Miss Marjorie Gildersleeve, Leonhardt Wall, Arthur J. Levine, Arthur Saft of Houston, Texas; Miss Marie Furey, John J. Curtis, Dr. and Mrs. John A. Lee, Mr. and Mrs. A. G. Boemerman, Mr. and Mrs. T. Capero, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Harington, Mr. and Mrs. Chas. W. Brown, Judge and Mrs. N. J. Marsch, Albert E. Metz and Miss Madeline Van Orden, Maurice J. Metz, Miss Louise McGovern, G. F. Walley, C. R. Holt, F. A. Preston, L. J. Hommel, R. H. Schliebner, Miss Caroline E. Hommel, York De Vere, Miss Ethel Banteile, Katheryn M. Flynn, Mr. and Mrs. Tierney, Dr. E. J. Banighef, Albert H. T. Banighef, Mr. and Mrs. A. D. Ramsdell, Mr. and Mrs. Mark Nathan, Mr. and Mrs. Leo Loeb, Mr. and Mrs. Charles S. Gerson, Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Sullivan, Joseph M. Tully, Rose and May Tully, Thomas Drennan and Vera Sullivan.

Edward Riegelman and Margaret Sullivan, John J. Bracken, May O'Brien, John Rosengren, Eleanor Lynch, William Farrel, James G. Wallace, Mrs. Wallace, Mrs. Smith, Charles B. Smith, jr., Mr. and Mrs. C. de J. F. Kirkeby, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Nathan, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur D. Peters, Mr. and Mrs. Hebert H. Leoyd, Mr. and Mrs. James McCarthy, Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Houro, Mrs. Rosaui Minyie, Philip Whitney, Barclay Dunham, Mr. and Mrs. James J. Daly, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Smith, Miss A. Lenzo, Frank M. Eldredge, Jules Tollner, Mr. and Mrs. Hugo Tollnerir.

Mr. and Mrs. James Matthews, Mr. Oliver Haucold, Mme. Lydia Lacke, Emil J. Polak, Mr. and Mrs. H. S. Oterson, Mr. and Mrs. Miller, Edward J. Reilly, Louis C. Kuhne, Mr. and Mrs. L. B. Kinperts, Mr. and Mrs. John Yran, Miss Cecela Bloch, Gabriel Bloch, James Deimming, Miss A. Diemming, W. M. Schuyler, Mr. and Mrs. J. Beni, Edward Beni, R. Androde, M. G. Reynolds, Louise Moran, Mr. and Mrs. DeAtk' ...on, Miss Thornton, E. R. Fooker, ...nd Mrs. Claude Becker, Mr. and Mrs. C. S. Cavanagh, Louis C. Kuhn, James J. Ryan, Elsie Baird, Thomas Bourton, Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Hanna, Charles C. Steiner, Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Miller, Gertrude Grapel, George U. Palmer, Miss Helen Squires, Mr. and Mrs. Hap Perry, Robert Walton, Frederick D. Preston, Vincent M. Fianco, Miss M. Bien, Miss Margaret Thompson, Miss Marjorie Katherine Eage, Mr. and Mrs. E. Roberts.

W. W. Walsh, Miss Kenney, Miss Florence Cuppermull, Joseph Brunges, Miss Marcella Johnson, R. W. Butler, Francis W. Sutherland, Miss S. Ettlinger, Harold Ettlinger, Mr. and Mrs. George Sloane, Mr. and Mrs. McDermott, Arthur E. Luzzi, Mr. and Mrs. W. Severn, C. F. Ames, Mr. and Mrs. Matthew Lenz, Mr. and Mrs. James Gelson, Mr. and Mrs. Frank J. Collins, Mr. and Mrs. John F. O'Connor, Mr. and Mrs. John W. Irwin, Mr. and Mrs. John F. Casey, Mr. and Mrs. F. Johnson, Mr. and Mrs. Eric H. Palmer, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Hill, Robert Hill, Mrs. Helen Johnson, Mortimer Leopold, Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Martin, Mr. and Mrs. John J. Dorman, Mr. and Mrs. Herman Nathan, George W. Laird, William Stoddart, William F. F. Jenkins, Edjar Rodd, Miss Grace C. Strachan, Miss Elizabeth A. Geacken, William J. Geacken, Gerard Garner Smith, Edward F. Gleacken, W. J. Black.

MILWAUKEE (Wis.) LEADER
JULY 3, 1915

MOTION PICTURE NEWS (New York)
JUL 3 1915

VETERANS FROM SOLDIERS' HOME PARADE FOR MANAGER

"THE Birth of a Nation" began its seventeenth week at Clune's Auditorium, Los Angeles, June 21, and has been enjoying good business during the week. It is very probable this subject will be continued there for several weeks,

OLD SOLDIERS' PARADE TO CLUNE'S AUDITORIUM, LOS ANGELES

as the attendance has been very satisfactory to the management.

Manager Lloyd Brown recently secured considerable advertising for the picture by inviting the six hundred veterans at the Federal Soldiers' Home at Sawtelle to attend the showing of the picture as his guests. By arrangement with a traction company he secured transportation at very low rates, and he acted as host for the old soldiers from the time they left their home until they returned there.

The event was slightly marred by an unusual shower at the time of the arrival of the special cars at Los Angeles. However, the soldiers' home band and the veterans paraded through the streets from the interurban station to the theatre.

Scenes and Players in "The Birth of a Nation"

Miriam Cooper.

On the Firing Line in Virginia—Lillian Gish

Meeting of Gen. Lee and Gen. Grant

Greatest Motion Picture Shows Important Battles of the Civil War, Assassination of Lincoln, and Deeds of the Ku Klux Klansmen.

David W. Griffith's $500,000 film, "The Birth of a Nation," known as the most remarkable motion picture ever staged, will be shown to Milwaukeeans for the first time, Saturday night, July 3. Music will be furnished by an orchestra of 40 pieces. Thereafter, there will be performances daily at 2:15 and 8:10 p. m.

"The Birth of a Nation" is a picturized version of Thomas Dixon's noted play and novel, "The Clansman," and it portrays some of the most important events in American history.

The assassination of Lincoln in Ford's theater in Washington is one of the most remarkable scenes and it is pictured from descriptions furnished by historians and men and women who were present when John Wilkes Booth [illegible] and shot.

It is asserted [illegible] battle scenes [illegible] the most realistic ever presented on [illegible] ever repro-ductions of those of the Civil war, were produced on a three-mile front with 18,000 soldiers quartered off into regiments and battalions. Modern guns and guns of the type of Civil war days were fired to give the desired effect.

In addition to the battle scenes are the scenes that followed the war when the carpet-baggers incited the negroes of the south to rise against the whites. Pictures of bloodshed follow and battles between the negroes and the whites are depicted, and there are scenes introducing the Ku Klux Klansmen and their midnight rides and deeds which eventually led to the return of the domination of the whites.

Throughout the picture are two love stories, in which a colonel of the south loves the sister of an officer of the north and the officer of the north loves the sister of the colonel in the south.

(N.Y.) EAGLE
JUL 3 - 1915

GALA OPENING FOR "BIRTH OF A NATION"

Big Spectacle Arouses Great Enthusiasm at Brighton Music Hall.

HAS DISTINGUISHED AUDIENCE.

Dramatic Production Is Finest of Its Kind—Creates Profound Impression Here.

Brighton Beach was something more than its old self last night, when the most remarkable theater audience assembled in Brooklyn in several seasons journeyed to the seashore to see the initial presentation here of D. W. Griffith's magnificent motion picture production, "The Birth of a Nation." The whole proceeding, including a military review before the performance, were martial in tone and the marching soldiers of the Twenty-third Regiment, the Old Guard of Civil War Veterans and the ushers, all in uniform, became jumbled in the general effect produced by the showing of the most stirring of war dramas, and made a lasting impression. Certainly no attraction could have been more auspiciously started, and the enthusiasm aroused by the picture itself was tremendous, the general effect being that of surprise and bewilderment at what is, undoubtedly the most remarkable product of the motion pictures to date.

In the absence of the Mayor and Borough President Pounds, Public Works Commissioner Edmund W. Voorhies represented the city's officialdom at the special performance and, in a brief speech, voiced the appreciation of the audience for the privilege which had been extended it in being first to welcome the spectacle to Brooklyn.

When the history of motion pictures is written, "The Birth of a Nation" must head the chapter of the first great development in film productions. It is the first picture to place the work of the camera on a plane where it commands consideration as a distinct art, combining the essentials of dramatic and pictorial art, and revealing possibilities almost unbelievable a few years ago. Still more significant is the fact that "The Birth of a Nation" has been shown at regular theater prices, in competition with the best the stage has offered, and has proved more successful than a majority of current plays.

This is as it should be. Mr. Griffith's epic picture drama contains more action, suspense, thrills and scenes capable of arousing all the emotions than any play seen in New York in several seasons. In addition it has scope, elements of beauty and effects only possible to produce in this way, and then only when conceived and executed by a man of remarkable ability, if not genius. As an historical spectacle, the thousands of feet of living, breathing films constitute perhaps the greatest history of the Civil War ever attempted. With the familiar touches of theatricalism almost entirely lacking, the re-enactment of national events in such a way as to give spectators the feeling that they have seen the dramatic events themselves is without parallel as an educational force.

All that the historian, the dramatist, the actor, the stage manager and the scenic artist can hope to accomplish is to arouse in the spectator, by a semblance of realism, a maximum response. This Mr. Griffith has done, magnificently. At every turn can be detected the play of imagination upon threads of fact, with the possibilities of motion picture mechanics amplified by ingenuity, a real feeling for the fundamentals in human emotions and visual appeal. It is futile to try to describe either the effects or the subjects of such a production. The subtle power of the work lies in the fact that it carries all its dynamic appeal direct to the mind without language.

A curtain is drawn and the events of half a century are unfolded. Dim historical personages that had but a filmy place in the memory, step forth completely visualized, and go through their parts. Lincoln and Lee and Grant; Petersberg's battlefield; Sherman's march to the sea; the burning of Atlanta; the assassination of Lincoln; the surrender of Appomattox, and all the glory and all the horror, with the heroism and misery of war are shown with marvelous impressiveness. There is grim tragedy, idealism, comedy, tender sentiment and the struggle of individual wills as well as the conflict of peoples, and it is all blended in a swift moving human drama that holds the interest, entrances the eye and plays upon the emotions like a rare and splendid experience that recreates and vitalizes consciousness and sensibility.

Unfortunately, the picture is not all on the high plane of ideality. Based upon Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," it frequently smacks of the cheap sensationalism that alone distinguished the book and play. This jarring note prevails only in the last reels of the picture, where the story drops to the level of blatant melodrama. [illegible] its appeal. The [illegible] been drawn [illegible] many of the scenes, but impartial history does not paint the "holy" Klu-Klux Klansmen in such spotless robes or spread the sins of a portion of blacks over a whole race. The grave troubles that beset the nation during its birth sprang from ignorance, the one enemy of civilization. The ends of civilization and of justice are not to be served by perpetuating ignorance by distortion. It should be said, however, that Mr. Griffith is largely absolved from blame. The picture gives the story a dignity lacking in the original, and its weakness is all inherent in the work of Mr. Dixon and is impossible to completely overcome. Incidentally Mr. Dixon made a brief speech last night, in which he paid a richly deserved tribute to the producer.

A great sheaf of American Beauty roses was presented to Mr. Voohies after the performance, and was, in turn, passed on by him to his daughter, Miss Edna Voorhies. Three cheers for the management whose enterprise brought the spectacle to Brooklyn were then called for by the Public Works Commissioner and were given with a will.

Both before and after the presentation the spirit of the picture was accentuated by the Old Guard and the Twenty-third Regiment. The latter, prior to the performance, marched in review before the Brighton Beach Hotel, and late in the evening the officers of the regiment, with the Old Guard, afforded a pleasing bit of military coloring at the reception and dance in the hotel that was tendered by the Music Hall management to its guests. The men of the Twenty-third sat in the balcony during the performance and marched away in a body at its close.

Those who saw this initial Brooklyn presentation made up an audience of considerable distinction. It included many prominent city and borough officials and some of the very well known people of the borough.

Among the guests at the performance were County Judge Lewis L. Fawcett, Magistrate Edward I. Dooley, Edmund W. Voorhies, First Deputy Police Commissioner Leon Godley and Mrs. Godley, Congressman Daniel J. Griffin, Mr. and Mrs. Ralph J. Voorhies, Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Bottcher, D. J. Laurand and Miss W. Thane, Mr. and Mrs. William H. Kemble, Mrs. Leonhardt Wall, Miss Eleanore Beahie, Miss Marjorie Gildersleeve, Leonhardt Wall, Miss Marie Furey, John J. Curtis, Dr. and Mrs. John A. Lee, Mr. and Mrs. A. G. Boemerman, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Hanington, Mr. and Mrs. Charles W. Brown, Judge and Mrs. N. J. Marsch, Albert E. Metz and Miss Madeline Van Orden, Maurice J. Metz and Miss Louise McGovern, C. F. Watley, C. R. Holt, F. A. Preston, L. J. Hommel, Miss Caroline E. Hommel, York DeVere.

Among those present of the "Old Guard" were:

Captain H. A. Kurtz, Captain W. G. Cook, Captain A. A. Calhoun, Captain W. H. Kanbel, Lieutenant Wgetter, Captain A. P. Vondenburg, Captain W. D. Preston, Captain Fred L. Adler, Captain David S. Skinner, Captain Charles H. Rodwier, Captain E. R. Rodd, Captain John H. Easterdey, Captain Benjamin F. Moon, Captain Walter K. Joyce, Colonel A. L. Kline, Captain Charles D. Bemheimer, Captain A. T. Skani, Lieutenant R. A. Butler, Lieutenant James Mchoine, Lieutenant C. C. Elles, Lieutenant Wgetter, Lieutenant L. O. Higgins, Lieutenant L. R. Walton, Lieutenant Fred D. Preston, Lieutenant John W. Wagenaar., Sergeant A. A. Gerdis, Sergeant W. H. A. Horsfell, Sergeant D. A. O'Mara, Sergeant W. U. Lewis, Sergeant C. H. Cutter, Sergeant C. H. Stephens, Sergeant Bernard Wall, Sergeant John W. Masterson, Sergeant Arthur C. Jackson, Sergeant Frank Langston, Sergeant M. M. Cooper, Sergeant Charles F. Wemdell and Corporal A. E. Luzzin.

Officers of the Twenty-third Regiment who were present were: Colonel Norton, Lieutenant Colonel Wells, Major Kevin, Major Blanton, Captain Addrason, Captain Coffin, Captain DeMott, Captain Walker, Captain Robbins, Captain Stoll, Captain Ward, Captain Kloer, Captain Liebman, First Lieutenant Bojardus, First Lieutenant Hall, First Lieutenant Kunzman, First Lieutenant Simonson, Second Lieutenant Enderle, Second Lieutenant Cook, Second Lieutenant Simonson, Second Lieutenant W. Hoyt, Second Lieutenant A. M. Ulrich, Second Lieutenant Peters, Second Lieutenant Jones, Second Lieutenant Stevens and Second Lieutenant Pierce.

BROOKLYN (N.Y.)
JUL 3

Summer Amusements

CLIPPING FROM
P. Intell
Seattle Wash.
6-24-15

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" TO HAVE BIG ORCHESTRA.

Manager Clemmer is preparing to have his house decorated with national colors and appropriate pictures and to have a symphony orchestra to accompany the big scenes of the play, "The Birth of a Nation." The spirited martial tunes and old-time war melodies of both North and South will be heard. Wallace at the big organ will add musical volume to the score.

The arrangement now is to have but two performances a day, a matinee and an evening show. "The Birth of a Nation" is going to astonish even those who have looked for something stupendous. The Eastern critics say it is beyond description.

SAN FRANCISCO (Cal.) EXAMINER
JUNE 28, 1915

"THE CLANSMAN" ALCAZAR.

D. [illegible] "The Birth of a Nation," or as it is more generally known, "The Clansman," will start on its eleventh big week at the Alcazar Theatre this afternoon. No such record has heretofore been made in San Francisco, nor has any other such picture play been offered. "The Birth of a Nation" cost $500,000 to produce. More than 18,000 people, including a battalion of the National Guard, Civil War veterans and army officers were utilized in making this film a masterpiece.

Patrons should note that the matinees begin promptly at 2 o'clock and the evening performance at 8.

* * *

JULY 4, 1915
SEATTLE (Wash.) POST-INTEL.

GRIFFITH PLANS FOR ANOTHER BIG NATION

Title of Great Production [illegible] Reel With the "Birth of a Nation and the Law"

D. W. Griffith, the [illegible] has decided [illegible] reel feature to follow "The Birth of a Nation." Its title is to be "The Birth of a Nation and the Law." He is now at his headquarters in the Griffith studios in Hollywood, Los Angeles, Cal. He is in the midst of preparations for the filming of "The Birth of a Nation and the Law."

The plot and the theme [illegible] as indicated in the title have not been announced. Mr. Griffith has not yet selected his cast. Prominent among the Griffith players who are [illegible] before the camera in "The Birth of a Nation and the Law" are Miss Mae Marsh, the actress who will be remembered as Florence Cameron in "The Birth of a Nation"; Robert Harron, who appeared in the Griffith features "The Battle of the Sexes," "Home Sweet Home," "The Escape," "The Avenging Conscience" and "Man, Woman and Marriage"; Miriam Cooper, who has a prominent role in "The Birth of a Nation"; Mae Marsh Alden, remembered for the performance of the mulatto in "The Birth of a Nation" and as the mother in "The Battle of the Sexes"; Ralph Lewis, the Stoneman in "The Birth of a Nation" and Walter Long, the Gus in "The Birth of a Nation."

Mr. Griffith is determined that "The Mother and the Law" shall maintain the high standard of "The Birth of a Nation," which is playing to $1 prices in some of the principal cities of the country.

JULY 3, 1915
MILWAUKEE (Wis.) WISCONSIN

SCENES FROM "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" AT THE DAVIDSON

Lincoln in Ford's Theater.

DAVIDSON—"The Birth of a Nation," film masterpiece, opens indefinite engagement this evening. Shown at 2:15 and 8:10 o'clock daily.

JULY 4, 1915
TORONTO (Ont.) WORLD

CHICAGO HAS OFFICIALLY BARRED the film "The Birth of a Nation," and [illegible] Massachusetts [illegible] has passed an act designed especially to keep the Griffith picture production out of Boston. This picture is supposedly the greatest ever filmed, but is obnoxious to the colored population.

CLIPPING FROM [illegible] CLIPPING

"The Birth of a Nation" is breaking all records at the Illinois theater in Chicago. Seats selling from [illegible] cents to $2. This picture is voted by the newspapers of Chicago and endorsed by the highest officials in the city as the most [illegible]

ELMIRA (N.Y.) STAR-GAZETTE
JULY 6, 1915

FOUR MILLION MOVIE CONCERN IS ORGANIZED

AIM IS TO BOOK MOVIE PRODUCTIONS IN REGULAR CHAIN OF THEATERS.

WEEKLY COST OF THE FILMS RELEASED WILL BE IN THE NEIGHBORHOOD OF $5,000,000.

United Press

New York, July 1.—A new movement in the movie world that will revolutionize even that startling and sensational industry is about completed and the plans of the organizers entertain an extension of the moving picture business on a scale heretofore not even dreamed of. H. Aitken is the leader behind the movement and associated with him are D. W. Griffith, producer of "The Birth of a Nation," Thomas H. Ince and Mack Sennett, the producer of the famous funny movies. Sennett has organized more comics on the screen than any other one man in the business.

The plan is to book movie productions in a regular chain of theaters throughout the country, the same as legitimate shows are now seen. This will raise the movies to the level of regular theatrical plays and will assure people in every section of the country an opportunity of seeing the best screen pictures that are being made anywhere today. The price of admission probably will also be raised but the backers of the new combination believe their productions will be worth the new price scale.

Aitken has announced that a big Broadway theater has been acquired and that others in every large city in the country are under consideration. The first showing of the new combination's plays will be in New York and then will start on the round of other cities, the same as road companies do.

It is predicted by Aitke the new departure will overshadow anything of the kind ever before attempted and that the weekly cost of the films released will be near $5,000,000. Wall street is behind the movement in a financial way and large sums of money will be expended on branch offices in London Paris, Vienna, Petrograd, Rome, South America and all big American cities, which will also act as producing centers.

WASHINGTON (D. C.) POST
JULY 4, 1915

Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" is to be shown in London this month.

SAN ANTONIO (TEX.) LIGHT
JULY 4, 1915

D. W. Griffith has just decided upon his next multiple reel feature, to follow "The Birth of a Nation." Its title is to be "The Mother and the Law." He is now at the Reliance-Majestic Studios in Hollywood, Los Angeles, Cal., in the midst of preparations for the new film.

SAN FRANCISCO (Cal.) EXAMINER
JULY 4, 1915

"THE CLANSMAN'S" LONG RUN.

So great has been the success of "The Birth of a Nation," or "The Clansman" as it is more generally known, D. W. Griffith's mighty historical production in twelve reels, is to be played a twelfth week at the Alcazar Theatre. Two performances are given daily, the matinee at 2 and the evening exhibition at 8:15 o'clock. In this production the audience actually sees the shelling, storming and destruction of Atlanta. It sees the assault and reduction of Petersburg. It sees with vividness a great battle being waged at dead of night. An actual vision is given of the ascending hosts of Lee and Grant in the death grips of war. The murder of President Lincoln is given with exact fidelity to fact. The interior of Ford's Theatre is shown with the same scene being played on the stage as when the shot was fired.

BROOKLYN, (N. Y.) EAGLE
JUL 4 - 1915

"The Birth of a Nation" has started on the fifth month at the Liberty.

"The Great Emancipator" in Griffith's "Birth of a Nation"

Joseph Henabery

In his lifelike impersonation of Abraham Lincoln at the Clemmer

For the first time in the history of moving pictures, a photo play is being offered to the Milwaukee public at $1.50 a seat, down. The Birth of a Nation, D. W. Griffith's master picture, was offered at the Davidson theater Saturday and will continue every day this week, afternoon and evening.

The picture runs over two hours. Therefore only one exhibition will be given at the matinee and one at night. Press agents have already told of the exceptionally large cast of players and the enormous expense necessary for the production of this play, which has been adopted from Dixon's novel, The Clansman.

Great Achievement in Pictures.

A review of the picture is convincing proof of the fact that the press agent has come pretty near hitting the truth this time. The Birth of a Nation is undoubtedly one of the greatest achievements of the motion picture industry so far. At least, it is the greatest thing of its kind ever offered in Milwaukee. It tells the story of the civil war, but particularly that part of the story during the reconstruction period in the south, when the negro slaves, having been freed, were incited to deeds of violence by unscrupulous soldiers and carpet baggers from the north, who rushed to the stricken country in the hopes of making a fortune. There are some who will insist that the presentation of such a plot will tend to create race prejudice. The story told is not a flattering one for the negro, for he is pictured in the most bestial ignorance, a cringing, half-witted brute; drunk with authority but lacks the intelligence to execute. The presentation, the directors have been very clever in arranging the scenes in such a manner as to keep the audience intensely interested. One climax follows another so rapidly that it may be truthfully said there is not a single dull moment in any reel.

Audience Laughs and Cries.

Among the scenes of unusual interest are the assassination of President Lincoln in the Ford theater at Washington. Other big scenes include the battle of Gettysburg, Sherman's march to the sea, the gathering of the Ku-Klux-Klan, the battle between the whites and the blacks in an open field, the surrender of Lee to Grant. There are moments when little incidents in the picture cause the audience to laugh, and again it is moved to tears, and most of the time the spectators seemed to be imbued with the sentiment enacted on the screen. When a motion picture can move one to tears, the producer has achieved a most wonderful success in his art. Whether the presentation of the story in picture form creates race hatred or not, is merely a matter of opinion. Some good, however, must result. The horrors of war are so realistic and the results of victory so fully [illegible] that the story will probably [illegible] colonel. He is not sickeningly handsome, like so many motion picture heroes, and he conducts himself before the camera in a manner most natural. Lillian Gish, another principal, plays opposite to Walthall and makes him a charming little sweetheart. Other picture stars among the principals include Mae Marsh, Spottiswood Aiken, Miriam Cooper and John Lynch.

SEATTLE (Wash.) POST-INTELLIGENCER
JULY 4, 1915

BIRTH OF NATION ATTRACTS CROWDS

Griffith's Wonderful Production Still Continues Its Run at Clemmer Theater.

NO RACE PREJUDICE NOW.

Negro Quartet Sings Old-Time Songs During Entertainment and Wins Applause of Audience.

"The Birth of a Nation" continues at the Clemmer, the advance sale of tickets being such as to preclude the possibility of taking off the great production for the present. Seattle, or at least that part of it which has seen Griffith's wonderfully presented epic poem of the civil war, is quite as enthusiastic over the picture as New York, Philadelphia, Chicago and Los Angeles have been, and still continue to be. "The Birth of a Nation" fills daily all the theaters where it is shown.

Notwithstanding the fears that have been expressed concerning this picture, that it would arouse race prejudice and bring about a conflict between the Aryan and African peoples, no such spirit is noticeable here. Manager Clemmer has a quartet of colored people singing all through the play, and their intonation of old-time songs wins ready applause. No one thinks of being prejudiced against the singers because of their race. Neither do people generally, viewing the picture, have such thought. The spectacle is too big, too wonderful; tells too dramatic a story of a phase of our country's evolution to allow of thoughts of prejudice or hatred.

Opinion of Playwright.

Rupert Hughes, the playwright and author, after seeing the picture twice, wrote:

"'The Birth of a Nation' is a chronicle of human passion. It is true to fact and thoroughly documented. It is in no sense an appeal to lynch law. The suppression of it would be a dangerous precedent in American dramatic art. If authors are never to make use of plots which might offend certain sects, sections, professions, trades, races or political parties, then creative art is indeed a sad plight.

"'Uncle Tom's Cabin' has had a long and [illegible] book ever written [illegible] fect on history.

"It was denounced [illegible] South as a vicious [illegible] ture. It certainly stirred [illegible] and did more than perhaps [illegible] publication to create and [illegible] tion that invasion against [illegible] struction of the Southern [illegible] Yet it was not suppressed [illegible] its riot-provoking tendencies [illegible] well it was not suppressed.

Picture of Bygone Time.

"'The Birth of the Nation' [illegible] such purpose. It is a picture [illegible] former time. All its phases are [illegible] and done, and most of the people [illegible] its time are in their graves. But [illegible] a brilliant, vivid, thrilling [illegible] piece of historical fiction. Th[illegible] its production would be a crime [illegible] creative art and a menace to [illegible] dom. The suppression of such [illegible] tional works has always been [illegible] the chief instruments of tyranny [illegible] one of the chief dangers to [illegible]

"I saw the play first in a small [illegible] jecting room with only half [illegible] spectators present. We sat mo[illegible] spellbound for three hours. [illegible] learned it had to be condens[illegible] seemed a pity to destroy one [illegible] of it. The next time I saw it [illegible] in a crowded theater and it was [illegible] panied by an almost incessant [illegible] mur of approval and comment, [illegible] laughter, gasps of anxiety and [illegible] bursts of applause. It was [illegible] silent drama as far as the [illegible] was concerned.

Rapid Changes of Scene.

"The scene changed with the [illegible] ity of lightning or thought. On[illegible] ment we saw a vast battlefield [illegible] the enemies like midgets in [illegible] world; the next we saw some [illegible] group filling the whole space with [illegible] personal drama; then just one [illegible] faces big with emotion. And alw[illegible] story was being told with every [illegible] of suspense, preparation, relief, [illegible] velopment and crisis.

"I cannot imagine a human [illegible] tion that is not included somewhere [illegible] this story from the biggest nat[illegible] psychology to the littlest whim [illegible] petulant girl; from the lowest [illegible] of ruthless villainy to the u[illegible] grandeur of patriotic ideal."

One is quite willing to stand [illegible] Mr. Hughes in his lofty criticism [illegible] this picture, especially after [illegible] times viewing it. While evil is [illegible] so that virtue may shine and [illegible] meets its just doom, we need not [illegible] for decadence in human society [illegible] is only when evil is given the [illegible] and praise belonging to virtue th[illegible] nation's art presages a nation's [illegible] struction.

The closing scenes, where the Ku Klux Klan ride throughout what must be the greater portion of South Carolina, having its feminine white population from miscegenation, is fraught with thrills.

But despite, this spectacle, the offering is unwarranted. No good can come of awakening slumbering spites; of reopening old wounds; of turning to forgotten troubles and dragging forth from dusty closets, skeletons themselves well nigh dust.

"BIRTH OF A NATION" OPENS AT DAVIDSON

SPECTACLE TREMENDOUS FROM PHOTOPLAY STANDPOINT, BUT IS UNWARRANTED.

TALENTS OF GRIFFITH ARE WASTED ON THIS SUBJECT

No Good Can Come of Awakening Slumbering Spites, Reopening Old Wounds, Does This Film.

"The Birth of a Nation," David Wark Griffith's dramatization of Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman" and "The Leopard's Spots," opened its much heralded engagement at the Davidson theater last night.

It is to be regretted that Griffith, with his talents and artistry, has wasted them in depicting such a subject. The color problem is dead in the north. In the south, rancor of the rebellion is fast sinking into oblivion. A reunited country stands today; and the problems of secession have been put behind to re-establish as complete a union as in the days of the revolution.

Griffith is a southerner. So is Dixon. There is the animus of the unreconstructed southerner in this effort. It is said that the most offensive portions of the film were eliminated by censorship in the east. There are still parts that leave a doubt in the mind as to whether they are justified.

From a photoplay standpoint, the spectacle is a tremendous one. Griffith has long been admitted a master of this art, and he has outdone himself here. Historical scenes, familiar through famous paintings, are reproduced in striking tableaux. The signing of the emancipation proclamation; the surrender of Lee; the assassination of Lincoln—all are staged in minutest detail. There are other portions filled with unusual mob scenes—the siege of Petersburg, the flight from Atlanta and the negro rioters running wild through the streets of Piedmont, South Carolina.

BROOKLYN, (N. Y.) CITIZEN
JUL 4 - 1915

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

Has Started in Fifth Month at Liberty.

D. W. Griffith's spectacle "The Birth of a Nation," has tarted in on the fifth month of the run at the Liberty Theater. Summer weather has not interfered with its popularity as the theatre is kept at an even temperature by special mechanical arrangements which do not mar the presentation of the wonderful story in any degree.

This massive pictorial representation of stirring incidents in American history remains the most potent offering of the season in town. In addition to the run at the Liberty Theatre Mr. Griffith has installed a second production at the Brighton Beach Music Hall, where visitors to the seaside resorts in the Coney Island territory can see the picture without hurrying up town and abandoning the cool ocean breezes. This is the first time that a theatrical presentation of this importance has been booked for two summer runs in Greater New York.

Telegram & N.Y. July 4

D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," has started in on the fifth month of the run at the Liberty Theater. Summer weather has not interfered with its popularity, as the theatre is kept at an even temperature by special mechanical arrangements, which do not mar the presentation of the wonderful film story in any degree.

This massive pictorial representation of stirring incidents in American history remains the most potent offering of the season in town. In addition to the run at the Liberty Theatre Mr. Griffith has installed a second production at the Brighton Beach Music Hall, where visitors to the seaside resorts, in the Coney Island territory can see the picture

SAN [illegible] UNION
JULY 4, 1915

[illegible] Dixon, Jr. [illegible] the same name, and [illegible] motion picture ever [illegible]

[illegible] deals with the Civil [illegible] shows the causes that [illegible] the nation and carries the [illegible] through the war. In "The [illegible] shows the most mar[illegible] scenes that have ever [illegible] The stage before Peters[illegible] thousands of soldiers in [illegible] realistically shown in the [illegible] battle fields were laid [illegible] dug under the direct [illegible] of seven G. A. R. army [illegible] who took part in the orig[illegible] These veterans, two of [illegible] were commissioned officers, re[illegible] with Griffith during the en[illegible] that the scenes were being [illegible]

[illegible] in which explosive [illegible] hurled by both the North[illegible] Southern troops, from huge [illegible] are shown in motion pictures [illegible] first time in "The Clansman." [illegible] used is the same that [illegible] during the Civil war and [illegible] from the U. S. government [illegible] occasion.

[illegible] blank shells used in [illegible] were constructed especi[illegible] these big guns by an expert [illegible] manufacturer. More than [illegible] shells are used in the [illegible] They cost thousands of [illegible]

[illegible] the battle scenes, Grif[illegible] field telephones, flag sig[illegible] couriers and even a captive [illegible] These methods were not used [illegible] the army equipment, but [illegible] used by Griffith in stag[illegible] production. He used the mod[illegible] methods to better execute [illegible] of 1861-65.

[illegible] artillery duels present one of [illegible] striking features of the pic[illegible] "The Clansman" describes the [illegible] and motives of the fa[illegible] Klux Klan, and shows more [illegible] of these white-hooded [illegible] in their raids on the negroes.

[illegible] Sherman's historical march [illegible] together with the burning [illegible] city of Atlanta, is shown [illegible] The burning of At[illegible] is shown at night. The city [illegible] its countless number of buildings [illegible] dwellings is shown in the destruc[illegible] A terrific battle between Ku-Klux riders and negro troops, pro[illegible] another thrilling feature.

[illegible] assassination of President Lin[illegible] by John Wilkes Booth is shown [illegible] first time in the history of [illegible] pictures.

[illegible] final scenes of "The Clansman" [illegible] the most powerful sermons [illegible] could possibly be preached [illegible] the horrors of war.

[illegible] Clansman" is presented by an [illegible] cast, including Henry Walt[illegible] Marsh, Miriam Cooper, Jose[illegible] Scottiswoode Aitken, [illegible] Gish, Elmer [illegible] Robert Harron, George Seig[illegible] Mary Alden, [illegible] Hendricks, Sam de Grasse, [illegible] Hayes, Donald Crisp, William [illegible] and Jessie Lee.

JULY 4, 1915
GALVESTON (Tex.) NEWS

Wherein Two-Dollar Movies Are Promised for the Near Future

FF

New York.—A chain of theaters in New York and stretching across the country and devoted exclusively to the presentation of motion pictures at a charge of $2 for the best seats—this is the pronounced program from the office of H. H. Aitken, president of the company which financed "The Birth of a Nation" and so gave to a somewhat surprised public the first of the $2 movies. To make this ambitious program feasible its sponsors have gone to Wall street for their money and to D. W. Griffith, Thomas H. Ince and Mack Sennett for their pictures. A company with a capital of $4,000,000 will be incorporated.

At Mr. Aitken's office it was said that some $50,000,000 had been pledged to the support of the undertaking and that this would make possible an expenditure of $5,000,000 a year in the production of fifty pictures. This would give an average of $100,000 investment for each film and would allow the producers to do big things on a big scale—particularly in the photographing of great spectacles too large for any stage on Broadway. It has been said that "The Birth of a Nation," now on exhibition at the Liberty, upon an outlay of $300,000, of which roughly, one-third went into the production.

[illegible] three movie directors named in the announcements of the new enterprise are now on the Pacific coast, each at work on a new film, and Mr. Aitken is here entering into negotiations for theaters. The plan calls for the taking over of between 500 and 600 houses, 400 in this country and the rest abroad. The acquiring of these, it was said, had been proving encouragingly easy. For some time past there have been more theaters than the producers could keep busy with popular plays, and such an enterprise as the one now proposed would, if successful, relieve the strain in many places. There is to be a Broadway theater as well as the home of the chain, and Mr. Aitken and his associates are negotiating for one central in location and of recent construction. It was built for the spoken drama, and has been so held all the year.

MILWAUKEE (Wis.) WISCONSIN
JUN 30 1915

[illegible] Lyon Barclay, who just left the Keystone Film company, is the principal fun [illegible] at the Empress [illegible] in Blue Ribbon Belles.

FF

"The Birth of a Nation," opening at the Davidson on Saturday, July 3, promises to prove the most gigantic moving [illegible] ever offered here. The film is in [illegible] reels. More than 18,000 people [illegible] 1,000 horses were required to pre[illegible] The battle scenes, including the [illegible] Petersburg, the surrender of [illegible] Lee, the exciting episodes were [illegible] Dixon's novel [illegible] the Republic [illegible]

BROOKLYN, (N. Y.) CITIZEN
JUL 4 - 1915

BRIGHTON BEACH MUSIC HALL.

Big Advance Sale for "The Birth of a Nation."

184

Seat reservations have been made by many peace, patriotic, social and other organizations at the Brighton Beach Music Hall to see D. W. Griffith's masterpiece, "The Birth of a Nation," which was opened there Friday night. Every bit of available room in the big playhouse by the seashore has been utilized to make room for the crowds which are expected to attend the matinee and the evening performances this afternoon and this evening and on Independence day. Throughout the week and while "The

THE CHARACTER OF LINCOLN
In "The Birth of a Nation" at Brighton Beach Music Hall

Birth of a Nation" is playing both a matinee and an evening performance, including Sundays, will be given.

The historic features of the presentation have attracted the attention of educators, children's leagues, societies which favor world peace and the end of war, patriotic organizations and other bodies, some of which have made arrangements to see special performances that the members may see, in true picture form, those stirring events of American history, including the assassination of President Lincoln, the surrender of Lee to Grant at Appomattox, the last stand of the Confederates at Petersburg, Lincoln in a tender scene where he grants the mother of a Confederate officer her plea to save him from execution and an exact reproduction of Ford's Theatre and the scenes attending the shooting on that fatal night. Booth is not only shown firing the shot, but leaping from the boxes to the stage and shouting defiance as he made his way out and escaped.

Brooklyn, (N. Y.) Standard-Union
July 4, 1915

BRIGHTON BEACH MUSIC HALL—Seat reservations have been made by many peace, patriotic, social and other organizations at the Brighton Beach Music Hall to see D. W. Griffith's masterpiece, "The Birth of a Nation," which was opened Friday night, with the presence of distinguished public officials, seven hundred members of the Twenty-third Regiment, the Old Guard, and the officers of the Ninth Coast Artillery, and which is to be continued. Every bit of available room in the big playhouse by the seashore has been utilized to make room for the crowds which are expected to attend the matinee and the evening performances this afternoon and this evening and on Independence Day. Throughout the week and while "The Birth of a Nation" is playing both a matinee and an evening performance, including Sundays, will be given. The historic features of the presentation have attracted the attention of educators, children's leagues, societies which favor world peace and the end of war, patriotic organizations, and other bodies, some of which have made arrangements for special performances, that the members may see, in true picture form, those stirring events of American history, including the assassination of President Lincoln, the surrender of Lee to Grant at Appomattox, the last stand of the Confederates at Petersburg, Lincoln in a tender scene where he grants the mother of a Confederate soldier her plea to save him from execution, and an exact reproduction of Ford's Theatre and the scenes attending the shooting on that fatal night. Booth is not only shown firing the shot but leaping from the box to the stage and shouting defiance as he makes his way out and escapes.

BROOKLYN, (N. Y.) CITIZEN
JUL 4 - 1915

CROWDS WITNESS "BIRTH OF NATION"

For Long Run at Brighton Beach Music Hall

184

D. W. Griffith's gigantic spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation" adapted from Thomas Dixon's book and play, "The Clansman," which opened an engagement in the Brighton Beach Music Hall on Friday evening to a capacity audience, was witnessed yesterday by two audiences that filled every seat in the spacious theatre.

This remarkable motion picture was first presented in the Liberty Theatre, Manhattan, several months ago and is still playing to crowded houses. When it was learned by theatregoers that this photo-play was to be presented on Broadway at $2 prices, many laughed and said that New Yorkers would not stand for seeing a moving picture at the same price of admission for which they could see a Frohman, Belasco or any other Broadway production. Nevertheless, "The Birth of a Nation" has been playing to capacity audiences and there is every indication that the run will continue throughout the summer months.

There is also every reason to believe that the run of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Brighton Beach Music Hall will also continue throughout the summer and the management is looking forward to large audiences.

Some of the remarkable scenes shown in this picture are the death of Lincoln, "Sherman's March to the Sea," "Lee's Surrender," the "Last Stand of Petersburg," "Cities Destroyed by Shells," "Famous Battles of the Civil War," "Wild Rides of the Ku-Klux Klan," the "North and South United" and many other stirring scenes.

In order to produce "The Birth of a Nation" it was necessary to spend $500,000. More than 18,000 persons take part in the various scenes and 3,000 horses are used.

"It is without a doubt the most tremendous dramatic spectacle the brain of man has ever conceived, and to say it is the eighth wonder of the world, is putting it mildly. In order to appreciate this truly wonderful picture, one must witness it.

Telegraph

AT THE LIBERTY THEATRE.

"Birth of a Nation's" Popularity Increases Steadily.

18

D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," has registered its 300th consecutive performance at the Liberty Theatre. A second production is also being presented at the Brighton Beach Music Hall.

The film conception of the most stirring parts of American history is so comprehensive that it continues to be one of the most-talked-of attraction in town.

Tribune-Dec 25
Oakland. Cal

"UP FROM THE DEPTHS" AT FRANKLIN ATTRACTION. FF

One of the most remarkable film productions of the season will be presented at the Franklin theater today, tomorrow and Saturday. It is entitled "Up From the Depths" and is directed against hypocrisy in social return. Its strength lies not only in the story, which is as true to life as life itself, but in the masterful manner in which the subject is handled. D. W. Griffith, producer of "The Clansman," supervised the production and Courtenay Foote and Gladys Brockwell appear in the leading roles. It is a picture that will be talked of and will undoubtedly play to capacity business during its engagement at the Franklin.

SAN FRANCISCO (Cal.) CALL & POST
JUNE 28, 1915

"The Clansman" on Eleventh Big Week

FF

"The Birth of a Nation," or "The Clansman," D. W. Griffith's spectacular film drama in twelve reels, started on its eleventh big week at the Alcazar Theater today.

"The Birth of a Nation" is the most spectacular production ever filmed. It cost more than $500,000 to produce and eight months were required to stage it. The production deals with the period before, during and after the civil war. It treats impartially with the causes that led up to this conflict.

A well known professor of history in one of California's leading universities worked four months in securing historical data for staging "The Birth of a Nation." In the battle scenes more than 18,000 soldiers take part. A battalion of the state national guard, seven old G. A. R. veterans who took part in the original battles, together with three West Point army officers, assisted Griffith in staging the battle scenes.

MILWAUKEE (Wis.) SENTINEL
JULY 5, 1915

Plays Important Role in "[illegible]"

Ralph Lewis

Ralph Lewis, who plays the role of Austin Stoneman in "The Birth of a Nation," the Griffith photospectacle now appearing at the Davidson theater, has a role that, during the original production of "The Clansman," created much discussion. It is said that the character is founded on Thaddeus Stevens, of the house during the reconstruction days, and one of them [illegible] for the carpetbag rule that prevailed in the south during that period, gives an excellent background for the mulatto housekeeper role. Mary Alden starts as the mulatto housekeeper.

JULY 8, 1915
MODESTO (Cal.) NEWS

MONSTER MOVIE CONCERN WILL CONTROL

Four Million Dollar Organization Will Operate Chain of Theatres; Weekly Cost of Released Films May be $3,000,000.

NEW YORK, July 8—A new movement in the movie world that will revolutionize even that startling and sensational industry is about to be completed and plans of the organizers are for an extension of the moving picture business on a scale heretofore not even dreamed of. H. E. Aitken is the leader behind the movement and associated with him are D. W. Griffith, producer of "The Birth of a Nation," Thomas H. Ince and Mack Sennett, the producer of the famous funny movies. Sennett has organized more comics on the screen than any other man in the business.

The plan is to book movie productions throughout the country, the same as legitimate shows are now seen. This will raise the movies to the level of regular theatrical plays and will assure people in every section of the country an opportunity of seeing the best screen pictures that are being made anywhere today. The price of admission probably also will be raised but the backers of the new combination believe their productions will be worth the new price scale.

Aitken has announced that a big Broadway theater has been acquired and that others in every large city in the country are under consideration. The first showing of the new combination's plays will be in New York and then will start on the round of other cities, the same as road companies do.

It is predicted by Aitken the new combination will overshadow anything of the same over before attempted and that the weekly cost of the films release will be between $2,500,000 [illegible] Wall street is behind the management in [illegible] money will be expended on branch offices in [illegible] Vienna, [illegible] all

ANCISCO (Cal.) CALL POST
JULY 5, 1915

...Little Nap" the trained ...
...went through his stunts ...
...hat won applause.

"Clansman" Is Drawing Card

...W. Griffith's wonderful ...
"The Birth of a Nation," ...
...an," in twelfth week ...
...twelfth ...
...r theater this afternoon. ...
...ormances of this spectacular ...
...a are given daily.

"The Birth of a Nation" ...
...ith, the producer, has ...
...odrama which pictures as no ...
can describe, as no poet can ...
...vivid, as no story can depict ...
...era previous to the civil war, the ...
...time and the reconstruction, ...
...erwoven with the history of the ...
...n is a love story of ardent ...
...re. While the production is based ...
...homas Dixon's story, "The Clans-" it deals much more broadly on ...
...istorical side than does either ...
...lay or book.

...he Birth of a Nation" is now ...
...ing to capacity houses in Chicago, ...
York and Boston. Among the ...
...res depicted in "The Birth of a ...n" are Lincoln's call for volun-... the stage before Petersburg, the ...ellion and burning of Atlanta, ...man's historical march to the sea, ... surrender to Grant, the assas-...ion of President Lincoln, the rise ...wer of Thaddeus Stevens and the ...tion and raids of the famous ...ite Klan.

SAN FRANCISCO (Cal.) EXAMINER
JULY 5, 1915

...ident Variety

"Birth of a Nation" Starts on Twelfth Week at the Alcazar.

D. W. Griffith's big film spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," or, as it is more generally known, "The Clansman," will start on its twelfth week in San Francisco at the Alcazar Theatre with a matinee this afternoon.

More than 150,000 persons have seen this production during its extended run in San Francisco, yet its popularity seems to be stronger now than during the first week of its appearance here.

"The Birth of a Nation" presents a remarkable blending of romance and comedy amid historic scenes. There are shown the decisive battles of the Civil War, Sherman's famous march to the sea, the burning of Atlanta, Lee's surrender at Appomattox, what it cost mothers, wives, sisters and sweethearts, the assassination of President Lincoln, the formation and rise of the famous Ku Klux Klan, and finally the coming of the Prince of Peace.

There are more than 18,000 people in this wonderful film production and more than 3,000 horses are used.

Eight months were consumed in the making of the picture, which cost more than $500,000. There is a large symphony concert orchestra and a large chorus of jubilee singers. Daily matinees will be held at 2 o'clock, with the evening exhibition taking place at 8 o'clock.

DIEGO (Cal.) UNION
JULY 6, 1915

...ress

...e "Clansman," now in its third ...ek, continues to draw capacity ...s to the Empress Theatre each ...

Visitors to San Diego are in-...d almost immediately on their ...l that this great film play is ...worth witnessing, and a great ...rtion of each audience is com-... of strangers to the city.

...hing like this amazing film ...acle has ever before been of-... to the public of the city and it ...a new world of possibilities in ...rt of motion picture produc-...

The music is a feature that ...ves special mention and the ...iful stage settings are new and ...ent from anything ever at-...ted before in connection with a ...re production.

...t to the Exposition "The Clans-... is among the most popular ...ctions in the city. Other cities ...amoring for bookings and dates ...this production have been of-..., but the management has re-... every offer tendered in order ...hold the play here until every ...n of the Exposition City has ...given an opportunity to see this ...test of all motion pictures.

...e theatre box office opens at 9 ...y morning and seats may be re-...d for all performances, either ...personal application or ...

DELAWARE (O.) HERALD
JULY 6, 1915

BIG MOVIE CONCERN IS ORGANIZED

By United Press.

New York, July 6.—A new movement in the movie world that will revolutionize even that startling and sensational industry is about completed and the plans of the organizers entertain an extension of the moving picture business on a scale heretofore not even dreamed of. H. E. Aitken is the leader behind the movement and associated with him are D. W. Griffith, producer of "The Birth of a Nation"; Thomas H. Ince and Mack Sennett, the producer of the famous funny movies. Sennett has organized more comics on the screen than any other one man in the business.

The plan is to book movie productions in a regular chain of theaters throughout the country, the same as legitimate shows are now seen. This will raise the movies to the level of regular theatrical plays and will assure people in every section of the country an opportunity of seeing the best screen pictures that are being made anywhere today. The price of admission probably will also be raised, but the backers of the new combination believe their productions will be worth the new price scale.

Aitken has announced that a big Broadway theater has been acquired and that others in every large city in the country are under consideration. The first showing of the new combination's plays will be in New York and then will start on the round of other cities, the same as road companies do.

It is predicted by Aitken the new departure will overshadow anything of the kind ever before attempted and that the weekly cost of the films released will be near $5,000,000. Wall street is behind the movement in a financial way and large sums of money will be expended on branch offices in London, Paris, Vienna, Petrograd, Rome, South America and at big American cities, which will also act as distributing centers.

MILWA... (Wis.) ...
JULY 6, 1915

...that showing the ...
...of our history. It ...
...calling for "more ...
...thousands of men and horses, ...
...cause of the masterfulness of ...
...handling, make "The Birth of a Na-...tion" a film attraction ...
...over practically without ...
...one tries to comprehend the ...
...amount of time and patience required, ...
...first to figure out the details and the ...
...sequence of the hundreds of scenes ...
...shown in rapid succession, and ...
...the training of the more than ...
...tors—principals and supernumeraries— ...
...that took part in producing the most ...
...absolute realism ever shown in similar ...
...scenes on the screen or on the stage. ...
...he finds his brain reeling with the ef-...fort and his mind refusing to grasp ...
...the facts. Had D. W. Griffith never ...
...done another thing but this he would ...
...would live forever in the history of ...
...filmdom with this work as his monu-...ment.

And in passing it would be manifestly unfair not to mention another name, that of G. W. Bitzer, to the honor list headed by Griffith. Never, probably, has motion picture photography been undertaken under such amazing conditions as were those imposed upon the operator in making all the "big" scenes in "The Birth of a Nation." Yet the photography is beautiful in the extreme. And G. W. Bitzer was in charge of the photography.

THE MUSICAL SETING—

Joseph Carl Breil's part in contributing to the big success has consisted partly in writing original and typically beautiful Breil compositions as a setting for certain scenes and partly in adapting gems of American and foreign composers to other scenes the immensity of which he perhaps felt himself unequal to the task of providing with original music. How well Mr. Breil has succeeded in his part is demonstrated, for example, in his fitting of the wild Grieg "Peer Gynt" music to the burning of Atlanta and of a mournful theme of Suppe's "Light Cavalry" overture to the scenes before Petersburg entitled "The Last Gray Days of the Confederacy." Magnificent excerpts from Wagner's "Parsifal" score, with the trumpet motif predominating, are so neatly fitted to the battle scenes and the mad rides of the Ku Klux that to many forever after to hear this music will probably be to conjure back a mental picture of these thrilling scenes.

And last, but not least, in a review which, however lengthy, at best can do but scant justice to the production, an admirable cast of principals was secured and coached in makeup and action at a great expenditure of time, patience and money to conform with historical authorities in the enacting of the story in its various phases. Those involved particularly in the central romance who deserve mention are Henry Walthall as the fireeating Southern soldier, Col. Ben. Cameron; Mae Marsh, who does remarkable dramatic work as Flora Cameron; Lillian Gish as Elsie Stoneman, Ralph Lewis as Austin Stoneman, the radical leader; Spottiswoode Aitken as the kindly Dr. Cameron, Josephine Crowell as Mrs. Cameron, Miriam Cooper as Margaret Cameron, Elmer Clifton as Phil Stoneman and Miss Mary Alden, recently seen here with Naximova, as Stoneman's vicious mulatto housekeeper, Lydia Brown. The historical characters are all realistic in makeup and in acting, judging from records extant. Joseph Henaberry as Abraham Lincoln, Raoul Walsh as Booth, the assassin; Donald Crisp as Gen. Grant and Howard Gaye as Gen. Lee doing especially noteworthy work.

"The Birth of a Nation" is of such magnitude as to baffle adequate detailed review in a limited space, but to the above fragmentary comment upon its merits I would add in closing that I can conceive of no person with an appreciation of the big and the beautiful regretting having spent his money to see—and hear—this, the first $2.50 photoplay ever presented in Milwaukee.

H. H. RYAN.

Brooklyn, (N. Y.) Standard-Union

...ate ..... JUL 6 - 1915

BROOKLYN, (N. Y.) CITIZEN
July 6, 1915

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

...l Be Seen at Brighton by Many Societies.

...ecause "The Birth of a Nation," D. ... Griffith's wonderful $500,000 film ... playing at the Brighton Beach Music ..., is a pictorial history of the Civil ... period of the United States, out-...g the principal diplomatic, historical ... fighting events of that crisis, a num-... of educational institutions in this ...ough and Queens have purchased a ...e reservation of seats that their ...bers might witness, almost as they ...rred, the developments of those days. ...housands of children are to see the ...ormances, especially those at the ...inee, because it is agreed by educa-... that they can have a greater concep-... of American history, once they see ...e Birth of a Nation," than they could ...tudying and reading history.

...hile "The Birth of a Nation" shows ... historic events as the surrender of ... to Grant at Appotomox, the assassi-...on of President Lincoln, Sherman's ...rch to the Sea, it is not a war spec-...e but a plea for peace and on the ...r hand shows the diplomatic side of ... struggle and particularly the tender ...tredness of Abraham Lincoln.

Eagle, Brooklyn
July 6

...A number of educational institu-...tions in this borough and Queens have ... purchased a reservation of seats ... "The Birth of a Nation" at the ...

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" AT BRIGHTON MUSIC HALL

"The Birth of a Nation," now playing at the Brighton Beach Music Hall, is a pictorial history of the Civil War, a number of educational institutions in Brooklyn and Queens have purchased a large reservation of seats that their members might witness, almost as they occurred the developments of those days. Thousands of children are to see the performances, especially in the afternoon. While "The Birth of a Nation" shows such historic events as the surrender of Lee to Grant at Appomattox, the assassination of President Lincoln, Sherman's March to the Sea, it is not a war spectacle, but a plea for peace, and on the other hand shows the diplomatic side of the struggle and particularly the tender heartedness of Abraham Lincoln.

N. Y. Telegraph
July 6, 1915

AT THE LIBERTY THEATRE.

"Birth of a Nation" Most Potent of Drawing Cards.

D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," has started in on the fifth month of the run at the Liberty Theatre. Summer weather has not interfered with its popularity, as the theatre is kept at an even temperature by special mechanical arrangements which do not mar the presentation of the wonderful film story in any degree.

This massive pictorial representation of stirring incidents in American history remains the most potent offering of the season in town. In addition to the run at the Liberty Theatre, Mr. Griffith has installed a second production at the Brighton Beach Music Hall.

MILWAUKEE (Wis.) WISCONSIN

"BIRTH OF A NATION" IS A WONDERFUL FILM

Story of the Civil War and Reconstruction Days Told in Pictures.

BATTLE SCENES ARE ...

Marvelous for Realism and Faithful Reproductions of Fighting During War.

A wonderful and spectacular ... drama of the civil war and of the reconstruction period which ... followed is "The Birth of a Nation," Griffith's production, which is now ... pearing at the Davidson. Photographic and historic points of ... doubtful if these pictures ever have ... equaled, particularly when the ... and remoteness of the subjects are ... adered.

Battle Scenes Marvelous.

The battle scenes are marvelous ... realism. All set forth as faithful ... ductions of engagements which ... place during the memorable struggle ... half a century ago. They include ... pictures from all the important fight... centers of the four years strife. Hand-to-hand conflict and long range ... firing are shown in a manner ... both thrilling and ... terest is not any the less because ... fact that war is a foremost topic ... cussion these days.

Of no less importance are the ... of statecraft, particularly those ... involve the activities of President Lincoln, which character is depicted ... most life-like manner. The appeal ... the "great heart" by a southern mother whose son is condemned to die as a spy is one of the touching features, and ... acteristic of Lincoln's experiences ... those days. The Ford's theater ... including the assassination of the president, is of particular value ... reproduction of the interior of the ... playhouse, including the scenic setting which was on the stage at the fatal moment, is as near exact as art and ... could make possible.

Lincoln's Policy Toward South.

The part covering the reconstruction period sets forth vividly Lincoln's ... policy towards the south, also ... many difficult problems arising from the attempts of the white and black ... to dwell together on politically equal terms. Here some of the features ... overdrawn, but possible no more than necessary to convey accurately ... quickly the impending danger ... which the southern people were ... upon to cope. The necessity ... ing the negro, recently a ... ly evident.

People from 7 to ... enjoy this film ... instructive ...

Brooklyn, (N. Y.) Standard-Union
July 7, 1915

[illegible] Davies, one of the leading [illegible] picture men of London, is in [illegible] York completing arrangements [illegible] presentation of D. W. Griff[illegible] spectacle, "The Birth of a Na[illegible] in London late in [illegible] September. Mr. Davies saw [illegible] production for the first time at [illegible] Beach Music Hall, and is [illegible]tic about its prospects in [illegible]nd. He thinks it will be an [illegible]ally timely subject for stage [illegible] at the present state of affairs [illegible]land.

MILWAUKEE (Wis.) NEWS
JULY 7, 1915

[illegible] the Real Lincoln—

[illegible]ong the difficult roles in "The [illegible]th of a Nation," the motion pic[illegible] drama of civil war days at the [illegible]vidson, is that of Abraham Lin[illegible], the martyred president. Joseph [illegible]abery, a veteran actor of high [illegible], plays the part of Lincoln and [illegible] is credited with an impersonation [illegible] to life. To get the proper at[illegible]sphere into the scenes in which [illegible]President Lincoln appears, congres[illegible]al records, histories and a score [illegible]ye-witnesses were consulted. In a [illegible]ne true to life, the president is as[illegible]sinated by John Wilkes Booth, the [illegible]tor, a part played with effective [illegible]lism by Raoul Walsh. The fascin[illegible] film is attracting large crowds [illegible] its two performances daily.

N. Y. Mail
Jul 7

[illegible]very film fan can be justly proud of [illegible] wonderful run of "The Birth of a [illegible]tion" at the Liberty Theatre. The [illegible]ches are still filling the house, even [illegible]ough most of the other attractions [illegible] the city have closed for the summer. [illegible] The film is also playing to big business [illegible]down at the Brighton Beach Music [illegible] Hall. "The Birth of a Nation" has be[illegible]come one of the big "sights" of the [illegible] city for visitors. It is one of the first [illegible] amusements that most out-of-town folk [illegible]ask about upon arriving. [illegible] Two-dollar films have surely estab[illegible]lished a record in the amusement world, [illegible] and I confidently believe we will have [illegible]everal productions in the coming year [illegible]which will compare very fa[illegible] bly with [illegible] Griffith's masterpiece.

There is a general tendency in the [illegible]producing business to get away from [illegible] the production by the foot-rule plan of [illegible]o many subjects in a given time, and [illegible]et down to the making of really [illegible]"worth while" films, turning them out [illegible]nly when they are really worthy of [illegible]presentation. This glorious day has not [illegible]yet arrived, but, by heck, it's on her

PORTLAND (Me.) EXPRESS & ADV.
JULY 7, 1915

THEATERS

LILLIAN GISH,
In the Birth of a Nation.

PORTLANDERS WILL SEE BIRTH OF A NATION.

Hundreds of Portlanders will take advantage of the B. & M. excursion to Boston tomorrow and see The Birth of a Nation at the Tremont Theater there. The play has excited curiosity throughout New England, since it includes a most stirring depiction of the great scenes of the Civil War and the momentous reconstruction that followed. These scenes are realized on a stupendous scale that had never before been attempted. Eighteen thousand actors were employed and 3,000 thousand horses used in the cavalry encounter. In fact $500,000 was spent by Director D. W. Griffith in reproducing the most tremendous crisis of American history in a faithful, complete and patriotic way. Besides the historical interest The Birth of a Nation offers innumerable attractions to the music lover, the admirer of fine romantic drama and, in fact, to every class in the community.

Performances of Mr. Griffith's great spectacle are given in Boston twice daily, at 2.10 in the afternoon and 8.10 in the evening. The scale of prices is so reasonably arranged that anyone can see it at whatever price he or she has been accustomed to paying at a first class theater. Further information concerning this wonderful entertainment, which is just now one of the chief magnets of a visit to Boston can be obtained from Frank A. Johnson, the publicity agent, who is in town today stopping at the Preble House, and will accompany the excursionists to Boston tomorrow.—Ad-

PORTLAND (Me.) PRESS
JULY 8, 1915

EXCURSIONS TO SEE "BIRTH OF NATION."

[illegible] of the excursionists who are going on the Boston & Maine special trip to Boston this morning have already made their arrangements to attend the red letter event of Hub theatrical at the Tremont theatre—D. W. Griffith's gigantic spectacle of Civil War and Reconstruction times, "The Birth of a Nation." Others will make their arrangements when they arrive in Boston and the management of the theatre have laid aside large blocks of seats for each of the performances likely to be attended. On the excursion train today will be the old time publicity agent, Frank A. Johnson, who was here with "The Birth of a Nation" barouche a few weeks ago and won golden opinions for this realistic and romantic presentation of the old time costumes and people of fifty years ago. Mr. Johnson will be glad to supply all information desired as to tickets, etc.

Miriam Cooper in "The Birth of A Nation."

In many ways "The Birth of a Nation" is the most extraordinary spectacular play that has ever been brought to New England. It includes so much of history and romance, of comedy and tragedy, of vast spectacular effects and of elaborate music recalling the bygone tunes of Civil War days. Mr. Griffith, the producer, staged it at an expense of $500,000, employing 18,000 actors and 3000 horses in the representation. The battle scenes of the Civil war and the important historical tableaus are wonderful in their vividness and accuracy of detail. The photography is said to be the best that has ever been seen in connection with filmed spectacle. None of those going to Boston on this excursion will dream of missing "The Birth of a Nation," for it is by far the most interesting theatrical event of the current season in this part of the country.

MANCHESTER (N. H.) MIRROR
JULY 8, 1915

[illegible] the sun is toward the [illegible] possible to get their [illegible] portraits of local patrons. [illegible] surely enjoy seeing the photo[illegible] not quite in favor of paying [illegible] money. "The Birth of a Nation" will have a long run in the Hub before it is sent out to the other larger cities of New England and finally lands a place in Manchester.

PORTLAND (Me.) ARGUS
JULY 8, 1915

[illegible]hom six [illegible] representatives of the State.

WILL SEE "BIRTH OF A NATION."

Many of Today's Excursionists to Attend Famous Play in Boston.

[illegible] the excursionists who are going on the Boston & Maine special trip to Boston this morning have already made their arrangements to attend the red letter event of Hub theatricals at the Tremont Theatre—D. W. Griffith's gigantic spectacle of Civil War and Reconstruction times, "The Birth of a Nation." Others will make their arrangements when they arrive in Boston and the management of the theatre have laid aside large blocks of seats for each of the performances likely to be attended. On the excursion train today will be the old time publicity agent, Frank A. Johnson, who was here with "The Birth of a Nation" barouche a few weeks ago and won golden opinions for this realistic and romantic presentation of the old time costumes and people of fifty years ago. Mr. Johnson will be glad to supply all information desired as to tickets, etc.

In many ways "The Birth of a Nation" is the most extraordinary spectacular play that has ever been brought to New England. It includes so much of history and romance, of comedy and tragedy, of vast spectacular effects and of elaborate music recalling the bygone tunes of Civil War days. Mr. Griffith, the producer, staged it at an expense of $500,000, employing 18,000 actors and 3,000 horses in the representation. The battle scenes of the Civil War and the important historical tableaux are wonderful in their vividness and accuracy of detail. The photography is said to be the best that has ever been seen in connection with filmed spectacle. None of those going to Boston on this excursion will dream of missing "The Birth of a Nation," for it is by far the most interesting theatrical event of the current season in this part of the country.

Tribune
June 25

MOVIE MEN S[illegible]
$5 SHOWS O[illegible]

Home and [illegible]

"Film is [illegible]

"Spotted to-day, [illegible] Matilda," [illegible] $3.75."

Back in the days [illegible] fans will have to [illegible] favorite [illegible] prediction made [illegible] L. Rodriguez [illegible] speaking at a [illegible] bee of film [illegible] at the Hotel [illegible]. And if Mr. [illegible] distinct [illegible] student's [illegible] like this [illegible] English, [illegible] week ends [illegible] roads.

In case this [illegible] ordinary [illegible] be [illegible] chief that the [illegible] in motion pictures [illegible] introduction in the [illegible] and colleges.

"Pass your [illegible] boys years of [illegible] "Now, I [illegible] Mackenzie did in the [illegible] after he entered [illegible] made will reply.

The film men [illegible] would the [illegible] lessons and [illegible] $5 "movies," and [illegible] tionize our [illegible] men like D. W. Griffith [illegible] warmed up to their [illegible] time there will be a [illegible] library in every [illegible] lly will belong to [illegible] library for films.

"Aw, mamma, don't [illegible] suffrage parade again [illegible] of the near future [illegible] time. "Please run the [illegible] one just once more, [illegible] straight upstairs. Ro[illegible]

Among the men at the [illegible] heard of the coming [illegible] films were:

Carl Laemmle, Carl[illegible] Bauer, Wm. Fox, [illegible] Pathe, Adam Kessel, [illegible] Pathe, Thanhouser, [illegible] Salter, James [illegible]

MILWAUKEE (Wis.) NEWS
JULY 7, 1915

[illegible] CAPACITY AT DAVIDSON.

Seats are now on sale four weeks in advance for "The Birth of a Nation" at the Davidson theater. The opening week of the engagement has proven a tremendous one and capacity houses have attended every performance. The music is a big feature, and Herman Kelbe's orchestra renders the setting in a manner that makes it a big feature of the production. The twelve reels are filled with historic incident, excitement and thrills, and the offering established Griffith as the master of photoplay production.

JULY 3, 1915
MILWAUKEE (Wis.) WISCONSIN

BIG PRODUCTION IS SEEN

Censors and Newspaper Folk View "Birth of Nation" at Davidson.

The board of censors and guests from newspaper offices Friday evening viewed "The Birth of a Nation," the great film production at the Davidson, where its engagement opens tonight. The Griffith masterpiece held rapt attention for three hours, and was pronounced a wonderful thing. History is visualized in the thousands of scenes, and there are thrills and thrills in the battle scenes and the activities of the Ku Klux Klan. Several leaders among the colored residents of Milwaukee viewed the pictures, in which the race question figures so prominently, and which have been bitterly assailed by blacks in some places.

CHATTANOOGA (Tenn.) NEWS
JULY 8, 1915

"The Birth of a Nation" enters the fifth week of its run at the Illinois theatre, Chicago, Saturday, July 3. The house is crowded daily, both at matinees and evenings.

CLEVELAND (Ohio) PRESS
JULY 8, 1915

FAME.

D. W. Griffith no longer writes his name with the initials, D. W., since the success of his "Birth of a Nation" was established. He now writes it David Wark Griffith.

OAKLAND (Cal.) TRIBUNE
JUL 7 1915

MACDONOUGH

Mae Marsh, the attractive motion picture actress star, who takes the part of Florence Cameron, one of the leading characters in D. W. Griffith's spectacular photoplay, "The Birth of a Nation," or "The Clansman," which is coming to the Macdonough theater soon, has gone through a tragic death scene almost one hundred times for the benefit of the motion picture camera.

Miss Marsh has been in motion pictures almost three years, starting with Mr. Griffith as an extra.

In director Griffith's first picture, Miss Marsh was supposed to die. She did this so realistically and displayed such wonderful ability for enacting a death scene, that in almost every picture it which she has appeared since she died a tragic death.

In "The Clansman," Miss Marsh brings to her death over a study play. This is one of the leading dramatic features in "The Clansman."

"I have died so many times before the camera, that I am getting used to it and really enjoy the experience," said Miss Marsh. "When I die," she continued, "I believe that I have all the emotions of a person who is actually on a deathbed."

JULY 7, 1915
MILWAUKEE (Wis.) WISCONSIN

BUTTERFIELD—Pictures.
ALHAMBRA—Pictures.
MAJESTIC—Pictures.

CAPACITY AT DAVIDSON.

Seats are now on sale four weeks in advance for "The Birth of a Nation" at the Davidson theater. The opening week of the engagement has proven a tremendous one and capacity houses have attended every performance. The music is a big feature, and Herman Kelbe's orchestra renders the setting in a manner that makes it a big feature of the production. The twelve reels are filled with historic incident, excitement and thrills, and the offering established Griffith as the master of photoplay production.

SAN DIEGO (Cal.) TRIBUNE
JULY 7, 1915

With the Photo Players

EMPRESS THEATRE

"The Clansman" still continues to draw capacity audiences at each performance and if any doubt remains as to the merit of this attraction all one needs to do is ask some one who has witnessed it. Not one person ever leaves the Empress theatre in anything but a "boosting" frame of mind at the close of the spectacle. The music has improved with the progress of the three weeks' engagement until it is quite as perfect as was the orchestra in the big Auditorium theatre in Los Angeles where the picture was first presented and where it ran for [illegible] solid weeks. During the remainder of this week the management [illegible] to be able to take care of [illegible] who have not yet attended and [illegible] will close its record-breaking [illegible]

SAN FRANCISCO [illegible]

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

"The Birth of a Nation," or as it is more generally known, "The Clansman," D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle in twelve reels, now being shown twice daily at the Alcazar Theatre, is the world's masterpiece in motion pictures.

The record of attendance at the Alcazar Theatre is being broken daily. It is estimated that over 160,000 persons have already witnessed this stupendous production.

The assassination of President Lincoln by Booth is one of the leading features of "The Birth of a Na[illegible]

CLIPPING FROM Tribune
Date Lillie Mae
7-6-15

"The Birth of a Nation."

"The Birth of a Nation," being shown at the Clemmer to large houses, has two important divisions in the drama. The first act takes the beholder up to the death of Lincoln and the events immediately following that tragedy. At this point the drama is noble, inspiring. The reason of this may be found in the motives which inspire both North and South in the inevitable struggle. Not a man on either side but believed he was fighting for a great principle.

The second act deals with the events set forth in Dixon's "Clansman." All the action growing out of that period in the South were [illegible] springing from personal ambition, or from the baser passions of ignorance. The film pictures of this period are no less exciting than those of the earlier day, but the impression left on the mind by them is quite different.

The glory of great ideas has departed. It is a reign of terror, with man at his worst in almost every case. The first is a dramatist's report of sublime events; the second a composition of a dramatist from a mingling of selfish human passions and ambitions. Nature, after all, is little only and much taller.

(N. Y.) Standard-U

...stated that ... the Birth of a Nation ... man's famous ... ich is reproduced, in ... a master-stroke in ... hile the last stand at Pet... been described as the ... ne of its kind ever staged.

ADDRESS CLIPSBURO
NG FROM Seattle
Wash.
7-8-15

Her Life Reviewed in Photodrama

By CHARLES EUGENE BANKS

Mrs. Sarah F. Kingsbury, of Seattle, Who Was a Civil War Nurse, Spends Afternoon at "Birth of a Nation," and Recalls Talks With Lincoln and Others—Other Photoplays in Local Houses.

ASKA—"The Garden of Lies," featuring Jane Cowl.
EMMER—"The Birth of a Nation," Griffith's masterpiece.
LONIAL—"The Devil's Daughter," featuring Theda Bara.
ELBOURNE — "Avenging Conscience," featuring Henry Walthall.

MRS. SARAH F. KINGSBURY sat in a box at the Clemmer theater yesterday and saw the most exciting and important period of her life ...ed over again. Mrs. Kingsbury, ...is 84 years years old, was a nurse ...e camps about Washington during ...ivil war. She was well acquainted ... President Lincoln and repeated ... personal conversations she had ... Mr. Lincoln during the four years ...er service.

...hen Manager Clemmer learned that ...ld lady who was too poor to ...dly goods to see "The Birth of a ...on" was living here, ...dy ... had lived through many of the ...es depicted in the Griffith master... he sent an automobile for her. ... Kingsbury, with a party of ladies ... are interested in her welfare, was ...rted to the Clemmer.

...e party consisted of Mrs. Kings... ..., 6061 Fourth avenue north; Mrs. ...y E. Sellen, Mrs. Eva M. Watson, ... Harriet Hibben and Mr. John Mc...rson.

... remember my first visit to Mr. ...coln," said Mrs. Kingsbury, as the ...ure of the great emancipator ap...red on the screen. "It was in '61. ... President,' said I, 'send me to the ...t where I can be of some use to ... wounded.'"

'No,' he replied, 'I want a woman ... you right here in the camps about ...shington, to tell me hew things are ...g.'"

For four years I nursed the wounded ...and sick. I often had interviews ...h the president, the grandest, sim...t, most patient man that ever ...d."

Mrs. Kingsbury watched the pictures ...h great interest. She made many ...ments on the persons represented. ...st like Sumner," she said, "when he ...wned upon the mulatto in "Stone...n's offices. "He was a great man, ... cranky."

When the legend on the screen said ... Southern mother was going to Lin...n to get a pardon for her boy, the ... lady exclaimed: "And she'll get it, ..." She was not disappointed, and ... tears ran down her cheeks when ...coln wrote the saving paper.

"I don't like him," she whispered ...en Grant appeared. "He got what ...Clelland should have had. Don't ... think so?"

Mrs. Kingsbury belongs to the fac...n of McClelland worshippers, of ...om, according to her testimony, Lin...n was one. She thinks politics ...ned McClelland and made Lincoln.

"I have seen many real events like ...t," said she, referring to the death ... young Cameron and young Stone...n, a Northern and a Southern b... ... each other's arms on the battle ...d. "When the men were badly ...unded they forgot their differences. ...nursed all alike. Suffering makes ...ple forget to be cruel."

Mrs. Kingsbury thought the latter ...f of the picture, where the Ku-Klux ...n are fighting for white supremacy ... the South very true to history. "I ...ow a lot about the reconstruction ...s. Lincoln often talked of the fu...e of the country to me and said he ...red there would be great poverty ... certain people in the years to ...e."

Mrs. Kingsbury saw the picture with... glasses. She could distinguish the ...tures clearly, but could not read the ...ends. She is a well preserved wom... her memory unclouded by the ...rs. She said "The Birth of a Na...n" was too full of wonders to talk about. "It is marvelous, marvelous," was frequently on her lips.

"I shall never have done talking about the picture," she said.

Mrs. Sarah F. Kingsbury,

Who was a nurse in Washington for four years during the civil war, and who yesterday viewed "The Birth of a Nation" at the Clemmer theater.

(Wash.) TIMES
JULY 8, 1915

... Two fathers, old cronies, meet and mutually plan to marry their only son and daughter.

"Birth of a Nation"—Clemmer.

The bigness of "The Birth of a Nation," now playing at The Clemmer, and the tremendous scope of this wonderful Griffith masterpiece founded on "The Clansman" is very aptly illustrated by the fact that those who see it are at a loss for the proper words to describe it. So marvelous is this production that it holds one spellbound as he watches the fast-changing scenes unfold, and so realistic that one forgets that he is a spectator and imagines himself back in the times of the Civil War and the reconstruction period. So perfectly natural are the characterizations of Lincoln and Grant and Lee that it requires no stretch of the imagination to feel that these great men are passing in person on the stage. It is little wonder the people are wild over it.

Chronicle
San Francisco Cal
7-27-15

ALCAZAR

THE eleventh big ... "The Birth of a Nation," or, as it is more ... man," D. W. ... Clans... spectacle, begins ... ...ater tomorrow.

"The Birth of a ... tion in the art ... making. It is ... York, Chicago ... in New ... houses, with the price of admission at $2 a seat.

In its book form, "The Clansman," by Thomas Dixon, it was a great success, and in its dramatic ... tion, it was ... but it ... famous ... bring out ... the ...

MILWAUKEE (Wis.) NEWS
JULY 8, 1915

Pretty Love Scene in a War Hospital

Henry Walthall and Lillian Gish in "The Birth of a Nation."

Among the many interesting scenes in "The Birth of a Nation" now running at the Davidson, is a hospital scene in which hero and heroine evince their mutual love.

The patient is Col. Ben Cameron of the Confederate army, a prisoner of war, and his nurse is Elsie Stoneman, a daughter of the North. The roles are played with realistic effectiveness by Henry Walthall and Lillian Gish. They figure in the play as sweethearts and as staunch supporters of conflicting causes, marrying after the close of the civil war. The play is replete with battle scenes and views of army life.

"The Birth of a Nation," or "The Clansman," D. W. Griffith's wonderful spectacle in twelve reels, continues to attract capacity houses at the Alcazar Theater, where it is being shown twice daily.

"The Birth of a Nation" is based on Thomas Dixon's well known novel, but it deals more broadly on its historic side than does either the play or book. "The Birth of a Nation" deals with the civil war and the reconstruction period, featuring the activities of the Ku Klux Klan and the more important battles of the closing part of the war.

In the depiction of the battles the film is the most remarkable and successful ever produced. D. W. Griffith created "The Birth of a Nation" at a cost of $500,000, after a seven months period of work.

In some of the stirring war scenes 25,000 soldiers took part, using the guns and cannon exactly as used in the civil war. Explosive shells and fireworks were especially constructed for the production. The famous raids of the white hooded night riders, Sherman's march to the sea, Lee's surrender to Grant, night artillery duels, the burning of Atlanta, the siege before Petersburg and the assassination of President Lincoln are depicted with great care.

MILWAUKEE (Wis.) SENTINEL
JULY 8, 1915

562

"The Little Colonel" in "Birth of a Nation"

Henry Walthall.

Henry Walthall, who plays the role of young Cameron in "The Birth of a Nation," is a striking actor of personality. He heads the cast, which includes Mae Marsh, Lillian Gish, Robert Harmon, Ralph Lewis, Joseph Henabery, Donald Cripp and others well known. Seats for the Grimth photo spectacle are now on sale for four weeks in advance at the Davidson. The performances start at 2:15 and 8:10 daily, with a musical accompaniment by Henry Kelbe's orchestra. The photo spectacle traces historical subjects with detail; and such scenes as the siege of Vicksburg; the surrender of Lee, and the assassination of Lincoln are reproduced with wondrous fidelity.

CABLE ADDRESS CLIPSBURO

CLIPPING FROM

NEW YORK MAIL

Date JUL 10 1915

HOPE TO INCREASE ENLISTMENT IN ENGLAND WITH "BIRTH OF A NATION."

Tom E. Davies, who is one of the largest motion picture men in London, has reached America on a special mission to take D. W. Griffith's great spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," back to England. Mr. Davies saw the picture for the first time Monday night, and is enthusiastic about it for English and foreign consumption.

He predicts that it will more than duplicate its vogue in America when it reaches the other side. Davies plans to produce the picture in London, at either the Alhambra or one of the more modern theatres there equally as well known as this one.

Following its establishment in the British metropolis other productions will be organized for a tour of the provinces simultaneously with the run in London. In this move it is said that Mr. Davies will have the encouragement of the British military authorities, who are keen for the great spectacle, because of its tremendous appeal to national pride and patriotism.

While it will not be used in any sense as a propaganda, the Englishmen who have seen the picture say it will be extremely useful at this time in stirring up sentiment that will encourage enlistments in the cause.

CABLE ADDRESS CLIPSBURO

CLIPPING FROM

NEW YORK MAIL

Date JUL 10 1915

GETS PORTLAND, ORE., RIGHTS FOR "NATION."

In addition to the Seattle and Spokane rights for "The Birth of a Nation," J. E. McCormick, a prominent western theatrical manager, has just bought the Portland, Ore., rights to the master picture. His partner in the enterprise is Harry Harris, the popular treasurer of George M. Cohan Theatre. "The Birth of a Nation" opens in Portland on Aug. 29, for a four weeks' stay.

CABLE ADDRESS CLIPSBURO

CLIPPING FROM

NEW YORK MAIL

Date JUL 10 1915

MANY persons do not know what a close call Henry B. Walthall had of not appearing as the Little Colonel, in "The Clansman." How many realize what a calamity it would have been if he had been unable to appear? In good truth there is but one Henry Walthall, and his impersonation of the young Southerner is one of the finest things ever seen on the screen. Walthall was a very sick man when the film started, and he offered to give it up as he had to go to the hospital to undergo an operation, but David W. Griffith said that he would wait for his favorite actor, and he did.

ALLENTOWN (Pa.) CHRONICLE NEWS

JULY 10, 1915

On July 8 a special train was run from Portland, Me., to Boston for the benefit of the Maine people who wanted to see "The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's spectacular photoplay.

"The Birth of a Nation" has broken all attendance records in New York theatres. It has been shown daily at the Liberty Theatre for five months.

Sub Ledger
Allentown Pa
7-10-15

Immediately following the announcement that D. W. Griffith would follow "The Birth of a Nation" with "The Mother and the Law" as his next multiple reel production comes the further announcement that Tully Marshall, one of the best-known figures in theatricals in America, has been added to the group of photoplayers at the Reliance-Majestic studios.

BROOKLYN, (N. Y.) TIMES

Date JUL 10 1915

"The Birth of a Nation."

With the turning of next week D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," will register its 300th consecutive performance at the Liberty Theatre. A second production is also being presented at the Brighton Beach Music Hall, so the record for Greater New York is piling up faster than was ever known before for a theatrical offering in this section. The massive film conception of the dramatic forces in the most stirring parts of American history is so comprehensive in its appeal that it continues to be the most talked of attraction in town.

"The Clan... draw capacity ... formance and ... as to the merit ... one needs to do ... has witnessed it. ... leaves the Emp... thing but a "be... at the close of ... music has inspi... of the three we... it is quite as pop... hostes in the big A... Los Angeles where ... the last presented and wher... full two solid weeks. During ... December of this week the ... nothing, it goes to be able to take care ... business ... have not yet attended and ... Barney D... will close its record-... Wa...

MANCHESTER (N. H.) MIRROR

JULY 10, 1915

AT THE PALACE

"The Dictator" Will Be the Big Feature at This Theatre Next Week.

"The Dictator," a Paramount feature with John Barrymore and Charlotte Ives in the title roles, written by Richard Harding Davis, will be the feature film at the Palace theatre for Monday and Tuesday of next week. It is said to be the feature comedy of the output this season.

The second of the series of "Who Pays?" will also be presented, and as an added feature the management has secured the rights to D. W. Griffith's special one-reel film, "The Battle." Mr. Griffith is the producer of "The Birth of a Nation," which made such a sensation in Boston, and the writer says himself that "The Battle" is the best reel he has ever ...

Tremont Theatre.

David W. Griffith's great historical and romantic spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," is now in its fourteenth week at the Tremont theatre, Boston. The present cool weather makes it an exceptionally favorable time to visit Boston and attend this play, which is being performed in one of the best ventilated and coolest theatres of the city. The crowds the past week have been enormous. The attendance on Independence Day ranks with the greatest in the history of the playhouse. Parties are being organized from many towns and cities to witness this extraordinary attraction. Persons having charge of parties of fifty or more theatregoers should communicate with Henry MacMahon, Manager Booking Department, Tremont theatre, and special arrangements will be made for their visit and for reserving the choicest seats. The prices range to suit all purses, and a pleasant feature for the out-of-town visitors is that the matinee prices at 25c, 50c and $1.00 are one-half those charged at night. It has been definitely announced that "The Birth of a Nation" will not be played elsewhere in New England for many months to come, probably not until the season of 1916-17. Therefore those who desire to see it should not neglect the attractive opportunities presented by the Boston run.

N.Y. Mail July 10

2 "Birth of a Nation" Productions Running

With the turning of next week D. W. Griffith's spectacle "The Birth of a Nation" will register its 300th consecutive performance at the Liberty Theatre. A second production is also being presented at the Brighton Beach Music Hall, so the record for Greater New York is piling up faster than ever known before for a theatrical offering in this section.

This week the Strand has been running two big feature productions. Unfortunately neither of them was really a fine film. The answer was that the great double bill brought much business but did not give as good satisfaction as other bills where there was only one feature but that a very fine one. All of which goes to prove the point that it is not quantity but quality that the public wants. Audiences to-day don't care if a film is three thousand or five thousand feet long. They want it to be a fine film. Two hours is long enough for any film entertainment to last, unless in such exceptional cases as "Cabiria" or "The Birth of a Nation," and generally the fa... rather have two or three short subjects, including short comics, news, educational and travel subjects combined with the one feature than any bargain offering of two features on one bill. It happens that the playing of two features at the Strand last week was not intentional, there having been a misunderstanding in the booking, but the fact that both films were shown and still did not send the audience away as enthusiastic as they have been with one very fine film surely should settle the "footage" problem for some manufacturers.

BROOKLYN, (N. Y.) EAGLE

Date JUL 10 1915

Members of the G. A. R. posts in Brooklyn, Queens and Long Island have made arrangements to attend "The Birth of a Nation" at the Brighton Beach Music Hall.

PRESIDENT LINCOLN AND HIS CABINET IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" Liberty

THE BEST MOVING PICTURES.

LIBERTY.—With the turning of next week D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," will register its 300th consecutive performance at the Liberty Theatre. A second production is also being presented at the Brighton Beach Music Hall.

World July 10

With the turning of next week D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," will register its 300th performance at the Liberty Theatre.

N.Y. Commercial July 10

Next week D. W. Griffith's spectacle "The Birth of a Nation" will register its 300th consecutive performance at the Liberty. A second production is also being presented at the Brighton Beach Music Hall. The massive film conception of American history is comprehensive in its appeal.

N.Y. Sun July 10

LIBERTY—With the turning of next week D. W. Griffith's spectacle "The Birth of a Nation" will register its 300th consecutive performance at this theatre. A second production is also being presented at the Brighton Beach Music Hall, so the record for Greater New York is piling up faster than was ever known before for a theatrical offering in this section. The massive film conception of the dramatic forces in the most stirring parts of American history is so comprehensive in its appeal that it continues to be one of the most talked of attractions in town.

Mail July 10

It is now reported that the new combination of Griffith, Ince and Sennett are to name their productions the "SIG" brand. Allan Dwan is reported to have signed with the New York Motion Picture Corporation, which is part of this combination. Mr. Dwan has done some splendid work with the Famous Players. One of his best remembered features is "David Harum."

Lincoln and Stevens "The Birth of a Nation" Liberty

FORT DODGE (Ia.) SHR...

July 10, 1915

GROWING ... IN FIELD OF ...

Expert Tells of ... Probable Course of the ... ment in the Future

Arthur S. Kane and family ... York city, are at the Oakes ... rard hime. Mr. Kane ... nected with the Electric ... pany but has recently ... connections with that ... a place on the ... Paramount picture ... his way to California where ... cent of the pictures taken in ... ca are produced, to study the ... various studios before starting ... in the New York office.

Mr. Kane has great hopes for the future of the moving picture business. "I think the time will come," he said, "when the companies will produce nothing but original plays, written specially for the film. A moving picture play so written will assume a special place in dramatic art. It won't be long before the theaters in cities will specialize in the type of picture presented. There will be vaudeville house, specializing in short pictures, legitimate and melodrama theaters, and theaters where productions correspond to grand opera.

One of the men most likely to influence the future of the picture business is W. W. Hodkinson, president of the Paramount corporation, the hero of Will Paine's Saturday Evening Post story a couple of years ago. No man in the business has done so much to secure good moving picture service for the public. He insists on a high standard of pictures and has fitted a scheme, whereby the managers of the different theaters can grade productions, according to their reception in the town. There are three grades, and companies whose pictures fall below the demand are dropped from the service. In his anxiety not to have the picture accessories stinted Mr. Hodkinson has added $10,000 to the sum paid in advance to the companies for their productions."

Mr. Kane stated that the price for producing a feature film ranged from $10,000 to $175,000. The cost of staging the "Birth of a Nation," Mrs. Leslie Carter's film probably cost $50,000. The average life of a production is a year, after which it is sent to Alaska, or some other out of the way place, where the style in clothes is not important.

When asked when Fort Dodge would have a chance to see the "Birth of a Nation," Mr. Kane said: "Probably not until it has shown in all the big cities. We find that it takes about a year for a film to be sufficiently well known in a small town to draw a big crowd. If it is rushed in too soon people don't know about it and are not apt to want to go.

"It's a great business and a fascinating one. When moving picture men get together they find it hard to stop talking long enough to eat. The beauty of it is we are sailing on unchartered seas, and there is no telling where a new move will land us."

CABLE ADDRESS CLIPSBURO

CLIPPING FROM

NEW YORK SUN

Date JUL 10 1915

Fifth Month of "Birth of a Nation"

D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" is still breaking records at the Liberty Theatre. The current week will make its turning into the fifth month of the run in New York. With the exception of the year's biggest musical comedy hit the receipts at the Liberty have exceeded those of any other attraction in town.

Great masses of people and thousands of horses are seen in this spectacle. Miles of cotton fields blooming in the poetical Southland frame its earlier views, and then the quiet gives way to terrific battle stretching over ten square miles of territory. Whole cities are built up only to be destroyed before your eyes. Artillery duels make nights seem terribly real. Wild riders dash over miles of country roads, and condensed into the small space of two and one-half hours is told the great drama of a mighty nation trembling upon the brink of dissolution and then finding itself stronger and finer than ever. Its blend of history and romance of stirring adventure and beautiful musical accompaniments to its scenes are the salients which have made it a record-breaking sensation of the present season.

MOTION PICTURE WORLD (N. Y. City)
JUL 10 1915

D. W. Griffith

18FF

By Frank E. Woods.

WHEN D. W. Griffith was making pictures in the old Biograph studio on 14th street, very few people, scarcely anyone in fact, foresaw the heights to which he was destined to attain. There were a few, and I have [redacted]isfaction of numbering myself among them, who [redacted] they recognized in his early work the marks of ge[redacted], and who counted him from the first the foremost leader in the development of motion picture drama; but nobody, least of all himself, dared to dream that he was to reach his present distinction.

I have read in some prints that he is one of three or five of the most talked of men in America, but this is an exaggeration although I can see no reason why he may not before long reach that eminence also, and when he does reach it he will hold it. In New York City, while the contest over the production of the "Birth of a Nation" was on, he was distinctly first in the public eye in that city. It was the same in Boston and in Los Angeles and San Francisco and more recently in Chicago. But these five cities constitute but a fraction of the United States, and it will not be until the "Birth of a Nation" has forced its tortuous way into all the other large cities of the country that the name of Griffith will have gained truly national importance. And even then the national fame of Griffith would be of only transitory character if his achievements were to consist only of what he has thus far accomplished and were to cease with this last effort, great as it undoubtedly is. Established fame is a thing of long growth. It does not come permanently in a day or a year or five years. Commonly it takes a life time, and not infrequently years after death, as in the case of Poe.

David Wark Griffith.

David Wark Griffith is approaching the first milestone and it will be up to him in the parlance of the day, to go the remainder of the route. Will he do it? Will he make other and greater productions than the one that is now gaining him fame? I have heard enthusiastic admirers say that the thing is impossible. "How can he ever produce another "Birth of a Nation"? Such a question as this reminds me of the old days when he was making one-reel Biographs. After a Pippa passes or a Ramola the critics were wont to declare: "Griffith will never make another one like that." And he didn't; he made something entirely different, yet better—a "Sands o' Dee," a "Mothering Heart," an "Enoch Arden," a "Judith." And so I believe it will be in the future. His productions will come less frequently, but unless I am greatly mistaken they will mark at intervals, distinct steps forward, so long as he remains in active life.

What peculiar qualities of mind have made Griffith great? Or rather, I should say, to be conservative, what is it that is making him great? We concede his greatness in his especial field, but I mean in this instance world greatness. People look at his pictures and say: "How wonderful!" They remark the infinite detail, the perfection of technique, the evidences of art, the spirit of poetry, the touches of homely human nature, the vastness of ensemble; and in some of these qualities, or all of them, they see as they think the key to the superiority of his work. And yet, they miss the one big element that, with the others, lifts him so far above his imitators that there can be no comparison. I mean the capacity to conceive or grasp big ideas, big purposes, big themes, and to present them in a big way that will command the respect of big minds. This Griffith has done and is doing. He showed early evidence of this capacity in "A Corner in Wheat" and others of his one-reel Biographs. It was strongly apparent in "The Escape," "Home Sweet Home," "The Avenging Conscience," "The Battle of the Sexes," and lastly, "The Birth of a Nation." Others may imitate his style and do fairly well in making pictures merely to amuse, but until one or any of them can combine with their artistry a quality of independent thought of sufficiently high purpose to arrest the attention of the thinkers of the world, Griffith will have no rivals in motion pictures.

We have only to ask ourselves what it is that made Fielding, Dickens, Thackery, Hugo, Howells and others, stand out above many of their fellows to understand why this young author who writes with the motion camera, and who uses his puppets of actors as if they were the keys of his typewriter, is finding himself invited to a seat with the mighty. When we look at the matter in this light, we have no difficulty in perceiving why Griffith alone, among the producers of motion pictures, is greeted as a distinguished compatriot by such men as Rupert Hughes, Rufus Steele, Richard Harding Davis, Booth Tarkington, and so many others of the first rank in the literature of the day.

Because of D. W. Griffith's natural dignity and reserve, the notion that he stands aloof from his fellow workers, that he lacks the common, human touch in daily intercourse, has been liberally circulated. In speaking of the master director as he knew him in the old Biograph studio, one of his early associates laughed at the idea of Griffith's aloofness. "Why, he is the friend of everybody from the property boy up. I never knew a more truly democratic man in my life," said this co-worker of former days.

---

of the scenes.
ted from some of the leading as in this part of the country h several players who were by masters abroad, the
, according to Thomas L.
, bandmaster of the Twentyegiment, is one of the best he ard.
Manager Kemble obtained the e rights to produce "The Birth ation" in Brooklyn this year he sioned Louis Reinhard, the director of B. F. Keith's m Theatre, to organize an ra of fifty. Because of the work d Reinhard engaged George May, sical director of Hammerstein's in Manhattan to assist him.
musical treat for the audiences
e 'Birth of a Nation" Manager has directed Reinhard to pre-special programme for the per-nces exclusive of the renditions d for the historic scenes in the Thus at every performance virtually amounts to a concert in by the orchestra.
e Reinhard and May there are in chestra Joseph Lazar, repetiteur, um Theatre; Fred Soennicksen, violin, Orpheum; Phil Phillips,
Hippodrome; Fred Egner, violin;
Goldsmith, violin, Hammer-
; Louis Koppelman, 'cello, um; Fred Strahl, bass, Raymond cock Company; Peter Ess, flute, an Symphony Orchestra; Bert
, clarinet, Orpheum Theatre; s Dammeyer, clarinet, Pittsburgh
hony Orchestra; Peter Strum, an Symphony Orchestra; John bassoon, Chicago Symphony stra; Louis Mazzi, harp, Liberty tre; Harry Berken, trumpet, um; Sam Bremer, trumpet, Cres-
Oscar Genth, trumpet, Orpheum; Pertchowok, French horn, eum; Louis Frank, French horn, eum; Isador Grupp, trombone, eum; William Sweetland, tuba, Stein, tympani
um, and Fred Fr

N FRANCISCO (Cal.) CHRONICLE
JUNE 28, 1915

Clansman" in Eleventh Week at the Alcazar

W. Griffith's film spectacle, "The of a Nation," or, as it is more ally known, "The Clansman," tart on its eleventh week at the ar Theater this afternoon.

MILWAUKEE (Wis.) SENTINEL
JUNE 30, 1915

Special Agents Carry "Birth of a Nation" Films

When "The Birth of a Nation" opens s engagement at the Davidson theater, aturday night, Milwaukee will see a ew film of this offering.
The twelve reels, which comprise the riffith photospectacle, are now being rought from Los Angeles by Harry A. herman of the Elliott-Sherman Film ompany of Minneapolis, who has been ppointed special agent of this release.
o valuable are these releases considered hat they are given over to the charge f especially authorized agents, who are esponsible for them at all times.
The Davidson is [illegible]
r concrete [illegible]
for the realization of the effects which accompany all the big scenes, will be received by the theater on Wednesday.

One of the most striking scenes of the offering is the assassination of President Abraham Lincoln in Ford's theater. The incidents of the tragedy occupy nearly one reel and this is said to be one of the most thrilling scenes ever staged.

The company includes such well known actors as Harry Walthall, Lillian Gish, Mae Marsh, Robert Harron, Spottiswoode Aiken, Ralph Lewis, Mary Alden and others. The big battle scenes show a five mile stretch of land and the siege of Petersburg and the surrender of Lee are [illegible]

CABLE ADDRESS CLIPBURO
CLIPPING FROM Post.
Stockton Cal
6-28-15

"CLANSMAN"—ALCAZAR

FF

David Wark Griffith's great film success, "The Birth of a Nation," is the attraction at the Alcazar theater. A masterpiece in film adaptation, the picture scored a tremendous success on a previous showing in San Francisco. It is a masterly spectacle of life, love, hatred, fear and race preju-

---

GREENSBORO (N. C.) NEWS
JULY 9, 1915

Remarkable Realism in Mutual Masterpicture.

The largest set built at the Hollywood studios since D. W. Griffith finished producing "The Birth of a Nation" there was used in the four-part Mutual Masterpicture "Up from the Depths." This interior was constructed to represent the type of large cafe and music hall so much in evidence at Coney Island during the summer. An idea of the size of it can be got when it is remembered that over 200 people appeared in the scenes in which it is shown. These extras—among them were a troupe of girls who appeared as a chorus—were drilled for over a week before the picture was taken.

SAN DIEGO (Cal.) UNION
JULY 3, 1915

and about Seattle [redacted] Keystone co[redacted] reel complete the pro[redacted]

Empress

FF

Could we be satisfied that the mistakes of the period were wiped out at the end of the Civil war, there would have been no need of, nor such a book as "The Clansman," and no good end wou[redacted] been secured by showing its picturization. But were they? Are we not today placing in power at times men who, while their skins may be white, are no more fit to hold office than was Silas Lynch to be lieutenant governor of South Carolina; men who use their offices to evil ends; men who, having once tasted power will go to any length to secure more of the same intoxicating draughts? And have we left behind us the days in which such things as happened to the little Cameron child are possible? Alas—if we look back only a little way, we find such things still exist among us, and that in not all cases are the skins which cover the souls of the renegades as black as their hearts. We are still fighting the battle which the South fought in those days—and we have no Ku Klux Klan to help us. Maybe the picture will open your eyes to the fact that we are living in only fancied security, and will show us that strong diseases require strong remedies. Regardless of what your own opinion may be, you owe it to yourself to see this masterpiece at the Empress Theatre before the present week [redacted] and the production leaves [redacted] fill its other engagements.

"The Birth of a Nation"
Liberty

BOOTH ESCAPING AFTER SHOOTING LINCOLN IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" AT BRIGHTON BEACH MUSIC HALL

...ing of next week "The ... Nation" will register its ... consecutive showing ... Theatre. A second pro- ... being presented in the ... Music Hall, so that ... Greater New York is filling ... before known for ... attractions in this section. ... of the dramatic ... stirring parts of ... continues to be one ... talked of attractions in

D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," will register its three hundredth consecutive performance in the Liberty Theatre this week. A second production also is being presented in the Brighton Beach Music Hall. This film conception of the dramatic moments in American history is so comprehensive in its appeal that it continues to be widely discussed.

World. July 11

BIRTH OF A NATION MAKING ...

With the ... W. Griffith's ... a Nation," will ... south ... Theatre. ... so being ... Beach Music ... Greater New York ... than was ... theatrical offering in this ...

Brooklyn, (N. Y.) Standard-Union

JUL 11 1915

BRIGHTON BEACH MUSIC HALL—... a step which is without precedent ... theatrical circles, William H. Kemble, ... of the Brighton Beach Music ... where D. W. Griffith's $500,000 spec- ... "The Birth of a Nation," is being ... twice daily including Sundays, ... decided not to sell any of the seats ... which the view of the screen is in ... way obscured, even partly, by the up- ... supporting the balcony. "I have de- ... cided, in view of the fact that theatres ... are now being built without stanchions ... supporting the balconies," said Mr. Kemble, "that it would not be fair to the patrons to seat any of them behind these posts, although the view is not fully obscured by any means. This naturally means a loss, but we believe that the public will be better pleased and appreciate what we have done." "The Birth of a Nation," a wonderful pictorial history of the events preceding, during, and after the Civil War, including such historic happenings as the assassination of President Lincoln, the reproduction of Ford's Theatre as it was the night Booth fired the fatal shot, the last stand of the Confederates at Petersburg, has entered on its second week at the Music Hall, and has attracted full houses at each performance. That the pictures of those stirring times appeal to the patriotism of the audience is shown by the great demonstrations of applause and cheering which follow many of the scenes, especially when the battle rages between the Confederates and the Union soldiers, and the combatants, especially the heroes, perform feats of heroism. That the audiences during the warm weather may enjoy the cool breezes from over the ocean, Manager Kemble has had the southern side of the theatre altered so that the windows may be removed at will.

Sun. July 11

"The Birth of a Nation" is still at the Liberty Theatre. It has been shown there more than 300 times.

BROOKLYN, (N. Y.) EAGLE

Date ..... JUL 11 1915

MUSIC AT THE BIG ...

At a cost of $2,000 a week, William H. Kemble, the manager, is maintaining a special orchestra of fifty under the direction of Louis Reinhard, at the Brighton Beach Music Hall for the production of D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation," the historic spectacle which requires special music in a number of the scenes. Recruited from some of the leading orchestras in this part of the country, the orchestra, according to Thomas L. Shannon, bandmaster of the Twenty-third Regiment, is one of the best he ever heard.

When Manager Kemble obtained the exclusive rights to produce "The Birth o fa Nation" in Brooklyn this year he commissioner Louis Reinhard, the musical director of B. F. Keith's Orpheum Theater, to organize an orchestra of fifty. Because of the work involved Reinhard engaged George May, the musical director of Hammerstein's Theater, in Manhattan to assist him.

LINCOLN WRITING A PARDON.

MUSICIANS OF WORTH IN THIS ORCHESTRA.

Organized by Directors Reinhard and May for Brighton Beach Music Hall.

The orchestra at the Brighton Beach Music Hall has become famous in a week. It was organized to furnish the special music required in the presentation of the spectacular photoplay, "The Birth of a Nation," which was first shown here. Manager Kemble engaged Louis Reinhard, musical director of the Orpheum, to get together fifty of the best instrumentalists available, and Mr. Reinhard enlisted George May, musical director of Hammerstein's, as an assistant.

These directors worked so well that ...

BROOKLYN, (N. Y.) EAGLE

JUL 11

Date ..... JUL 11 1915

NO POOR SEATS SOLD.

William H. Kemble, manager of the Brighton Beach Music Hall, where D. W. Griffith's spectacular, "The Birth of a Nation," is being presented, has decided not to sell any of the seats from which the view of the screen is in any way obscured, even partly, by the uprights supporting the balcony.

"I have decided, in view of the fact that theaters are now being built without stanchions supporting the balconies," said Mr. Kemble, "that it would not be fair to the patrons to seat any of them behind these posts, although the view is not fully obscured by any means. This naturally means a loss, but we believe that the public will be better pleased and appreciate what we have done."

That the audiences during the warm weather may enjoy the cool breezes from over the ocean, the southern side of the theater has been altered, so that the windows may be removed at will.

BROOKLYN, (N. Y.) EAGLE

JUL 11

... week "The Birth of a Nation" ... its 300th consecutive per- ... at the Liberty Theater.

... the program.

* * *

"The Clansman," which was produced by David Wark Griffith at a money cost of half a million dollars, is continuing at the Empress Theatre. The staging of this film production required six months' time and the services of 18,000 people and 2000 horses. Three West Point army officers co-operated with Griffith in arranging the great battle scenes. Many pieces of artillery used in these scenes were furnished by the U. S. government.

The destruction of the city of Atlanta by Sherman's army is faithfully reproduced on the screen. The fall of Petersburg, Lee's surrender to Grant, the assassination of President Lincoln, and other historical events of fifty years ago are so realistically filmed by this great cast of screen actors that the audience cheers and applauds each big scene to the echo.

An entire city, including brick sidewalks, the old Southern homes with their colonial pillars, churches and stores, were constructed to duplicate the ante-bellum period and to lend realism and atmosphere to the picture. The musical accompaniment has been arranged and cued to fit the action on the screen as exactly as an open score is arranged, and the thirty accomplished musicians, under the able direction of Prof. R. V. Musso, are receiving well-earned praise from delighted audiences each day.

A chorus of well-trained voices blends their harmony with that of the orchestra at intervals throughout the production, making a beautiful effect that is altogether different from the ordinary picture production.

"The Clansman" opened for a second big week yesterday. Because of the unusual public demand, coupled with the popularity displayed ...

The three hundredth exhibition of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty Theatre will take place this week. D. W. Griffith's picture of the Civil War may be seen also at the Brighton Beach Music Hall.

BRIGHTON BEACH—William H. Kemble, manager of the Brighton Beach Music Hall, where D. W. Griffith's $500,000 spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," is being presented twice daily, including Sundays, has decided not to sell any of the seats from which the view of the screen is in any way obscured by the uprights supporting the balcony. He has decided, in view of the fact that theatres are now being built without stanchions supporting the balconies, it would not be fair to patrons to seat them behind these posts. This means a loss, but the public will be better pleased.

"The Birth of a Nation," a pictorial history of the events preceding, during and after the Civil War, including such historic happenings as the assassination of President Lincoln, the reproduction of Ford's Theatre as it was the night Booth fired the fatal shot and the last stand of the Confederates at Petersburg, has entered on its second week at the Music Hall and has attracted a full house at each performance.

That the pictures appeal to the patriotism of the audiences is shown by the great demonstrations of applause and cheering which follow many of the scenes, especially when the battle rages and heroes perform feats of heroism. That the patrons may enjoy cool breezes from over the ocean Manager Kemble has had the southern side of the theatre so altered that the windows may be removed at will.

SAN DIEGO (Cal.) UNION
JUNE 29, 191

SACRAMENTO (Cal.) UNION
JULY 12, 1915

$2 FILMS, PLAN OF REEL COMBINE

$4,000,000 Company to Turn Out Pictures for Houses in U. S., Europe and South America.

NEW YORK, July 11.—Two dollar motion picture shows will become a common feature of American theatrical life if the plans now pending for a combination of several of the most powerful interests in the film play business materialize.

A company, capitalized at $4,000,000, is forming, with H. E. Aitken, who financed "The Birth of a Nation," at its head. This corporation intends to procure the services of D. W. Griffith, Thomas H. Ince, who staged "The Battle of Gettysburg," and Mack Sennett, originator of the "Keystone Comedies."

These directors will turn out pictures which will be displayed in a chain of houses throughout the United States, Europe and South America at regular theater prices. The headquarters of the ... will be in New York, with ...

The organization of the new company is said to be most extensive and thorough. Under the guidance of the three directors will appear some of the best known actors on the American and European stage. Well known playwrights will contribute scenarios and composers of note will work to supply the musical accompaniment for the film plays.

The general offices of the company ...

AT THE CREST OF A CHARGE IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" LIBERTY THEATRE

Herald July 11

Brighton Beach Music Hall "The Birth of a Nation."
New Brighton.—Vaudeville.
Feltman's.—Singing and dancing.
Luna Park.—Coney Island.
Steeplechase Park.—Coney Island.
Prospect.—Vaudeville.
Bushwick.—Vaudeville.

BROOKLYN is responding generously to the enterprise of Mr. William H. Kemble in getting Griffith's masterpiece in motion pictures, "The Birth of a Nation," for the summer attraction at the Brighton Beach Music Hall. Every performance, which there are two daily, finds a large and eager audience, and many, it is noted, attend more than once.

BRIGHTON BEACH MUSIC HALL.—Taking a step which is not usual in theatrical circles, William H. Kemble, manager of the Brighton Beach Music Hall, where D. W. Griffith's $500,000 spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," is being presented twice daily including Sundays, has decided not to sell any of the seats from which the view of the screen is in any way obscured by the uprights supporting the balcony.

"I have decided, in view of the fact that theatres are now being built without stanchions supporting the balconies," said Mr. Kemble, "that it would not be fair to the spectators to seat any of them behind these posts, although the view is not fully obscured by any means. This naturally means a loss, but we believe that the public will be better pleased and appreciate what we have done."

"The Birth of a Nation," a wonderful pictorial history of the events preceding, during and after the civil war, including such historic happenings as the assassination of President Lincoln, the reproduction of Ford's Theatre as it was the night Booth fired the fatal shot, the last stand of the Confederates at Petersburg, has entered upon its second week at the Music Hall and has attracted full houses at each performance.

That the pictures of those stirring times are real to the patriotism of the audiences shown by the great demonstrations of applause and cheering which follow many of the scenes, especially when the battle is on between the Confederates and the Union soldiers and the combatants perform feats of heroism.

That the audiences during the warm weather may enjoy the cool breezes from the ocean, Mr. Kemble has had the western side of the theatre altered so that the windows may be removed at will.

BROOKLYN, (N. Y.) TIMES

Date JUL 12 1915

Telegram July 11

HAL HARRIS
"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" LIBERTY THEATRE

With the turning of next week D. W. Griffith's spectacle "The Birth of a Nation" will register its three hundredth consecutive performance at the Liberty Theatre. A second production is also being presented at the Brighton Beach Music Hall, so the record for Greater New York is piling up faster than was ever known before for a theatrical offering in this section. The massive film conception of the dramatic forces in the most stirring parts of American history is so

Tribune July 11

With the turning of next week, D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," will register its 300 consecutive performance at the Liberty Theatre. A second production is also being presented at the Brighton Beach Music Hall, so the record for greater New York is piling up faster than was ever known before for a theatrical offering in this section. The massive film conception of the dramatic forces in the most stirring parts of American history is so comprehensive in its appeal that it continues to be the most talked of attraction in town.

CABLE ADDRESS CLIPBURO

CLIPPING FROM Chronicle

San Francisco Cal.

Date 7-12-15

Thirteenth Week of "The Clansman" at Alcazar

"The Birth of a Nation" or "The Clansman," the spectacle in twelve reels based on Thomas Dixon's novel and produced by D. W. Griffith, the great picture producer, will start on its thirteenth week at the Alcazar Theater with a matinee this afternoon.

NEWS OF THE THEATRES

THAT the temperature of the Brighton Beach Music Hall, where D. W. Griffith's wonderful spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," is being produced, may be kept cool and the interior swept by breezes, William H. Kemble, the manager, has ordered the installation of large electric fans which will be put in different parts of the building this week. The southerly side of the hall chiefly consists of windows which Manager Kemble always has thrown open on warm nights to admit the breezes from over the ocean. On occasions when there are no breezes the fans will be an aid in making the theatre cool.

Brooklyn, (N. Y.) Standard-Union

JUL 11 1915

Date

SPECIAL MUSIC AT "BIRTH OF A NATION" 18

At a cost of $2,000 a week, William H. Kemble, the manager, is maintaining a special orchestra of fifty under the direction of Louis Reinhard at the Brighton Beach Music Hall for the production of D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation," the historic spectacle which requires special music in a number of the scenes. Recruited from some of the leading orchestras in this part of the country and with several players who were taught by masters abroad, the orchestra, according to Thomas J. Shannon, bandmaster of the Twenty-third Regiment, is one of the best he ever heard. When Manager Kemble obtained the exclusive rights to produce "The Birth of a Nation" in Brooklyn this year he commissioned Louis Reinhard, the musical director of B. F. Keith's Orpheum Theatre, to organize an orchestra of fifty. Because of the work involved Reinhard engaged George May, the musical director of Hammerstein's Theatre in Manhattan, to assist him. As a musical treat for the audiences at "The Birth of a Nation" Manager Kemble has directed Reinhard to prepare a special programme for the performance exclusive of the renditions required for the historic scenes in the picture. Thus, at every performance, what virtually amounts to a concert is given by the orchestra. Beside Reinhard and May there are in the orchestra Joseph Lazar, repetiteur, Orpheum Theatre; Fred Soennicksen, first violin, Orpheum; Phil Phillips, violin, Hippodrome; Fred Egner, violin; Henry Goldsmith, violin, Hammerstein's; Louis Koppleman, 'cello, Orpheum; Fred Strahl, bass, Raymond Hitchcock Company; Peter Esa, flute, Russian Symphony Orchestra; Bert Mason, clarinet, Orpheum Theatre; Charles Dammeyer, clarinet, Pittsburg Symphony Orchestra; Peter Stram, Russian Symphony Orchestra; John Shon, bassoon, Chicago Symphony Orchestra; Louis Mazal, harp, Liberty Theatre, Manhattan; Harry Berken, trumpet, Crescent; Oscar Genth, trumpet, Orpheum; Sam Bremer, trumpet, Orpheum; Sam Pertchowok, French horn, Orpheum; Louis Frank, French horn, Orpheum; Isidor Grupp, trombone, Orpheum; William Sweetland, tuba, Sousa's Band; Jack Stein, tympany, Orpheum, and Fred Frank, drums.

Brooklyn, (N. Y.) Standard-Union

July 17, 1915

That the temperature of the Brighton Beach Music Hall, where D. W. Griffith's wonderful spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," may be kept cool [illegible] interior swept by breezes, William H. Kemble, the manager, has ordered the installation of large electric fans which will be put in different parts of the building this week. The southerly side of the hall chiefly consists of windows which Manager Kemble always has thrown open on warm nights to admit the breezes from over the ocean. On occasions when there are no breezes the fans will be an aid in making the theatre cool.

CLIPPING FROM Hotel Pegasus New York

Date 7-12-15

"BIRTH OF A NATION" NOW HAS TWO PRODUCTIONS RUNNING

With the passing of this week D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation" will register its 300th consecutive performance on the Liberty Theatre. A second production is also being presented at the Brighton Beach Music Hall, so the record for Greater New York is piling up faster than ever before known for a theatrical offering in this section.

SAN FRANCISCO (Cal.) BULLETIN JUNE 26, 1915

"Birth of Nation" in Films at the Alcazar

"The Birth of a Nation," or "The Clansman," D. W. Griffith's spectacular drama in twelve reels, starts its second week of its present engagement at the Alcazar Theater. The production deals with the period before, during and after the Civil War. It treats impartially with the causes that led up to this conflict and carries the spectator through some of the most important battles of the war, including the siege before Petersburg, the bombardment and burning of the city of Atlanta, and Sherman's historical march to the sea. Matinees will be held daily at 2 o'clock, with the evening exhibition taking place at 8.

JULY 18, 1915
BUFFALO (N. Y.) COURIER

Poe on Screen, Walthall's Ambition.

[illegible] ORAL months ago when the Ke[illegible] company discovered it was [illegible] to be shorn of its yum-yum [illegible], it became vurr' busy and now [illegible] like a sixty horse power pussy [illegible] the acquisition of an actor who [illegible] the same time, a regular man. Mr. [illegible] B. Walthall, at your service. He of "The Birth of a Nation," "The Avenging [illegible]," "Ghosts," and other memorable [illegible]. Having adored him on the screen I [illegible] myself possessed with an insatiable de[illegible] to know him off it. I took it for granted [illegible] would be curious, too. Thuffur—this in[illegible].

It's a will but true fact that with many [illegible]—once on the screen is to be al[illegible] made up. Working or idling, they are, [illegible], constantly intent on "register[illegible]." I wondered how it would be with Mr. Walthall as I lost waiting for his appearance [illegible] the pleasant office of the studio. Would he, as another had done before him, grasp me by both hands, peer into my eyes, and exclaim [illegible] and huskily:

"Ah, at last—I have found you! Those [illegible]! And you have come. Here—where am [illegible] Ah-h-h, fate—were—kind!" Would he? I [illegible] and prayed not, for one such experi[illegible] is quite as much enough as is one opera[illegible] for appendicitis. The fact that Mr. Walthall was late worried me a little. Was he [illegible] his entrance? Would he be heralded [illegible] announced and presented with acclaim? [illegible] the contrary——

He entered the room quite unostentatiously [illegible] slender, brown eyed, black haired man of [illegible] height, and stood for a moment, hesitating. Just then my companion spied him and rushed to the rescue. Mr. Walthall went through with introductions pleasantly and sat down opposite me.

"I suppose," he said, "they've been telling you things about me—that I had probably wandered away and got lost? You know I did that a couple of times—not being accustomed to the city. Now, though, I think I have my sense of directions adjusted. The reason I'm late is that the thunderstorm kept me awake last night—you see, having lived in California, I haven't seen any lightning for a long time—and I couldn't miss the chance of watching it. Result—late to arise. Then on my way over I happened to think how good a cup of coffee would taste, and so——" He paused, and his sunshiny smile was the winning smile of the screen. I smiled back.

"I'm mighty glad you had it," I said. "Otherwise I'd probably be engaged in placating a bear—that is, if you're a bit like I am before my morning coffee."

"I—just—am!" my interviewee said, with emotion. "I surely—just—am!" (You see we had something in common right from the start—the rest was easy.)

To begin with I told him quite frankly that I admired his work.

"Why?" he asked, and in the same breath, "Well, you see, I like it. I'd much rather be working than doing anything else. I never take vacations—that is, not regular ones. I'm always within range of the camera, as it were."

In answer to his "why" I proceeded:

"You never seem in the least conscious that your picture's being taken. Probably you are not, but you don't seem to be. I should think it would give a person the willies to know that one's expressions and emotions were being ground out so much to foot!"

Said Mr. Walthall: "I was afraid the camera would fuss me when I first started in, but, strange as it may seem, I no sooner get into the spirit of a scene than I forget its presence, and, on the other hand, have to be watched carefully in order that I don't play over the lines. That's my great trouble, Miss [illegible]," and he looked at me with a little frown as though this were a vurr' great trouble indeed. I couldn't see it, however, and spoke with enthusiasm regarding his perfect work in "The Avenging Conscience."

"Well," he told me, "I was completely absorbed in that. After the scene where I'm captured by the detective—you remember?—I was all in—absolutely incapable of doing another bit of work for the day. Mr. Griffith himself was so affected that he had to walk away. He said he couldn't bear it. I'm fond of playing parts of the kind, but they're wearing."

Again there was the little frown and look of absorption.

[illegible] thoughtfully: "Did you ever play [illegible] of a man who goes slowly mad? I [illegible] week——" He interrupted me eagerly.

"The House with the Closed Shutters' I had a part like that. A man supposed to have been killed in the army in reality deserted, and his family kept him incarcerated for years, during which he slowly lost his mind. That was a gruesome part, but interesting. Vagaries of the mind provide marvelous and illimitable material for picture work. The desire of my life—I don't know that this is the time and place to divulge it—but the desire of my life is to put the life of Poe into pictures. He, of course, did not go mad, but his life was a strange, feverish mixture of red dreams and weird realities. Yes, I want to play Poe. A play has been written around it and is in my possession. I alone have been given the right to screen it. I hope they'll let me do it here!"

"They'll probably let you do anything you want to," I hazarded, and we both said we hoped so. Gradually, then, the conversation drifted. We discussed "The Birth of a Nation," which Mr. Walthall thinks is a great picture—but not so great as "The Avenging Conscience." He had seen the complete picture for the first time the night before. Imagine! A great many scenes, he says, have fallen under the scissors—scenes that would have had greatly to do with enlivening the production.

He said, laughing, "Opposition was expected—and to some extent courted. Publicity, you know. But in this town the wind reaped the whirlwind with a vengeance—didn't it?"

Recalling the chilled and lonely Illinois theater during the weeks of parley between mayor, censors, producers, and representatives of the various races, I agreed. Then—with frequent boosts from me—Mr. Walthall told about how he came to "go into" pictures. He doesn't like talking about himself a bit—that's a fact—and so whole heartedly evasive was he that I had to keep prodding him on pretty constantly.

He was born and spent twenty-two years on a plantation in Alabama. Then the spark that was in him struck fire and he went on the stage. Purely by accident he chanced to visit the Biograph studio one day. D. W. Griffith was directing a picture. Spotting Mr. Walthall, whom he had seen on the stage, Mr. Griffith asked him how he'd like to be screened for the summer. Having nothing else to do, the former said he didn't mind trying. So he went to work, his first picture being "The Convict's Sacrifice."

"I reckon, though, you said to yourself, 'Can it be possible I have come to this?'" I conjectured. "That's the way the 'legitimates' used to feel, you know."

He shook his head. "Far from that—I saw the possibilities from the start," he told me. "I went back to the stage for a time, but it had lost its charm. So again, in response to an invitation, I sought out Mr. Griffith—and, well—here I am—and glad to be here." His heart warming smile flashed across eyes and mouth.

"Well," I said, "I'm glad, too. We're all glad." I rose to go—hesitated. There was something, fans, I must ask him—for you. How would he take it? Bravely I took the plunge.

"Are you married, Mr. Walthall?"

"Yes, indeed," replied his remarkable man.

I stag-gag-gered backward.

"Am these two words for publication?" I gasped. And with surprise writ in every tone of his voice, Mr. Walthall rejoined:

"Why, yes. Why not?"

Well—why not?

Brooklyn, (N. Y.) Standard-Union

Date .....

JUL 13 1915

"Crooky Scrugg's" is to be given [illegible]

"BIRTH OF A NATION" AT BRIGHTON MUSIC HALL

D. W. Griffith's historical drama, "The Birth of a Nation," founded on Thomas Dixon's story, "The Clansman," continues to draw large and enthusiastic audiences to the Brighton Beach Music Hall. The place was crowded yesterday afternoon and last evening, and the spectacular moving picture show was thoroughly enjoyed. Some of the most interesting incidents of the Civil War, as well as preceding it and the period of reconstruction in the South, are illustrated, including the assassination of President Lincoln and the uprising of the Ku-Klux to put down the reign of terrorism by the colored people. One of the delightful features of the entertainment is the programme of war melodies played by [illegible] orchestra.

COEUR D'ALENE (Ida.) PRESS
JULY 12, 1915

[illegible]

Mail N. Y. July 13

FILMS AND FILM FOLK

IN

BY WID

I saw "The Birth of a Nation" for the fourth time Saturday night and thoroughly enjoyed it. I hope every one in this country sees it within the next year. It will do wonderful things toward giving the film industry added prestige. I want to register an objection to one new addition to the great film, however, that being the tagging on at the end of some views of the Hampton Institute, a negro industrial school, with many titles explaining the progress of the negroes in this country.

These added scenes are, of course, detached views and have nothing to do with the tremendous drama which has just been so artistically and logically unfolded, and they come as a decided shock, tending to make the entire picture seem to be more of a treatise on the race problem, which feeling should not be given at the very end.

Surely the views as shown will have no effect in altering any one's opinions in race matters, and they are a direct slap artistically. Personally, as I said at the first showing of the great production, I think the film should end with the scene of the two lovers on the cliffs beside the sea, with all of the allegorical scenes which follow entirely eliminated.

I believe a canvass of expressions from audiences would confirm such a change. Most every one I have talked to about the film since the opening has agreed with me on that point. And surely the negro school scenes should come out.

Just to prove that even the greatest of directors need plenty of assistance in checking up details and watching the many players in big productions to be sure everything is right, it might be mentioned that in "The Birth of a Nation," in the big scene of the parade of the clansmen, a young man in very modern costume is to be seen in the foreground leading a horse on which one of the girls is riding.

I did not notice this little detail until the second time I saw the film, and probably not one in a hundred will get it, but one of a group with me Saturday night for the first look at the great production picked out that boy without any suggestion that any one was looking for errors.

There are a few other little slips in the film, but none of them serious or really noticeable, but it all goes to prove the absolute necessity of plenty of assistance in "checking."

It is impossible for one man in ordinary work or a few in big scenes to keep every detail correct. The difficulty of never being able to offer excuses to the public, however, makes it absolutely essential that in films the detail must be right.

Telegraph July 13, 1915

Mitchell Goes Ahead.

Theodore Mitchell, who has been responsible for most of the publicity issued upon "The Birth of a Nation," started yesterday for Atlantic City, where the Griffith film will be shown at the Nixon Theatre. Nobody knows just how long he will be away, but even his own office staff hopes it will be several weeks, at least.

N. Y. Sun July 13.

D. W. Griffith's film "The Birth of a Nation," at the Liberty Theatre, keeps on breaking all records of the season for a continuous motion picture production.

Press. N.Y. July 13

Despite approaching its 300th showing in the Liberty Theatre, "The Birth of a Nation" continues to attract two capacity audiences daily, including Sundays.

N. Y. Times July 13

"The Birth of a Nation," a moving picture record of the development of African slavery, is shown in the Liberty Theatre. It is one of the most elaborate pictures yet produced.

BROOKLYN, (N. Y.) EAGLE
JUL 13 1915

Music Hall.

"Birth of a Nation."

The stupendous photo-play, "The Birth of a Nation," continues to pack the Brighton Beach Music Hall as it swings into its second week of popularity, under the management of William H. Kemble.

Realism is the keynote to which "The Birth of a Nation" owes its success; and to obtain that realism Griffiths, who directs the taking of the film, spent $500,000, used thousands of men and women, hundreds of horses, and properties in so large a scale that the spectator's breath is fairly taken away.

The audience at the Brighton Beach Music Hall last night was not viewing a motion picture—the hands of the clock had been pushed back fifty years or so and the Civil War with its causes, its horrors and its results was reacted before their very eyes. Those who sought to repress their cheers or tears by telling themselves that after all, it was just a picture and the people were just actors and actresses, had extreme difficulty in stifling imaginations.

The film is an historical drama in two acts founded on Thomas Dixon's [illegible]

SAN DIEGO (Cal.) TRIBUNE
JULY 12,

"THE CLANSMAN"

Although many cities are clamoring for bookings on "The Clansman," the management of the Empress has retained this great production for the fourth and final week, beginning with today's matinee. At the request of some of the leading educational bodies of the city the policy of a daily matinee will be continued all this week to give the children an opportunity to witness "The Clansman" during the daylight hours.

In addition to the educational value which the film possesses there are many other reasons why all real Americans should witness it. The love story of the picture is all that is sweet and charming. The humanities of the southern life as pictured are just as it was "before the war." The knitting together of north and south by the bonds of love after the awful period of war and bloodshed is over—all are exquisitely portrayed by the master hand that guided the making of the picture.

Call-Post
July 14th 1915

"IN THE TRENCHES" SCENE FROM "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" LIBERTY THEATRE

...n, (N. Y.) Standard-Union

JUL 14 1915

...rth of a Nation" at the ...Beach Music Hall is ... big thing in the ...

...RK DRAMATIC MIRROR

JUL 14 1915

"BIRTH OF A NATION."

D. W. Griffith's wonderful spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Liberty Theatre is the sensation of the theatrical year in Scranton. Since its great success it has been presented in other sections of the country, and in every quarter has created a profound impression. It shows 18,000 men and 2,000 horses in the most stirring series of action that was ever devised for stage presentation. What is actually reproduced and every important phase of history when it was in the making passes before the spectator.

...LANSMAN" SEEN 360 TIMES

...the close of this week Griffith's ...rth of a Nation," based on "The ...n," will register its three hun... ...erformance at the Liberty Theater, ...h a second production being shown ...ton Beach, the record for Greater ...k performances will soon outstrip ...rical marks.

...DIEGO (Cal.) UN...
JUNE 27, 1915

BERKLEY (Cal.) GAZETTE

JUN 20 1915

Empress

"In the great photo-play, "The Clansman," which was the initial presentation at the Empress Theatre last week, D. W. Griffith, the producer, comes pretty near working a miracle. It seems impossible that any combination of human genius, tact and perseverance could have crowded the story of a great nation into the narrow space of a single drama. And yet this is just what Griffith has done, and done with a completeness and perfection that is astounding.

In this wonderful photoplay the birth, growth and cremation of this King of Nations, this giant of the powers of the earth—a pygmy compared to whom the Roman Caesars but as pigmies, actually is seen. As if by the waving of some magician's wand the great scenes are, one after another, unrolled. The hot controversy over slavery, the crimination and recrimination flying back and forth between the North and South like sheet lightning until it culminates in the storm; the great struggle between the two ... which after ... blood and struggle, ends with the surrender of Lee to Grant at Appomatox—all these are shown.

Then as all seems to be going well, we see the great president—best, noblest, kindest of men—shot down by the mad-man South, and then the deluge. All the horrors of the next ten years now known to history as the "Reconstruction Period" are made to live before us by Griffith and be shown in a few minutes of thrilling, gripping photo-play, such a carnival of misgovernment and high crime as the world has not seen since the days of the Terror during the French revolution. And then there comes flashing a vision of the "back stroke" of the downcast Anglo-Saxon, disarmed, disfranchised, the slave of slaves, bayonets bristling over him and all open, organized resistance impossible, he organizes in secret his terrible "Ku Klux Klan" and goes forth to clear his Southland of those who would wipe out its terrible civilization.

To create this wonderful spectacle, Griffith employed the services of 18,000 people and 2000 horses. Miles of film were used to catch every detail. Cities were built, and scenes of historical interest were reproduced in every particular.

The play will be continued at the Empress all this week.

"THE CLANSMAN" RETURNS SOON TO MACDONOUGH

"The Birth of a Nation," or "The Clansman," as it is more generally known, is coming back to the Macdonough theater for a brief special engagement. This photo-drama, created in the United States, is founded on the Thomas Dixon play, "The Clansman." It was produced under the personal direction of D. W. Griffith at a cost of ... and the work occupied eight months. It is running in New York, Chicago and Boston to overflowing houses, with prices as high as $2. At the Macdonough popular prices will be charged.

"The Birth of a Nation" deals more broadly on its historical side with the life of the American nation than does the Dixon book on which it is based. It presents a problem which is still unsolved in the south, the problem of race consciousness, and it also conveys to the mind the ravages of war it is to the end that war may be abhorred and universal peace promoted. The history of the south during the reconstruction period, immediately following the Civil War, showing the organization of the Ku Klux Klan, presents one of the most interesting periods in the entire history of the United States, and this is vividly pictured.

CLIPPING FROM Post
Seattle Mail
7-7-15

From "The Birth of a Nation," at Clemmer

FF

Henry Walthall.

As Col. Ben Cameron, U. S. A., who is the leading romantic figure in this ... historic motion picture drama at the ...

OMAHA (Neb.) BEE
JUNE 25, 1915

And yet how short a time ago the moving picture was considered a cheap pastime for individuals easily amused with photographic pantomime, horseplay, and melodramatically depicted shilling shockers! It was the creditable production of "Quo Vadis?" four years ago, followed last year by D'Annunzio's cinematographic masterpiece, "Cabiria," and this year by "The Birth of a Nation," that advanced the moving pictures ... they hold today.

So great and wonderful has been the growth of the moving-picture business that it had been said: "Anything is good enough for the 'movies.'" Old stock actors and directors and men called from the mechanical departments of the moving-picture companies took up the task of writing for the moving-picture camera. Old plays, long played out, and old melodramas, long laughed at, were ground over for the film by the hundreds.

In fact, until very recently the writing of photoplays all over the world was in the hands of underpaid incompetents, called to the work by the demand for pictures—any kind of pictures. Here, then, was evolved that important functionary of cinematography—the director. Some of these men, notably David Griffith, Thomas Ince, Mack Sennett, Frank Powell, Lloyd Carleton, Howell Hansel, Colin Campbell, George Baker, Edwin Porter, and others, developed into masters of visualization.

JULY 12, 1915
SEATTLE (Wash.) POST-INTEL.

BIRTH OF A NATION WILL BE ...

The Clansman ... will witness the ... director Griffith ... a story of the ... "Reconstruction" period ... The Clansman ... utmost enthusiasm ... still rouses ... tic drama ... and the people ... pers the ... individual ... story and ... character of ... of war. ... home the awful ... which Manager ... is ...

This play will ... be ... to the hundreds ... this week.

Lake Forest Cal
7-12-15

"The Birth of a Nation" ... "The Clansman," the spectacle ... based on Thos. Dixon's well known novel, will start on its ... tenth big week at ... Theatre with a matinee this afternoon ... performances ... the matinee ...

BUFFALO (N. Y.)

MACDONOUGH

CLIPPING FROM Times
Oakland Cal
7-20-15

TURN TO MACDONOUGH

Next Griffith Production

D. W. Griffith, the master producer, has just decided upon his next multiple-reel feature to follow "The Birth of a Nation." Its title is to be "The Mother and the Law." He is now at the Griffith headquarters, the Reliance-Majestic studios in Hollywood, Los Angeles, California. He is in the midst of preparations for the filming of "The Mother and the Law."

The plot and the theme other than as indicated in the title have not been announced, but will be made known at the proper time. Mr. Griffith has, however, selected his cast. Prominent among the Griffith players who are to appear before the camera in "The Mother and the Law" are Mae Marsh, the Griffith actress who will be remembered as Florence Cameron in "The Birth of a Nation"; Robert Harron, who has appeared in the Griffith features, "The Battle of the Sexes," "Judith of Bethula," "The Escape," "The Avenged Conscience" and "Home Sweet Home"; Miriam Cooper, who has a prominent role in "The Birth of a Nation"; Mary Alden, remembered for the performance of the mulatto in "The Birth of a Nation," and as the mother in "The Battle of the Sexes"; Ralph Lewis, the "Stoneman" in "The Birth of a Nation," and Walter Long, the "Gus" in "The Birth of a Nation."

Mr. Griffith is determined that "The Mother and the Law" shall maintain the same high standing of "The Birth of a Nation," which is playing to two-dollar prices in some of the principal cities of the country.

On Wednesday last D. W. Griffith's great spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," passed its two hundredth performance at the Liberty theater in New York City, setting a record for the first $2 motion picture production which will likely stand for a long time. Special arrangements have been made to continue the run through the summer season and advance reservations for the next eight weeks can now be arranged.

Hayes Weekly Mail

There have been, of course, some splendid moving pictures. Cabiria was a magnificent spectacle. It was pictorially greater than anything attempted in the spoken drama. It was well acted. The Birth of a Nation is done upon a scale that would be utterly impossible with canvas, paint, and dialogue. Those wonderful battle-scenes and rides of the Ku-Klux clan could not even have been approximated on the largest stage, or in any enclosure. But even The Birth of a Nation is advertised by lithographs of the shooting of Lincoln. On the bill-boards we may see Booth jumping from the Presidential box in Ford's theatre, Washington.

The most enthusiastic admirer of the movies today cannot maintain that the pictures, often admirable and well acted as they are, tend to prepare audiences that will arise and demand a higher standard for our stage. The theatre is vital and will find its own salvation from commercialism. It does not need the movies, but the movies might have done better than ape some of the worst features of the stage.

SEATTLE (Wash.) POST-INTEL
JULY 12, 1915

"BIRTH OF A NATION" CATCHES THE [illegible]

Many red fezes were seen in the Clemmer yesterday during the run of the "Birth of the Nation" films. Several visitors who had seen the presentation of the picture in the East declared that so far as music and supplementary features went Mr. Clemmer had surpassed the others. They praised Oliver Wallace for his organ playing and his conducting of the supplementary orchestra. The ushers in costumes of the civil war period excited comment. It is quite evident that Manager Clemmer will be talked of in connection with this production all over the country. What it was possible to add to Griffith's superb picture he has done.

JULY
MILWAUKEE (Wis.)

Events of Interest at the Playhouses

AT THE DAVIDSON

Top, left to right—Slavery wiped out by the abolitionists; on the firing line; an impressive peace gathering; shrouded Ku Klux Klansmen on a night ride; rebels defending a position.

BROOKLYN, (N. Y.) TIMES
Date 1915

NEWS OF THE THEATRES

ALTHOUGH D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" pictures the most thrilling and notable events of the Civil war period, including the surrender of Lee to Grant and the last stand of the Confederates in a magnificent battle scene, the spectacle, which cost a half a million dollars to produce, was designed as a peace argument, and a lesson against war.

That the happiness of a peaceful nation may be contrasted with the devastating effects of war, contented family life in the South and the North is shown, along with the famous march to the sea by Gen. Sherman. [illegible] homes, since the picturesque Colonial homes of the South are [illegible] shot and fire as a war necessity.

[illegible] is pictured, with the [illegible]

SAN FRANCISCO (Cal.) CALL & POST
JULY 10, 1915

Some Reality of The Reel

Lillian Gish in "The Clansman"

Perhaps no better illustration can be [illegible] showing the time, care and expense taken to [illegible] ject realism into the big motion picture [illegible] in citing some of the incidents in connection with the production of "The Birth of a Nation," or "The Clansman," D. W. Griffith's spectacular production in twelve reels, which will start on its thirteenth week in San Francisco at the Alcazar Theater Monday.

The newspaper flashed on the screen from Charleston, S. C., carrying the news of President Lincoln's assassination is the original issue. It cost Director Griffith $150 to secure this newspaper. This was secured by inserting a [illegible] ad in the daily papers. An old woman in Santa Monica was found who had a hobby for collecting old newspapers. She answered the ad and loaned Mr. Griffith the newspaper for [illegible]

The news of the assassination was placed on page 3 and the story told in a trifle more than one column of newspaper space. The [illegible] page was devoted entirely to a social affair in Charleston. If a story of this magnitude happens during these days of modern journalism pages of newspaper space would be devoted to it. Extra editions would be rushed on the streets and the newsboys would reap a harvest.

It would have been a comparatively simple matter to print up a fake newspaper [illegible] President Lincoln's death, but this would have been easily detected by the old timers.

The scene showing the House of Representatives in session at Columbia, S. C. during the reconstruction days in the South is an exact replica of the original. Mr. Griffith ascertained that the legislative chambers now used in Charleston were the same as were utilized following the civil war.

A telegram was sent to a daily newspaper in Charleston to have a photographer take pictures of the interior of the House of Representatives. These were secured, the photographs enlarged and the scene built exact in size and detail as the original setting.

SAN FRANCISCO (Cal.) CALL & POST
JULY 10, 1915

Alcazar

[illegible]

MOTION PICTURE WORLD (N. Y. City)

JUL 17 1915

"BIRTH OF A NATION" FOR LONDON.

om E. Davies, who is one of the largest motion picture in London, has reached America on a special mission ake D. W. Griffith's great spectacle "The Birth of a ion" back to England. Mr. Davies saw the picture for first time Monday night and is enthusiastic about it for glish and foreign consumption. He predicts that it will re than duplicate its vogue in America when it reaches other side. The present plan of Mr. Davies is to produce picture in London at either the Alhambra or one of more modern theaters there equally as well known. Following its establishment in the British metropolis other oductions will be organized for a tour of the provinces multaneous with the run in London. In this move it is d that Mr. Davies will have the encouragement of the ritish military authorities who are keen for the great pectacle because of its tremendous appeal to national pride d patriotism. While it will not be used in any sense as a ropaganda the Englishmen who have seen the pictures say will be extremely useful at this time in stirring up sentiment that will encourage enlistments in the cause.

CLIPPING FROM JUL 17 1915

MOTION PICTURE WORLD (N. Y. City)

Arrangements have been made for a run of "The Birth of a Nation" in Milwaukee, where its exhibition is awaited with eager anticipation and curiosity. Tremendous crowds still throng the Illinois, in this city, twice daily.

JUL 17 1915

NEW YORK (N. Y.) CLIPPER

D. W. GRIFFITH'S spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," will register its three hundredth c[illegible] with the performance at the Liberty Theatre no[illegible]rd for A second production is also being presented [illegible]an was Brighton Beach Music Hall, so the rec[illegible]ing in this Greater New York is piling up [illegible] ever known before for a theatrical off[illegible] section. The massive film conception of the dramatic forces in the most stirring parts of American history is so comprehensive in its appeal that it continues to be the most talked of attraction in New York town.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS (N.

JUL 17 1915

SHERMAN WANTS RIGHTS TO 15 STATES FOR "NATION"

The Elliott and Sherman Film company, Minneapolis, Minn. recently purchased rights on "The Birth of a Nation" for Wisconsin, and had the opening at the Davison theatre, Milwaukee, on July 3 The subject is booked there for two months.

The prices will be twenty-five cents to a dollar and a half evenings, and twenty-five cents to one dollar for matinees. H. A. Sherman was in Los Angeles during the past week negotiating with D. W. Griffith for rights for fifteen other states. Up to this time the outcome of this negotiation has not been announced.

ATLANTIC CITY (N. J.) PRESS
JULY 13, 1915

BIRTH OF NATION COMING TO CITY

Griffith Spectacle Has Been Secured for Two Performances July 18th

Samuel F. Nixon has finally succeeded in completing arrangements for bringing the biggest attraction of the year to Atlantic City. Announcement to this effect was made last night when Mr. Nixon gave out the details for the commencement of an indefinite run of D. W. Griffith's film spectacle 'The Birth of a Nation," at the Nixon Theatre on Sunday night, July 18.

"The Birth of a Nation" is now in its fifth month at the Liberty Theatre, New York, where it has been running to an unbroken record of crowded houses and is easily the sensation of the theatrical season in the metropolis.

The production is the largest thing ever presented in a theatre of the world. Griffith employed 18,000 people and 3,000 horses in his mammoth undertaking. He was eight months making the stupendous production and it cost in the neighborhood of $500,000. He has succeeded in creating an epic which it is claimed sets a new standard for a highly developed form of expression, the like of which had never been dreamed of.

The story is American in every detail and is of vital importance in these days. It begins with the advent of African slaves into the colonies and progresses up to the establishment of the new south showing in graphic form the relationship of the slavery question to the most momentous developments of American history. The south before the war is pictured in its economic safety. Then comes the election of Lincoln and the declaration of war between the North and South. The great battles of those terrible four years are shown and includes Sherman's march to se sea and Lee's last stand at Petersburg, Va., and extending to Appomattox, where Grant and Lee made terms of peace, which was the first move towards welding the divided sections into the greater nation. Lincoln's assassination in Ford's theatre, at Washington, is also revealed in historic detail. The final half of the picture shows the South in the early days of the carpet-bagger government and the rise of the Ku Klux Klan to cope with some of the abuses which developed in the days of the reconstruction period. In all this there is tense drama revealed and the most stirring and thrilling series of episodes that have ever been upon a stage. It is all carried forward to allegorical flights and reveals the birth of the enlarged nation, one and indivisable ith the coming of that sure peace hich follos clearer understandanding.

This vast theme has been handled by the master dramatist. Its basic ideas are the fundamentals of true drama and it has a grip and touch which sets it apart from all other achievements.

Mr. Nixon is to be congratulated upon his enterprise in securing this wonderful offering for the summer season in Atlantic City. It is bound to be one of the greatest attractions of the year and will more than duplicate its enormous success elsewhere. It will be given exactly as presented in New York in every detail with an orchestra of 40 playing the wonderful score which has been synchronized to the action of the film drama. The engagement will include two performances daily a matinee in the afternoon and a night [illegible]

CABLE ADDRESS CLIPBURO
CLIPPING FROM [illegible]
Date [illegible]

engaged to do a number of motion picture comedies.

Mae Marsh Makes a Speech.

Mae Marsh, who is playing one of the principal characters in "The Birth of a Nation" at the Clemmer, was given a welcome in San Francisco the other day that was not on the bills. The little star, accompanied by her mother, visited San Francisco, taking in the exposition and other sights. On one of the afternoons they dropped into a moving picture house, where a Majestic photoplay in which she was featured was being projected.

The audience was quick to recognize the distinguished little photoplay star, and gave her a noisy welcome. After the applause Miss Marsh stepped on the stage and delivered an interesting speech. As she left the playhouse, the manager presented her with a beautiful bouquet of orchids.

When Miss Marsh stepped on the stage it was the first time she had ever appeared behind the footlights in [illegible]

CLIPPING FROM [illegible]
Date [illegible]

"The Birth of a Nation," in which 15,000 people took part, produced by D. W. Griffith, is still breaking records at the Liberty theater in New York city. It has had a run of five months in New York, and with the exception of the year's biggest musical comedy hit, the receipts at the Liberty have exceeded those of any other attraction in New York.

OAKLAND (Cal.) TRIBUNE
JULY 4, 1915

MACDONOUGH

D. W. Griffith's wonderful motion picture production, "The Birth of a Nation," or "The Clansman," will come to the Macdonough theater in a few weeks. None of the most powerful of the spoken dramas, have aroused as much enthusiasm as is accorded this motion picture.

Almost three hours are required to show "The Clansman," yet the audiences that will pack the theater twice a day at the afternoon and evening exhibitions sits almost spellbound as it sees some of the greatest events in American history unfolded on the motion picture screen, blended with touches of romance and comedy that appeal to young and old alike.

Among the features in "The Clansman" are Lincoln's call for volunteers, the siege before Gettysburg, the bombardment and burning of Atlanta, Sherman's historical march to the sea, Lee's surrender to Grant, Lincoln's assassination, the rise in power of Thaddeus Stevens and the organization of the famous Ku Klux Klan.

"Ben Hur" just as big and awe inspiring as ever is on its way to Macdonough theater, with its company of a hundred

67

SAN FRANCISCO (Cal.) EXAMINER
JULY 11, 1915

"THE Birth of a Nation," or "The Clansman," D. W. Griffith's spectacle of five reels, will start in its thirteenth week at the Alcazar, with a matinee to-morrow afternoon.

While the production is based on Thos. Dixon's well-known novel it deals more broadly on its historical side than does either the play or book.

More than $500,000 was expended in the production of "The Birth of a Nation" and eight months were required to stage it. More than 18,000 persons and 3,000 horses are used. Among the features of the spectacle are President Lincoln's call for volunteers, the siege before Petersburg, the bombardment and burning of Atlanta, Sherman's historical march to the sea, Lee's surrender to Grant, the assassination of President Lincoln, rise in power of Thaddeus Stevens, the talented commoner, the motives, organization and raids of the famous Ku Klux Klan, and the reconstruction period of the South.

CLIPPING FROM Museum
Milwaukee Wis
Date [illegible]

DAVIDSON.

"The Birth of a Nation," the current attraction at the Davidson, is proving one of the most stupendous attractions of the kind ever offered in this city. There are scenes that are most unusual, both in historic detail and in the stupendous manner of their production.

More than 18,000 people and 3,000 horses were employed in filming this offering. The action ranges from the prologue, showing the coming of the first slaves to America, to the ante-bellum days, the election of Lincoln, the declaration of war, the siege of Petersburg, the fall of Vicksburg, the flight from Atlanta, the surrender of Lee at Appomatox and the assassination of Lincoln in Ford's theater, Washington.

Many of the scenes were taken from the top of a sixty-foot tower, and cover an area of five miles, shown by the camera with the aid of the telephoto lens. Such actors as Henry Walthall, Lillian Gish, Mae Marsh, Spottiswoode Aitken, Wallace Reed, Ralph Lewis, and others well known to the photoplay world are included in the leading roles. The battle scenes were reproduced in the vicinity of the actual battles, and many of the [illegible] night by [illegible]

MILWAUKEE (Wis.) LEADER
JULY 11, 1915

THE MOVIES

DAVIDSON.

Patronage in the Davidson of "The Birth of a Nation," the stirring motion picture drama of Civil war days, is said to have exceeded all previous records on pictorial productions, indicating that the interest taken in the pictures in Milwaukee is as keen as in other large cities.

After a week of continuous presentations, twice daily, it is announced that reservations are being made several weeks in advance.

Favorable criticism of the picture has been expressed by numerous theater-goers and word has gone forth to the lovers of music that the orchestration of 40 instruments is alone equal to an operatic performance. Not a word is spoken, but the emotion awakened by the fascinating pictures and the inspiring music is so intense that a spectator is held spellbound. The spirit of every scene, light, serious or tragic, is portrayed by the pictures, with simultaneous interpretation by the large orchestra.

In the motion picture industry, which encompasses everything within the range of vision, it is conceded that "The Birth of a Nation" is the most masterly achievement yet made.

Romance, history and spectacle are blended in the great play consisting of 12 reels of film in the course of which home life, sessions of congress, the organization of armies, infantry, cavalry and artillery battles, mob scenes and riots are depicted. The slave problem is visualized and the civil war is pictured with historical accuracy.

A do[illegible] romance of young men and wom[illegible] of the north and south is unfolded [illegible] the sorrow and complications [illegible]enced, a spectator is impressed [illegible] the personal loss which is th[illegible]itable result of war.

BUTTE (Mont.) MINER
JULY 11, 1915

"Birth of a Nation" In Great Demand

State rights for "The Birth of a Nation" are bringing big sums of money.

The rights of 14 states were offered for $75,000 this week. The states are Minnesota, Iowa, South Dakota, North Dakota, Arizona, New Mexico, Colorado, Utah, Wyoming, Idaho, Nebraska, Kansas, Montana and Nevada. In this territory there are 865 playing points, with 938 theaters and a population of 10,983,103.

WASHINGTON (D. C.) TIMES
JULY 11, 1915

"The Birth of a Nation," first shown privately in Washington, which created a furore upon its appearance in Boston, now is drawing packed houses there and promises to remain many more weeks.

SEATTLE (Wash.) POST-INTEL.
JULY 17, 1915

THREE PERFORMANCES A DAY OF "BIRTH OF A NATION"

The unusual interest in "The Birth of a Nation," which will close its third week at the Clemmer tonight, and which has had an unprecedented patronage so far, has made it necessary to give morning performances of the Griffith historic tragedy. Another special performance will be given at 10:15 o'clock this morning. For the past two days the attendance has tried the capacity of the theater. Local interest in the show does not seem to lag, and with the additional attendance of the visiting Shriners the theater is packed. Nothing in the history of motion picture exhibition in the city has equaled Manager Clemmer's showing of this [illegible] either for additional features in music, decoration of the house or costumed attendants. Prices have been no bar to the continued success of the venture, perhaps because the attendance is even at the schedule just one-half of that of other cities.

Theatre Managers Bid Lively for Film

"The Birth of a Nation" Has Reached Pacific Northwest and Will Probably Be Shown Here.

"The Birth of a Nation" has reach the Pacific northwest and as a res there is a lively bidding among s eral local managers for the film, w the amounts involved running fro $2000 to $3750 a week. In Seattle t management of the Clemmer theat paid $15,000 for the film for eig weeks, to be divided between t Sound City and Spokane.

The film is the greatest probletic yet made by W. D. Griffith, calle "the Belasco of the screen." It founded on Thomas Hixon's "The Clansman," and in practically eve city where it has been shown it aroused strong race sentiment. [illegible] film has just completed a [illegible] week in Los Angeles.

BUFFALO (N.Y.) TIMES
JULY 15 1915

PHOTOGRAPH OF CAREER.

Reinhard Lauded for Organization of Music Hall Orchestra.

[illegible] the organization of the orchestra he is now leading at the Brighton Beach Music Hall where D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" is playing, Louis Reinhard has achieved the greatest triumph of his twenty-five years' experience as a musician.

LOUIS REINHARD.

Reinhard has come to be known as the "Brooklyn leader." That is the title conferred on him by the profession. His success in organizing the Brighton Beach Music Hall Orchestra has caused considerable comment in musical circles where he has been highly commended. The orchestra is one of the best ever heard in a Brooklyn playhouse.

Reinhard celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of his conductorship early this year while he was leading the orchestra in B. F. Keith's Orpheum Theatre. He showed a strong leaning toward music in his early youth and studied the violin and several other instruments under two masters. At the age of 17 years he was the leader of the orchestra in the People's Theatre in Milwaukee, a leading playhouse of the Middle West.

Several years later Reinhard received a flattering offer from a Duluth producer, and accepted. After a three-year stay there he returned to Milwaukee as the leader of the orchestra in Jacob Litt's Bijou Theatre, where he remained for seven years. He then entered the service of Percy Williams and then that of the B. F. Keith interests.

When William H. Kemble, manager of the Brighton Beach Music Hall, who has had considerable experience in the theatrical world, decided to have an orchestra for that amusement place, he immediately communicated with Reinhard and commissioned him to organize one.

MILWAUKEE (Wis.) LEADER
JULY 11, 1915

MILWAUKEE (Wis.) SENTINEL
JULY 17, 1915 602

[illegible] American Railway association for ap-

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" ESTABLISHES NEW RECORD

On Sunday the Davidson theater inaugurates the third week of the Griffith photospectacle, "The Birth of a Nation." The engagement has been prolonged, and seats are selling for any performance for the remainder of its stay in this city. Capacity audiences are witnessing the offering, and indications point to a record in the film world of Wisconsin.

SCENES IN "BIRTH OF NATION," GREAT FILM AT THE DAVIDSON

Top Section—Slaves before the war. On the firing line. Center—A peace gathering—Ku Klux Klans men and the dress of a fighting position.

SEATTLE (Wash.) TIMES
JULY 9, 1915

Evening Mail
June 17, 1915

very touch is evil.

"Birth of a Nation"—Clemmer.

There is every indication that "The Birth of a Nation," now playing at The Clemmer will break all picture records, not only for length of engagement but also in attendance. So great has been the demand to see this marvelous achievement of D. W. Griffith, founded on Thomas Dixon's well known story, "The Clansman," that Manager Clemmer has decided to hold "The Birth of a Nation" over for another week. So insistent were the "Birth of a Nation" at Liberty Theatre

"The Birth of a Nation" has entered upon the twentieth week of its run at the Liberty Theatre, where this spectacle continues the most talked of show in town. The great scenes of the South before the war, the stirring battles of the civil conflict and the thrilling dramas of reconstruction days are all covered in the most exciting manner yet on any American stage. Judging by all the signs of the engagement, "The Birth of a Nation" will remain at the Liberty for a record run.

[illegible] to the sea by Gen. Sherman. [illegible] Colonial homes of the South are [illegible] as a war necessity.

[illegible] scene is pictured, with the [illegible]

PROVIDENCE (R. I.) EVE. TRIBUNE 728
AUG. 14, 1915

Will Decide on Photo Play This Evening

"The Birth of a Nation," David W. Griffith's photoplay, was shown again this afternoon to the Police Commission and representatives of colored organizations interested in the efforts to prevent the picture in this city. By a unanimous [illegible] vote of the two [illegible] film is which the colored people have [illegible] [illegible] without [illegible]

[illegible] 1915

[illegible] the sale of the [illegible] weather [illegible] popularity of the theatre is kept at an even temperature by special mechanical arrangements which do not mar the presentation of the wonderful film story, in any degree. This massive pictorial representation of stirring incidents in American history remains the most potent offering of the season in town. In addition to the run at the Liberty, Mr. Griffith has installed a second production at the Brighton Beach Music Hall, where visitors to the seaside resorts in the Coney Island territory can see the picture without hurrying uptown and abandoning the cool ocean breezes. This is the first time that a theatrical presentation of this importance has been booked for two summer runs in greater New York.

[illegible] MAIL 5-1

LOVING

NO "NATION" STATES RIGHTS.

There will be no state's rights sold for D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation." At least not just yet. Last week a former advance agent in behalf of a party of men made the Griffith concern a flat offer of $25,000 for the "Nation" rights for one state. The offer was declined.

Over in the general offices of the Griffith film J. J. McCarthy, general manager, is getting ready to shoot out a raft of road outfits playing the picture.

The [illegible]

ATLANTIC CITY (N. J.) REVIEW
JULY 14, 1915

BIG ORCHESTRA FOR SPECTACLE

"Birth of a Nation" At Nixon Sun. Requires Tremendous Effects

The advance guard of D. W. Griffith's technical forces arrived here yesterday to begin early preparations for the engagement of the great spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation" at the Nixon Theatre starting next Sunday night.

At the same time these experts are making the mechanical changes in the theatre necessary for this big production. Mr. Nixon has a special force at work redecorating the house and putting the interior in the finest possible order.

In Mr. Griffith's forces are Frederick Arandel who is assembling the orchestra of forty men who play the operatic score which accompanies every scene of the several thousand in this mammoth narrative. Cecil E. Wood who looks after the installation of al lthe electrical appliances for the production has a corps of men at work putting everything into the Nixon and in addition is readjusting the arrangements of the entire auditorium to bring it within the requirements of the latest scientific methods of focal range to make the projection as near perfect as Mr. Griffith desires in the presentation of his great work.

James Dolliver the general stage manager of the Griffith enterprise, is here engaging the men who will work behind the scenes and supply the human note in many of the thrilling scenes. Though these forces are never seen in the production there are nearly a hundred men back stage who handle the effects and supply the details which are entrusted to this part of the work. With the stage manager is Mrs. Ryan, the wardrobe mistress who passes upon the young ladies who are seen in the front of the house. These girls are all dressed in the bewitching crinolines and hoop skirts that were the correct dress of 1860 during the period of the major part of the big story. This detail lends a delightful atmosphere to the production before the first scene of the drama is flashed upon the screen. These dresses are made for the girls after they have been selected. There were hundreds of applicants for these positions yesterday and the management was able to secure several of the prettiest girls of Atlantic City.

From now on the Nixon will present an air of unusual activity as all these preparations are carried on without any interference with the vaudeville bills now finishing out the season there.

The tickets for the advance sale have also arrived and will be placed on sale tomorrow for the first week of the engagement. As these were the only ones ordered after the opening date was determined upon in New York the sale for the remainder of the engagement will open the following week when seats can be secured four weeks in advance.

PHILADELPHIA (Pa.) TELEGRAPH

MASTER PICTURE [illegible]

D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" for Atlantic City. Griffith's master production, "The Birth of a Nation," which [illegible] places, will [illegible] Atlantic City [illegible] an engagement at the Nixon Theatre, Atlantic City, [illegible] it is expected to have [illegible] shore resort.

"The Birth of a Nation" [illegible] its prologues as the [illegible] Dollar" motion picture [illegible] its sixth month of a [illegible] house.

Mr. Griffith was [illegible] the picture. He employed [illegible] 3,000 horses to get the [illegible] The total cost of the production is said to have been approximately [illegible] story ranges over a vast [illegible] can development, but in [illegible] is represented in the [illegible] years covered by the story [illegible] to and including the Civil [illegible] relationship of the North [illegible] these "[illegible]" [illegible] basic things of the epic [illegible] this Thomas Dixon's "The [illegible] was taken as a base.

There is a blending of [illegible] romance, showing the old [illegible] war and the meeting of the [illegible] the Northern and Southern [illegible] whose fortunes furnish the [illegible] est and individual appeal [illegible] essential to true drama. The master producer has [illegible] conflicts of the war, [illegible] March to the Sea and the [illegible] of Grant and Lee at Petersburg, last great battle and then the [illegible] rangements at Appomattox, [illegible] atre in Washington and the [illegible] of President Lincoln. The [illegible] followed by a representation of [illegible] under the Carpetbagger and [illegible] tion periods, with the rise of the Klan to bring about the [illegible] and the South.

July 17

Birth of a Nation" has ... twentieth week of its ... ty where this spectacle contin... talked of show in town. The ... of the South before the war, ... stirring battles of the civil conflict ... thrilling drama of the reconstruction ... are well covered in the most ... manner that has yet been revealed ... American stage.

CABLE ADDRESS CLIPSURG

CLIPPING FROM Inter Seattle Mash

7-7-15

GRIFFITH'S INSPIRATION FOR "AVENGING CONSCIENCE"

The psychology of conscience, that mysterious judge in the seat of human being, has a strange and decidedly unique demonstration on the "Avenging Conscience," now being shown at the Melbourne theater.

It is said that D. W. Griffith, producer of "Avenging Conscience" and "The Birth of a Nation," received inspira[redacted] some of which [redacted] the great six-reel masterpiece, "Avenging Conscience," while crossing a field to direct a scene in "The Birth of a Nation." Mr. Griffith perceived a wonderfully large spider web hanging from the lower boughs of a Californian monarch and one of the biggest black spiders he had ever seen executing an enormous horsefly. He watched the murder of the fly curiously, and, happening to glance at the bottom of the tree, perceived a [redacted] ants swarming over and doing to death a greenish hued bug. Mr. Griffith, a lover of the works of Edgar Allan Poe, was reminded of Poe's masterpiece, "The Tell-Tale Heart," and then and there sketched in his mind's eye what has proven to be the most mysterious, masterful and sensational motion drama, the "Avenging Conscience." Griffith has absorbed the spirit of Edgar Allan Poe and reflected it in this production.

Poe's remarkable genius, his rejection of customary forms, his crystalline imagery, his gloom, his grandeur, his abrupt transitions from scenes of exquisite beauty to those of ghastly horror, all the spell that transports us from the baseless fabric of a delicious dream to common and hideous reality, the marvels of his power of contrast, dwelling one moment in a heaven of ideals and another in a hell of mental torture, are reproduced with marvelous fidelity on the screen. Delighting you with its flashes of exquisite beauty at one moment, the very essence of spiritual charm, it moves you at another to pity and then to horror. Mr. Griffith has accomplished photographic feats in the "Avenging Conscience" never before attempted.

White House Gives Recognition to Educational Value of Photo Drama

Tammany Time

Even the White House has gone on record in recognizing the spirited influence and educational value of the photo drama, as was attested by the wonderful spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," to which New Yorkers are giving such generous support and such cordial approval.

It is interesting to observe that the historic White House with its wealth of memories and of associations so dear to the real American should have been made the theatre for this remarkable and educational photoplay which has gripped public attention with such permanence and such vigor.

The lessons taught by this production of Mr. D. W. Griffith, based, as is well known, upon Thomas Dixon's novel, "The Clansman," have been reviewed so many times in the secular and religious press that it is hardly necessary to go into a complete description of the historical film drama at this time. Suffice it to say that one hundred years of American history are covered by Dixon's story, and thanks to the magic touch of the "movie" the making of this century of history can be seen from the comfortable vantage point of a cushioned theatre chair. There are many remarkable pictorial effects in this photo drama, among them faithful reproductions of Sherman's march to the sea, the burning of Atlanta, Ga., and the night raiding of the Ku-Klux-Klan, but none is more vigorous or more lavish in detail than the pictorization of the battle at Petersburg, which formed one of the closing chapters in the history of the Civil War.

Of the skill back of this artistic work in directing the movements of 12,000 men over twelve square miles of Civil War battle-ground columns could be written, likewise of the following so closely of the historical records in preparing for the battle pictures. For four months professors of history in several universities conducted extensive research to obtain the correct data and West Point engineers mapped out the battlefield in accordance with the official war records. The Ordnance Department of the United States Army furnished the rifles and artillery, the cannon used having seen service in the Civil War.

Under the supervision of army engineers a large force of men dug the trenches and prepared the breastworks. Roads were built for the artillery, mortar pits were provided for the heavier ordnance, and masked batteries, just as in the battle a half century ago, were placed behind the hills five miles distant from the center of the battlefield. To make the chance of injury to the actors as slight as possible special shells and projectiles were used which gave the pictorial effect of the missiles used in real war but were harmless.

Mr. Griffith divided his army into sixteen battalions with a sub-director who reported direct to him at the head of each. A camera was detailed to each batal[illegible]n, which had been carefully [illegible]earsed and Griffith and his camera [illegible] overlooked all from the point of view afforded by the sixty-foot tower.

The details are worth chronicling showing as they do the faithfulness and the enterprise of Mr. Griffith in his ambitions to show the millions vividly how the men under General Grant and General Lee fought at Petersburg, Va., fifty years ago.

The White House did well in giving space to the presentation of this wonderful chain of pictures which are doing such a useful and constructive educational work and with such fidelity.

CLIPPING FROM NEW YORK JOURNAL

Date .....

"Birth of a Nation" Three Hundred Times

With the turning of next week, D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," will register its three hundredth consecutive performance at the Liberty Theatre. A second production is also being presented at the Brighton Beach Music Hall, so the record for Greater New York is piling up faster than was ever known before for a theatrical offering in this section. The massive film conception of the dramatic forces in the most stirring parts of American history is so comprehensive in its appeal that it continues to be the most-talked-of attraction in town.

Globe + Commercial July 17, 1915

"The Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty Theatre is certainly demonstrating itself to be a spectacle that summer months cannot wither so far as drawing powers are concerned. The fact that thousands of persons leave the city in summer and yet there are just as many strap-hangers in the subway has been called a mystery, but how about the line that gathers at every performance before the Liberty Theatre box office? From the nature of things one must suppose that there will some time again be found a "movie" worth $2 a seat to behold, but the truth still remains that none but Mr. Griffith seems to have discovered one.

Journal of Commerce July 17, 1915

"The Birth of a Nation" will enter the twentieth week of its run at the Liberty Theatre, with its drawing power still undiminished. The great scenes of the South before the war, the stirring battles and the episodes of the reconstruction period have lost none of their attractions for the audiences.

N. Y. Sun July 17, 1915

LIBERTY.—With the turning of this week D. W. Griffith's spectacle "The Birth of a Nation," registered its 300th consecutive performance at this theatre. A second production is also being presented at the Brighton Beach Music Hall, so the record for Greater New York is piling up faster than was ever known before for a theatrical offering in this section. The massive film conception of the dramatic forces in the most stirring parts of American history is so comprehensive in its appeal that it continues to be one of the most talked of attractions in town.

Telegraph July 18

"The Birth of a Nation" has entered upon the twentieth week of its run at the Liberty Theatre, where this wonderful spectacle continues the most talked-of show in town. The great scenes of the South before the war, the stirring battles of the civil conflict and the thrilling drama of the reconstruction days are all covered in the most exciting manner that has yet been revealed upon an American stage. Judging by all the signs of the engagement, "The Birth of a Nation" will remain at the Liberty for the record run in the history of that theatre.

Tribune July 18

"The Birth of a Nation" has entered upon the twentieth week of its run at the Liberty Theatre, where this wonderful spectacle continues the most talked of show in town. The great scenes of the South before the war, the stirring battles of the civil conflict and the thrilling drama of the reconstruction days are well covered in the most exciting manner that has yet been revealed upon an American stage. Judging by all the signs of the engagement, "The Birth of a Nation" will remain at the Liberty for the record run in the history of that theatre.

American July 18.

"The Birth of a Nation" has entered upon the twentieth week of its run at the Liberty Theatre, where this wonderful spectacle continues the most talked of show in town. The great scenes of the South before the war, the stirring battles of the Civil conflict and the thrilling drama of the reconstruction days are all covered in the most exciting manner that has yet been revealed upon an American stage. Judging by all the signs of the engagement, "The Birth of a Nation" will remain at the Liberty for the record run in the history of that theatre.

Times July 18

LIBERTY.—"The Birth of a Nation," a motion picture abounding in thrilling scenes and illustrating the high development to which the art of the cinema has been carried.

ATLANTIC CITY (N. J.) REVIEW JULY 14, 1915

Philadelphia, (Pa.) Public Ledger

Date ..... JUL 17 1915

Five pounds apprentice allowance claimed.

"BIRTH OF A NATION" GOES TO ATLANTIC CITY THEATRE

New York's First $2 Photoplay to Startle the Vacationists.

The first movie that New York ever saw at $2 prices is going to be in Atlantic City next week.

Samuel F. Nixon, managing director of the New Nixon Theatre, Atlantic City, announces an unusual engagement for that popular playhouse by the sea beginning tomorrow (Sunday) night, when D. W. Griffith will present his great spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," for a summer run, with daily matinee and eight performances, including Sundays.

The manner of producing this masterpiece is something an new in the development of the theatre that there are no comparative standards by which it can be judged. Griffith was eight months producing his marvelous narrative in a form of expression that is startling realistic and intensely dramatic. He employed 18,000 men and 800 horses to get the desired effects. The total cost of the production is approximately [illegible] This [illegible] ranges over hundreds of [illegible] American development [illegible]

JULY 17, 1915

SAN FRANCISCO [illegible] BULLETIN

AT THE ALCAZAR

D. W. GRIFFITH'S film production, "The Birth of a Nation," or "The Clansman," in twelve reels, will start on its fourteenth week at The Alcazar Theater Monday. Two exhibitions are given daily, a matinee at 2 o'clock and the evening exhibition at 8:15.

"The Birth of a Nation" represents the acme of art and realism in motion pictures. In viewing the production the audience actually sees the shelling, the storming and the destruction of Atlanta. It sees with vividness what no one, not even the participants, ever saw before, a great battle being waged at dead of night.

An actual vision is given of the contending hosts of Lee and Grant in the death grips of all the sordid machinery of war. Army officers prepared the plans for and helped direct the battle scenes, according to the exact tactics and strategy in the real events. There is not a single anachronism in the whole production.

SEATTLE (WASH) TIMES
JULY 3, 1915

"BIRTH OF A NATION"—CLEMMER

"The Birth of a Nation," the meeting of Generals Grant and Lee in "The Birth of a Nation," now showing at The Clemmer. The photoplay is from Dixon's novel, "The Clansman," and was produced by D. W. Griffith. There are two [illegible] daily.

MILWAUKEE (WIS) JOURNAL
JULY 11, 1915

AT THE DAVIDSON

In The Birth of a Nation now running at the Davidson, proclaimed the greatest motion picture play ever produced, the role of President Abraham Lincoln is played by Joseph Henabery, who made a thorough study of the life of the martyred president to make the character distinctive and natural.

One of the pictures shows the president in the act of signing his famous proclamation, granting freedom to the negro slaves of the South. Secretary of State Seward and other statesman are seen in the background. The assassination of Lincoln by John Wilkes Booth, the actor, in Ford's theater in Washington is a scene of tragic interest. The role of Booth is assumed by Raoul Walsh. Histories were studied and eye witnesses of the assassination were questioned so that the scene could be staged accurately. Other members of the cast who impersonate men of history are Donald Crisp, cast as Gen. U. S. Grant, and Howard Gaye, who impersonates Gen Robert E. Lee. The principal women in the cast are Miriam Cooper and Mae Marsh, cast as the Cameron sisters, Josephine Crowell who plays the part of Mrs. Cameron, Lillian Gish in the role of Elsie Stoneman, a belle of the North who becomes an army nurse, and Mary Alden in the character of the mulatto housekeeper of Austin Stoneman, leader of the house of representatives.

The first pictures are views of life in the North and South prior to the Civil war. Slaves are seen at work in cotton fields and in households and from the scenes one gains an impression of conditions at that time and of the sentiment which caused the South to secede from the Union. Young folk of the Stoneman family of the North and of the Cameron family of the South figure in two romances which are shattered by the war, culminating in matrimony after peace is declared.

Battle scenes are depicted, showing infantry, cavalry troops and artillery forces in action. Soldiers are seen fighting in trenches and behind breastworks and in open clashes at the point of bayonets. Gen. Sherman's famous march to the sea is visualized, also the battle of Gettsburg, the sieges of Atlanta and Petersburg and the surrender of Gen. Lee to Gen. Grant at Appomatox, ending the long war.

How Freedom was accepted by the negroes and the corruption wrought by lawless colored forces and unscrupulous whites from the North are revealed in views of the time of reconstruction in the South, where the wrongs of the innocent were righted by the powerful band of masked night-riders known as the Ku Klux Klan.

Miriam Cooper, Davidson.

ATLANTIC CITY (N. J.) REVIEW
JULY 17, 1915

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" NIXON

Wonderful Spectacle Will Begin Season's Run Sunday Night

With every arrangement complete for it next brilliant offering the Nixon Theater to-morrow night will begin its mid-summer season under the most favorable circumstances. D. W. Griffith's great spectacle "The Birth of a Nation," will be seen there. Months have been taken to see that nothing is lacking to enhance the merits of this marvelous work of art and a representative audience will be on hand to greet the opening, which is scheduled for 8.30 P. M. Sunday night. On this there will be two performances daily, of matinees at 2.30 daily and evenings at 8.30.

It would seem that everybody knows more or less about "The Birth of a Nation." This is the great photoplay which has set a new standard in the theaters of the country. After presentations in New York [illegible] the sensation of the year, it has run nearly six months and is still the most talked of play on Broadway. The business has been simply phenomenal and this success has been duplicated in Chicago, Boston, San Francisco and other important cities. When foreign managers were content to admire this achievements in single remarks, Griffith operates in thousands. Instead of the usual great company of 30 people he employed 18,000 men and women to get his human effects. Where formerly once thrilled you with his single charge across a wooded stage of apparently scenic splendor Griffith shows you the wildest riders in the world dashing for miles over country roads for which an entire county had to be commandeered for his setting. Almighty nature painted the background. The most artist can only hope to give a faint glimpse of an imitation in the photo forms that once proved satisfactory. All the excitement there is in the essential human note holding you spellbound to the developing narrative. Tears and smiles mingle and music hits the nease as only those old melodies with the modern treatment of the same theme can work one's emotions.

The Atlantic City engagement bids fair to be the most sensationally successful of all. The Nixon Theater is ideal for the perfect projection of the great photoplay and the heights of the scene will be "The Birth of a Nation" one of the big attractions of the season along the famous Boardwalk.

MILWAUKEE (WIS) WISCONSIN
JULY 12

Famous Scotch Actors in "Birth of a Nation"

Two unusual actors in "The Birth of a Nation" at the Davidson are Spottiswoode Aiken and Josephine Bonaparte Crowell, the two who play Dr. and Mrs. Cameron. The couple is Scotch, and both attained distinction on the London stage before coming to this country. Aiken worked with Griffith in the old Biograph days, and is considered one of the best character actors in the film world. Seats for this offering are now selling four weeks in advance. The film is in twelve reels and is accompanied

Detroit News
July 16 1915

Eventually to call your attention to the advertising of the Brighton Beach Music Hall. On nearly all the element railway stations in Brooklyn are one sheet posters advertising D. W. Griffith's "Birth of a Nation." Across the top of these posters are pasted "snipes" bearing the words "Brighton Beach Music Hall—Now Playing." The first time one [illegible] saw one was on Saturday, June the 26th. I went down to the Music Hall and paid my admission, never doubting but that I would see the picture as advertised. The picture was not shown, the writer [illegible] and the entertainment. At the box office I asked "What's the idea of advertising 'The Birth of a Nation' for to-night?" The ticket seller [illegible] explained that the advertising had been put up in good faith and that they intended to have the film on exhibition there that night, but that Mr. Griffith was not satisfied with the orchestra rehearsals and postponed the event until the following Friday. With this I had to be satisfied, but I waited the advertising to see if the error in the announcement would be corrected by the ample expedient of covering the "snipes" with bills bearing a true statement of the facts. But no! The bills remain the same. The first public exhibition of the picture is announced for Saturday (July 3rd). This means that for two weeks the public believe the actual presentation of the picture the public [illegible] is "Now Playing." CHARLES KINGSLEY.

Mr. Kingsley's letter was promptly transmitted to the management of the Brighton Beach Music Hall and the following explanation was received:

I regret exceedingly that there is anyone who has not sufficient confidence in the management of the Brighton Beach Music Hall to know that [illegible] is a matter of fact instructions [illegible] the poster company to post the paper as soon as they [illegible] understand by the printers that the paper would be [illegible] Thursday, July 1st, therefore as this [illegible] matter sooner than we anticipated and the bill [illegible] posted the advertising matter as [illegible] paper could not be re-posted, [illegible] amount of detail in opening a production of this nature. The fact however has been verified in every [illegible] posting has been put out, and we [illegible] at the Music Hall and have in[illegible] tickets for [illegible] public performance would be [illegible] upon us, and this [illegible] of this detail, but I assure [illegible] V. H. KRAUSS, Manager.

Unfortunately the newspaper did not let Mr. Kingsley failed to [illegible] the management and inform him that he was [illegible] "The Birth of a Nation." As for the failure to [illegible] the use of these numerous stickers whereby the [illegible] author. The good intent of the management appears to [illegible] in the publication of the announcement in the papers, which [illegible] the misrepresentation of which Mr. Kingsley [illegible] outside. This seems quite [illegible] Mr. Kingsley's [illegible] at the box office.

MILWAUKEE (WIS) SENTINEL
JULY 12, 1915

562 passed the 400,000 mark

Throng at Theater to See "Birth of a Nation"

By Sentinel Staff Photographer.

Capacity audiences are attending "The Birth of a Nation," now in its second week at the Davidson.

The offering has broken all records for photoplays in this city, first in playing at $1.50 prices, and secondly in offering an extended engagement of four weeks. Herman Kelbe's orchestra, with its rendition of synchronized music, is a big feature of the production. There are twelve reels in the photodrama, in Griffith's best style, and historic incident and exciting scenes follow in quick succession.

The assassination of Lincoln is most striking of the many tableaux. Joseph Henaberry, who plays Lincoln, has received an offer from a prominent eastern painter to pose the martyred president for a canvas upon which he now is at work.

Seattle, Wash.
June 11, 1915

ALCAZAR

"The Birth of a Nation" or as the production is better known in this community, "The Clansman," will be the attraction for one week at the Alcazar this afternoon. The symbol [illegible] for this massive [illegible] of D. Griffith's, for there is [illegible] of any showing of pub[illegible] in the opening scenes, the [illegible] and the [illegible] which have made [illegible] famous among all [illegible]

GRIFFITH PRODUCTION CONTINUES AT CLEMMER

Some wonderful music is being played at The Clemmer, accompanying Griffith's half million dollar masterpiece, "The Birth of a Nation." Twelve of Seattle's [illegible] musicians are offering for the first time in the Northwest, a score written especially for a motion picture, [illegible] symphony orchestra [illegible] for the massive [illegible] equal to [illegible] and each [illegible]

TTANOOGA (Tenn.)
JULY 14, 1915

Mae Marsh

he Marsh, the "little sister" of "The sman," is an all-round heroine.
summer at Long Beach this season [illegible] Sunday. No one w her identity until long after, and n only by chance was it learned.
he is also an everyday heroine.
ere is a big family of little Marshes d the major part of the popular girl's salary goes to educate these young ks. Miss Marsh spends her nights tting the touches onto her own edu-tion.

Empress

There are in Atlanta today hundreds of people who believe that the Ku Klux Klan was a band of marauding murderers who spread terror to the hearts of every community through which their mysterious journeyings were taken. Thomas Dixon in his book and David Griffith in his picture, "The Clansman," have shown us that these men were banded together to save the white people from the consequences of the growing negro power, and that they broke the backbone of the movement to place the negro for all time on an equality with the white man, a position for which he has never been fitted.

The South owes its very life today to the Ku Klux Klan, and the book and picture are today reorganizing the ideas of the many who have heretofore failed to understand the significance of the work these men did—shedding their blood in many instances for the principals ingrained in the breast of every Southerner, and it might be said of every American—that there is an uncrossable gulf between the black and white races which no power on earth can ever bridge.

"The Clansman," the book, the play, the picture—have all three played a part in the purifying of the nation and have raised the art of pictures—often belittled—to the pinnacle of greatness.

The fourth week of "The Clansman" opens with tomorrow's matinee and two shows will be presented each day until next Sunday night.

SAN DIEGO (Cal.) UNION
JULY 11, 1915

Mae Marsh
in "The Clansman"
—EMPRESS—

BROOKLYN, (N. Y.) TIMES
Date .....
JUL 17 1915

ATLANTIC CITY (N. J.) PRESS
JULY 14, 1915

BIRTH OF A NATION AT THE NIXON SUN.

Big Film Spectacle Here for First Two Performances

Next to the ocean the Nixon Theatre was about the busiest thing in Atlantic City yesterday. These unusual activities were started by the advance guard of technical experts who arrived to get everything under way for the first presentation here on Sunday night of D. W. Griffith's mammoth spectacle "The Borth of a Nation." There is no detail too small to attract Griffith's attention and the correct handling of his production is one of the things he is most insistent upon. Frederick Arundel has charge of the music and is assembling the orchestra of 40 men who will play the score which accompanies each of the several thousand scenes of the spectacle. Cecil Wood, the electrical expert, will have a corps of men working night and day from now on finishing up the adjustment of all the expert appliances which are vital to the proper projection of the story. The auditorium will be rearranged to suit the latest scientific requirements for the proper focal adaptability of the great film play to the theatre. This attention insures a projection which is as near perfect as con be made.

At the same time James Dolliver the general stage manager of the Griffith enterprises and Mrs. Ryan, the wardrobe mistress, are rounding up nearly a hundred men and girls who are to have part in the narrative. Mose of these people are used back stage in the effects which are so important a part of the entire performance. The girls will be seen in the front of the house dressed in the old fashioned hoop skirts and crinolines of the period of 1860, during which time the greater part of the play takes place. This is an atmospheic touch which lends to the performance. The dresses have to be mad to order. A dozen of Atlantic City's prettiest girls were engaged yesterday and Mrs. Ryan and her seamstresses will start in today to fit them out with the charming costumes which were the pride of their grandmothers in the days of the war.

Not to be behind in this lavish display Mr. Nixon has a force of interior decorators at work renovating and redecorating the theatre so that it will be spick and span for the great engagement.

The seat sale for the first week opens tomorrow morning at the regular box office. In a few days the tickets for the indefinite run will be placed on sale four weeks in advance in anticipation of the mid-summer rush.

MILWAUKEE (Wis.) LEADER
JULY 14, 1915

HISTORIC EVENTS ARE PICTURED IN THIS PLAY

War is a dismal, wasteful business, as one learns by seeing "The Birth of a Nation," the motion picture drama which visualizes the civil war, now attracting large crowds in the Davidson.

The play is notable for the romance and the history it depicts, the scenes including thrilling battle scenes, cavalry dashes and sieges.

One of the tragic spectacles is the assassination of President Abraham Lincoln, [illegible]

Tribune Oakland Cal. July 11, 1915

MAE MARSH AGAIN WILL STUDY HERSELF

Mae Marsh, diminutive actress of the movies, is coming to Oakland again to study herself. When the "Clansman" films open at the Macdonough the little star will return, to visit an aunt here—and take in her act every day.

"I get more ideas from watching myself," she declares, "than I would from watching Bernhardt. Every mistake I ever made stands out so glaringly that I have no trouble at all in locating it."

Miss Marsh spent a week in Oakland last time the film played, taking in her "Bulls," as she calls them—and now will try it for another week. She declares that the only way to succeed is to study one's own mistakes.

The film will play at the Macdonough for an extended engagement, and is noted as one of the most remarkable offerings on the American stage today. It will be given in full at the Macdonough production, all the thrilling battle scenes and other remarkable features to be included.

SAN DIEGO (Cal.) TRIBUNE
JULY 14, 1915

With the Photo Players

"THE CLANSMAN"

Interested crowds continue to fill the Empress theatre at each performance of "The Clansman" and this attraction will be held all of the present week. It makes a profound impression on all who witness it. The death of President Lincoln, which brings the first part of the twelve-reel production to a close, shows some extraordinary pictures of the interior of Ford's opera house in Washington at the moment of the assassination, the movements of the actors on the stage, and of the throng comprising the audience, suggesting nothing but the great tragedy itself, with never a blur of artificiality anywhere in the picture.

The spectacle has won popularity because of its thrilling war scenes and the following exciting raids of the Ku-Klux-Klan.

"The Clansman" marks a new epoch. Never before has such a whirlwind combination of story, spectacle and tense drama been unrolled before the eyes of the local public. This film play is a big step forward in the art of motion-picture production and should be seen to be fully appreciated.

MILWAUKEE (Wis.) SENTINEL
JULY 14, 1915

VIRGINIANS FIRST TO SEE THE "BIRTH OF A NATION"

Large crowds are being attracted to the Davidson to witness performances of "The Birth of a Nation," reputed to be the finest motion picture drama ever produced. The first spectators who witnessed the production, were the country folk of Virginia, who abandoned work to watch operations when the wonderful pictures were taken. The 18,000 actors who figure in the army battle scenes were encamped for months in the picturesque hills of Virginia, and when they posed in the realistic battle scenes and shrouded themselves as members of the avenging Ku Klux Klan in the days of reconstruction in the south, large crowds of amazed countrymen stood on the side lines. Before the battle was fought an underground system of telephone wires was laid so that the director could impart instructions to all parts of the battle front, five miles long. The play is attracting visitors from many Wisconsin cities.

[illegible] POST

"Clansman" Opens Thirteenth Week

"The Birth of a Nation," or "The Clansman," the mighty spectacle in twelve reels based on Thomas Dixon's well known novel and produced by D. W. Griffith, started on its thirteenth big week at the Alcazar Theater with a matinee this afternoon.

Nothing like "The Birth of a Nation" has ever been shown at the Alcazar. The picture cost more than $500,000 to produce and more than 25,000 persons and 3000 horses are seen in the film. It required eight months to stage the production.

ATLANTIC CITY (N. J.) REVIEW
JULY 17, 1915

MIRIAM COOPER, IN THE "BIRTH OF A NATION," AT THE NIXON THEATER, COMMENCING SUNDAY NIGHT FOR A SUMMER RUN

FROM PHIA, (PA.) RECORD

BIRTH OF A NATION

Famous Drama Splendidly Staged to Be Put on at Atlantic City.

Samuel F. Nixon, managing director of the New Nixon Theatre, Atlantic City, announces an extraordinary attraction for this playhouse by the sea in D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which will begin its summer engagement at the New Nixon this Sunday evening, continuing with daily matinee and night performances, including Sundays. This is the production which is now turning into its sixth month at the Liberty Theatre, New York, where it has been the sensation of the current season. It is the largest undertaking ever revealed upon a stage and shows 18,000 men and 3000 horses in startling scenes. Mr. Griffith was eight months making the production, at a cost of $500,000.

The story is taken in part from Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," but has been enlarged upon that theme to cover the relationship of the slavery question to American history. Early episodes show the arrival of the first African slaves into the colonies. Then is pictured the South before the war and the first signs of dissension in the development of the abolition movement. The election of President Lincoln and the departure of South Carolina from the Union necessitates the first call for volunteers, and the war is on. The great battles are shown over an area of 12 square miles. The climax of the war is reached in the scenes revealing Sherman's March to the Sea and the last meeting of Grant and Lee before Petersburg. War in its actual sweep is shown, and ends at Appomattox with the surrender of the Southern forces. With the South going about the work of rehabilitation this movement is arrested by the assassination of President Lincoln. The famous old Ford's Theatre in Washington on the night of April 14, 1865, when President Lincoln's great career ended, is given in historical detail. The final half of the picture reverts again to the South under the reign of the Carpetbaggers and the terrors of the reconstruction period. Here springs into existence the Ku Klux Klan, originally formed to put down the lawless element and restore peace and prosperity to the South. There are wonderful rides of daring horsemen and thrilling rescues. The finale progresses to an allegory showing the welding of the divided sections and the establishment of permanent peace and happiness. In building up this narrative Mr. Griffith has maintained the suspense so vital to drama and has never lost sight of the fundamentals in the way of heart interest and human attributes. His central characters are members of Northern and Southern families whose relationships developing into a romance keep alive the human interest in the story along the proper constructive lines. Everything connected with the production is upon the large scale of its original purpose.

MILWAUKEE (Wis.) JOURNAL
JULY [illegible] 1915

USHERS IN THE BIRTH OF A NATION ARE CLAD IN COSTUMES OF CIVIL WAR TIMES

So that the play may have proper atmosphere, the Davidson theater, during the production of Birth of a Nation, has six ushers in costumes of Civil war times. One is dressed as a Confederate, another as a Union officer. Four girls, their hair in curls, wear the ruffled skirts of the '60s.

This is the first time in the history of moving pictures that ushers have been dressed in costumes of the period in which the play takes places.

CLIPPING FROM Courier News
Fargo N.D.
Date 7-18-15

LITTLE SISTER TURNS LAUGH ON BIG SISTER

Upper, Marguerita Marsh; lower Mae Marsh.

Los Angeles, Cal., July 17.—Marguerite Loveridge has gone back to her own name—Marguerite Marsh!

So we have the Marsh girls who bid fair to give the Gish girls a lively run for their popularity with the film fans. Everyone who attends movin. picture has become a friend of Mae Marsh and her older sister, Marguerite.

Not so many seasons ago, Marguerite Loveridge, then, was playing leads with the old Griffith company in the Biograph studios. Her little sister, Mae, since far-famed for her splendid role in "The Clansman," "The Outcast," and [illegible] of other dramatic parts, came hopping into the studio, wistful-eyed and straggly-haired, wondering at the grandeur of her big sister in make-up and costume.

"I'd like to act too," she told the big sister with eager voice and tiptoe expectation.

"Nonsense," said Marguerite, "run home and play with your dollies. You mustn't act. You're not big enough, child."

But D. W. Griffith happened to see the quaint little figure sitting on a "prop." He immediately told big sister Marguerite to bring her along next day; that he had a little part for Mae to play.

To the unspeakable delight of the child and the astonishment of her sister, Mae was hired, first and "bits," and then for "regulars." She worked incessantly. She climbed slowly but surely. Then came a chance for her to play big acting roles. She had had no theatrical experience, but she surprised everyone by her ability and insight into the characters she portrayed.

Now producers predict that Mae is a "comer" in the dramatic world.

CINCINNATI (Ohio) COM. TRIBUNE 183
JULY 18, 1915

[illegible] through train from Mexico City reached Vera Cruz today.

Perfects "Birth of Nation" Appeal.

Final papers of the appeal granted the city in its prosecution [illegible] promoters of the "Birth of a Nation" motion picture were signed before Judge William Fenimore Cooper in the Superior court yesterday. Assistant Corporation Counsel Louis B. Anderson and George L. Baker announced that they would urge the Appellate court to [illegible] at an emergency session.

MILWAUKEE (Wis.) JOURNAL
JULY 18, 1915

THE BIRTH OF A NATION.

The Birth of a Nation, the great moving picture story of the Civil war and the Reconstruction period, has been condemned by men prominent in educational and sociological circles as reviving old woes better forgotten, as appealing to white prejudice against the colored race and on the contrary as a prejudiced indictment of white treatment of the negro. In many cities a serious attempt has been made to prohibit its exhibition. Had this been done, every thoughtful man who sees the pictures, would, we believe, have been deprived of an experience that he would not willingly miss.

The answer to the objections against The Birth of a Nation lies, we believe, first, in the fact that this film play presents more really and powerfully than any volume of history can do a vital chapter in the life of the nation. These things actually happened, happened within the lives of many now living, and there is little ground for believing that scene or incident has been exaggerated. The friendships broken by civil war, the tender, truthful picture of the great Lincoln, and many other scenes of story give the picture interest for everyone.

Even so, the reproduction of tragedy might not be justified were it not that we find here not alone the conflict of belief between the North and the South, but the conditions of life and upbringing that produced that conflict and the frightful consequences that it led to ere it was settled and slavery wiped out.

And we have nowhere seen a more appealing argument against war. For not alone the dead and wounded on the battlefield nor the tears of mothers and sisters were the price of war, but the horror and tragedy of the days of Reconstruction. Once more we are reminded that the hate and vindictiveness aroused by war are not ended when the original object is attained, but endure to wreck and darken the future for coming generations. [illegible] there any reason to believe that any of the [illegible] of the Civil war and the days of Reconstruction are absent from any great war.

[illegible] more romantic than any [illegible] fiction, a lesson in history more vivid than any writer has penned, a brief against war more convincing than any pacifist has published. In the minds of the millions who will see it it must remain one of the most moving and, we believe, most fruitful of their experiences.

SEATTLE (Wash.) POST-INTEL
JULY 18, 1915

every character [illegible] real. It will be the attraction at the Clemmer [illegible] further notice.

LAST WEEK OF THE "BIRTH OF A NATION."

The remarkable run of "The Birth of a Nation," which opens its fourth week at the Clemmer today, will close next Saturday night. For three weeks this stirring and patriotic picture has has drawn unprecedented houses. But itis quite certain that only a small percentage of the people of Seattle and vicinity have seen the picture, although some have seen it several times.

"Griffith's masterpiece" this picture is called, and so it is. Nothing like it has been shown on the screen anywhere in the world. We are safe in saying this because we have seen "Cabiria." D'Annunzio's supreme effort, the biggest thing before "The Birth of a Nation," and it does not begin to compare in intensity or dramatic construction with Griffith's story. Both deal with war, and "Cabiria" has some scenes impossible to an American play. But the Italian's story lacks directness. It is not knitted together with anything like the art nor does it progress with that direct force and inevitable power of destiny that is the distinguishing dramatic feature of "The Birth of a Nation."

D'Annunzio's story is more poetical; Griffith's is more tragic. D'Annunzio has resorted to mythology; Griffith stays in the realm of the real. D'Annunzio's heroes do prodigious deeds of valor; Griffith's heroes are just human beings, the more tragic for their extreme simplicity.

The making of this picture was a tremendous undertaking. The success of it is vital, for it will be of inestimable value to future generations. Nothing in printed history can have the same importance to coming generations as this photodrama. Besides, it is the most thrilling dramatic entertainment imaginable.

Milwaukee Wis
7-18-15

Scenes and Characters in "Birth of a Nation"

Marion Cooper.

At Siege of Petersburg.

Lillian Gish.

Howard Gaye as Gen. Lee.
Donald Crisp as Gen. Grant.

CABLE ADDRESS: CLIPBURO
CLIPPING FROM Sentinel
Milwaukee Wis
7-18

JULY 18, 1915
ATLANTA (Ga.) JOURNAL

KU KLUX KLAN TALE HAS MANY THRILLS

Defenders of Southern Women in Carpet Bag Days, Engage in Daring Rescues.

WALTHALL AT THE STRAND

Chaplin at Butterfly in "Laughing Gas"—Majestic Offers Two Interesting Photo Dramas.

On Sunday the Davidson theater enters upon the third week of its engagement of "The Birth of a Nation," David Wark Griffith's tremendous photospectacle, which has broken all motion picture records for the state of Wisconsin. The engagement has been prolonged indefinitely.

"The Birth of a Nation" is interesting in more ways than one. The presentation by Griffith of the southern view of the work of the Kuklux Klan during the bitter days of reconstruction in itself offers a study for the follower of American history. Griffith is a Virginian. Thomas Dixon, on whose "The Clansman" and "The Leopard's Spots" the play is based, is of southern birth. Both were sons of southern fighters, and both learned first hand of the trials and troubles that met the work of the Freedman's bureau, and the administration of Johnson and Thaddeus Stevens. This has been thrillingly introduced in the scenes where the white cloaked riders are shown scurrying throughout the countryside, and rescuing women from the domination of the blacks.

But the film is more than this. It deals with the days before the war, and treats north and south with impartial justice. Lincoln, the martyr, is shown as the best friend the south possessed. His assassination is one of the thrilling incidents of the twelve reels that tell the story. The siege of Petersburg; the fall of Vicksburg; the flight from Atlanta; Sherman's march to the sea; the surrender of Lee; and the days of carpetbag rule enter into the story that makes the romance of the film.

JULY 18, 1915
ATLANTA (Ga.) JOURNAL

in front of the theater. Brilliantly lit and elaborately made, it will add much to the [illegible] Georgian.

REEL HEROINES BECOME REAL HEROINES OFTEN

Mae Marsh Once Saved Small Boy From Drowning, Other Brave Acts.

LOS ANGELES, Cal.—Has your favorite photoplayer star ever been a real hero or heroine?

Answer—"Yes."

There are scores of heroic acts done by screen favorites which the camera never records and the public never dreams of.

Reason? Because these are performed "out of the picture," and among the movie folk themselves.

All heroes will tell that it takes more real courage to do a brave deed in the quiet humdrum of everyday life than to do it to the tune of music and shouting and the surety of public applause.

Here are three stars who have done heroic deeds "off stage."

Blanche Sweet, one of the most dainty film stars, was working in a picture recently at the Lasky ranch in the Hollywood foothills near here. Another girl, writer of the play, left the actors to look for a good location. She did not return. Miss Sweet insisted on going to look for her.

About dark a rescuing party found both girls at the bottom of a gulch where the scenario writer had been thrown by her horse. Miss Sweet's lovely face and hands were torn and bleeding because of the effort she had made to reach and assist her friend.

Mae Marsh, the "little sister" of "The Clansman," is an all-round heroine. Last summer at Long Beach she saved a small boy from drowning. No one knew her identity till long after, and then only by chance was it learned.

She is also an everyday heroine. There is a big family of little Marshes and the major part of the popular girl's big salary goes to educate these young folks. Miss Marsh spends her nights putting the touches onto her own education.

Marie Walcamp of the Universal, after a big scene in a picture called "The Torrent," produced at Sanger, featuring the breaking of a dam, actually leaped her horse into the [illegible] to save Wellington Payton. She leaped him onto her horse's back and the plucky animal, after a stiff fight with the current, succeeded in swimming to safety.

JULY 18, 1915
SAN ANTONIO (TEX.) LIGHT

Griffith Works Without "Fuss"

Great Director Unruffled While Producing Great Spectacle, "Birth of a Nation."

These who have witnessed the huge motion picture spectacle of the civil war and reconstruction days, "The Birth of a Nation," are inclined to imagine the making of the films as being directed by a raving individual constantly on the verge of insanity, says the New York Sun. Such would in all probability be the mental state of almost any man who attempted to evolve order out of the chaos of thousands of untrained actors and three thousand equally unmanageable horses.

D. W. Griffith, in whose brain originated the great battle scenes pictured in "The Birth of a Nation," some of them extending over an open air stage five miles wide, is not in an asylum. He is not even ruffled in temper nor was he seriously ruffled at any stage of the eight months' work of producing the spectacle.

It has been said of Griffith that he has the faculty of doing big things without seeming at the time to be accomplishing anything. The humblest pickaninny in one of the scenes, whose sole dark mission is to supply a minute bit of local color, in all probability displayed more concern about the making of the picture than did Griffith.

While directing he appears to be thinking about almost anything but the work in hand. During a big scene he is apt to be found chatting with bystanders, indulging in light-hearted horseplay with members of the company, doing almost anything in short, but directing. But if the slightest variation is made in the picture as he has built it up in his mind his eye instantly detects the error. And then he is patient until it comes right.

It is related of the managers of the company that gave him his first big salary contract, commonly reported to be $100,000 a year, that they almost had heart failure when they saw him directing his first picture. He strolled into the studio chatted a while with the company, danced with the girls and passed jokes with the men. Unconcernedly he posed a few apparently unimportant scenes and then, to the horror of the managers, dismissed an expensive company for the day with hours of daylight still available.

Only his contract saved him from being fired on the spot. But when the picture was produced and the public began to show in box office returns, its appreciation of the symmetry of the work and the delicate little touches of which Griffith is so fond, the managers' attitude toward the new director changed. Before long they were ready to back Griffith to the extent of their ability in anything he might propose.

JULY 18, 1915
ATLANTA (Ga.) JOURNAL

MARGUERITE LOVERIDGE TAKES HER OWN NAME

LOS ANGELES, Cal.—Marguerite Loveridge has gone back to her own name—Marguerite Marsh!

So we have the Marsh girls who bid fair to give the Gish girls a lively run for their popularity with the film fans. Everyone who attends moving pictures has become a friend of Mae Marsh and her older sister, Marguerite.

Not so many months ago, Marguerite Loveridge, then, was playing leads with the old Griffith company in the Biograph studios. Her little sister, Mae, since far-famed for her splendid role in "The Clansman," "The Outcast," and a score of other dramatic parts, came hopping into the studio, wistful-eyed and straggly-haired, wondering at the grandeur of her big sister in make-up and costume. D. W. Griffith happened to see the quaint little figure sitting on a "prop." He immediately told big sister Marguerite to bring her along next day; that he had a little part for Mae to play.

To the unspeakable delight of the child and the astonishment of her sister, Mae was hired, first for "bits," and then for "regulars."

CLIPPING FROM
Date

MACDONOUGH

"The Birth of a Nation" or "The Clansman" will open at the Macdonough theater soon. This production in twelve reels was directed by D. W. Griffith, the world's foremost motion picture producer. It is an adaptation from Thomas Dixon, Jr's. popular novel of the same name, and is the costliest motion picture ever produced.

"The Clansman" deals with the Civil war period. It shows the causes that led up to this conflict and carries the spectator through the war. In "The Clansman" are shown the most marvelous battle scenes that have ever been staged. The siege before Petersburg with thousands of soldiers in action, is realistically shown in the picture. The battlefields were laid out and trenches dug under the direct supervision of seven G. A. R. army veterans, who took part in the original conflict. These veterans, two of whom were commissioned officers, examined with Mr. Griffith during the entire period that the scenes were being staged.

Artillery duels in which explosive shells are hurled by both the Northern and Southern troops, from hand mortars, are shown in motion pictures for the first time in "The Clansman." The artillery used is the same that was used during the Civil war and borrowed from the United States government for the occasion.

The explosive blank shells used in the mortars were constructed especially for these big guns by an expert fire-works manufacturer. More than 100 of these shells are used in the battle scenes. They cost thousands of dollars.

In directing the battle scenes, Mr. Griffith used field telephones, flag signals, field couriers and even a captive balloon.

Brooklyn, (N. Y.) Standard-Union
Date JUL 18 1915

BRIGHTON BEACH MUSIC HALL—bringing D. W. Griffith's [illegible] picture history of the Civil War period, [illegible] the reconstruction days following, at the Brighton Beach Music Hall, William Kemble, the manager, has added to his juvenile the popular resort. This picture, the most costly and best [illegible] about that has ever been produced, has been playing there recently, [illegible] have been at the middle, with [illegible] formance has been attended in the [illegible] of the play. That [illegible] picture as [illegible] drew about [illegible] crowds of [illegible] to the [illegible] terest.

impression of the events leading up to and following the Civil War than any history could imprint on the mind. The children show a wonderful interest in the representation of Abraham Lincoln listening to the appeals of the mother of a Confederate soldier for his intercession while he is under sentence of death. Lincoln at first refuses to grant the pardon, but when the mother weeps he relents and sets him free. The picture is based on several notable incidents of this kind in Lincoln's life. He was often remonstrated with for his goodness of heart in this respect by his Cabinet officers. Another scene which makes a fascinating appeal not only to the children but adults is the famous march of Gen. Sherman to the sea. This historic incident is pictured with great detail. [illegible] of the route he followed from [illegible] to Atlanta. It cost thousands of dollars, [illegible] were employed to add to the [illegible]

SAN DIEGO (Cal.) UNION
JULY 18, 1915

Grand Non Appearance with The Champion -Empress-

CLIPPING FROM Exponent
Date Lawrence, Kan. 7-18-15

"CLANSMAN" ... D. W. GRIFFITH ... "The Birth of a Nation," ... "The Clansman," ... will stand on its ... week at the Alcazar Theatre, ...
Popular demand ... necessary for the Alcazar Theatre to extend "The Birth of a Nation" another week.

JULY 18, 1915
LOUISVILLE (Ky.) JOURNAL

PHILA...

"The Most Beautiful Blo... Tells of Her Stage Tri...

Lillian Gish Began As Little Eva—Now a ... Star of the Screens—Devoted To Her ...

THE most beautiful blonde in the world," is the way David Griffith describes Lillian, the older of the famous Gish sisters, says the Chicago Herald. This same golden hair has been the object of deep admiration ever since Lillian, a quaint tot of 6, played Eva in "Uncle Tom's Cabin."

"Isn't it strange," said Lillian, "that Mary Pickford, Vivian Prescott and I were all initiated into the stage business in the time-worn role of little Eva?

"'I am going to join the angels, Uncle Tom. Don't weep for me,'" and Lillian did the affecting deathbed scene which for years has made so many people shed tears.

In answer to my applause Lillian said: "I have been acting ever since I was 4 years old. My schooling and Dorothy's has been largely from tutors, although I spent some months at the Ursuline convent in St. Louis. A sort of 'finish up' to my education, as it were."

* * *

Lillian Gish's appearance in filmland was made in a perfectly natural way. She came into pictures by the stage door entrance, an undisputably good training school, that has served hundreds of the most proficient photoplayers.

"I was 6," volunteered Miss Gish, "when I was asked to act in 'The Little Red Schoolhouse.' I was so pleased and did not feel in the least embarrassed. It was just a good game to me, and I entered into it heart and soul. I remember the play quite well. Don't you recall that part where the little boy says to the little girl: 'Do you like chicken?' The little girl answers, 'Yes,' and then the little boy says, 'Take a wing,' and holds out his arms and they go out? Well, that wee tot was I. That was my stage debut."

* * *

When David Griffith was in Chicago some weeks ago he spoke of Lillian Gish as having ethereal loveliness and showing a rare depth of feeling in every part in which she was cast. These words remained in my mind, and after I had seen Lillian Gish as Elsie Cameron in "The Birth of a Nation" I was fully convinced ... Griffith's compliment was not extravagant or fulsome praise.

Lillian Gish is so delicate and so pink and golden in her coloring that the word ethereal seems to fit her more nearly than any other term I have heard applied to her.

"I remember you in the old Biograph days, when you and your sister," I said, "were just starting to shine among the cinema stars. I recall especially a picture called 'Mother, Mother' something—"

* * *

"You mean 'The Mothering Heart,'" supplied Miss Gish, her face lighting up with a smile. "I am so pleased that you remember the picture, because it has always been one of my favorites. Of course, I have been in much more elaborate productions, but that simple little story has a touch of heart interest that makes it stand in a class by itself."

"It is the mother thought in the picture," I said, "that bit of sentiment that gives the picture human appeal. I saw you as the little starving mother in 'Judith of Bethulia' and in 'The Battle of the Sexes' and of course as Elsie Cameron, but I want to say that through it all that one picture has remained indelibly fixed in my mind."

Those are all Griffith pictures and naturally that places them among the masterpieces," said Miss Gish. "Do you know that I have never worked for another director?"

Like Anita Stewart, who has done all her work under the guidance of Ralph Ince, Lillian Gish says she is not quite sure she would be a success with any other producer but David Griffith.

* * *

"Mr. Griffith explains everything so carefully. He is so calm and so cool. He never loses his head and never allows anything to annoy him or us. I couldn't stand to work for a director who shouts or ... temper. It would ... ous I could not keep ... my work.

"Of course, I ... such a person as ... Griffith. Dorothy ... everything ... the motion picture ... Griffith. Mary ... to Mr. Griffith ... trial on Mary's ... course, we ... ber. We have ... ford family, ... closest friends ... Miss Gish ...

* * *

Lillian told me ... have a prominent part ... fith's new picture, "The ... Law," she said. "... very much about it ... fith always keeps the ... of his productions ... ready for the market. ... wise idea, because if ... tised and advertised ... people get tired of ...

"There is a strong ... tween you and your ... Lillian.

* * *

"Yes, I think we ... more color and I am ... she is. You see, we ... thy last year. It was ... was in an automobile ... was nearly killed. I ... had happened to her I ... most died," and Lillian's ... eyes filled with tears.

"Dorothy is the baby of ... I went into pictures ... came a little later. ... unkind enough to say ... jealous of each other. ... hear of such a thing," ... indignantly. "My ... proud of everything she ... is so interested in my ... It would be very strange ... lian's blue eyes flashed ... the unlucky one who ... tion of sisterly jealousy ... head.

* * *

The Gish girls, unlike ... young people who ... in the limelight, ... time reading. Lillian ... library and devotes a ... week's salary to ... creasing list of books ... some very rare and ... de luxe.

"It will be a great ... I said, "for you to ... able to say that you ... principal role in the ... 'The Birth of a Nation' ... had a share in giving ... nent place in ...

* * *

"I am very thankful ... fith cast me for ... months of hard work ... picture, but it has ... the long months of ... we spent in giving ... he wanted. Just ... graphed over 75,000 ... the necessary 12,000 ... that we were in ... many scenes as you ... screen. The first time ... self in this big ... nervous as a ... first appearance. ... first night, and ... folk at Los Angeles ... was like performing ... full of critics. ... but each one was ... some nice things ... a Nation,' and ... me very happy."

I have come to ... one reason that ... such a ... of her sweet ... every one. She ... this 19-year-old ... greatest photoplay ... of all of her ... only its beginning ... Nation."

JULY 18, 1915
SAN ANTONIO (TEX.) LIGHT

... writing the English ...

A recent invention is said to have ... a "third dimension" for moving pictures. According to the ... of the men who have been experimenting in the work, the moving picture screen has but two dimensions, breadth and height. These men now claim to have succeeded in producing perspective, the third dimension. A private exhibition of the new pictures was given in a New York Theater and the revelation was said to have made considerable impression upon the spectators. Glasses, with a green lens for the right eye and a red lens for the left eye, were furnished the audience, as it is said to be impossible to appreciate the pictures with the naked eye.

Thomas H. Ince, director of the New York Motion Picture Corporation, says that the supply of women players is far in excess of demand but that there is a scarcity of good camera men.

Arrangements are being made to show D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" in London next month. T. E. Davies, an English film man, is negotiating for the British rights.

CLIPPING FROM Union
Date San Diego Cal. 7-18-15

Keys ... include the program.

Empress

"Clansman" as a picture is undivided. There is no doubt of the fact that it is a great picture. If you have not yet witnessed a performance of it, talk to some friend who has.

Take the opinion expressed by Mayor Cappe, who attended the opening performance four weeks ago and who later said to a representative of the press that "The Clansman is truly the most wonderful picture ever made." Exposition President G. A. Davidson, Mrs. Stephen Connell, president of the Humane Educational League, Mrs. Cora B. Carleton, president of the Public Welfare Commission, Madam Schumann-Heink, and many other notable men and women have witnessed this film masterpiece and unanimously acclaim "The Clansman" the greatest educational and historical picture ever produced.

When the picture was first contracted for the management of the Empress Theatre limited the engagement to one week. It became evident before the week was half over that, even with a matinee every day in addition to the regular evening performance, one week would not be sufficient to take care of the many who desired to see it.

The engagement was therefore extended to the second, third and fourth weeks, and now it has been decided to retain this amazing spectacle for another and positively final week beginning with tomorrow's matinee.

"The Clansman" will not be seen in any other theatre in San Diego nor will it ever be presented locally at reduced prices.

PHILADELPHIA, (PA.) RECORD.

Date ... JUL 18 1915

"A Mother's Appeal to 'The Great Heart'"—Scene in "The Birth of Nation."

Philadelphia, (Pa.) North American

Date ... JUL 18 1915

'The Birth of a Nation' at Belmide

"The Birth of a Nation," the magnificent motion-picture play of D. W. Griffith, will be given at the New Nixon Theater, Atlantic City, this evening, and continue with daily and matinee performances indefinitely. This piece, which is founded on Thomas Dixon's novel, "The Clansman," is now beginning its sixth month at the Liberty Theater, New York.

BROOKLYN, (N. Y.) CITIZEN

Date ... JUL 18 1915

A WONDERFUL SPECTACLE

"The Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty Theatre.

"The Birth of a Nation" has entered upon the twentieth week of its run at the Liberty Theatre where this wonderful spectacle continues the most talked of show in town. The great scenes of the South before the war, the stirring battles of the civil conflict and the thrilling drama of the reconstruction days are all covered in the most exciting manner that has yet been revealed upon an American stage. Judging by all the signs of the engagement "The Birth of a Nation" will remain at the Liberty for the ...

HAND TO HAND BATTLE IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION," AT BRIGHTON BEACH MUSIC HALL.

PHILADELPHIA, (PA.) PRESS
JUL 18 1915

IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION," NEW NIXON, ATLANTIC CITY

N.Y. Telegram July 18, 1915

GITZEL, PHOTO

MAE MARSH in THE BIRTH OF A NATION
LIBERTY THEATRE

"The Birth of a Nation" has entered upon the twentieth week of its run at the Liberty Theatre, and, judging by all the signs of the engagement, it will remain at the Liberty for the record run in the history of that theatre.

adelphia, (Pa.) Public Ledger
JUL 18 1915

CIVIL WAR DRAMA

"Birth of a Nation" Films to Be Shown at Seashore Tonight

"Birth of a Nation," a stupendous historical spectacle in motion pictures has excited widespread comment. It is seen in Atlantic City for the first time tonight at the New Nixon Theatre. Daily matinee and evening performances of this drama, in which many Civil War personages appear, will be given. In its successive scenes 3000 horses and 18,000 men take part. D. W. Griffith, the pioneer, devoted eight months to its production.

The story is taken in part from Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," but has been enlarged upon so as to cover the comprehensive relationship of the slavery question to American history. Early episodes show the arrival of the first African slaves brought to the colonies. Then is pictured the South before the war and the first signs of dissension in the development of the abolition movement. The election of President Lincoln and the departure of South Carolina from the Union necessitates the first call for volunteers, and the war is on. The great battles of the internal strife are shown in epic detail, and the climax is reached in the scenes revealing General Sherman's famous march to the sea. The war ends at Appomattox with the surrender of the Southern forces.

With the South going about the work of rehabilitation comes the assassination of President Lincoln. The Ford's Theatre in Washington, on the night of April 14, 1865, when President Lincoln's career ended, is reproduced in historical detail.

The final half of the picture reverts again to the South under the reign of the Carpetbaggers and the terrors of the Reconstruction period, introducing the Ku Klux Clan. The finale progresses to an allegory showing the welding of the divided sections and the establishment of permanent peace and happiness.

BROOKLYN (N. Y.) EAGLE
JUL 18 1915

SCENE FROM "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" GROUP IN "THE BATTLE CRY OF PEACE"

FF

PHILADELPHIA, (PA.) PRESS
Date JUL 18 1915

PHILADELPHIA, (Pa.) INQUIRER.
Date JUL 18 1915

Library Oakland Cal, July 18, 1915

"BIRTH OF A NATION" AT ATLANTIC CITY

FF

Samuel E. Nixon managing director of the New Nixon, Atlantic City, announces an extraordinary attraction for this popular playhouse by the sea in D. W. Griffith's stupendous spectacle "The Birth of a Nation" which begins its summer engagement at the New Nixon this Sunday evening, continuing with daily matinee and night performances, including Sundays.

This is the wonderful production which is now turning into its sixth month at The Liberty Theater, New York City, where it has been a sensation of the current season in Metropolitan theatricals. It is the largest undertaking ever revealed upon a stage and shows 18,000 men and 3000 horses in one of the most startling series of scenes of dramatic action ever conceived. Mr. Griffith was eight months making the production and at a cost of $500,000.

The story is taken in part from Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," but that story has been enlarged upon to cover the comprehensive relationship of the slavery question to American history. Early episodes show the arrival of the first African slaves into the colonies. Then is pictured the South before the war and the first signs of dissension in the development of the abolition movement. The election of President Lincoln and the departure of South Carolina from the Union necessitates the first call for volunteers, and the war is on. The great battles of the internal strife are shown over an area of twelve square miles. The climax of the war is reached in the scenes revealing Sherman's March to the Sea, and the last meeting of Grant and Lee before Petersburg. War in its actual sweep is graphically shown and ends at Appomattox with the surrender of the Southern forces. With the South going about the work of rehabilitation this movement is arrested by the assassination of President Lincoln. The famous old Ford's Theatre in Washington on the night of April 14, 1865 when President Lincoln's great career ended is given in historical detail. The final half of the picture reverts again to the South under the reign of the Carpetbaggers and the terrors of the Reconstruction period, introducing the Ku Klux Klan. The finale progresses to an allegory showing the welding of the divided sections and the establishment of permanent peace and happiness.

BROOKLYN (N. Y.) EAGLE
JUL 18 1915

FF

Nixon Beach Music Hall.
D. W. Griffith's $500,000 pictorial of the Civil War period, in the reconstruction days following, continues this week at the Nixon Music Hall. Every performance has been attended to capacity. Parents regard the picture as a thing and, one their children see is evidenced by hundreds of parents who go with their young to the performances, especially afternoons. Children show an interest in the representation of Abraham Lincoln listening to the pleas of the mother of a Confederate soldier for his salvation while under sentence of death. An scene which makes a fascinating appeal is the march of General Sherman to the sea. The scenes for which laid along a part of the route followed in the dash to Atlanta, worth $130 apiece were exploded to add to the realism and were blown to atoms and fell to the ground to illustrate the scenes.

FF

"The Birth of a Nation" has entered upon the twentieth week of its run at the Liberty Theater.

MACDONOUGH

FF

"The Birth of a Nation," the photodrama by David W. Griffith, the master of the film play stage, coming to the Macdonough soon, carries with its marvelously absorbing romance the first correct understanding of the history of this country ever shown by an unbiased mind directing an unprejudiced hand.

While it is based on Thomas Dixon's story, "The Clansman, or The Birth of a Nation," this trilogy portrays the inception, echoes the travail of the birth and shows the development of our nation. The country that before the civil war was these United States, and every since and ever after will be the United States.

Swiftly, impartially and unflinchingly it all tells the huge story of the war by making its heroic events an epical frame for a lyrical narrative of romance of the strongest of all emotions—love.

Beginning with the simple direct beauty of all the immortal love stories, the drama shows the then undisturbed amity between North and South before the war. Stupendous events with fiery rapidity involve the admirable groups of characters of the minor drama in the clash of that major epic.

B. Y. Press, July 18, 1915

"The Birth of a Nation" has entered upon the twentieth week of its run in the Liberty Theatre, where this spectacle continues to be one of the most talked of shows in town. The great scenes of the South before the war, the stirring battles of the civil conflict and the thrilling drama of the reconstruction days are well covered in the film. Judging by all signs, "The Birth of a Nation" will remain in the Liberty for a record run.

N. Y. Herald July 18, 1915

In the Liberty Theatre "The Birth of a Nation" entered upon the twentieth week of its run. Midsummer heat has not lessened interest in the picture.

"Birth of a Nation" at Atlantic City

FF

Scene From "The Birth Of A Nation" The Nixon, Atlantic City

Announcement is made by Samuel F. Nixon that the New Nixon Theatre at Atlantic City will house D. W. Griffith's great spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which begins its summer engagement here this evening and continues with daily matinee and night performances, including Sundays.

It is the largest undertaking ever revealed upon a stage and shows 18,000 men and 3000 horses in a most thrilling series of scenes of dramatic action.

The story is taken in part from Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," but has been enlarged upon that theme to cover the comprehensive relationship of the slavery question to American history. Early episodes show the arrival of the first African slaves into the Colonies. Then is pictured the South before the war and the first signs of dissension in the development of the Abolition movement. The election of President Lincoln and the departure of South Carolina from the Union necessitates the first call for volunteers, and the war is on. The great battles of the internal strife are shown over an area of twelve square miles. The climax of the war is reached in the scenes revealing Sherman's March to the Sea, and [illegible] Grant and Lee [illegible] Southern forces. With the South going about the work of reh[illegible] movement is arrested by the assassin[illegible] of President Lincoln. The famous Ford's Theatre, in Washington, on the night of April 14, 1865, when President Lincoln's great career ended, is given in historical detail. The final half of the picture reverts again to the South under the reign of the Carpetbaggers and the terrors of the Reconstruction period, introducing the Ku Klux Klan. Here springs into existence the Clan, originally devised to put down lawless element and restor[illegible] prosperity to the South. [illegible] are pictured in the most [illegible] incidents imaginable. The [illegible] rides of daring horsem[illegible] rescues. The finale pro[illegible] of allegorical picture[illegible] ing of the divid[illegible] and sh[illegible] tlement of permanent [illegible] building up ness in the sections. [illegible] masterly narrative, Mr. Griffith maintained the suspense so vital [illegible] drama and has never lost sight of fundamentals in way of heart [illegible] and human attributes. His central [illegible] are members of Northern [illegible] Southern families, whose relati[illegible] developing into a romance keep [illegible] interest and develop [illegible]

A NA-proving the strong-ing card that has been offered at the Brighton Beach Music Hall.
great picture play of the civil war, when there the stirring scenes of the that ended in freedom for and the reconstruction period, negro problem became acute, impression of the time that type uld never leave upon the mind.

BRIGHTON BEACH MUSIC HALL.—By ing D. W. Griffith's $500,000 pictorial ory of the civil war period, including reconstruction days, to the Brighton h Music Hall, William H. Kemble, the ager, has rejuvenated the popular re-
. Since the picture, the most costly and talked about that has ever been prod, has been playing there unusually crowds have been at the seaside, every performance has been attended the capacity of the playhouse.
at parents regard the picture as edu-ing and one their children should see is denced by the hundreds of parents who their offsprings to the performances, ecially in the afternoons. Several have pressed the opinion that it gives a more aphic impression of the events leading to and following the civil war than any tory could imprint on the mind.
The children show a wonderful interest the representation of Abraham Lincoln tening to the appeals of the mother of a nfederate soldier for his deliverance ile he is under sentence of death. Linn at first refuses to grant the pardon, when the mother weeps he relents and s him free. The picture is based on veral notable incidents of this kind in coln's life. He was often remonstrated th by his Cabinet officers for his kinds in this respect.
another scene which makes a fascinating peal not only to the children but adults the march of General Sherman to the
. This historic incident is pictured th great detail. The scenes for it are d along a part of the route he followed the dash to Atlanta. Shells worth $180 piece, it is said, were exploded to add to e realism of it and houses were blown atoms and burned to the ground to ustrate the scenes.

N.Y. World. July 18

...er.

BRIGHTON BEACH—William H. Kemble has given Coney Island a new prosperity by presenting at the Brighton Beach Music Hall the elaborate photo extravaganza "The Birth of a Nation." This photo play, in addition to attracting the usual flow of entertainment seekers to the beach, draws an ever-increasing crowd from among circles of refinement and culture whose members are neither "movie fans" nor Coney Island regular visitors. Lovers of dramatic and photographic art and students of history and sociology find so much in this photo play to enjoy, to study and to ponder that they go again and again as a student returns to a work on history or an artist revisits the gallery of a museum in which are shown the best paintings of great masters.

That parents regard the picture as educating and one their children should see is evidenced by the hundreds of parents who take their offspring to the performances, especially in the afternoons. The picture has the approval of educators in the big cities in which it has been displayed. The children show an interest in the representation of Abraham Lincoln listening to the appeals of the mother of a Confederate soldier for his life while he is under sentence of death. Lincoln at first refuses to grant the pardon, but when the mother weeps he relents and sets him free.

NEW BRIGHTON—This week's list of funmakers at the New Brighton

CLIPPING FROM Leader
Date Milwaukee Wis
7-17-15

SCENES FROM CIVIL WAR MOVIE DRAMA, "BIRTH OF A NATION"

Upper Section—Ball given by Confederate army men at the beginning of the war. Lower Section, Left—Sherman's troops on their march through Georgia to the sea. Center—Lillian Gish, featured actress of the play. Lower Right—Members of the Ku Klux Klan on one of their night rides.

SAN FRANCISCO (Cal.) CALL & POST
JULY 17, 1915

Alcazar

D. W. Griffith's wonderful film production, "The Birth of a Nation," or "The Clansman," in twelve reels, will start on its fourteenth big week at the Alcazar Theater Monday. Two exhibitions are given daily.

Popular demand made it necessary for the Alcazar Theater to extend "The Birth of a Nation" another week. The picture is the acme of art and realism in films.

The United States government gave aid in the making of this picture. It loaned Griffith field pieces and mortars which had not belched since the days of the sixties; the old muskets were taken from arsenals and again shouldered by the grandsons of the G. A. R. men who first bore them. Army officers prepared the plans for and helped direct the battle scenes according to the exact tactics and strategy in the real events. There is not a single anachronism in the whole massive production.

Naturally, these great events could not have been reproduced without the aid of modern features in the work. Griffith installed a system of field telephones such as are now in use in the European struggle by which he and military aides were able to direct different corps exactly as they moved in the real battles. [illegible] President Lincoln [illegible] to face

CLIPPING FROM Brooklyn Life
Date Brooklyn, N.Y.
7-17-15

"The Birth of a Nation."

A SPECIAL orchestra of fifty pieces is being maintained for the production of "The Birth of a Nation" which is being produced at the Brighton Beach Music Hall. This historic spectacle requires special music in a number of scenes. Recruited from some of the leading orchestras in this part of the country and with several players who were taught by masters abroad, the orchestra, according to Thomas L. Shannon, bandmaster of the Twenty-third Regiment, is one of the best he ever heard. When Manager Kemble obtained the exclusive rights to produce "The Birth of a Nation" in Brooklyn this year he commissioned Louis Reinhard, the musical director of B. F. Keith's Orpheum Theater, to organize an orchestra of fifty. Because of the work involved, Mr. Reinhard engaged George May, the musical director of Hammerstein's Theater in Manhattan, to assist him. As a musical treat for the audiences at "The Birth of a Nation" Manager Kemble has directed Reinhard to prepare a special program for the performance exclusive of the renditions required for the historic scenes in the picture. Thus, at every performance, what virtually amounts to a concert, is given.

...PPING PRO...
...lson (B. C...
7-11-1...

...ORLD'S GREATEST FILM PLAY"

...BE SHOWN IN ... NEXT MONTH.

...of a Nation" Signed by ... — To Start August 1 ... $600,000 to Produce.

... world's greatest moving ... for a sight of which hundreds ... ds of persons in eastern ... id as high as $3 a head, ... showing in Spokane ...

"The Birth of a Nation," made ... . Griffith, the $100,000 produc... it is to be exhibited at the ... Theatre.

Birth of a Nation" started out ... dramatization of Thomas Dix... he Clansman," but it soon out... he original story. It worked ... d from Mr. Dixon's romance of ... onstruction and includes the ... r in an attempt to show that ... ntry was not really born until ... proved its unity by a hideous ... bloodshed and rebuilding.

... lm cost half a million dollars ... , employed thousands of men ... es for its action and hundreds ... for its settings. The principal ... ers are stars whom Mr. Griffith ... self "found," developed and ... the art of photoplay acting by ... standards. Mae Marsh, Henry ... all, Robert Harron and Lillian ... in the number.

... Birth of a Nation" has had ... agazine and newspaper publicity ... any other one picture ever ... the current numbers of Every... d Life are among the periodicals ... ting space to it.

... clared nothing previously done ... g pictures anywhere near ap... the massiveness and pictorial ... "The Birth of a Nation."

...HIS (Tenn.) COM.-APPEAL
JUNE 22, 1915

...hat do we care for the mercury ... ere ... ng as the home team's winning?

Two Dollar Movies

...xpected has happened. Not ... ith their unprecedented success ... rs of the movies now aspire ... the market, establish a high-p... ist and control a circuit of ... ture theaters.

... inevitable that the great ... wonderful picture, "The Birth of ... " should lead to such a ... d now a combination has been ... to control a circuit of theaters ... $2 admission. There is ... to be ... capital behind the plan and it ... s a combination of the best pro... of big films in the moving picture ...

... ticket has been the undoing of ... ntimate theater. It has been the ... cause for the drama's unpopularity ... t years. It is not the time for ex... charges for any form of amusement. It is a day when we look for cheap ... however well off we may be. ... moving picture business ... over the ... absolutely by the fact that the ... admission has been ... fixed ... So long as the ... ... ive, 10 or even 25 ... good enough ... to $1.50 and $2 the ... is written. It ... for a photoplay he will prefer ... ntimate theater. The high-priced ... play will not succeed, and there ... eason why it should.

... years ago simple three and five... ture plays represented the most ... e films on the screen. Today a ... ling $25,000 or more is required for ... ical expenditure. There are ... Today for $2 ... that ... producers ... not and will not ... for ... outs to produce the plays ... of the picture, the ... ... the ... ... are and ... rarely, if ever, a ... one, and so long as the ... ith picture plays ... promise the ones which ... prices.

... predicted ... business would ... of fall down ...

MILWAUKEE (Wis.) LEADER
JULY 17, 1915

THEATRES

DAVIDSON.

Two weeks of continuous increasing success is the record of "The Birth of a Nation," this wonderful motion picture drama which visualizes the slave problem and the Civil war. Never before was a production of any kind offered in this city for a period longer than a week and the unparralleled run of this pictorial masterpiece is regarded as convincing evidence of its unrivalled merit.

Theater-goers, young and old, of Milwaukee and cities in Wisconsin are attracted by this spectacle photodrama in which a double romance of young people of the north and of the south plays an interesting part.

Life in the north in the early '60's is depicted in the play and these pictures are a marked contrast to the accompanying views of life in the south where the warm climate, the cotton growing industry and the customs of centuries made slave-holding profitable.

In the order of historic events, clear descriptive pictures show the secession of the south and the commencement of the Civil war. As natural as life, Lincoln writes the famous proclamation, granting freedom to the negro slaves. To get an actor of natural fitness to play the role of Lincoln, D. W. Griffith, the producer, finally assigned the role of Joseph Henabery whose angular, slender physique and solemn face fitted the requirements perfectly.

To show army life in the play on an extensive scale, a company of 18,000 men and women were taken to the old war-scarred hills of Virginia. A city of canvas tents was pitched in the fields and for weeks spectacular battle scenes were photographed. The battle scenes include open fighting, bayonet charges, cavalry clashes and artillery fire, tons of explosives being consumed to give the desired effects. In the spectacular cavalry engagements 3,000 horsemen simulated the daring deeds which are recorded in the pages of American history.

Special pictures in the great panorama of war include the battle of Gettysburg, Gen. Sherman's march through Georgia to the sea, the siege of Atlanta, the siege of Petersburg and the surrender of Gen. Robert E. Lee to Gen. U. S. Grant at Appomatox. Another scene shows the tragic assassination of President Lincoln in Ford's theater in Washington, the fatal bullet being fired by John Wilkes Booth, an actor, which role is assumed with tragic earnestness by Raoul Walsh.

The play is doubly attractive because it is accompanied by a musical score interpreted by an orchestra of 40 musicians. In this respect the production rivals grand opera.

BROOKLYN (N.Y.) TIMES
Date ..... JUL 17 1915

...ing Picture at Brighton — Other Fine Films on Bill

"The Birth of a Nation."

By bringing D. W. Griffith's $500,000 pictorial history of the Civil War period, including the reconstruction days following, to the Brighton Beach Music Hall, William H. Kemble, the manager, has helped to rejuvenate the popular resort. Since the picture, the most costly and best talked about that has ever been produced, has been playing there unusually large crowds have been at the seaside while every performance has been attended to the capacity of the playhouse.

That parents regard the picture as educating and one their children should see is evidenced by the hundreds of parents who take their offsprings to the performances, especially for the afternoons. The picture has the approval of educators in the big cities in which it has been displayed. Several have expressed the opinion that it gives a more graphic impression of the events leading up to and following the Civil War than any history could imprint on the mind.

The children show a wonderful interest in the representation of Abraham Lincoln listening to the appeals of the mother of a Confederate soldier for his salvation while he is under sentence of death. Lincoln at first refuses to grant the pardon but when the mother weeps he relents and sets him free. The picture is based on several notable incidents of this kind in Lincoln's life. He was often remonstrated with for his goodness of heart in this respect by his Cabinet officers.

Another scene which makes a fascinating appeal not only to the children but adults, is the famous march of Gen. Sherman to the sea. This historic incident is pictured with great detail. The scenes for it are laid along a part of the route he followed in the dash to Atlanta. It cost thousands of dollars. Shells worth $180 apiece were exploded to add to the realism of it and houses were blown to atoms and burned to the ground to illustrate the scenes.

...Milwaukee
Date ..... Wis. 7-17-15

DAVIDSON.

"The Birth of a Nation," David Wark Griffith's tremendous photo spectacle, closes its second week at the Davidson tonight. The engagement has been continued indefinitely, and seats are now selling for the remainder of the first four weeks of the engagement. The photodrama is proving a revelation to local theatergoers in that it established two records, being the first moving picture to play in this city at $1.50 prices, and the first, as well, to be seen here for more than one week.

There is much of interest in the twelve reels that make up the offering, and a new cast it thrown across the history of the rebellion and the period of reconstruction in the version of the Ku Klux Klan and its workings. Griffith is a Virginian. So was Thomas Dixon, author of "The Clansman" and "The Leopard's Spots," the two novels that form the framework of this play. Both knew, from their fathers, who served in the rebellion, the horrors of the reconstruction day and carpet bag rule under the fostering hand of Thaddeus Stevens. Then it was that the southern chivalry arose in its might and formed the white-clad night riders. There is historic incident introduced throughout.

It is scarcely necessary at this time to digress on the tremendous proportions of "The Birth of a Nation." That already has been done. More than 18,000 people and 3,000 horses were required to stage the tremendous scenes, and more than one year was spent in filming the scenes. Some were taken in Virginia, near historic Petersburg; some near Atlanta, where Sherman's march to the sea is shown; some near the historic McLean homestead, and some within that building where the surrender of Lee is shown within the shadow of Appomatox courthouse.

Griffith, by this spectacle, has proven his right to the title of master photoproducer. The film is the first to be shown in this country in established theaters at highest prices. It is offered with an orchestra setting, synchronized by Joseph Conrad Briel, so that music and film meet perfectly. It is presented twice daily, performances starting at 2:15 and 8:10 oclock.

The cast includes actors known throughout the film world. There is Mae Marsh, Lillian Gish, Harry Walthall, Spottiswood Aiken, Josephine Crowel, Mary Alden, Donald Crisp, Joseph Henabery, Robert Harron and others whose names are drawing cards in every photoplay house in this country.

JULY 27 1915
SPOKANE (Wash.) REVIEW

...icise."

OPENING SALE FOR BIG PICTURE

Sensible Organist to Play for "Birth of Nation."

The advance ... "The Birth of a Nation," to be presented at the Clemmer theater for two weeks beginning August 2, opened yesterday morning and a big first day's sale was reported. A special box office has been opened at the west side of the main lobby with Hugh Pace of the Auditorium theater in charge. Indications are that the theater will be sold out for the entire first week before the end of this week.

The run of "The Birth of a Nation" will not open in Spokane with the Sunday matinee as originally planned, as it will be impossible to get the pictures from Seattle in time. The first performance will be Monday afternoon, August 2, at 2 o'clock. The picture runs three hours. Only two shows a day will be given, afternoon and evening.

N PICTURE NEWS (New York City)

JUL 24 1915

"Nation" Is No Race Slanderer, Milwaukee Declares

In Spite of Strong Representations Made by Colored Element Against Alleged Objectionable Parts of Griffith Picture, the Citizens Committee Orders Few Minor Cuts

Special to MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Milwaukee, Wis., July 14.

DESPITE the strenuous protests of the colored people of Milwaukee that "The Birth of a Nation" "was a libel and a slander on their race," the Milwaukee board of censors, or Citizens' Committee, as it is officially known, has passed the great Griffith photoplay with but a few minor cut-outs.

The action of the board followed a private exhibition of the production given at the Davidson theatre for members of the board and local newspaper men. The presentation was made with a complete orchestra accompaniment and there was no question in the minds of the audience after that had seen the photoplay but what it would be passed by the board.

So that the colored folks would ample opportunity to state the... they were allowed a representative to present their side before the board after the photoplay had been viewed. As the negroes had filed their complaint with Mayor Bading, he took it upon himself to be present at the board session and also viewed the pictures.

Mayor Bading, with the rest of the board, failed to see where race hatred could be aroused by the production and he, like the other members, agreed to its presentation. According to the Rev. J. S. Woods, spokesman for the colored folks, "There are scenes in the play which show the negro at his worst and this worst element is held up as the blood and soul of the negro."

H. A. Sherman, of the Elliott and Sherman Film Company, Minneapolis, which controls the Wisconsin state rights to "The Birth of a Nation," was loud in his praise of the action of the censor board. "They proved themselves to be very broad and fair-minded men," said Mr. Sherman. William Schnell of the Davidson theatre, also praised the censor board highly for their action in the matter.

Heralded by the most extensive advertising campaign ever waged in this city, either for a legitimate or photoplay production, "The Birth of a Nation" opened Saturday evening to a capacity house. Fifty inch advertisements were run in all papers on Saturday and Sunday and the result was that the local papers granted the production three and four-column lay-outs.

On Sunday the Davidson turned thousands away, while Monday was but a repetition of Sunday on perhaps a bit larger scale. Seats are on sale for three weeks in advance and from present indications the production should have no trouble in playing to big business the entire eight weeks for which it is booked.

SAN FRANCISCO (Cal.) EXAMINER
JULY 25, 1915

"CLANSMAN" CLOSING.

D. W. Griffith's film drama, "The Birth of a Nation," or "The Clansman" in twelve reels, will start on its fourteenth and final week at the Alcazar Theatre to-morrow. It is estimated that more than 200,000 persons have seen this spectacular film here. Afternoon and evening performances are given.

Bert Lytell and Evelyn Vaughan and their own company of players will be the attraction to follow "The Clansman" at the Alcazar, commencing Monday night, August 2. These two popular favorites are bringing their own New York company and a number of the recent New York successes for their special Exposition season at the popular O'Farrell street playhouse. In the company are Richard Hales, Alexis Luce, Phillips Tead, Henry Shumer, Allison Pike and Kathleen Comerys. The repertoire includes "The Yellow Ticket," "Nearly Married," "The Thief," "Seven Keys to Baldpate," "The Miracle Man."

McCALL, Sec. ... ective Bureau.

...cure, and ... mails and ...

JULY 25, 1915
OAKLAND (Cal.) TRIBUNE

~~WHAT IS DO...~~

MACDONOUGH

"The Birth of a Nation, or The Clansman," the photodramatic masterpiece by David W. Griffith, the master of the film play stage, which is coming to the Macdonough soon, carries with its marvelously absorbing romance, the first correct understanding of the history of this country ever shown by an unbiased mind directing an unprejudiced hand.

While it is based on Thomas Dixon's story, "The Clansman or The Birth of a Nation," this triology portrays the inception, echoes the travail of the birth and shows the development of our nation. The country that before the Civil war was These United States and ever since and ever will be, The United States.

Beginning with the simple direct beauty of all the immortal love stories, the drama shows the then undisturbed unity between North and South before the war. Stupendous events with fiery reality involve the admirable groups of characters of the minor drama in the clash of the major appeal.

You see Lincoln and his cabinet issuing the call for volunteers—the scene, the man, the manner of the signature exactly as the making detail of clothing and equipment as it all actually occurred.

...ONS

...WOLF HOPPER has gone into the movies. At first thought that might not strike you as ...ately momentous, for, to name ...ly a few, have not Bernhardt and ...Archie and Mrs. Fiske and ...ald Brian surrendered to the ...? They have. Indeed, it would ...easier to name the players who ...ve never sought to wring a tear or ...a smile from the solemnly ...tiring camera. Yet this news of Mr. Hopper's accession to the ranks of the shadows is, all things considered, quite the most significant and important motion picture event of recent months.

For it is one thing for a distinguished actor to piece out a poor season with one wealthy week in the movies, for a player like Mrs. Fiske or Cyril Maude to allot a Summertime fortnight to an excursion into the films. It is quite another thing for one of such position to sign over all his time to the directors of movie destinies. And that is just what Mr. Hopper has done—what he did do on Thursday of the week just passed. For a whole year at the very least, for two years if D. W. Griffith and his associates so desire, the towering actor has left the stage. Though he has a great following and an honorable position, though he was making what most people would consider an exceedingly handsome income, he was willing to go for a time at least beyond all sound of applause, to give up that which to many must seem for any actor worth his salt the very breath of his existence—the immediate response of a delighted audience.

Why Mr. Hopper Did It.

Why should he be willing? Here, at last, was a classic case. Why do actors go into the movies? Decidedly it seemed a matter for inquiry, and, obviously, the person to ask was Mr. Hopper. So—just the other day it was—the question was put to him. Why?

"I think there were three reasons," he answered reflectively. "To begin with, after five seasons in Gilbert and Sullivan, we had largely exhausted the inviting territory and it would have had to lie fallow, for a while anyway. It is an open secret that we planned a revival of 'Wang' for next Fall. And I can only say that, after the rich privilege of speaking the immortal lines of W. S. Gilbert, there is no other work in light opera left for me, no other with which I can be happy. Once or twice I have tried it and it has been simple torture. I hope to come back to Gilbert from time to time. I hope never to speak or sing the words of any other librettist. This is reason No. 1.

"Then I have been tremendously impressed by the work that Mr. Griffith has done in motion pictures. He is a genius—make no mistake about that. It so happens that the offer came to me two days after I had first seen 'The Birth of a Nation.' Frankly, before I saw that, I had not cared a rap for the movies. I went there under protest, at the persuasion of Mrs. Hopper and Digby Bell. I saw a wonderful thing. I saw an audience held spellbound as I have rarely seen an audience held in the theatre. I saw their excitement, saw their tears. The picture itself, with its many infinitely dramatic touches—strokes of genius—struck me as something big, something new, something important. I came out dazed.

The Third Reason.

"Even so, when the first envoy came to me in my dressing room I laughed. In fact, I said 'Tut! Tut!' and made a face or two. But the offer—and that was the third reason—was like a fact in a fairy tale. Here it was, no Broadway gossip, but figures set down in black and white. It would have been criminal for me to refuse it. Mr. ...rady, who has been fine and loyal ...d helpful with our Gilbert and Sullivan ventures, released me at once. I ...ve promised to come back to him ...en I come back to the stage. He ...'I would be a fool not to take this." ...Griffith office has mentioned ...s Mr. Hopper's annual re... may take it or leave it ...cted to take it.

...too large and healthy to sob, but I was pretty close to tears that last night I played. Oh, I shan't mind the wild juncets nor the getting up at 8 o'clock in the morning, though that does outrage my artistic conscience. I shan't mind being just a factory hand. But what I shall mind is that all my work will be rehearsal, that I shall have to give up the infinite reward of an audience."

And the big comedian looked very glum, indeed.

"However," he went on, "I'm really full of enthusiasm. The field has marvelous possibilities. I look forward with the keenest pleasure to working with Mr. Griffith. I have some ideas I want to try. I have some work in pantomime and facial expression I want to do. The pictures may send me back to the stage a better actor. Who knows? All things considered, I'm feeling very cheerful, indeed. And now," he concluded, "the great hour has come. It's time to go to the ball game."

JUNE 27, 1915
...ARTANSBURG (S. C.) HERALD

TWO-DOLLAR MOVIE

A corporation was formed in New York a few days ago, capitalized at $4,000,000, for the purpose of going into the motion picture business on a scale heretofore not attempted. It is proposed to go into the business on a world-wide scale, not only in the matter of furnishing the films, but in the control of theaters in leading cities in this and other countries. Some of the magnates of the "legitimate' stage are interested in the undertaking, and one of the prime movers is D. W. Griffith, who has produced "The Birth of a Nation," based on Thomas Dixon's story of "The Clansman." This film, by the way, has been running in New York for several months, and there is little evidence, it seems, of a flagging of interest and attractiveness to the New York public.

The new concern, however, is to undertake another phase of the motion picture business that is both novel and significant. It will, by means of its control of a chain of theaters throughout the country, and probably in other countries, fix the scale of prices on the basis of $2 for the best seats. In other words, this giant film corporation will place motion picture production in the field at the same prices that are now and have for some time charged for admission to the real productions.

At first blush the undertaking seems to be doomed to failure. The low-priced motion picture shows apparently would furnish such competition as against such a pretentious production as that for which $2 is charged. In addition to this competition, there is that of the legitimate stage to be considered. A person might very willingly pay $2 to see Sothern and Marlowe in Shakespearean repertoire, and yet hesitate a long time before giving a similar price to see the same performers in a film production of the same plays.

However, the two-dollar movie seems to be coming. How it can be made ten to twenty times better than the movies already in our midst remains to be seen.

David Wark Griffith, the man who made "The Clansman," has forgotten that motion picture taking is a business—with him it is a creed.

Speaking of the controversy that has arisen throughout the United States as a result of the wonderful production of "The Clansman," Griffith says: "The producers of the modern drama owe their lack of great financial or artistic success to the fact that they consider the stage the king's fool, that can offend no one, that does not dare to stir the spark of resentment in the bosom of that mighty monarch, the audience, who rules its destinies; whereas, the stage should take pattern after the king's counselor, who speaks the truth and offends any and all as that conditions, stripped to their vestiges, may [illegible] mind of the monarch guided along lines of preparation to meet and deal with these conditions as they really exist.

"'The Clansman' is a play lesson to both the white and the black races. It is a lesson that should compel them to consider the past and to settle the questions of tomorrow.

"California, with its bright sunshine and perfect atmospheric conditions, is transferring the thoughts of the master minds of the world to the film and scattering them broadcast throughout the entire civilized world. The motion picture carries its message all over the globe. The people who portray the characters are well known in the remotest hamlets in Russia and in Germany and the story that they tell needs [illegible] transl[illegible]tions."

SPOKANE (Wash.) CHRONICLE
JULY 26, 1915

SHOW PHOTOPLAY IN PRESENT FORM

"The Birth of a Nation" will be shown in Spokane with such eliminations as recommended by the national board of censorship, and without any interference by the city council, as the result of an action taken this afternoon by the council.

On the report of Commissioner Glasgow, who was sent to Seattle to see the photoplay and who stated that the objections from the local colored people to certain scenes in the play were not well enough founded to warrant the expurgation of the scenes, the council decided to take the judgment of the national board.

The Rev. D. A. Graham, colored, had had already been ordered eliminated by the national board. Mr. Graham was spokesman for a large group of colored people a week ago and again today.

LOS ANGELES, JULY 3, 1915

THE GRAPHIC

Cleve... Billy Keefe

...Keefe, publicity man for D. W. Grif... ...ramento. From papers of the Cali... I note tha negroes of that city are ...ident protes against Griffith's mov... production o "The Clansman." Can ... any significance in the coincidence? ...e is the man to whom credit is given in Los ... newspaper cir... for the obtaining of ... of dollars' w... of free publicity for ...nsman.' But a few months before the ...ne to seek adv...seme t for that great ... had calmly walked into the studio of ...tic and ...liar... companies on Sunset ... with a ...nar... in one hand, an in... handsha... in the other and upon his ...entations t... so down-to-date a concern ... without ... press agent. He proceeded, ... plausibility typical of an Examiner re... which he was at the time, to talk himself ... Griffith's favor and a job at which he has ... good ever since in a ...ay to awaken the envy of other publicity experts."

Press, July 25 1915

Plan a New One.

D. W. Griffith first placed the [illegible] motion picture play when he put "The Birth of a Nation" in the Liberty Theatre last March. The $2 combination programme, on the other hand, is a new proposition. The aim of the backers, according to the statement made yesterday, will be to keep the entertainment on the same high level of excellence established by "The Birth of a Nation" [illegible] the full resources of the best [illegible] will be the [illegible] that the productions [illegible] by D. W. Griffith [illegible]

Brooklyn, (N. Y.) Standard
July 25, 1915

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" AT [illegible]

CABLE ADDRESS
CLIPPING BUREAU
Seattle Wash.
7-26

GRANT AND LEE AT APPOMATTOX AS SHOWN IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" AT THE NEW NIXON THIS WEEK.

SPOKANE (Wash.) CHRONICLE
JULY 20, 1915

GLASGOW WILL SEE "BIRTH OF NATION"

City Censor to Make Trip to Seattle This Week and Inspect Photodrama.

That he may be prepared to order the expurgation from the motion picture production, "The Birth of a Nation," to be shown here in August, of any scenes that might be instrumental in breeding race prejudice, Commissioner of Public Affairs Samuel Glasgow, as censor of public amusements in Spokane, will make a trip to Seattle to witness a production of the p[illegible] toplay in that city. He expects to go this week.

The city council directed this action Monday afternoon, following the reading of a protest against pa[illegible] of the film, made by the Ministeri[illegible] association, J. L. Reno post of the [illegible]. A. R. and different negro organiza[illegible]ons.

The Rev. D. A. Graham, pastor of the A. M. E. church, who made [illegible] trip to Seattle in the interests of the colored people to see the film, de[illegible]ared that "The Clansman," from whic[illegible] the play is taken, was written to s[illegible] up hatred against the negro in the [illegible]outh after the civil war and to a[illegible]mpt to convince the white people th[illegible] the negro was incapable of civilizati[illegible] and education.

H called attention to two pa[illegible]icular scenes in the play which he [illegible]aid purported to accentuate the best [illegible]lity and brutality of the black man, [illegible]nd expressed the fear, as has bee[illegible] the expression by the colored peopl[illegible] of many other parts of the country, [illegible]hat these two scenes alone would r[illegible]ew a prejudice against the negro, [illegible]hich he said the present day colored [illegible] are gradually putting at rest.

Judge Munter declared "The Cl[illegible]man" originally had among its [illegible]poses the glorification of the spiri[illegible] the Ku-Klux Klan, the prime mov[illegible] in which were prosecuted by the g[illegible]ernment during the reconstruct[illegible] period in the south following the w[illegible] and that, from his personal kno[illegible]edge, gained while living for years [illegible] Alabama, where the organization [illegible]erated, the play exaggerates and m[illegible] represents.

E. J. Robertson said there would [illegible] no complaint on the part of the c[illegible]ored people if the play were to [illegible] view only by people of strong min[illegible] to which these misrepresentati[illegible] would be plain, but that they fea[illegible] the effect it would have upon [illegible] children and upon people whose mi[illegible] and opinions can easily be swayed.

H. S. Clemmer of the Casino a[illegible] Clemmer theaters, who is bring[illegible] "The Birth of a Nation" to this c[illegible] [illegible] piece and that he did not believe t[illegible] the opposition on the part of the c[illegible]ored people against the two scen[illegible] mentioned was warranted, as they w[illegible] only incidental to the main scheme.

Dr. Clemmer offered to pay the e[illegible]penses of the city censor to Seat[illegible] in order that he would be able [illegible] trim out any objectionable features [illegible] the play before it started here, as [illegible] will not arrive until about midnight [illegible] August 3. This offer the council [illegible]ilined to accept, but voted to send [illegible] Glasgow to Seattle at the city's [illegible]pense, embodying the belief that a[illegible] action would be warranted in vi[illegible] this matter.

[illegible]VELAND (Ohio) PRESS
JULY 20, 1915

[illegible]ced Pictures to Invade [illegible]eland—"The Birth of [illegible] the Nation" Soon.

[illegible] Birth of the Nation," a[illegible] to present plans, is to be [illegible]at the opera house at 22.

[illegible]YN (N. Y.) EAGLE
JUL 20 1915

[illegible] "Birth of a Nation" [illegible] the moving pic[illegible] big audiences, began last [illegible] the Brighton Beach Music [illegible] a large audience that ap[illegible]plauded again and again the wonder[illegible] picturing the times of the [illegible] and the reconstruction pe[illegible] applause was as generous [illegible] the scenes were depicted [illegible]ures on a large stage. Two [illegible]iences a day are the rule [illegible] is no cessation in the en[illegible] manifested, although the [illegible]pinion seems to be that the [illegible] Baptist preacher. Tues[illegible]ther unnecessarily stro[illegible] spirit in his book, which [illegible] for the [illegible] scenes [illegible] Klan, and [illegible] continue to [illegible] is continual [illegible] it could [illegible] upon the [illegible]

MILWAUKEE (Wis.) WISCONSIN

[illegible] KLANSMEN THRILL

SPECTATORS AT FILM PLAY

Quelling Riot Among Southern Negroes Spectacular Scene at the Davidson.

HISTORY OF THE ORDER

Clans Outran Original Purpose and Many Murders Were Laid at Society's Doors.

There are many thrilling climaxes in "The Birth of a Nation," the wonderful photoplay based upon Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," now at the Davidson theater, but none is more impressive than the scenes showing the rescue of a girl from the hands of a mulatto by an army of Ku-Klux Klansmen.

These riders, clad in costumes fantastic, their faces concealed by hoods of ghostly white and white coverings for their horses, descend upon a band of troublesome blacks and armed colored soldiers, disperse a riot in which helpless whites were compelled to look on and finally save the girl from a forced marriage with the leader of the negroes.

Like other negroes released from the bonds of slavery, the mulatto becomes drunk with power and under this influence and that of wine, he dreams of creating a black empire with himself as king and a white wife as queen. How the news of the struggle between the girl and her assailant became known to the Klansmen and how these riders mobilized for their attack upon the negro colony is all worked out with remarkable vividness in the photoplay.

Carries Out Thrilling Story.

Yard after yard of this wonderful film is reeled off to carry out this thrilling story of the perilous days in the reconstruction of the American nation. Written by a southerner, "The Clansman" tells a different tale of the work of the Ku-Klux than is generally understood by those of the north. It is this and other scenes in "The Birth of a Nation," which has caused authorities in many cities to prohibit the showing of the pictures for fear of its effect upon colored residents.

There is no question but that there is much in the photoplay to produce this effect. Take any performance at the Davidson theater. Spectators cheer these riders of the night the moment their pictures appear upon the screen. The negro is placed in a bad light by the conduct of those who became powerful by the disenfranchisement of whites following secession. They were spurred on by many of the Carpet Baggers, and while the story of the critical times through which this country passed is but half told, those who leave the theater after seeing the film play, invariably bring up the question of right or wrong in the work done by the Ku-Klux Klan.

How Clansmen Organized.

The object of these clansmen, history tells us, were the suppression of the negro as a factor in politics; its means, terrorization, ending in many cases in murder. It was a secret organization; its origin is unknown, but it is supposed to have sprung about 1867 from local associations all having the same end in view. Such information as we have in regard to it is founded on a copy of its constitution, prescript as it was termed, and on a congressional investigation made in 1871.

In this prescript the name of the association is never mentioned, two asterisks () being inserted instead. Their local lodges were called dens; the master, cyclops; the members, ghouls. A county was a province; governed by grand giant and four goblins. A congressional district was a dominion, governed by a grand Titan and six furies. A state was a realm, governed by a grand dragon and eight hydras. The whole country was the empire, governed by a grand wizard and ten genii. Their banner was triangular, a black dragon on a yellow field with a red border; their mysteries were never to be written, but only orally communicated; the distinctive feature of their dress was a covering for the head descending to the breast, holes being cut for the eyes and mouth, the covering being decorated in any startling or fantastic manner.

Order Filled Its Purpose.

The order succeeded in its purpose. The midnight raids of men thus clad, who administered whippings or other punishment, had the effect intended, and the Ku-Klux became a terror to all negroes, keeping them either from exercising their political rights or else causing them to act with their persecutors. The order, however, outran its original purpose, and where mere whippings did not accomplish the desired end as with northern whites that had gone south and with the bolder negroes, murder was resorted to.

The disorders grew and in March, 1871, a congressional investigating committee was appointed. In the same month President Grant in a message to congress asked for legislation to enable the restoration of order in the south, as neither life nor property were there secure, and as the transportation of the mails and the collection of the revenue were interfered with. The Ku-Klux or [illegible] bill was promptly passed [illegible] [illegible] giving [illegible] cognizance of suits ar[illegible] and giving federal judge[illegible] clude from juries person[illegible] judged to be in sympathy [illegible] cused.

President Given P[illegible]

In cases where state author[illegible] unable or unwilling to give [illegible] protection, the President was [illegible]ized to employ the military and [illegible] power of the United States to secure [illegible] same, and suspend the writ of hab[illegible] corpus. The second section of the bi[illegible] declaring punishment for any conspiracy to prevent a person from enjoying his legal rights was declared unconstitutional by the supreme court in 1883. The habeas corpus provision was to remain in force only to the end of the next session of congress.

An attempt to renew it failed in 1872. In October, 1871, President Grant issued two proclamations, the first ordering certain associations in South Carolina to surrender their arms and disguises within five days; the second, at the expiration of the five days suspending the writ of habeas corpus. Many arrests and convictions followed, the association was crushed within four months.

The Ku-Klux Klan was known by various other names, as White league and Invisible Empire. The name Ku-Klux has ever since been applied in a general way to troubles between the negroes and whites of the south.

SAN DIEGO (Cal.) UNION
JULY 20, 1915

The Empress continues to draw record crowds each day and evening to witness Griffith's wonder picture, "The Clansmen," now in the fifth week of its run in the local play house. Visitors of the Exposition find in this cool and cozy theatre a fine place to spend a few of the evening hours after a day of sightseeing at "Dream City." This greatest of all film productions is taken from Thomas Dixon's novel of the same name and is in twelve full reels of motion pictures. It is the most amazing film spectacle the world has ever seen, costing a half a million dollars and requiring the service of eighteen thousand people and three thousand horses for a period of eight months to make the production. "The Clansman" is now being presented in just three important cities in the East (New York, Boston and Chicago), under the title 'The Birth of a Nation" and an admission price of two dollars for the best seats is charged in these Eastern cities for the same production offered to the local public at much less here.

A special orchestra of thirty pieces accompanies the pictures and the music has been especially arranged for this production. In addition to the instrumental music "The Clansman" carries a chorus of trained singers whose sweet voices lend an added charm to the produc-

ATLANTIC CITY (N. J.) REVIEW
JULY 20, 1915

SPECTACLE IS TREMENDOUS HIT

Great Enthusiasm Over "Birth Of a Nation" At New Nixon

After the phenominal hit scored by D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle "The Birth of a Nation," at the New Nixon Sunday evening when it was given here for the first time there was no longer any doubt of its success for the remainder of the run.

Such bigness of theme, such wonderful handling of the great production down to the smallest detail was quite a surprise despite all that had been said of it in advance. It is easy to understand why it has had such sensationally successful runs in New York, Boston and Chicago. It outdoes the mightiest things of the theater and then proceeds to set a new standard for accomplishment which one naturally wonders how on earth it can be duplicated. It also sets new records in the matter of enthusiasm

Griffith's multiplicity of detail and the careful manner in which he has worked out every essential of the big production was the most astonishing thing. There had been some misgivings here as to the matter of the public acceptance of the $2 moving picture attraction on a par with the [illegible]rest things of the theater. The[illegible] not exist after seeing it. It establishes a new standard in this respect also for at both performances yesterday the long line of people before the box office attested that Atlantic City had capitulated to the stirring work the same as every other city where it has been presented, possessed everything calculated to create such an impression.

Telegraph. July 20, 19[illegible]

AT THE LIBERTY THEATRE.

"The Birth of a Nation" Now on Its Twentieth Week.

"The Birth of a Nation" has ente[illegible] upon the twentieth week of its [illegible] the Liberty Theatre, where [illegible]derful spectacle continues [illegible] talked-of show in town.

The great scenes of th[illegible] the war, the stirring b[illegible] conflict [illegible]

OAKLAND (Cal.) TRIBUNE
MAY 25, 1915

THE FORUM

A THEATRICAL CENSOR.

To the Editor: The present trouble over the production of "The Clansman" brings the important fact that we have no representative censoring committee in the city of Oakland. It is very true that the ordinance governing the matter provides that the mayor and the chief of police shall be the censoring committee, but in this case it has been inadequate. I attended the production of "The Clansman" in San Francisco, in company with the chief of police, who expressed himself as being greatly opposed to the production of this play in Oakland. On the other hand, the mayor does not disapprove of the production, and the committee can reach no reasonable decision, lacking a third deciding vote, which is not only customary, but necessary.

If we are to have a censoring committee, why not have one, where a division of opinion does not preclude any action. I believe that the chief of police should be a member of this committee, since his executive action is necessary, but why not have a committee of at least five members representing the real opinions of the people.

Every day there are being produced not only pictures, but acts, which should be carefully scanned.

BEATRICE A. McCALL, Sec.
Woman's Protective Bureau.

Oakland, May 21, 1915.

FENDS ...T OF NATION'

...ical Magnate Answers ...riticisms—Tells Why He Brought It Here

Atlantic City,
July 4, 1915.

...ditor Press:

In your issue of this date appears ...letter signer by Chas. A. A. V. Gi...d, addressed to Hon. William Rid...r, Mayor of Atlantic City, de...anding the suppression of "The ...rth of a Nation". The only speci... statement made which would ...arrant this unusual demand is as ...llows:

"Pennsylvania, Illinois, Rhode ...land, Massachusett and several ...her states have barred "The Birth ...f a Nation" from their theatres."

...nes is a mis-statement of facts. "The Birth of a Nation" has not ...een barred from any theatre in ...ny state in the United States of ...merica. It is now playing at the ...remont Theatre, Boston, Mass., and ...e Illinois Theatre, Chicago, Ill. ...t is also playing at the Liberty ...Theatre, New York City, the Brigh...on Beach Music Hall, Brooklyn, ...New York, the Davidson Theatre ...Milwaukee, Wisconsin, and the Al...azar Theatre, San Fransisco, Cal.

Herewith is the story of the pro...duction of D. W. Griffith's great ...spectacle in so far as it relates to ...censorship:

It was passed by the National ...Board of Censors with this comment ...upon its merits: "Educationally, ...dramatically and artistically this ...should prove a great forward in ...motion picture production."

Also passed by Mayor Mitchell, of ...New York City, Commissioner of Li...ty Chief Magistrate McAdoo and the ...action of protestants thrown out of ...court by Magistrate Deuell on the ...ground that there was no legal ...claim warranting any other decision.

In Boston, the spectacle was origi...nally passed by Mayor Curley and ...Commissioner of Police O'Meara acting as a board of censors. Subse...quently the Legislature enacted a ...special bill creating a Board of ...Censors to pass upon all pictures ...and plays and giving them the dis...cretion of prohibiting at their pleas...ure any productions they saw fit.

This Board saw the picture, met a ...few nights afterwards and at the end ...of an hour's deliberation unanimously sustained the picture and it has been running ever since at the Tremont Theatre.

Herewith I beg to hand you a copy of an official letter issued from the mayor's office of Boston, covering this case:

City of Boston,
Office of the Mayor

The officials designated by chapter 348, Acts of 1915, having receiv... a petition from certain citizens requesting that performances of "The Birth of a Nation" be stopped by them under the authority given to them by the statute, having witnessed the performance, heard counsel representing the protestors and the license and having given full consideration to the entire subject, have decided that the license of the theatre should not be revoked or suspended.

The above statement was issued from the Mayor's office, Boston, Mass., on June 2nd, 1915, after Mayor Curley, as chairman, Chief Justice Bolster of the Municipal Court and Police Commissioner O'Meara had met in the Mayor's office as the official Censor Board of the City of Boston to pass on the play. The run of "The Birth of a Nation" opened at the Tremont Theatre, Boston, Mass., April 10, 1915, and is still in continuance at present writing, (July 1, 1915), having been uninterrputed since the opening.

(Signed) FRANCIS J. BRENNAN,
Chief Clerk, Mayor's Office.

In Chicago, where censorship has been carried to a point which is too serious to be ridiculous, the management of "The Birth of a Nation," for the first time in the history of this picture, had to begin an action in equity to establish their rights. A sweeping injunction issued by Judge William Fenimore Cooper of the Superior Court restrains the Mayor or any other official of the city of Chicago from interfering with its presentations in that city. Over 200,000 of the best citizens of Chicago have seen this production and rousingly endorsed the action of the court.. I beg to hand you herewith, a complete copy of the decision rendered by Judge Cooper in this specific instance.

In Los Angeles, California and subsequently in San Francisco, the protestants endeavored to make political capital out of the picture with the result that they were thrown out of court after stating their case. These cases are cited to show you how effectually "The Birth of a Nation" has met every obstacle placed in its brilliant path of success by misguided individuals whose motives I do not care to discuss at this time. You will observe that in every case the great production has been given a clean bill of health. Censor boards have approved it. There is not a court on record in the country that has not sustained it upon the strictest constitutional grounds, publicans and men and women in every walk of life whose names are known throughout the country have given it their enthusiastic endorsement.

It would take a page of your valuable paper to list the people of prominence who have seen this picture and proclaimed it a wonderful achievement in the are of dramatic expression. Surely men and women of the broadest conceptions are not banded together in an effort to lay any burden upon the citizens of this country negro origin. The very showing of the good work that is being done by enlightened negroes of this country is Mr. Griffith's answer to those who have missed the purposes and the merits of the case. If his story was designed to attack the Afro-Americans he would be the last man to arrest the continuity of his drama to do justice where the exegencies of the case suggest this disinterested opportunity to pay tribute to the remarkable growth of the colored people. The truth is Mr. Griffith has been more than fair. "The Birth of a Nation," shows the mistakes that were made in the past and it points the way out. Any man, be he white or black, cannot miss this dominant note if he looks at it in the proper spirit. It is essentially a drama of given circumstances showing the power of good deeds over intrigue and hatred and its lesson is so indelibly planted that prejudice cannot longer exist. It demonstrates beyond the question of doubt that crime cannot live in the open. It is a most powerful argument against the festering disease—known as suppression. Any man who can be prejudiced by this powerful story is not worth bothering over.

In bringing the picture to Atlantic City I was actuated by one consideration. Every business man here has been urging that we do things to call attention to our wonderful city. As a pioneer theatrical man here I deemed it my duty to get the biggest attraction extant from a summer engagement. Oout of town visitors are great theatregoers but they demand the best. I looked the field over and realized at once that "The Birth of a Nation" was the sensational hit of the year and just the attraction we needed for one of our Boardwalk theatres. It cost me untiring work and a great deal of money to secure this offering. Having succeeded in this I am content to let the merits of the work tell the ...

BROOKLYN, (N. Y.) TIMES

SUMMER SHOWS ATTRACT MANY

...rth of a Nation" Crowds the Brighton Music Hall.

COMEDY AT NEW BRIGHTON

Honors Divided Between Photo-Plays and Vaudeville.

"The Birth of a Nation."

Swinging into its third week of record breaking popularity, the spectacular photo play production, "The Birth of A Nation" continues to crowd the big Brighton Beach Music Hall at both afternoon and evening performances. Those who were seeing the production for the second time, and there were many of them in last night's audience, were held as completely spellbound by the marvelous pictures as the patrons who were eagerly taking their first glimpse at D. W. Griffith's masterpiece.

Based on the story of "The Clansman" as told by Thomas Dixon in the novel of that title, the photo production is even more gripping and stirring than the book. No printed page could so adequately picture the stirring times leading up to the Civil War, the horrors of that great conflict, the assassination of President Lincoln, and the days of evil which followed for the South during the reign of the negroes in the Reconstruction Period. The two gripping love stories which run throughout the drama serve to heighten the intense interest, and add a touch of gentle pathos to the more ...rous scenes.

The production's most thrilling ...es are those picturing the organization of the Ku Klux Klan, the ...ing of the mystic, white shrouded ... in the dead of night as they ... to the support of the honor of ... the thrilling midnight ... Klux to the rescue ... white people. His ...

Assassination of Lincoln

Scene in "The Birth of a Nation."

Deaf Mutes Journal
Dec 29, 1915

"Mutes and Movies."

The two met last week when George Bowles of the Illinois Theater invited a number of the delegates to the deaf and dumb convention to attend a performance of "The Birth of a Nation."

Previous to that time some one had remarked that this play's success was in a measure due to the musical score prepared for it. The music that accompanies this production is beautiful, but so impressive is the picture that Mr. Bowles has been of the opinion that, were the play presented without a word of song or music, it would still be greatest dramatic spectacle of the day. The following letter is cited in proof of this contention:

"Dear Mr. Bowles: Please allow me in behalf of the delegation of the deaf en route to California to thank you for your courtesy, and generosity expressed in the invitation to witness "The Birth of a Nation."

"I have been asked if I felt or heard the musical vibrations or if the deaf people in our party did. The sound waves can be felt by many of the deaf who are high strung or supersensitive, but the sound is not palpable. It is only so in the sense that one would instinctly become aware that another person was in the same room without warning sound.

"But music is not necessary to convey the thrill of the picture. It is inconceivable that such wonderful scenes as the gathering of the Ku Klux Klan could be brought to such a state of realism."

The letter is signed by Mr. Hodgson, who is editor of the DEAF-MUTES' JOURNAL.—Chicago Herald, July 18.

SAN ANTONIO (TEX.) LIGHT
JULY 25, 1915

Film Flashes

The United Booking Offices, which handle practically all "big time" vaudeville acts, cancelled the engagement of Victor Moore and Emma Littlefield at Keith's Theater, Washington, because a moving picture for which Moore has acted was advertised in competition with the vaudeville act. Recently Miss Leslie Carter's salary was reduced because a picture for which she posed was shown in competition.

A new organization to protect writers of photo plays has been formed with some of the most prominent directors and scenario editors in control of it. Frank E. Woods, who prepared the scenario for "The Birth of a Nation," is president and David W. Griffith, producer of the spectacle, is on the board of control.

MILWAUKEE (Wis.) ...
JULY 5, 1915

"The Birth of a Nation" ...
Many Strong ... to Crowds

BETTY ...

Strong Offers "Stage in Film" Taken From Actors' Ranks ...
Interly Has Found ...

CABLE ADDRESS
CLIPPING FROM Post Intelligencer
Seattle Wash.
Date 7-25-1915

"BIRTH ...

"The Birth of a Nation" ... fifth week at the Clemmer ... ager Clemmer had made ... ments to open with for ... kane this week, but the ... seats during the last ... was so fashionable that the ... gagement was postponed and ... ture continues here.

Probably not more than ... of the citizens of Seattle ... have seen this remarkable ... withstanding its Clemmer ... been packed pretty well at every ... formance since the opening.

Many have seen the picture ... and three times. It is ... never tires one. It is ... splendid in its dramatic story ... full or state. No other ... made has had an ... equaling that of "The Birth of a Nation." In New York ... 240 nights at one theater ... most talked of ... ing to Gotham ... where it has been ... discontinued, but in all ... houses.

Manager Clemmer ... ture fitting ... chestra is ... a big feature of ...

S. Glasgow, ... board of ... terday to ... which will be ... In August ... fully impressed ... "Magnificent. ... thing I thought ... todrama. ... pure ...

CLIPPING FROM Sentinel
Milwaukee Wis
7-25-15

Incidents in "The Birth of a Nation"

Confederate Battle Line.

In the Trenches.

On Sherman's March to the Sea.

fourth consecutive week ces at the Davidson every nd evening of "The Birth
" and the extensive pat-as attracted is evidenced tures are markedly popus of events which oc-g the civil war.
picture circles it is said

play, replete with romance and historic interest, marks the commencement of a new era in the photoplay industry. This photo pageant of combined fact and fiction has opened up a new field for high grade camera dramas and when the presentation of them is undertaken on a theater-circuit basis Milwaukee will be represented.

The accompanying picture shows

N.Y. Tribune July 25

N.Y. World July 25

adelphia, (Pa.) Public Ledger
JUL 25 1915

G FROM Intell
Milwaukee
7-25-15

SCENE FROM "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" NEW NIXON ATLANTIC CITY.

The Little Colonel," "Birth of a Nation"

y Walthall as Ben Cameron, C. S.
., in Griffith's masterpiece at the Clemmer.

SHERMAN'S MARCH to the SEA in "The BIRTH of a NATION," Brighton Beach.

Brooklyn, (N. Y.) Standard-Union
JUL 25 1915

BRIGHTON BEACH MUSIC HALL.—Five hundred orphans from St. John's Home will be the guests of William H. Kemble, the manager, at the matinee performance to-morrow of D. W. Griffith's $500,000 production, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Brighton Beach Music Hall. Although "The Birth of a Nation," which is a wonderful pictorial history of the Civil War period, including the reconstruction days, is drawing crowded houses at the Music Hall, Manager Kemble decided to adhere to his long practice of inviting orphans to his playhouse, and sent word to the institution that he would accommodate five hundred of the youngsters. Bishop Charles E. McDonnell was communicated with and gave his permission to the boys to attend. The details of their arrival will be looked after by Joseph F. Keany, first vice-president, and Alexander McKinny, second vice-president. The boys will be conveyed to Brighton Beach aboard special cars, and will be accompanied by the St. John's Orphan Asylum Band. Upon arrival at Brighton Beach the boys will form in a line of parade and, preceded by the band playing patriotic airs, will march along the boardwalk and come to attention in front of the Brighton Beach Hotel, where the band will play several selections. Then the youngsters will march two abreast into the Brighton Beach Music Hall. The boys will derive a double benefit from seeing the picture. In the first place it will afford them an afternoon of enjoyment, and in the second give them a clearer idea of the events leading up to the Civil War, the Civil War period itself, and finally the reconstruction days in the South. As American history is a part of their school, Manager Kemble believes the boys, by seeing the picture, will be better able to grasp and comprehend that part of it relating to the Civil War.

World, July 25, 1915

BRIGHTON BEACH—"The B of a Nation" opens its fourth week the Brighton Beach Music Hall so strong a grip on the public that B. R. T. has been compelled to put extra "L" trains and trolley cars reach Coney Island at or before and 8.30 P. M., the hours at which first pictures of the stupendous drama are exhibited. That many persons frequently go to see the histor play is evident, as they like to see again from the seats they sat in before, and many express surprise finding themselves surrounded in the music hall by persons who sat nea them when they last saw the picture. There are so many shows in one and so much to admire and to study in each of the separate shows that persons seem never to tire of the production. The love story running through the whole play would make a complete photo play, as would the theatrical performance in Ford's Theatre before the assassination of Lincoln, the organization and operations of the Ku Klux Klan, the hospital scene, the home coming of the Confederate soldiers and many other dramatic episodes which are but mere incidents to the big acts that are reproductions of the big events in history.

ORPHANS AT CONEY ISLAND

St. John's Boys Invited to See "The Birth of a Nation."

Five hundred orphans from St. John's Home will be the guests of William H. Kemble, manager, of the matinee performance to-morrow of D. W. Griffith's $500,000 production, "The Birth of a Nation" at the Brighton Beach Music Hall. Although "The Birth of a Nation" is drawing crowded houses, Manager Kemble decided to adhere to his long practise of inviting orphans to his playhouse and sent word to the institution that he would accommodate 500 of the youngsters.

Bishop McDonnell gave his permission to the boys to attend. They will be conveyed to Brighton Beach aboard special cars and will be accompanied by the St. John's Orphan Asylum Band. Brighton Beach the boys will come attention in front of the Brighton Beach Hotel where the band will play several selections. Following that they march into the Brighton Beach Music Hall. Seeing the picture will boys an afternoon of enjoy ford them a clearer ide leading up to the Civil W

JULY 25, 1915
. PAUL (Minn.) PRESS

Wolf Hopper, after refusing gen offers from moving picture pro rs for several years, has yielded st, the salary being, it is said, 00 a year. He will appear in ctions of "Wang," "Panjan-
," "The Merry Wives of Wind-and "Robert Macaire," for the reformed Griffith-Ince-Sennett nation of motion picture direc-

New York Telegraph July 25, 1915

The Birth of a Nation" passes out s fifth month at the Liberty The-with the performances this week starts the sixth month of its suc-ful engagement at this theatre with ign of diminishing interest. At the time D. W. Griffith's wonderful tacle is playing record-breaking en-ments in the Brighton Beach Music by the seaside here and also at Bos-Chicago, San Francisco, and has bea Summer engagement in Atlantic
. The big attraction is being preed to over 50,000 people a week in points.

"The Birth of a Nation" leaves off its fifth successful month at the Liberty Theatre with the performances this week, and starts the sixth month of its successful engagement at this theatre with no sign of diminishing interest. At the same time D. W. Griffith's wonderful spectacle is in playing record breaking engagements at the Brighton Beach Music Hall, and also in Boston, Chicago, San Francisco and Atlantic City. The big attraction is being presented to over 50,000 persons a week.

Mae Marsh, one of the leading film players, in the "Birth of a Nation."

BROOKLYN, (N. Y.) CITIZEN
July 25, 1915

AT THE LIBERTY THEATRE.

"The Birth of a Nation" Draws Big Audiences.

"The Birth of a Nation" passed out of its fifth month at the Liberty Theatre with the performances this week and starts the sixth month of its successful engagement at this theatre with no sign of diminishing interest.

Press, July 25, 1915

"The Birth of a Nat'on" finishes its fifth month at the Liberty Theatre this week and starts the sixth month of its successful engagement in this house with no sign of diminishing interest. At the same time this spectacle is being shown in the Brighton Beach Music Hall and also in Boston, Chicago, San Francisco and Atlantic City. More than 50,000 people are viewing the picture every week.

merican, July 25

e Birth of a Nation" finishes its fifth month at the Liberty The-starts the sixth month of its

(Pa.) DISPATCH
Y 25, 1915

Crack Whip of Atlantic City

Samuel F. Nixon, owner and manager of the Nixon Theater, Pittsburg, driving his favorite pair.

Samuel F. Nixon is, as usual, passing his summer with a happy combination of business and pleasure at his beautiful residence at Atlantic City, which he occupies in the late spring, summer and autumn. Mr. Nixon is one of the few men of big affairs who has not given up the love of driving for the more rapid locomotion of motoring. He is as ardent a whip as ever, and with his stable of 10 thoroughbreds is driving to his heart's content. Mr. Nixon is an expert at handling the reins, and with one or other of his prize teams that prance and pirouette along Atlantic City's streets and adjacent country roads; with the hobby phaeton and the trim footman up behind, the spick and span turnout looks as if it might just have come out of Hyde Park or Piccadilly, London.

Mr. Nixon is the busiest of busy men (even in what to many would be entirely the recreation period), framing the schedules for the coming season at the Nixon Theater, the three leading theaters in Philadelphia of which he is managing director, the Academy of Music, Baltimore, and his other theaters throughout the country. Just now he is watching with particular interest the immense success of the stupendous spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," at the New Nixon Theater, Atlantic City.

Philadelphia, (Pa.) Public Ledger

Booth Escaping After Shooting Lincoln—Scene from "The Birth of a Nation" at the

New York Herald July 25, 1915

Philadelphia, (Pa.) North American
July 25, 1915

MIRIAM COOPER,
NEW NIXON, ATLANTIC CITY

Miriam Cooper takes a conspicuous role in the magnificent photoplay, "The Birth of a Nation," which is being shown at the Nixon Theater, Atlantic City.

N.Y. World. July 25, 1915

The Birth of a Nation" will complete its [redacted] at the Liberty Theatre this week. It is to be seen also at the Brighton Beach Music Hall, Atlantic City, Boston, Chicago and San Francisco.

"The Birth of a Nation"

"The Birth of a Nation," the $500,000 spectacle by D. W. Griffith, today starts on its second week at the New Nixon Theatre in Atlantic City. The noted film, dealing effectively with the history of the nation, has been an attraction for two large audiences daily during the initial week. Interest in it has spread among the visitors at the resort, and the managers of the spectacle are immensely pleased over the reception.

The historic features of the presentation are depicted graphically. In picture form are seen stirring events of American history, including the assassination of President Lincoln, the surrender of Robert E. Lee to General Grant, the last gallant stand of the Confederates at Petersburg, Sherman's march to the sea and the Ku Klux Klan in the South.

In filming "The Birth of a Nation" the services of approximately 15,000 persons and 3000 horses were required to portray the scenes realistically. There are more than 5000 different scenes. Views of Southern battlefields, showing the struggles of Northern and Southern armies, are gripping in their realization.

A cast of favorites was assembled for the filming of the story, based on love themes in Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman" and "The Leopard's Spots." A symphony orchestra of 40 voices is under the direction of Joseph Carl Briel.

PHILADELPHIA, (Pa.) INQUIRER.

PRESIDENT LINCOLN ENTERING [illegible] FATAL NIGHT IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" AT THE BRIGHTON BEACH MUSIC HALL

Ushers at "Birth of a Nation" to Compete in Ocean.

Because of a dispute which has developed among them over their respective swimming abilities, Manager William H. Kemble has put up $100 in prizes for swimming and diving contests by the eight girl ushers in the Brighton Beach Music Hall, where D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" is now playing.

The girls spend most of their time swimming. They had had a dispute as to their respective abilities. Manager Kemble heard of it and has decided to arrange a series of races. These will include a 100-yard dash, a half-mile swim and a one-mile swim. The winners will receive $20 and the second and third a small amount. The girls who will compete are Hilda Michaels, Adeline Geer, Mildred Latham, Edith Hawkey, Marion Woglom, Marguerite Leslie, Anna Donnelly and Anna Wulf. Manager Kemble will act as referee and R. Clark Mooney, who is associated with him in the Music Hall, as timer.

Brooklyn, (N. Y.) Standard-Union
July 4-5, 1915

Because of a dispute which has developed among them over their respective swimming abilities, Manager William H. Kemble has put up $100 in prizes for swimming contests by the eight girl ushers in the Brighton Beach Music Hall, where D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" is now playing. The contests will include a 100-yard dash, half-mile swim and a one-mile swim. The winners will receive $20 and the second and third a small amount. The girls who will compete are Hilda Michaels, Adeline Coar, Mildred Latham, Edith Hawkey, Marion Weglom, Marguerite Leslie, Anna Donnelly and Anna Wulf. Manager Kemble will act as referee, and H. Clark Mooney, who is associated with him in the Music Hall, as CONSIDERABLE interest is attached to the first few showings here of the really great motion picture, "The Birth of a Nation," which opened on Sunday evening at the New Nixon, because the wiseacres were of the opinion that two dollars would not be paid by the residents or visitors. However the fame of the remarkable example of motion photography had preceded it and while the opening was not to capacity there was a satisfactory attendance, which has continued during the week. It will be continued indefinitely and while the two dollar seats may not all be taken there is good reason to believe that the engagement will be highly successful. No one who enjoys genuine thrills, excitement and beautiful picture effects should miss this production. It impressed me as being the acme of dramatic achievement and a wonderfully accurate depiction of the stirring days of the Civil War and scenes in the stricken South immediately after the close of the conflict. Indeed, it sets such a high standard that it will be difficult for any producing manager to find a satisfying successor, no matter what the amount of money expended in the attempt. The war scenes and the incidents in which the Ku Klux Klan figure are so realistic that a thrill passes over the observer. I understand that negotiations have been progressing for the engagement in Philadelphia in the near future. It is quite probable that the picture will be shown at the Forrest Theatre, although that has not been finally settled.

RUTTER PHOTO

PRETTY GIRL USHERS IN "BIRTH OF A NATION" AT BRIGHTON BEACH MUSIC HALL

BRIGHTON BEACH MUSIC HALL.—Five hundred orphans from St. John's Home will be the guests of William H. Kemble, manager, at the matinee performance to-morrow of D. W. Griffith's $500,000 production, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Brighton Beach Music Hall. Although "The Birth of a Nation," which is a wonderful pictorial history of the civil war period, including the reconstruction days, is drawing crowded houses at the Music Hall, Mr. Kemble decided to adhere to his long practice of inviting orphans to his playhouse and sent word to the institution that he would accommodate five hundred of the youngsters.

Bishop McDonnell was communicated with and gave his permission to the boys to attend. The details of their arrival will be looked after by Joseph F. Keany, first vice president, and Alexander [illegible], second vice president. The [illegible] will be conveyed to Brighton Beach [illegible] and [illegible] will form in line of parade and, preceded by the band playing patriotic airs, will march along the boardwalk and come to attention in front of the Brighton Beach Hotel, where the band will play several selections. Following that, the command to march will be given and the youngsters will march two abreast into Music Hall. The boys will derive a double benefit from seeing the pictures. In the first place it will afford them an afternoon of enjoyment and in the second give them a clearer idea of the events leading up to the civil war, the civil war period itself and finally the reconstruction days in the South. As American history is a part of their school studies, Mr. Kemble believes the boys, by seeing the picture, will be better able to grasp and comprehend that part of it relating to the civil war.

Because of a dispute which has developed among them over their respective [illegible] ushers in the Music Hall [illegible] that each must be a [illegible] the close proximity of the [illegible] supposition that between [illegible] they would naturally [illegible] did not wish to run the risk of [illegible] girl employes, as a result of [illegible] in the water, losing their [illegible]

Just as Mr. Kemble thought, the [illegible] spend most of their [illegible] None of them has as yet [illegible] but they have had a [illegible] respective abilities. Mr. Kemble [illegible] it and has decided to arrange [illegible] series.

[illegible] will include a [illegible] mile swim and a one-mile [illegible] will receive $20 and the [illegible] a small amount. The girls [illegible] Hilda Michaels, [illegible]

D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," will pass out of the Liberty with its [illegible] week with an eye of [illegible] At the same time it is playing [illegible] ing engagements in the [illegible] Music Hall, in Atlantic City, [illegible] Chicago and San Francisco. It [illegible] presented to more than [illegible] week in these points.

...ands
JUL 27
...
...ded to
...tion pictures.

...A NATION"
...NTON MUSIC HALL

...mirth's wonderful film
"The Birth of a Na-
...in all fall at the Brigh-
...usic Hall, according to Another big audience
many thrilling scenes
...d enjoyed the fine or-
...ert which does so much
...e entertainment enjoy-
...tructive. "The Birth of ...portrays vividly great
...ting the assassination of ...Sherman's march to the
...em being vigorously ap-
...e Ku Klux Klan raiders, half, were tendered an
...rhaps there are inac-
...d misapprehensions in
...f a Nation," but on the
...a new standard in film
When the rain fell last
...nagement provided sa-
...hose who had not been
...he weather man.

...OKLYN, (N. Y.) EAGLE
JUL 27 1915

...n increase of ...
the preseding year.

...N'S ORPHANS TREAT

...undred of Them See ...Birth of a Nation."

...undred orphans of St. John's
...ere the guests of William H.
manager of the Brighton
...usic Hall, at the performance
...W. Griffith's spectacle, "The ...a Nation," yesterday after "It was the greatest treat the
...d girls ever had," declared
...r McKinny, second vice pres-
the Catholic Orphan Asylum
...on, after the production was ...his opinion was also voiced by
...t Rev. Mgr. Joseph McNamee,
...r general, who attended the ...nce, together with a number

...members of the Catholic
...car general heartily indorsed
...t film, which has been play-
...apacity business ever since its
...entation at the Music Hall
Father York and the other
...nt clergymen present.
...oys and girls in their new
...d dresses were taken to the special trolley cars, in charge
McKinny and James Quindar
...oard of directors of the asy-
...ociation. They assembled on ...arkway and, led by their fa-
...and of forty pieces, paraded
...e boardwalk, then around to
...usic Hall, where they were by a crowd of several hun-
...rsons. They passed in review
...icar general.
...ntire balcony was given over
...Kemble's little guests and judg-
...m the expression on his face
...mble was the happiest man in
...fter. In the intermission he
...t that every one of the young-
...d a cool, refreshing glass of
...de.

...lyn, (N. Y.) Standard-Union
July 27, 1915

...JOHN'S ORPHANS SEE "BIRTH OF A NATION"

Children Entertained ...righton Beach Music Hall

By Manager Kemble

...e hundred orphans of St. John's
...e were the guests of William H.
...ble, manager of the Brighton
...h Music Hall, at the performance
...of D. W. Griffith's gigantic spec-
..., "The Birth of a Nation," yes-
...y afternoon.
...was the greatest treat the boys
...girls ever had," declared Alex-
...r McKinny, second vice-president
...of the Catholic Orphan Asylum
...ciation after the production was
... This opinion was also voiced the Right Rev. Mons. John Mc-
...ee, the vicar-general, who at-
...ded the performance together
...a number of other members of ...Catholic clergy. The vicar-gen-
...heartily endorsed the great film
...ch has been playing to capacity
...ness ever since its first presenta-
...at the Music Hall, as did Father
...k and the other prominent clergy-
...nt present.
...he boys and girls in their new ...s and dresses were taken to the
...ch in special trolley cars, in charge
...Mr. McKinny and James Quindar,
...the board of directors of the Asylum
...ciation. They assembled on Ocean
...kway opposite the Shelburne Hotel
...led by their famous band of forty ..., paraded along the boardwalk,
...then around the walks at Brighton
...Beach and in front of the Brighton
...Beach Hotel to the Music Hall, where ...they were greeted by a crowd of several hundred persons. They passed in review of the Vicar General.
The band played several patriotic airs and were enthusiastically applauded for their efforts. The entire balcony was given over to Mr. Kemble's little guests and judging from the expression on his face Mr. Kemble was the happiest man in the theatre.
In the intermission he saw to it that every one of the youngsters had a cool refreshing glass of orangeade, and in every possible manner looked after their comfort, as did the twelve pretty girl and young men ushers.
Every one of the big scenes were loudly applauded by the youngsters and the little boys and girls were noticed to have few dry eyes during the touching parts of the picture.
"Mr. Kemble certainly deserves all the thanks possible for giving these poor boys and girls such a treat. Never before have they had the opportunity to attend such a production. I personally saw hundreds turned away from the box office because all of the lower part of the house was sold out, and Mr. Kemble preferred to give the seats to the orphans of our institution. Not only that, but he took real enjoyment in it," declared Mr. McKinny as he stepped aboard the special car for home. The Sisters who greeted the youngsters on their return to the institution said that the scenes would be re-enacted and retold by the boys and girls for many days to come.

WILLIAMSPORT (Pa.) SUN
JULY 27, 1915

...AND THEATRE.

...Karon, the little auburn haired
...onder of "The Birth of a Nation" never gave better evidence of the intelligent training she has received at the hands of the master craftsman, D.
W. Griffith, than she does in her latest part, that of the little dancing girl in the four part masterpiece, "The Outcast." There is such a vividness and virility to her acting, that she makes even the smallest role distinctive. In this dramatic photoplay by the famous southern author, Thomas Nelson Page she does more. She keeps the audience constantly alive to her every movement. Three other famous Griffith stars of "The Birth of a Nation," appear, including Robert Harron, Mary Alden and Ralph Lewis. "The Outcast" will be seen at the Grand theatre today. "The Choir Boys" a pathetic story of two boyhood friends, with Mildred Harris and Bobby Rrehrer is an added attraction.—Advt.

BROOKLYN, (N. Y.) EAGLE
Date ..... JUL 27 1915

ORPHAN KIDDIES AT THEATER.

See Films and Have Big Time at Brighton.

More than 600 boys and girls, honor pupils of the various Catholic orphan asylums of the city, saw "The Birth of a Nation" at the Brighton Beach Music Hall yesterday afternoon. The party came in a special train and marched from the station to the theater, headed by the band of St. Joseph's Orphan Asylum. A more enthusiastic gathering could not have been found, for these youngsters cheered and sang and gave an added touch to the already pleasing environment wrought by the young men and women ushers dressed in the costume of the '60's.

During the intermission the crowd was treated to refreshments by the management of the theater. When the performance was over they rose and sang "The Star Spangled Banner," and after giving three long cheers for the management, formed into line and marched back to the station again, where they took their train for the city.

BROOKLYN, (N. Y.) TIMES
Date July 27, 1915

ORPHANS' PARADE AT BRIGHTON TO SEE "BIRTH OF A NATION"

Five hundred orphans of the St. John's Home were the guests of William H. Kemble, manager of the Brighton Beach Music Hall at the performance of D. W. Griffith's gigantic spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," yesterday afternoon. "It was the greatest treat the boys and girls ever had," declared Alexander McKinny, second vice president of the Catholic Orphan Asylum Association, after the production was over. This opinion was also voiced by the Right Rev. Mons. John McNamee, the Vicar General, who attended the performance, together with a number of other members of the Catholic clergy.

The Vicar General heartily endorsed the great film which has been playing to capacity business ever since its first presentation at the music hall, as did Father York and the other prominent clergymen present.

The boys and girls in their new suits and dresses were taken to the beach in special trolley cars in charge of Mr. McKinny and James Quindar, of the Board of Directors of the Asylum Association. They assembled on Ocean Parkway opposite the Shelburne Hotel and led by their famous band of forty pieces, paraded along the boardwalk, then around the walks at Brighton Beach and in front of the Brighton Beach Hotel to the Music Hall, where they were greeted by a crowd of several hundred persons. They passed in review of the Vicar General.

The band played several patriotic airs and were enthusiastically applauded for their efforts. The entire balcony was given over to Mr. Kemble's little guests and judging from the expression on his face Mr. Kemble was the happiest man in the theatre. In the intermission he saw to it that every one of the youngsters had a cool refreshing glass of orangeade, and in every possible manner looked after their comfort, as did the twelve pretty girl and young men ushers.

Every one of the big scenes were loudly applauded by the youngsters and the little boys and girls were noticed to have few dry eyes during the touching parts of the picture.

"Mr. Kemble certainly deserves all the thanks possible for giving these poor boys and girls such a treat. Never before have they had the opportunity to attend such a production. I personally saw hundreds turned away from the box office because all of the lower part of the house was sold out, and Mr. Kemble preferred to give the seats to the orphans of our institution. Not only that, but he took real enjoyment in it," declared Mr. McKinny as he stepped aboard the special car for home. The Sisters who greeted the youngsters on their return to the institution said that the scenes would be re-enacted and retold by the boys and girls for many days to come.

MILWAUKEE (Wis.) WISCONSIN
JULY 29, 1915

The band played several patriotic airs and was enthusiastically applauded for its efforts. The entire balcony was given over to Mr. Kemble's little guests, and, judging from the expression on his face, Mr. Kemble was the happiest man in the theatre. In the intermission he saw to it that every one of the youngsters had a glass of orangeade and in every possible manner [illegible] ... Gen. Grant at Appomattox. This [illegible] with

This is the fourth consecutive week of performances at the Davidson every afternoon and evening of "The Birth of a Nation," and the extensive [illegible] has attracted is evidence that the pictures are markedly popular as scenes of events which occurred during the Civil war.

In motion picture circles it is said that the success of this wonderful play, replete with romance and historic interest, marks the commencement of a new era in the photoplay industry. This photo pageant of combined fact and fiction has opened up a new field for high grade camera dramas, and when the presentation of them is undertaken on a theater circuit basis, Milwaukee will be represented.

The play visualizes battle scenes and historic events, including the assassination of President Abraham Lincoln in Ford's theater in Washington fifty years ago, in the course of a gala performance [illegible] ... Gen. Grant at Appomattox. This [illegible] with

BROOKLYN, (N. Y.) EAGLE
Date ..... JUL 27 1915

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

worth seeing.

"The Birth of a Nation," the Brighton Beach Music Hall thrilling and patriotic spectacle "The Birth of a Nation," continues to fill the auditorium to capacity, and there can be no doubt that the run will fill out the summer season. The realistic battle scenes, in themselves an unanswerable argument against war, with all its horrors; the marvelous theatrical scene of Lincoln's assassination; the delightful touches of home life in the South before the war, and the beautiful apotheosis,

Philadelphia, (Pa.) North American
Date ..... JUL 27 1915

'BIRTH OF A NATION' SHOWN AT NIXON'S, ATLANTIC CITY

Hailed wherever it has been shown as one of the most spectacular motion pictures ever attempted, "The Birth of a Nation" is duplicating at the Nixon Theater, Atlantic City, the success it has achieved in recent months in New York, Chicago and San Francisco.

The piece is a graphic presentation of the stirring days which followed the peace at Appomattox. Its theme is the birth of a nation out of the social chaos, racial hatreds, political corruption and economic turbulence which despoiled the south at the close of the war. D. W. Griffith is the producer.

Telegram, N.Y. July 26

"The Birth of a Nation" passes out of its fifth month at the Liberty Theatre with the performances this week and starts the sixth month of its successful engagement at this theatre with no signs of diminishing interest, and at the same time playing record breaking engagements in the Brighton Beach Music Hall, by the seaside here, and also in Boston, Chicago and San Francisco.

ST. LOUIS (Mo.) STAR
JULY 28, 1915

Phenomenal Run.

D. W. Griffith's spectacle "The Birth of a Nation," is well in its fourth month at the Liberty Theater, where it remains the biggest attraction of the season. This wonderful film series of history and romance retains its drawing powers in every essential, and continues to unfold a narrative of thrilling interest touching upon scenes prior to and during the Civil War.

Great battlefields, enormous armies marching to conflict, the daring rides of the Clansmen and the thousand and one details of gripping heart interest which Griffith has crowded into his story set the whole production apart from the average and make it intensely real and life-like.

BROOKLYN (N. Y.) EAGLE
Date 25 1915

Night Effects in "The Birth of a Nation."

Motion picture photography was a part revolutionized in the making of D. W. Griffith's $500,000 production "The Birth of a Nation," at the Brighton Beach Music Hall, Brighton Beach. The battle scenes, including the "Last Stand at Petersburg" and Sherman's famous "March to the Sea," were taken at night. Several inventions were made on the spot in order to get within focus of the camera the multiplicity of scenes. The great bonfire effects, burning of houses, explosion of the shells and other lurid effects were the result of ingenious inventions.

Five hundred orphans from St. John's Home will be the guests of William H. Kemble, manager, at the matinee performance tomorrow of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Music Hall, accompanied by their band.

CLIPPING FROM Newark
Newark (Mass.)
Date 7-30-15

Will Have "Birth of a Nation."

Manager Green was informed, Saturday, that the greatest picture ever taken, "The Birth of a Nation," would positively be shown in Neenah and that the advance man would call upon him within the next week or so.

PHILADELPHIA, (Pa.) INQUIRER.
JUL 25

'BIRTH OF NATION' AT SHORE

Photoplay Starts on What May Be Record Run

Special to The Inquirer.

ATLANTIC CITY, July 24.—D. W. Griffith's marvelous masterpiece, "The Birth of a Nation," is the most impressive spectacle ever staged. At the New Nixon Theatre, Atlantic City, it has successfully started on a summer run that promises to eclipse all records.

Thrilling battle scenes, love lyrics of romantic beauty, episodes of rare historical interest, and nature in its fairest garb are component parts of the most lavish production ever presented to the public. It is vital—throbbing with life and virility, of great historical and educational values—and withal a great love story that holds great audiences spellbound.

The stirring events of the Civil War and the period of reconstruction are shown in striking detail. The fighting in the trenches at Petersburg, Sherman's march to the sea and the surrender of Lee at Appomattox and the saving of the South by the Scottish Clans are faithfully reproduced.

There are two performances every day, including Sundays.

PHILADELPHIA, (PA.) RECORD.
JUL 25

"BIRTH OF A NATION"

American History Depicted on Stupendous Field.

"The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's spectacle, starts today on its second week at The New Nixon Theatre, Atlantic City. In picture form are seen stirring events of America's history, including the assassination of President Lincoln, the surrender of Robert Lee to U. S. Grant, the last gallant stand of the Confederates at Petersburg, Sherman's famous march to the sea and the saving of the South by the Ku Klux Klan. Realism is the keynote of the success of "The Birth of a Nation." To attain that, $500,000 was expended in building towns, replica of Ford's Theatre in Washington, in which Lincoln was killed, [illegible] in laying out the vast battle grounds. Then there were 18,000 people to be paid. Three thousand horses were utilized. There are over 5000 scenes. The battle scenes are said by war observers, to be the most wonderful ever presented. Thousands of soldiers are seen in the trenches, battling in breastworks, charging over fields, manning batteries in action, a panorama of marching and countermarching troops. Love episodes in which a colonel of the South loves the sister of an officer of the North, and the officer of the North loves the sister of the Colonel of the South. Love turns to hate and then to love again, as each girl watches the grim struggle with partisan eyes and remains loyal to the land of her birth. These love themes are taken from Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman" and "The Leopard's Spots."

"The Birth of a Nation" is now in its sixth month at the Liberty Theatre, New York, and there and in Chicago will be playing for a year. In Boston, San Francisco and other large cities it holds records and in [illegible] started on [illegible] to be an [illegible]

(Pa.) DISPA
Y 25, 191

Dorothy Gish: One of D. W. Griffith's Assemblage of Stars in "The Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty.

LIBERTY—"The Birth of a Nation" has been exhibited six months at this theatre, and with additional performances at Brighton Beach the attraction has been presented more than 300 times in Greater New York. D. W. Griffith has made the "Birth of a Nation" the most elaborate dramatic narrative ever unfolded on an American stage.

MOTION PICTURE WORLD (N. Y. City)

JUL 31 1915

LILLIAN GISH
"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"
(Liberty)

LIBERTY—Next week begins the sixth month of the run of D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Liberty Theatre. With additional performances at Brighton Beach, this attraction has passed its 300th presentation in Greater New York. It is the same wonderful offering that created such a stir when originally brought out and has been seen by nearly half a million people in the metropolis. Its high points of interest are the battles of the civil war, Lee's surrender at Appomattox, the reproduction of the scene of President Lincoln's assassination fifty years ago, the wild rides of the Ku Klux Klans and the multiplicity of detail which Griffith has crowded into the largest dramatic narrative ever unfolded on an American stage.

BROOKLYN, (N. Y.) EAGLE

Date JUL 29 1915

NEWS OF THE THEATRES

IN honor of Borough Night, Borough President Lewis H. Pounds, the members of his cabinet and a number of other prominent officials, attended the performance last evening of D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation," at the Brighton Beach Music Hall. Twenty-five officials were in the party, including Commissioner of Public Works Edmund Voorheis, Bridge Commissioner F. J. H. Kracke, Borough Secretary Mark Reardon, jr., John B. Creighton, secretary to the Borough President; Chief Engineer George W. Tillson, William G. Carlisle, secretary to the Public Works Commissioner; W. L. Fuquet, head of the Bureau of Superstructures; Building Superintendent P. J. Carlin, Superintendent of Highways Thomas B. Lineburg, James J. Byrnes, chief of the Bureau of Public Buildings and Offices; Edward Riegelmann, attorney to the Public Service Commission; Charles R. Ward, chief engineer of the Topographical Bureau; Herman H. Schmidt, chief engineer of the Bureau of Highways; Edwin J. Fort, chief engineer of the Bureau of Sewers; ex-Assemblyman Albert H. Bantzhaf, James B. Bouck, jr., Eric H. Palmer, President Brooklyn Press Club; Will Pounds, Charles F. Murphy and William G. Carlisle, jr.

Preceding the performance a shore dinner was served at the Shelburne Hotel, the Borough President and his party being the guests of William H. Kemble, managing director of the Brighton Beach Music Hall. The performance of "Splash Me" at the Shelburne came in for many rounds of applause.

In commenting on "The Birth of a Nation," after the performance, the Borough President said: "Simply remarkable. I never imagined that it was possible to produce such a wonderfully realistic and educating feature."

BROOKLYN, (N. Y.) TIMES

July 29, 1915

WASHINGTON (D. C.) POST

JULY 25 1915

New York Journal of Commerce

JUL 31 1915

Next week begins the sixth month of "The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's great spectacle, at the Liberty Theatre. Counting the additional performances at Brighton Beach, this attraction has passed its 300th performance in this city. Despite its long run, it has lost nothing in popularity and people are flocking to see it in almost as large numbers as when it first opened.

N. Y. Mail. July 31,

"Birth of a Nation" Now on Its Sixth Month

This week begins the sixth month of the run of D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty Theatre. With additional performances at Brighton Beach this attraction has passed its 300th presentation in Greater New York. It is the same offering that created such a stir when originally brought out and has been seen by nearly half a million people in the metropolis.

BROOKLYN, (N. Y.) EAGLE

Date JUL 29 1915

"BOROUGH NIGHT" HONORED

Borough President Pounds and Staff Hold Theater Party.

18

In honor of Borough Night, Borough President Lewis H. Pounds, the members of his staff and a number of other prominent officials, attended the performance last evening of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Brighton Beach [illegible] Twenty-five officials were in the party, including Edmund Voorheis, F. J. H. Kracke, Mark Reardon Jr., John B. Creighton, George W. Tillson, William G. Carlisle, W. L. Fuquet, P. J. Carlin, Thomas B. Lineburg, James J. Byrnes, Edward Riegelmann, Charles R. Ward, Herman H. Schmidt, Edwin J. Fort, ex-Assemblyman Albert H. Bantzhaf, James B. Bouck Jr., Eric H. Palmer, Will Pounds, Charles F. Murphy and William G. Carlisle Jr.

Preceding the performance a shore dinner was served at the Shelburne Hotel, the Borough President and his party being the guests of William H. Kemble, managing director of the Brighton Beach Music Hall.

July 29, 1915

[illegible] Borough Night, Borough President Lewis H. Pounds and [illegible] performance [illegible]

Brooklyn, (N. Y.) Standard-Union

Date .....

County, are the men who will pay the capital penalty.

POUNDS AND CABINET HAVE NIGHT'S OUTING

Friends of Administration Join in Party at Brighton Beach.

18

Borough President Lewis H. Pounds and his cabinet, with a number of friends, enjoyed a social party last night at Brighton Beach. The public officials and the others met at 6:30 o'clock in the Hotel Shelburne, where a special meal was served. After the dinner all went to the Music Hall, where "The Birth of a Nation" was witnessed.

Those who took part in the jollification included Bridge Commissioner F. J. H. Kracke, Public Works Commissioner Edmund W. Voorhies, Superintendent of Buildings Patrick J. Carlin, Chief Engineer Charles R. Ward of the Topographical Bureau, Chief Engineer Edwin J. Fort of the Bureau of Sewers, Superintendent of Highways Thomas B. Lineburgh, Herman H. Schmidt, Chief Engineer of the Highways Department, Borough Secretary Mark Reardon, Jr., John B. Creighton, secretary of the Borough President; William G. Carlisle, secretary in the Public Works Office; Edward Riegelmann, assistant counsel of the Public Service Commission; Eric H. Palmer, president of the Brooklyn Press Club; Richardson Webster, president of the Borough Hall Reporters' Association; ex-Assemblyman Albert H. T. Batzhalf; William H. Kemble, H. Clark Mooney, Edward B. Goate, Charles F. Murphy, Republican leader of the Tenth Assembly District; James J. Byrne, chief of the Bureau of Public Buildings and Offices; William Pounds, son of the Borough President; W. G. Carlisle, Jr.; George W. Tillson, chief engineer of the borough, and M. J. Fuquet.

Brooklyn, (N. Y.) Standard-Union

Date .....

[illegible] ENTERS SIXTH MONTH

D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," enters upon its sixth month at the Liberty Theatre. With additional performances at Brighton Beach, this attraction has passed its three hundredth presentation in Greater New York. Its high points of interest are the battles of the Civil War, Lee's surrender at Appomattox, the reproduction of President Lincoln's assassination and the wild rides of the Ku Klux Klans.

Brooklyn, (N. Y.) Standard-Union

Date .....

JUL 29 1915

William H. Kemble, manager of the Brighton Beach Music Hall where W. D. Griffith's wonderful [illegible] picture, "The Birth of a Nation," is being produced [illegible] to crowded houses, has decided to give the orphans of Brooklyn an opportunity to see the film, which is an instructive pictorial history of the Civil War period. The delight which the boys and girls from St. John's Home derived from seeing the picture on Monday afternoon last as the guests of Mr. Kemble has encouraged him to make arrangements to enable hundreds of orphans to witness the spectacle every [illegible]

BROOKLYN, (N. Y.) EAGLE

July 28, 1915

Recognizing the foresight of William H. Kemble and H. Clark Mooney in bringing to the Brighton Beach Music Hall "The Birth of a Nation," Borough President Pounds and his staff and other city and Federal officials will attend a "Borough Night" performance at the Music Hall this evening. In the party will be Postmaster Kelly, Sheriff Swasey, John H. McCooey, J. Riegelmann, Edmund Voorhies, Commissioner of Public Works and John B. Creighton.

ATLANTIC CITY (N. J.) GAZETTE
JULY 25. 1915

SECOND SUCCESSFUL WEEK OF "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" AT NIXON

The Most Talked of Picture Ever Produced to Start on Its Second Week of Success at This Popular Playhouse.

Matinee and Evening Performances Today.

"The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's marvelous spectacle, started today on its second successful week at the New Nixon. The history features of this presentation have attracted wide attention and educators all over the world have now been convinced that there is no more effective way to tell the story of a nation. In picture form stirring events of American history, including the assassination of President Lincoln, the surrender of Robert E. Lee to U. S. Grant, the last gallant stand of the Confederates at Petersburg, Sherman's famous march to the sea and the saving of the South by the Ku Klux Klan.

Mere words can never give a realization of the dramatic scenes, the beautiful photography and the vivid reproduction of the past. Realism is the keynote of the sucess of "The Birth of a Nation." To attain this $500,000 was expended in building towns, a replica of Ford's Theatre in which Lincoln was killed, and in laying out the vast battlegrounds. There were 18,000 people to be paid. Three thousand horses were utilized and eight months were consumed. [illegible] thousand scenes. The very stupendousness of the spectacle defies description. The battle scenes are said by Richard Harding Davis and other war observers to be the most wonderful and realistic ever presented to the American public. Thousands of soldiers are [illegible] in the trenches, battling at breastworks, charging over fields with cold steel, masked batteries in action, a panorama of marching and countermarching troops, shells exploding in the air and in the midst of the struggling masses, the carnage of battle as it really is. There could be no [illegible] argument for

It is a picture of American history which will make an indelible impression on both children and adults. Running through the historical scenes are two romantic love episodes in which a colonel of the South loves the sister of an officer of the North, and the officer of the North loves the sister of the colonel of the South. The proud spirit of the Southern girl and the equally proud spirit of the Northern maid are shown in as thrilling and soul-gripping a story as was ever staged. Love turns to hate and then to love again as each girl watches the grim struggle with partisan eyes and remains loyal to the land of her birth. These love themes are taken from Thomas Dixon's world-famous stories, "The Clansman" and "The Leopard's Spots."

The cast includes such favorites as Henry Walthall, Mae Marsh, Spottswoode Aiken, Lillian Gish, Miriam Cooper, Ralph Lewis, Robert Harron, Mary Elden, Donald Crisp and others.

The symphony orchestra of forty is a pronounced feature of every performance. The orchestration by Joseph Carl Briel is a masterpiece of illustrative music.

"The Birth of a Nation" is now in its sixth month at the Liberty Theatre in New York, and there and in Chicago it will be playing for a year to come. In Boston, San Francisco, Los Angeles and other large cities it is breaking all records and here it has started on what is evidently destined to be an all-summer run.

There are two performances daily at 2.30 and 8.30, and the prices run from 25 cents to $2.00 at night, and from 25c to $1.00 at the matinees.

[illegible] Telegraph, July 25

LIBERTY DRAWS CROWDS

"Birth of a Nation" Continues Fifth Month.

The "Birth of a Nation" now in its fifth month at the Liberty Theatre, yet its popularity is undiminished. D. W. Griffith when he produced this remarkable film and the eight months' time to making it were well known, persons going out of the theatre once buy tickets for the second time. It is a story that may be seen time without growing tiresome. For thrills the frames of critics find it hard to describe the more exciting the drama of the charge of the Confederates by the Ku Klux Klan. The film is now in many cities, and it is being seen by 300 persons view it weekly.

MILWAUKEE (Wis.) SENTINEL
JULY 25, 1915

DAVIDSON—While making a study of Griffith was prior to "The Birth of a Nation" at the Northern, D. W. Griffith, in an article published, which appeared in "Pickings" Bulletin, an organ of the Mutual Film Corporation, the battle field scenes, which were focused by the camera, of the Kit Carson Film Corporation, the [illegible] bringing with it a [illegible] contracts with each [illegible] daily at the Bijou. [illegible] Griffith's war drama, [illegible] tion of the struggle [illegible] speech, which [illegible] the union and freedom of the [illegible]

...URE FILMS.

...gins the sixth month of ... W. Griffith's spectacle ... a Nation" at the Liberty ... additional performances ... Beach this attraction has ...th presentation in greater ...t is the same wonderful ... created such a stir when ...ught out, and has been ...y half a million people in ... Its high points of in... battles of the Civil War, ...er at Appomattox, the re... the scene of President ...assination fifty years ago ... rides of the Ku Klux

LILLIAN GISH
IN THE BIRTH OF A NATION
LIBERTY THEATRE

This week begins the sixth month of the run of D. W. Griffiths' spectacle "The Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty Theatre. With additional performances at Brighton Beach this attraction has passed its three hundredth presentation in Greater New York.

N. Y. Herald - Aug 1, 1915

...its run in the L... this week. With the additional performances in Brighton Beach the film passed its three hundredth presentation in the greater city. Among its high points of interest are the scenes showing civil war battles, Lee's surrender at Appomattox, President Lincoln's assassination in Ford's Theatre fifty years ago and the wild rides of the Ku Klux Klan.

Times (N Y) Aug 1, 1915

50,000 a Week. F F

It has been estimated that "The Birth of a Nation" is being presented to more than 50,000 persons a week. This is made possible by the fact that the big Griffith film is on exhibition, not only at the Liberty, but at the Brighton Beach Music Hall, in Chicago, in Boston, at the Fair, and at Atlantic City.

...HN'S HOME BOYS AND GIRLS ...TO SEE "BIRTH ... A NATION

...Beach Music Hall.—"Birth of ...

...ton.—Vaudeville.
...—Coney Island.
...se Park.—Coney Island.
...—Vaudeville.
...—Vaudeville.
...—Dancing and Vaudeville.
...—"Splash Me."

...DE resorts such as Brighton ... and Coney Island possess an ...e capacity for pleasing the ...ude, and the greater the ... the greater the merriment ...ways something new to please ...ost confirmed pleasure seeker, ...en Miss New York and her ...sins are out for a good time ...for Coney's Isle.

BEACH MUSIC HALL.—In con... a policy he has adopted of ...rphans of Brooklyn view D. W. ...The Birth of a Nation" at the ...ach Music Hall, the manage... Kemble, has made arrange... the accommodation of children ...ew Orphan Asylum at the mat... ...nance to-morrow afternoon.

... Mr. Kemble had five hundred ...irls from St. John's Home as his ... they enjoyed the wonderful ... a display of enthusiasm and ...

Naturally the pictures of the ... of the Confederates, the march ... Sherman to the sea and the ...d counter charges of the ... and the federals filled them ...riotic fervor and they stood ... and cheered. Monsignor Mc... ...ho, accompanied the boys, and ...r, who also was with them, ex... ...miration for the picture and said ... man, women and child should ...

...onderful, I should say marvel... ... that gives an impression of ...war period that cannot be ob... ...m books," said Monsignor Mc... I am truly glad that the children ...'s Home saw the picture. It will ... to understand their studies ... much better than other ... ...Pyruski, of the Hebrew Orphan ...cepted Mr. Kemble's invitation ... several hundred of the children ...tinee performance ... will be accompanied ... Orphan Asylum ...

PRESIDENT LINCOLN SIGNING CALL FOR TROOPS, "BIRTH OF A NATION," AT THE BRIGHTON BEACH MUSIC HALL

parade around the boardwalk preceded by the band, posed for a picture in front of the Brighton Beach Music Hall and then proceed to their seats. Mr. Kemble, as in the case of the St. John's Home children, will provide them with orangeade and sweets.

"I intend to have thousands of orphans view the picture, because I think it will be a wonderful treat for them," said Mr. Kemble. "The picture is instructive and will not only entertain and thrill the children, but give them a clear insight into an important phase of American history."

N. Y. Journal Aug 2, 1915

This week begins the sixth month of the run of D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Liberty Theatre. It is the same wonderful offering that created such a stir when originally brought out and has been seen by nearly half a million people in the metropolis.

Its high points of interest are the battles of the Civil War, Lee's surrender at Appomattox, the reproduction of the scene of President Lincoln's assassination 50 years ago.

N. Y. American Aug 1, 1915

This week begins the sixth month of the run of D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Liberty Theatre. With additional performances at Brighton Beach this attraction has passed its three hundredth presentation in Greater New York. It is the same wonderful offering that created such a stir when originally brought out and has been seen by nearly half a million people in the metropolis.

Its high points of interest are the ...BROOKLYN, (N. ...

...ate .....

New "Two-Dollar" Proposition To Be Tried Out in t...

Two Medium Length and Two Short Pictures by Tri... Film Corporation at the Knickerbocker Theater.

703

F F

By the Triangle Film Corporation, as announced from D. W. Griffith's and H. E. Aitken's offices, for the first time in theatrical history, the "two-dollar" motion picture combinations of short plays is to be inaugurated at the Knickerbocker Theater on September 6.

Mr. Griffith established the $2 motion picture play in March with "The Birth of a Nation." The $2 combination, on the other hand, has never been tried. The aim is to present the same high level of excellence in an evening's entertainment, consisting of two medium-length and two short pictures. The combination will enlist the supervision of Griffith, Ince and Sennett and the services of at least four stage stars weekly. Like vaudeville in this one respect, an entirely new bill will be offered each Monday night and will be continued throughout the week.

It is said that the first week's programme will include Raymond Hitchcock in a Keystone comedy and Douglas Fairbanks in a modern European military drama under the supervision of Mr. Griffith. A Billie Burke play will be presented early in September, DeWolf Hopper will be seen in "Don Quixote" or "Wang," and Dustin Farnum, Bruce McRae, H. B. Warner and Orrin Johnson will appear in romantic roles. With more than forty stage stars working under the personal supervision of the three directors, the contribution of the Knickerbocker combination to acquire permanent records of motion picture art should be notable. President Aitken of the Triangle said yesterday:

"Great changes will be made in the Knickerbocker following the short run of 'The Girl From Utah.' The auditorium will be completely altered to suit the requirements of the directors. Picture machines specially built for the presentation of the longer and shorter plays will be installed.

Regarding the period of the Triangle Company's occupancy of the Knickerbocker Theater, there appears to be uncertainty, since two statements have been made by the parties interested. President Aitken of the Triangle issued this statement:

"I note that the Charles Frohman Company have issued a statement that they expect to retain the use of the Knickerbocker Theater next season and deny that the Triangle films are to be produced there. So that the public may not be misguided as to the future plans of that playhouse, I wish to say that I have signed a lease for the Knickerbocker Theater, which was submitted to me by Klaw & Erlanger. The term of this lease begins Monday, September 6.

"I have been doing a considerable amount of business with Klaw & Erlanger in the past six months in connection with 'The Birth of a Nation.' In all of our dealings I have found Mr. Erlanger to be a man whose word is as good as his bond. My business dealings with the firm of Klaw & Erlanger for the coming season are going to be most extensive. I believe that the announcement by the Charles Frohman Company regarding the Knickerbocker Theater must have been sent out without Mr. Erlanger's knowledge.

"More than a week ago Miss Billie Burke placed her signature on one of our contracts for motion picture work. Alf Hayman, for the Charles Frohman Company, issued a denial that we had secured Miss Burke. In spite of Mr. Hayman's habit of oft-repeated denials, I have secured Miss Burke and affixed my signature to a lease for the Knickerbocker Theater, where it is my intention to present Miss Burke in the Griffith-Ince-Sennett art, together with Mary Boland and other celebrated stage stars."

Later Messrs. Klaw and Erlanger made the following announcement in regard to the lease of the Knickerbocker: "The statements which have been circulating in the daily papers about the lease of the Knickerbocker Theater by the Triangle Film Corporation are not true. We have been in negotiation with that corporation for a rental of the Knickerbocker Theater for a period of six weeks. The Triangle Film Corporation has never wanted to assume responsibility beyond that period; nor have we as yet signed any contracts for any period whatsoever."

BROOKLYN, (N. Y.) CITIZEN

Date .....

LIBERTY THEATRE CROWDED.

"The Birth of a Nation" Retains Its Great Popularity. F F

This week begins the sixth month of the run of D. W. Griffith's spectacle "The Birth of a Nation," at the Liberty Theatre. It is the same wonderful offering that created such a stir when originally brought out and has been seen by nearly 500,000 people in the metropolis. Its high points of interest are the battles of the Civil War, Lee's surrender at Appomattox, the reproduction of the scene of President Lincoln's assassination fifty years ago, the wild rides of the Ku Klux Klans and the multiplicity of detail which Griffith has crowded into the largest dramatic narrative ever unfolded on an American stage.

Press Aug 1, 1915

This week begins the sixth month of the run of "The Birth of a Nation" in the Liberty Theatre, and with the additional performances at Brighton Beach this attraction has passed its three hundredth presentation in Greater New York and has been seen by nearly half a million people in the metropolis. Its high points of interest are the battles of the civil war, Lee's surrender at Appomattox, the reproduction of the scene of President Lincoln's assassination fifty years ago and the wild rides of the Ku Klux Klans.

Lillian Gish, "The Birth of a Nation" Liberty

N. Y. Press Aug 1, 1915

This week begins the sixth month of the run of "The Birth of a Nation" in the Liberty Theatre, and with the additional performances at Brighton Beach this attraction has passed its three hundredth presentation in Greater New York and has been seen by nearly half a million people in the metropolis. Its high points of interest are the battles of the civil war, Lee's surrender at Appomattox, the reproduction of the scene of President Lincoln's assassination fifty years ago and the wild rides

...work ... been ...ructe... ...ibrous ...amer... ...s and ...d cos... ...y suit in ...veworked ...d told ...ook to ...d com... ...the studios ...ght months.

...ed. The mail ...particularly large.

LLIAN GISH IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION," LIBERTY THEATRE

PHILADELPHIA, (Pa.) INQUIRER
AUG 1

With the Films

NEW NIXON, Atlantic City—"The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's masterpiece, is now in the third successful week of its summer run at this theatre. This will be the only engagement played in Atlantic City for the contract between the Epoch Producing Corporation and the Nixon management expressly provides that "The Birth of a Nation" will not be presented in any other theatre. This wonderful spectacle of the American military era is eminently suited to the present with the Great War in the minds of all. Civil strife that grew out of misunderstandings; battles fought over wide-stretching areas; the great, all-loving heart of President Lincoln and the little men who after his death thwarted his far-seeing plans; the victory of the North and the terrible aftermath of reconstruction—these furnish a succession of themes that [illegible] out of which impinges as vivid [illegible] 1915 as 1861-71. The fascination of the beautiful love romance, the excellent acting and perfect photo[illegible] emotional appeal of the [illegible] combine to make an offering [illegible] delightful to all classes of theatregoers.

PHILADELPHIA, (Pa.) INQUIRER
AUG 1 1915

Joseph Henabery
as Abraham Lincoln
in "The Birth of a Nation,"
New Nixon, Atlantic City

MILWAUKEE (Wis.) SENTINEL
JULY 31, 1915

DAVIDSON—Beginning with Sunday's matinee performance, "The Birth of a Nation," starts the fifth week of its Milwaukee engagement. This is a record for the northwest for any motion photoplay, with the exception of Chicago, where the same offering has enjoyed a longer run. Performances are given twice daily.

OAKLAND (Cal.) TRIBUNE
JULY 29, 1915

MACDONOUGH

D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," or as it is more generally [illegible] "The Clansman," in 12 reels, will return to the Macdonough theater for a brief return engagement commencing Monday, August 2.

Two exhibitions will be given daily, the matinee starting at 2 o'clock and the evening exhibition at 8:10.

"The Birth of a Nation" has proven to be the world's sensation in motion pictures. It is now playing to capacity audiences in New York, Chicago and Boston with the price of admission being $2 a seat.

More than $500,000 was expended in producing the film and eight months was required to complete it. More than 25,000 people and 3000 horses take part in the spectacle. In the film are seen some of the greatest battle scenes ever staged before a motion picture camera.

Among the many notable features of the film are President Lincoln's call for volunteers, the siege before Petersburg, with 24,000 soldiers seen in action in infantry attacks, cavalry charges and artillery duels, and Sherman's historical march to the sea.

MILWAUKEE (Wis.) LEADER
JULY 29, 1915

HE PORTRAYS PA[illegible] OF REFORME[illegible] NEGROES

Persons who [illegible] of a Nation," [illegible] drama of the [illegible] civil war, in the [illegible] impressed with the [illegible] play.

One of the [illegible] big cast is [illegible] Phil Stoneman, [illegible] leader who is [illegible] negroes on a [illegible] with the white[illegible]

In the picture [illegible] ing over the [illegible] position in [illegible] troops. He [illegible] pression by [illegible] he portrays.

BROOKLYN, (N. Y.) EAGLE
AUG 1 1915

MARCH TO THE SEA IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" SCREEN ARTISTS RECENTLY BEFORE THE PUBLIC

MILWAUKEE (Wis.) LEADER
JULY 20, 1915

THIS MOVIE BATTLE JUST LIKE REAL WAR

One of the stirring scenes in "The Birth of a Nation," big film spectacle now running in the Davidson. The battle scenes in this motion picture are faithful reproductions of the civil war fighting.

Theater goers as a rule let their applause suffice for the merits of a play, but "The Birth of a Nation," now attracting large crowds in the Davidson twice daily, is an attraction of such exceptional appeal that many patrons have sent written testimonials of their appreciation to Manager Sherman Brown.

Such letters, praising the historic features of the slave problem and the civil war have been received from educators, pastors and from members of patriotic societies and organizations which favor world peace and the end of the war in Europe.

The stirring events of American history which are depicted include the assassination of President Lincoln, the surrender of Lee to Grant at Appomatox, the last stand of the Confederates at Petersburg, Lincoln in a tender scene granting the mother of a Confederate soldier her plea to save him from execution.

The reproduction of Sherman's famous march to the sea is regarded as a master picture in film work, while the last stand at Peterburg has been described as the greatest battle scene of its kind ever staged.

The rides of the Ku Klux Klan that figured in the cause of justice in the reconstruction of the south after the war, [illegible] out of chaos, are pictured with startling effect.

MILWAUKEE (Wis.) LEADER
JULY 29, 1915

"BIRTH OF A NATION."

There is no cessation of interest in "The Birth of a Nation," the motion picture drama of the civil war, now running in the Davidson.

Theater parties from Wisconsin cities come to Milwaukee almost every day to see the pictures, the patronage exceeding that ever attracted here by noted dramatic stars.

In the early scenes of the play which depicts a double romance between northern and southern characters, negro life is shown in the south and the troublesome slave problem is defined.

It is said that the total expense of production was $500,000.

JULY 25, 1915
OKLAHOMA (Okla.) OKLAHOMAN

State rights for "The Birth of a Nation" are bringing big sums of money. The rights of fourteen states were offered for $75,000 this week. The states are Minnesota, Iowa, South Dakota, North Dakota, Arizona, New Mexico, Colorado, Utah, Wyoming, Idaho, Nebraska, Kansas, Montana and Nevada. In this territory there are 866 playing points, with 938 theaters and a population of 10,983,103.

CHRONICLE. July 24
SAN FRANCISCO CAL.

"The Birth of a Nation" or The Clansman, [illegible] in its fourteenth week at the Alcazar Theater, and it has completely justified the claim that in it D. W. Griffith has produced the greatest motion picture ever made. Despite the fact that according to incontrovertible box office records of sold tickets, "The Clansman" has been seen by 200,000 persons, its popularity remains unabated. Two exhibitions are given daily, the matinee presentation beginning at 2 o'clock and the evening at 8:10.

[illegible] rough Night, Bor[illegible] H. Pounds and [illegible] performance [illegible] "The [illegible]

...PLEASED

...ation" never fails to ...rouse sympathy.

...ersons have wondered why ...of a Nation" at the Liberty ...made such a stupendous hit. ...can readily be explained that ...use of the real human interest ...runs like a golden thread ...the drama. The climax ...use it rings with the note of ...the tale is presented in such ...way that it cannot fail to ...sympathy of the beholder. ...reason is found in the con- ...he South is pictured rich, happy ...inful before the Civil War and ...vealed the horror of the conflict ...it brought. Afternoons and ...he theatre is always filled and ...audiences leave, almost with- ...tion, they admit that it was ...most interesting feature films ...saw.

...UKEE (Wis.) LEADER
JULY 21, 1915

Times Aug 3, 1915

"The Birth of a Nation" will resume its three hundredth and seventy-sixth showing in the Liberty Theatre this week.

...INCOLN SIGNING ACT ...O FREE THE SLAVES

...rom "The Birth of a Nation," now running in the Davidson.

...NTIC CITY (N. J.) REVIEW
JULY 21, 1915

CLIPPING FROM

Review Atlantic City N.J. 7/21/15

BIG SPECTACLE AT NIXON ONLY

D. W. Griffith's superb spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," enters to-day upon the second week of its successful Summer run, at the New Nixon Theater. The only opportunity in sec this wonderful production in Atlantic City will be during the present run because the contract between the Epoch Producing Corporation and the Nixon management expressly provides that "The Birth of a Nation" will not be presented in Atlantic City in any other theater than the New Nixon.

The story of this wonderful historical and romantic offering begins in the seventeenth century with the coming of African slaves to America. Its progress is closely related to phases of the slavery question and its bearing upon the history of the United States. In the wake of the abolition movement comes the Civil War with its terrible battles: Sherman's march to the sea, the burning of Atlanta; the fall of Petersburg; Lee's surrender to Grant; the assassination of President Lincoln; the ordeal of the Reconstruction period; the Ku Klux Klan's solution of the problem and the final establishment of an everlasting peace. These historic scenes are all shown in a way that links history to romance. It is all portrayed upon the largest plan ever conceived and executed by any artist in the world.

There are thrills and throbs enough for several plays and the appeal is gripping and vital. There are two performances daily.

...in the "Birth of a Nation," ...Nixon Theater This Week.

...Wash.) POST-INTEL.
JULY 27, 1915

...ek of Griffith's ... "Birth of a Nation," ... the Clemmer theater ... ...eks, has only a few more days ...here. Next week it will go to ... This picture has told a story ...o one who has seen it will ever ... It arouses the same enthusi... ...hat it did on the afternoon of ...ing. The person who can sit ...ry through without showing ... must be callused of heart and

...LAND (Md.) PRESS
JULY 9, 1915

EMPRESS THEATRE

ATLANTIC CITY (N. J.) REVIEW
JULY 21, 1915

GRANT AND LEE AT APPOMATTOX AS SHOWN IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" AT THE NEW NIXON THIS WEEK.

MILWAUKEE (Wis.) LEADER
JULY 21, 1915

THEATERS

DAVIDSON—Third week of gigantic photo spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation." Sherman's march to the sea and the burning of an entire town which was especially built for the purpose are some of the thrilling scenes.

"BIRTH OF A NATION."

Joseph Henabery, who plays the role of President Abraham Lincoln in "The Birth of a Nation," the noted historical motion picture drama of the civil war in the Davidson, is credited with an impersonation true to life.

Aged persons who knew Lincoln and who have seen the pictures have said that the impersonation of the martyred president could not have been more complete.

In the picture, attended by members of his cabinet, Lincoln is seen in the act of signing the proclamation which emancipated the negro slaves. In another part of the interesting play, the president is shown in the act of granting a pardon to a Confederate officer sentenced to death, yielding to the appeal of the prisoner's mother and fiancee.

Civil war history is depicted all through the play, the pictures being produced with accurate, historic detail. In the assassination of Lincoln by John Wilkes Booth, the actor, the stage setting is an exact reproduction of Ford's theater in Washington. Booth is shown firing the fatal shot, leaping from the boxes to the stage and shouting defiance as he made his way out and escaped.

"The Birth of a Nation," is regarded by motion picture experts as a production of lasting merit which will be exhibited all over the civilized world.

SAN FRANCISCO (Cal.) BULLETIN
JULY 28, 1915

Evelyn Vaughan Will Return to the Alcazar

Today's matinee will usher in the fifteenth and last week of D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" or "The Clansman," at the Alcazar Theater. Following the motion picture, and commencing Monday night, August 2, the Alcazar Theater will return to its former reign of dramatic offerings with Bert Lytell and Evelyn Vaughan and their own companw of New York players in a season of comedies and dramas. In the repertoire of these two popular stars will be found all of the recent New York successes and the first play will be "The Misleading Lady."

Review. Atlantic City. N.J.

SPECTACLE HAS STIRRING APPEAL

"Birth of a Nation" Has Strong Influence On Patriotism

Everybody interested in the possibilities of war finds in David W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," a thrilling association with the issues of to-day. The great crises of 1861-'71 was pictureed in the play have their lesson for Americans of the present. The North and South of Sherman's march to the sea; Lee's surrender to Grant and the aftermath of war in the Reconstruction period—all these form a series of martial and political events that enchain the spectator's interests. Out of that terrible conflict a new nation, united by spiritual as well as geographical ties, was born. The fire of American patriotism never burned brighter than it burns to-day, and the play which shows the evolution from the past to the present has found a warm welcome at the New Nixon Theater.

Before the production of "The Birth of a Nation," such dull times had fallen upon the theater that long lines of "queues" of buyers have been noticeably absent. It took the Griffith production of pictures and music to bring back the big advance sale days. New New York's Broadway, Chicago's Loop and Boston's Tremont Street look like old times again, with the box office forces doubled and the lines of patrons stretching to the curb and even to the next street. The same phenomenon has been repeated in every city visited. It seems of course, that the high-class theater is not moribund. It only needed the touch of Griffith's master wizardy to again infuse it with life.

SAN DI...

703

Acting on behalf of ... lodge Knights of ... preme Director ... nd Supreme ... Giles have ... the invitation ... Manager Barr of the Empire Theatre to attend a special performance of "The Clansman" tonight. The offer ... supreme ... nd local lodges and their women will attend as guests of Manager Barr and the Clansman Company, and a section of the lower floor has been reserved for their especial use. It is expected that many hundreds of the visiting members of the different lodges will attend this special performance given in their honor and every precaution has been taken by the management to assure the comfort of all. The performance will begin promptly at 8 o'clock as usual and a cordial welcome is extended to all who come to witness the production.

Review. Atlantic City. N.J. July 21.

"BIRTH OF A NATION" A MIGHTY PROSPECT

Griffith, In Planning Spectacle, Masters Tremendous Mass of Detail

When you see D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle "The Birth of A Nation," which has taken Atlantic City by storm since it opened at the new Nixon Sunday night the first thing you do is to wonder how on earth one man ever kept track of so vast a subject and crowded so much into this powerful narrative.

This is an old story with Griffith. Like most men who make their mark in a chosen calling he has an infinite capacity for detail. Nothing is too large or small to escape his interest if it bears upon the subject he is handling. In the case of the big spectacle he was fully fortified before he began. It may be interesting to note how he went about it. When the financial sponsors of the big production first notified Mr. Griffith that they had chosen the theme of "The Clansman" for his next great picture he set about to familiarize himself with everything relating to the story and the facts of history which had prompted it originally. Four university professors looked after this end of the work for him and nightly reported the results of their research work in relation to the drama which Griffith was shaping up in his mind. At the same time military experts and West Point men were laying out the plans for the reproduction of some of the greatest battles that had ever been fought in the world. One by one each department was organized and instructed in exactly what Griffith wanted. Meanwhile the director and his expert camera men were roaming about the country selecting ideal spots in the various localities for the scenes of their action. This matter of topographical selection is something Griffith never entrusts to any of his subordinates. Out of the mass of detail he was ready when the time arrived to go ahead with his task of direction. He produced his picture in an incredibly short time when he started the actual work of photographing the different scenes and incidents.

It was the patient preparatory work that counted in the end. Cities had been laid out, towns built, roads reconstructed, great battlefields made over, thousands of soldiers drilled for the camera, warfare other thousands of riders and horses trained for their part and costumes and everything all laid out in readiness. When he started it worked out smooth as clock work. All told from the time he took up the book to make his production until the first completed copy of it came from the studios he had consumed exactly eight months.

SPOKANE (Wash.) CHRONICLE
JULY 23, 1915

DECORATING FOR BIRTH OF NATION

Clemmer Theater Being Prepared for Engagement of Civil War Film.

Decorators are busy at the Clemmer theater today, making ready for the advent of "The Birth of a Nation," which will open its engagement there next Monday afternoon.

Big American flags will be used throughout the house, being draped from the walls and balconies. Pictures of President Lincoln, General Grant and General Lee, central figures in the film spectacle, also are to be hung.

Music for the picture will be played by Oliver Wallace, organist of the Clemmer theater in Seattle. Reservations for the engagement are being made at the theater, a strong demand being reported. The mail is particularly large.

[illegible] THE CLANSMEN

[illegible] director who at-[illegible] moment
[illegible] Yet Director Griffith has [illegible] in a manner to startle the [illegible] and the police!

[illegible] admits today that had [illegible] the obstacles which he [illegible] in picturizing a struggle
[illegible] aspects are as nothing
[illegible] to its psychological phases
[illegible] which from its very nature
[illegible] handled with strength yet
[illegible] delicacy, he would
[illegible] at undertaking the task
[illegible] the way was already [illegible] by another dramatist.

[illegible] picturing, with absolute [illegible] accuracy such facts as the [illegible] of Atlanta, the battle of [illegible] the terrific fights between [illegible] Klux Klan and the negroes,
[illegible] that were witnessed by many [illegible] now living.

[illegible] faithfully reproducing the [illegible] mannerisms of such men as [illegible] Grant and Lee, whose every [illegible] is familiar to the public, and [illegible] staging the various scenes
[illegible] they appeared.

[illegible] realize that all this must be [illegible] to the human interest of [illegible] story, the manner in which the [illegible] struggle affected individual lives,
[illegible] presentation of the trying prob-
[illegible] which beset both sides.

[illegible] physical difficulties are [illegible] and it is with these that [illegible] story is principally concerned.

* * *

[illegible] begin with, half a dozen men
[illegible] made up for the character of [illegible] One man was found who [illegible] the part to perfection, but it [illegible] impossible to train him for [illegible] small amount of acting which [illegible] to do; so others were succes-
[illegible] tried, until the satisfactory re[illegible] was obtained, which we find in [illegible] picture. Joseph Hennaberry
[illegible] an ideal Lincoln.

[illegible] Walthall was found to be the [illegible] type of southern gentleman;
[illegible] was a delicious Florence;
[illegible] Cooper is beautiful and ef-[illegible] as Margaret; Lillian Gish is [illegible] as Elsie; Donald Crisp was an [illegible] Gen. Grant; and Josephina
[illegible] Spottiswoode Aitken, Ralph
[illegible] Elmer Clifton, Robert Harron,
[illegible] Biegmann, Walter Long, Mary
[illegible] Sam de Grasse, Howard Gaye, [illegible] de Vaull and Jennie Lee were [illegible] cast.

[illegible] was naturally the first big [illegible] encountered. Finally Dr.
[illegible] a well-known professor of [illegible] of the University of Southern [illegible] was secured for the re[illegible] work, and spent two months in [illegible] exact data and correct de-

* * *

[illegible] to find a suitable location
[illegible] the staging of the big battle scenes, [illegible] the next difficulty. After much [illegible] a location was discovered in [illegible] San Fernando Valley. The bat-
[illegible] were all laid out, the artil-
[illegible] in place, the troops had been [illegible] at great expense. Di-
[illegible] Griffith had planted field tele-[illegible] and a signal tower for the [illegible] of the scenes, when presto!
[illegible] ranger appeared and said
[illegible] was danger of fire, and would [illegible] people and war paraphernalia
[illegible] move on! It took five days to [illegible] another location, and another two [illegible] equip the field. Then a fire did [illegible] break out, and the gallant [illegible] had to turn themselves into [illegible] fighters.

The matter of finding enough sol-[illegible] for the battle scenes was an-[illegible] big problem. First there was [illegible] trouble about permitting sol-
[illegible] of the National Guard to par[illegible] but after some measuring of [illegible] tape, militiamen were obtained.
[illegible] the rest, employment agencies
[illegible] besieged, and all the extra peo[illegible] in the business were brought into [illegible] parks and streets corners were
[illegible]

The [illegible] difficulty, however, so far
[illegible] obtaining people was concerned,
[illegible] the finding of the necessary ne-
[illegible] The word some way went [illegible] South, and many came up from there.
[illegible] drilling and training of these was [illegible] a big task, occupying eight
[illegible]

* * *

The question of military tactics
[illegible] and three former West Point-
[illegible] Ralph Northcott, Eugene Fer-
[illegible] and Harry Allison, came West
[illegible] assisted Mr. Griffith in arranging [illegible] battle scenes. Three old soldiers, [illegible] commissioned officers in the war, who [illegible] taken part in the battle men-
[illegible] were brought from the Sol-[illegible] Home to assist in staging the [illegible] scenes. Result: Exact repro-
[illegible] of the evacuation and burn-[illegible] of Atlanta, and the battle of [illegible] with trenches, breast-
[illegible] and artillery in action, in same [illegible] as in original battle. This [illegible] accomplished, by the way,
[illegible] many amusing altercations
[illegible] the aforesaid old soldiers!

Before the battle scenes could take [illegible] correct artillery must be ob-
[illegible] A Civil War battle with mod[illegible] artillery would be a farce. Finally [illegible] government consented to loan can-
[illegible] used in the Civil War, which deco-[illegible] the Presidio at San Francisco, [illegible] first time in the history of [illegible] battle scenes, explosive [illegible] used, and these shells were [illegible] the same mortars that [illegible] Civil War. These [illegible] a specialty now.
[illegible] report $50 each.

Naturally the big battle scenes were most difficult of direction. Mr. Griffith met the problem by latest war methods. The battlefield stretched its length over two miles. A tower 160 feet high was erected at one end of the field, and Mr. Griffith directed from this point of vantage. At the rear of both armies telephone wires were strung, and at a distance of every fifty yards a telephone operator was stationed with a receiver strapped to his ear. The telephone wires were connected with the tower. At Mr. Griffith's elbow was an ex-army officer. When the director desired a certain part of the infantry to advance or fall back, the cavalry to charge or the artillery to shell a certain position, he "gave the order" to the officer at his side. The officer transmitted it by telephone to the operator located at the point where Mr. Griffith desired the movement to take place. The operator then gave the command to the officer in charge of the troops at that point, with the result that the military maneuvers were executed with only an instant's delay.

* * *

The battle of Petersburg was at last going merrily on, when bing! Everything had to stop on account of the eight-hour union rule. The trenches were being dug by union men who refused to work after 5 o'clock, and the fate of the battle was left hanging in mid-air until another day. This was of course a matter of great expense and endless trouble to the director.

For the first time in the history of motion pictures, night battle scenes were taken, and the pictures of refugees fleeing from the burning city of Atlanta is one of the most striking incidents of "The Clansman."

The horse which Gen. Lee rods was the cause of another big hold-up. Mr. Griffith suddenly discovered he didn't know whether it was a black or white horse, and the battlefield being thirty-eight miles from a telephone or telegraph, the battle was delayed until a messenger could be dispatched to telegraph to the nearest library for the information.

When it came to obtaining pictures of the old State House in Columbia, S. C., where the negro Congress assembled, a newspaper of the city was telegraphed, and took the required pictures, which were sent Mr. Griffith, and from which he built his set.

The difficulty and expense of transporting so many people to and from the battlefields were immense. All the auto trucks, hay wagons and automobiles available were pressed into service. The commissary department was also a big question, and it is whispered that one day supplies to feed the crowd failed to arrive, and for a whole day everybody, from Director Griffith down, worked on an empty stomach. It is reported that the fighting shown in the pictures on this occasion is unusually realistic.

* * *

In staging the southern scenes in the cottonfields, many darkies had to be subsidized to appear in the pictures, which were taken in the Louisiana cotton fields. At the outset an epidemic of grippe broke out, and many of the darkies were laid low for a week or more.

The building of the interior of Ford's Theater is a replica of this playhouse at the time the assassination took place, with an exact reproduction of the play which was going on.

When an old southern town was needed, an entire city was built, including brick sidewalks, old southern homes, churches and stores, duplicating the ante-bellum period and lending realism and atmosphere to the pictures.

Six months were consumed and $500,000 spent in the making of the great film.

And now, as one last great difficulty, comes the protest of the darkies and the interference of the police against the exhibition of the picture next week at Clune's Auditorium. Just what the outcome will be is impossible to state, but it seems safe to prophesy that after surmounting so many obstacles, David Griffith, like "Sentimental Tommy," will "find a way."

The allegorical finish to "The Clansman" is said to involve some new photographic discoveries of Griffith, and to be one of the most beautiful pieces of the photo-dramatist's art that has ever been shown.

SAN FRANCISCO (Cal.) CHRONICLE
JULY 26, 1915

Long Run of "Clansman" at Alcazar to Close

Today's matinee will usher in the fifteenth and last week of D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," or "The Clansman," at the Alcazar Theater. This production has broken all records for motion picture runs in this city. Next Sunday night will witness its last showing.

RUSH OF [illegible] CALLS AT NIXON

Telephone Reservations for "Birth of Nation" Necessitates Extra Operator

So many telephone orders are being received at the New Nixon for D. W. Griffith's superlative spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," that it has been found necessary to employ an additional telephone operator. In this way inquiries and orders for seats will receive the most prompt and careful attention. Because of the large attendance it is advisable for patrons to make their reservations in advance.

The first half of thi sgreat production remains the same stirring series of exciting events ranging from the picturesque days of the Old South to the inspiring period of the Civil War. Then comes the graphic reproduction of the assasination of President Lincoln and the second half is devoted to the baleful days of the reconstruction period.

At the close is shown the new era of the negro race giving scenes at Hampton, Virginia, which evidence the progress made by that people since the period of fifty years ago.

"The Birth of a Nation" is a complete pictorial story of the most momentous years in the history of the United States. No writer has ever been able to tell so vividly the story of the times that tried men's souls. It is not a revelation of the future, but a recrudescence of the past. Nothing so stupendous has ever before been shown to the public. It is educational but more than that it is interesting and entertaining. There are two performances every day, including Sunday, at 2.30 and 8.30.

"BIRTH OF NATION" SCORED

Thinks Wrong Views Have Been Taken of History.

Editor Brooklyn Daily Eagle:

I have visited twice "The Birth of the Nation" moving pictures. My judgment is that it ought to be either modified or withdrawn. By its agonizing appeals to tender sympathy, and its misstatements of history in the programme, it is galvanizing the dormant seeds of State sovereignty virus. It is a racketty and hair-lifting production, but it gives a false tone and is ripping up old sores. It is bringing discredit to the National Government, and its war records. All through this panorama there is exaggeration of both good and evil—the good among the secessionists and the evil of personal marauders in the National Army and the adventurers in reconstruction. Beware of war. They who commence it must suffer the consequences of fallen human nature. I was through the Civil War, from the first hour to the last, and was considerably awake before and after it. The author of this show gives in his programme very erroneous texts. He represents the would-be seceders as a lovely, refined, Utopian, Christian people, invaded and outraged by barbarous Huns. He does not state that our brethren commenced war upon "the best Government the world ever saw," in a "causeless and wicked rebellion," slaughtering a quarter of a million of patriots who were defending the authority of their nation and bringing sorrow to every loyal family in the land, North, South, East and West. The title of these "movies" is a misnomer, an anachronism. The nation did not have its birth in the '60s. It was conceived in 1776, born in 1778, confirmed in 1787, and grew to a giant down to 1861 when he defended his life the best he knew how.

Dr. Griffith, the author, says: "Peaceful secession was scarcely disputed, North or South." What! Two millions of Americans rushed immediately to arms against disrupting the Union, and the wisdom of congresses, legislatures, the pulpit and the press sustained them. Although Massachusetts talked secession, she never tried it. President Jackson sent a Kentucky colonel there with a Federal battalion to watch them. He reported back to the Government that they did no act disloyal to the Government. Dr. Griffith should put in his programmes that the Colonies, in declaring their independence, used the phrase "these United States," and called themselves "one people." The word "States" was simply an abstract compliment, and while in co-operative war they forestalled any State sovereignty and declared four times that the Union should be "perpetual." In that compact every vestige of sovereignty was denied the Colonies. They never had an instant of sovereignty from Christopher Columbus down to this time. In 1787 this "perpetual" Union was made a "more perfect Union." So we see the nation was born then, and after about eighty years of knitting together was saved in the '60s. It is a canon of saw that a nation will not give up its life without a struggle. But what happened? Human slavery was our world-wide disgrace and a degradation to both white and black races. It demanded a separate Government. It is true that they had a Constitutional right to take a slave like a horse into the territories, but Alexander Stevens, in pleading against secession, said: "Show me a single instance where the Federal Government has encroached upon the legal rights of the South." Again he said to the Georgia Legislature: "If you secede for the Constitutional election of Mr. Lincoln, you will be wrong, and posterity will execrate you." WILLIAM HEMMENWAY
(Formerly Captain and [illegible] Lieutenant Colonel [illegible] Infantry.)

MILWAUKEE (Wis.) SENTINEL
JULY 21, 1915

[illegible] Fighters in "The Birth of a [illegible]

Interest in "The Birth of a Nation," pictorial drama of the civil war at the Davidson, is so keen that reservations have been made by committees of social clubs so that the entire membership of each may view the pictures in a body. Pastors, old soldiers and educators who have seen the pictures have sent letters to Manager Sherman Brown expressing their appreciation.

Romance, home life and slavery before and during the war are depicted with historic features of [illegible] which include the assassination of President Lincoln, the surrender of Grant at Appomattox, the [illegible] the confederates at Petersburg, Lincoln in a tender scene in his home, the pleas of the mother of a soldier, saving him from [illegible]

The last stand at Petersburg is said to be the greatest battle scene of its kind ever staged. In the battle union soldiers are fighting from behind breastworks.

[illegible]NE (Wash.) CHRONICLE 851
JULY 26, 1915

NO CHANGE IN "BIRTH OF A NATION" IS GLASGOW'S ADVICE

[illegible] have demanded for ob[illegible] of some of the scenes in "The Birth of a Nation," the photo play to[illegible] which is to be shown at the Clemmer here for two weeks, beginning [illegible] 2, but these scenes are not intrinsically objectionable by warrant their suppression, for the entire play would suffer for as the result, according to Commissioner Sam Glasgow.

Mr. Glasgow, censor of public amusements, returned this morning from Seattle, where on instructions from the city council, he witnessed a production of this elaborate film drama of the civil war and the elimination of reconstruction.

"The colored people have the same grounds for objections to one or two parts of scenes in 'The Birth of a Nation,' that the Irish and Jews of Spokane have had for objection to shows and films that portrayed members of their races in ridiculous or unfavorable light," said Mr. Glasgow today.

"Nevertheless, my observations and investigations at Seattle have proved to me that the local colored people are unduly excited over the coming of the picture to this city, and have an unwarranted fear of the results it may have.

No Injury to Negroes.

"The scenes to which the local colored folks have raised objection are quite essential to the rest of the photo play, which, I must say, is the most magnificent I have ever seen, but these are really lost in the remainder of the production. Careful investigation at Seattle failed to produce a single instance where the scenes have reacted to the detriment of the negro.

"As a matter of fact, it is very much as Mayor Gill of Seattle stated—the [illegible]play deals with [illegible] in reality a [illegible] the whites than [illegible]

"One of the scenes which [illegible] by the colored people [illegible] Yeast, a negro who [illegible] girl, has been [illegible] It is not being [illegible] have the power [illegible] the Center [illegible] his arms will [illegible] Theater in Seattle [illegible] 'In view of the [illegible] disturbances.'"

JULY 28, [illegible]
OAKLAND (Cal.) Tribune

AUG. — 1915

How "The Birth of a Nation" Was Created

by Theodore Mitchell

AN apparently trivial chain of circumstances called Chance has often served to guide a man into final success. The rise of r. D. W. Griffith as the foremost director motion picture production in America a half-told story before it begins.

The difference is in the way Griffith ound his metier. This young actor rrived in New York about seven seasons go after a rather disastrous tour with a ell-known star. He had dreams and opes, but he was short on funds. Spurred y the thought of an unproductive summer efore him, young Griffith decided to turn s hand at poetry and short stories. The in soul of the artistic temperament—orbidity—held him just in this period of progression. After reading Nietzsche d Poe and kindred authors, his thoughts d literary effort necessarily reflected their rit. He sold a poem to Mr. John A. icher, and had submitted one or two ird short stories which were not, how-er, favored at the editorial conference. icher took an interest in the young an, and suggested that he seek a wholly nexpected outlet for his work, and this ance suggestion determined a career.

"These moving picture fellows are look-g for odd subjects, I am told," he in-med young Griffith one day. "Why n't you make this story into a scenario d try your hand in that direction?"

Young Griffith had the dramatic fervor, d the idea took root. He had completed play and submitted it to David Belasco. The "movies" were then not much in favor in legitimate dramatic circles, and the embryo dramatist feared a picture success might impair his idealistic literary ambitions. The play was finally produced. It had merit, but lacked popular appeal, and a few weeks' run found it removed with many others which have followed its fate, to the warehouse morgue.

Necessity was still tugging at the young actor-writer. In desperation he turned to the moving-picture field, which his editor friend had mentioned, as a last resort. They took his scenarios, but never produced them. But he was so persistent that one of the men of the concern suggested that he take a position as an actor with them until he could become better acquainted with what was required in motion picture stories. The pay was five dollars a day, and that was better than borrowing from friends, and Griffith took up acting in motion pictures. From the day he entered his first studio he became a "movie fan." He haunted the shop and wanted to know everything that could be learned.

Moving pictures were in their swaddling clothes in those days, and Griffith's genius found full vent. One-reel affairs of crude style were then produced, and there were already fixed traditions of the business, which, it was declared, must never be violated.

The spirit of the iconoclast is strong in Griffith. It manifested itself in those earlier days of his motion picture novitiate. He bombarded the directors and producers

COUNTY TURNPIKES COMMANDEERED
For the Ku Klux ri s with m y hundred horses, miles of highway were appropriated for a day at a time riffith as he sauntered over the scenes ching snatches of old plantation melo-es, and the "heart songs" he hummed ring the time, he was working out a w scene in his story. At other times he s suggesting music of operatic scope, hich under his supervision was being inter-woven into an accompanying score, some of the most pretentious music ever written as a part of a motion picture production.

This mass of material under the guiding destiny of its creator assumed shape and symmetry after months of preparation and rehearsal.

A SET "IN ONE"
Being only a small fraction of the eight-square-mile-stage of one of the battles of "The Birth of a Nation"

APPOMATTOX
Generals Grant and Lee and their staffs made living d n a ain in "The Birth of a Nation" to pass judgment. The manager of the concern took the broad view of the situation. The pictures were needed to fill orders and the worst that could befall was to fail in an effort, but they would learn if the public desired the change. The reels were turned loose, and requests from exhibitors began coming in, asking for more of those funny and grewsome pictures where the people floated into the story without arms or feet at times.

This settled Griffith's career. His acting was over, and he became a director with free rein to try his experiments. This marked an important step in the evolution of the motion picture in America. In rapid succession he invented the "switch back," the fading out of figures on the screen by a trick of the camera, and the newer effect of "dissolving in." These are now commonplaces of the art. The "switch back" is nothing but utilizing the old form of novels of jumping backward and forward in the lives of their characters to show the relationship of one chapter to er in contrasted incidents. The t" is the idea where the figure y disappears from the picture without moving. The "dissolving in" is the trick of photographing one picture upon another so that a new character arrives into the action from the mysterious nowhere.

As his technical knowledge widened, Mr. Griffith began to enlarge the entire scope of motion picture production. The old one-reelers were too limited to permit free rein for his pretentious ambitions, and he began casting about for feature stories for his pictures. He also began developing players to put his ideas across the screen to the audiences. It would take more than one big book to record all the new things he tried, the innovations he made and the players developed. At the end of four years he made this modest little film concern a mighty force in a new form of expression. The men who had laughed at him had grown rich, and when he had left the old plant where they had scoffed at him as a dreamer, he was drawing a salary of $50,000 a year.

Literature may have lost a Balzac, the stage a successful dramatist, or a good actor, but this much is certain, the motion picture art had been inspired by a new his logic was correct.

Now everybody in the profession assured him he was crazy, but that was an old cry to him. He had been listening to this talk for years, every time he wanted to do something different. The financial backers were prevailed upon to let him take the matter in his own hands, and he began the preliminary work of launching the first two-dollar moving picture in the world in New York City. That picture is "The Birth of a Nation." It has been seen in a few large cities and is the sensation of the year, having been played to over a million people in less than four months, with receipts that rattled the dry bones of tradition in the box office. The total cost of the picture was nearly $500,000, and the receipts of five months more than absorbed this amount and it has proven the most profitable single production ever known in the photo-play world compared to the number of times and places it has been presented.

Griffith, the dreamer, is back in California again, working on another picture and dreaming more dreams. He insists that the day is not far distant when the people will pay as high as five dollars for a seat to see a motion picture. Look back over what he has accomplished in three years, and suspend judgment before you join in the chorus he has heard so often—as to dreamers being impractical—in a day when the people are still crying for something new and great, irrespective of the mere pecuniary cost. Daniel Webster's vision of "still more room at the top" still remains an inspiration to dreamers.

In far-off California amid the environments of the splendid out-of-doors theater in which the great photo drama, "The Birth of a Nation," was born, I first was receiving congratulations of friends and admirers, the world over, and It seemed to me the world over, and born in the border state after the war had closed, should have produced this remarkable photo-play.

It has the concentrated intensity of an encyclopedia filled with dramas, and while imbued with the border state spirit he has most intelligently attuned the sentiment of his play to the spirit of a united nation and yet given us flashes of the intense

A "DETAIL"
A vital instant among the hundreds of scenes that make the Lincoln assassination vivid realism feeling and passion of fifty years ago. There has been a feeling among the colored people that some portions of it did an injustice to their race, but if viewed from a broad standpoint it is not an attack on a race, but only reveals conditions that should create admiration and sympathy for what the colored race have accomplished since the days of Reconstruction. It is a graphic revelation of the evil of the carpet-baggers, who in these days have few sympathizers or defenders.

To look at these scenes taken in the San Fernandino Valley by cameras covering presented in Boston, the seat of very bitter memories on the race question. It was presented in Boston even against the author's wishes, but even in Boston, when all the facts and real purposes were known, and when it was established that "The Birth of a Nation" has eliminated the materially offensive phases of the play, which in no permanent way add to its strength, the likelihood is that "The Birth of a Nation" will continue for many years to be the great triumph of photoplays, and indeed represents the birth of new ideas as well as new ideals in moving pictures.

After witnessing a production like "The Birth of a Nation," the cheap, tawdry productions of ordinary reel scenarios in their early inception seem indeed out of date and passe. The exploitation of this play also indicates that producers must give some attention to have still pictures of their reproduction made while in process of construction in order to give the people some idea on the printed page of the scenes they are to witness, and also eliminating the ghostly pallor of flashlight pictures. If it is possible to tone down that ghostly, stagey "make-up" which moving picture actresses seem determined to practice, daubing themselves as if to say, "Look at me again and know ye all that I am a moving picture actor and not a human common being," it will be a long step forward. It is possible that they think that they must impress on the screen the fact that they are "real actors," while the real genius of acting in moving pictures, as well as before the footlights, is to eliminate all stagey flavor and just give us that which is sweet and wholesome comporting with the naturalness and wholesomeness of a real human being among the trees, on the street, at home, or wherever they are portrayed, even amid the scenic effects secured in "locations" far afield.

AMBITION'S TRAIL

If all the end of this continuous striving
Were simply to attain,
How poor would seem the planning and contriving,
The endless urging and the hurried driving
Of body, heart and brain!

But ever in the wake of true achieving,
There shines this glowing trail—
Some other soul will be spurred on, conceiving
New strength and hope, in its own power believing,
Because thou didst not fail.

Not thine alone the glory, nor the sorrow
If thou dost miss the goal,
Undreamed of lives in many a far morrow
From thee their weakness or their force shall borrow—
On, on, ambitious soul.

—Ella Wheeler Wilcox, in "Poems of Power."

Dobbs Ferry Register

DOBBS FERRY, N. Y.

AT THE THEATRES

Liberty

D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" is still breaking records at this theatre. Last week marked its turning into the fifth month of its run in New York. With the exception of the year's biggest musical comedy hit, it is said, the receipts at the Liberty have exceeded those of any other attraction in town. Great masses of people and thousands of horses are seen in this spectacle.

CLIPPING FROM Brooklyn Life

Date Brooklyn N.Y. 7-24-15

ABRAHAM LINCOLN AS PORTRAYED IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION"
At the Brighton Beach Music Hall

Review. July 24
ATLANTIC CITY N.J.

RUSH OF PHONE CALLS AT NIXON

Telephone Reservations for "Birth of Nation" Necessitates Extra Operator

So many telephone orders are being received at the New Nixon for D. W. Griffith's superlative spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," that it has been found necessary to employ an additional telephone operator. In this way inquiries and orders for seats will receive the most prompt and careful attention. Because of the large attendance it is advisable for patrons to make their reservations in advance.

The first half of thi sgreat production remains the same stirring series of exciting events ranging from the picturesque days of the Old South to the inspiring period of the Civil War. Then comes the graphic reproduction of the assasination of President Lincoln and the second half is devoted to the baleful days of the reconstruction period.

At the close is shown the new era of the negro race giving scenes at Hampton, Virginia, which evidence the progress made by that people since the period of fifty years ago.

"The Birth of a Nation" is a complete pictorial story of the most momentous years in the history of the United States. No writer has ever been able to tell so vividly the story of the times that tried men's souls. It is not a revelation of the future, but a recrudescence of the past. Nothing so stupendous has ever before been shown to the public. It is educational but more than that it is interesting and entertaining. There are two performances every day, including Sunday, at 4.30 and 8.30.

Date .....

"The Birth of a Nation."

...lewis have been attending the performances of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Brighton ... Civil War period, and ... Southern film history ... reconstruction days ... has ever ... has the ... impression ... the ... Civil War ... the ... Abraham ... Confederacy ... obtain ... the ... troops ... South, and ... the drill ... naturally ...

MILWAUKEE (Wis.) SENTINEL
JULY 24, 1915

DAVIDSON—While making a study of the civil war, prior to "The Birth of a Nation," pictorial slave and war drama now running at the Davidson, D. W. Griffith interviewed an aged southerner, who gave him several "Richmond dollars" as souvenirs of the confederacy. Enormous quantities of siege and battle field money, both notes and coins, were turned out by the confederacy. Many of the notes are still in existence. Kept as curiosities. The coined money of the war period is highly valued by collectors. Mr. Griffith's war photoplay, presented twice daily at the Davidson, is a thrilling depiction of the struggle between the north and south, which resulted in the preservation of the union and the freedom of the slaves.

Y. MAIL. July 24

Month for "Birth of Nation."

...he Birth of a Nation," at the Lib... Theatre next week starts the sixth ...h of its successful engagement ... no sign of diminishing interest. At ...ame time D. W. Griffith's spectacle ...ying record-breaking engagements ... Brighton Beach Music Hall by ...side here, and also at Boston, ... San Francisco, and has be... Civil ...ngagement in Atlantic ...traction is being pre... ...people a week in ...

MOTION PICTURE WORLD (N. Y. City)

JUL 24 1915

"THE BATTLE AT ELDERBUSH GULCH" (Biograph).

PERHAPS the strongest endorsement "The Battle at Elderbush Gulch" could have is D. W. Griffith's assertion that this two-reel production is one of his three greatest triumphs, the other two being "Judith of Bethulia" and "The Birth of a Nation." It is unquestionably the greatest two-reel battle picture ever produced.

It is difficult to witness this production without thinking of D. W. Griffith's later success, "The Birth of a Nation," the detail and technique being so similar that they at once establish the mark of the director. And again, the production is so entirely different from the present day offerings, the action being caught in the first few feet and carried at an interest-absorbing pace throughout the entire picture.

Scene from "The Battle at Elderbush Gulch" (Biograph).

While the production as a whole is a massive spectacle, care has been taken to keep up the interest of the story, through the introduction of several humorous incidents which are sure to register with any audience. Mae Marsh is particularly effective in work of this nature, while Lillian Gish and Robert Harron have parts which call for more dramatic acting. Chas. H. Malles shows to good advantage, the same being true of Kate Bruce and W. Chrystie Miller. Henry Walthall has a small part in the second reel, that of a troop commander.

The photography of the panorama scenes is excellent, the acting and directing throughout is perfect; in fact, it would be difficult to find a two-reel picture that offers the volume of entertainment found in this production.

"The Battle at Elderbush Gulch" is a feature that is sure to be booked as freely when it is released, which is July 30, as it was when first released some time ago.

N.Y. JOURNAL of COMMERCE.
JULY 24, 1915

"The Birth of a Nation" will complete its fifth month at the Liberty Theatre this week with no sign of diminishing interest. Engagements are also being played at Brighton Beach, Boston, Chicago, San Francisco and Atlantic City. It is estimated that over 50,000 people a week witness this feature play in these points.

Marguerite Clark in a film adaptation of the Hungarian play, "Seven Sisters," will be the feature at the Strand Theatre next week. A series of travel and educational studies will also be shown.

BROOKLYN, (N. Y.) TIMES

Date 7-24-15

"The Birth of a Nation"—N. Y.

"The Birth of a Nation" passes out of its fifth month at the Liberty Theatre with the performances this week, and starts the sixth month of its successful engagement at this theatre with no sign of diminishing interest.

N.Y. COMMERCIAL
JULY 24, 1915

"The Birth of a Nation" passes out of its fifth month at the Liberty, with the performances this week, the attraction is being presented to over 50,000 people in New York, Boston and Chicago.

MILWAUKEE (WIS.) NEWS
AUG. 15, 1915

—Sherman's March to the Sea, a Bayonet Charge; Center—Parade of Ku-Klux-Klan; Lower View—Union Men on the Firing Line.

BROOKLYN, (N. Y.) TIMES
Date JUL 24 1915

SUMMER AMUSEMENTS

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" AT BRIGHTON BEACH MUSIC HALL

CLIPPING FROM Milwaukee Wisconsin
Date 7-24-15

DAVIDSON—"The Birth of a Nation," continues its record breaking engagement for duration of run. Shown daily at 2:30 and 8:10 o'clock.

DAVIDSON.

American history in pictorial form at the Davidson is winning the favor of the public. "The Birth of a Nation," the historical drama of the slave problem and Civil war, is now in its fourth week of successful presentation, and the performances every afternoon and evening are well attended. National publicity has stamped the play as an exceptional offering, and it is reported that in all cities in which it is exhibited, record-breaking crowds are attracted. And no other production in Milwaukee ever held the attention of theatergoers for so long a time. Visitors are present daily from cities throughout Wisconsin.

In a long series of clear, expressive pictures, the story of the Civil war and the emancipation of the negro slaves is imparted to spectators, with the unfolding of an interesting double romance in which the principals are the sons and daughters of leaders in the north and south. The Stonemans are an influential family in the north, and the Camerons are equally prominent in the south. War causes estrangement, and true love does not win its reward until peace is declared. Personal events are interwoven with war events, and the spell of the desperate conflict holds one enthralled until the last picture has flickered from view.

American history is depicted with realistic earnestness, and in the fleeting pictures one sees the enslaved negroes as they lived and worked, the ease of the southern planters and the controversies in congress over the slave issue. Then President Abraham Lincoln, a role assumed with life like effect by Joseph Hanaberry, enters the stage as the liberator of the black race, and in solemn ensemble with his cabinet he is seen in the act of signing his emancipation proclamation. There is a tender scene revealing Lincoln in the act of granting the plea of a mother to save her son, a Confederate officer, from execution. The last scene of Lincoln depicts his assassination at the hands of John Wilkes Booth, actor, in Ford's theater in Washington, every detail of the tragedy being worked out with historic correctness.

There are 5,000 scenes in the thrilling play and many of them are descriptive of the carnage of battle. Long lines of fighting soldiers are revealed, coming to close quarters in desperate bayonet clashes; cavalrymen wash madly over the field and cannons roar, belching forth fire and smoke, giving the effect of fury unrestrained. The battlefields are strewn with the bodies of the dead and the injured are seen being carried to the hospitals. The special scenes include reproductions of the battle of Gettysburg, Sherman's famous march to the sea, the burning of Atlanta and the flight of its population, the last stand at Petersburg and the surrender of Lee to Grant.

In the last part of the play the scenes reveal the trials of the southerners in dealing with the headstrong negroes who have joined forces with unscrupulous white "carpetbaggers" from the north who aim to control elections and to loot public treasuries. Demoralization is pictured with reconstruction through the agency of the Ku Klux Klan, a secret organization of men who wore white shrouds and who covered their horses with white hoods and blankets.

MILWAUKEE (Wis.) NEWS
JULY 24, 1915

DAVIDSON—

"The Birth of a Nation"

American history in pictorial [illegible] at the Davidson is winning the [illegible] of the public. "The Birth of a Nation," the historical drama of the slave problem and the civil war, is now in its fourth week of successful presentation and the performances every afternoon and evening are well attended. National publicity has stamped the play as an exceptional offering, and it is reported that in all cities in which it is exhibited, record-breaking crowds are attracted. And no other production in Milwaukee ever held the attention of theater goers for so long a time. Visitors are present daily from cities throughout Wisconsin.

In a long series of clear, expressive pictures, the story of the civil war and the emancipation of the negro slaves is imparted to spectators, with the unfoldment of an interesting double romance in which the principals are the sons and daughters of leaders in the north and south. The Stonemans are an influential family in the north and the Camerons are equally [illegible] in the south. War causes estrangement and true love does not win its reward until peace is declared. Personal events are interwoven with war events, and the spell of the desperate conflict holds one enthralled until the last picture has flickered from view.

American history is depicted with realistic earnestness and in the fleeting pictures one sees the enslaved negroes as they lived and worked, the ease of the southern planters and the controversies in congress over the slave issue. Then President Abraham Lincoln, a role assumed with life-like effect by Joseph Henabery, enters the stage as the liberator of the black race, and in solemn ensemble with his cabinet he is seen in the act of signing his emancipation proclamation. There is a tender scene revealing Lincoln in the act of granting the plea of a mother to save her son, a confederate officer, from execution. The last scene of Lincoln depicts his assassination at the hands of John Wilkes Booth in the Ford theater in Washington, every detail of the tragedy being worked out with historic correctness.

There are 5,000 scenes in the thrilling play and many of them are descriptive of the carnage of battle. Long lines of fighting soldiers are revealed, coming to close quarters in desperate bayonet clashes; cavalrymen dash madly over the field and cannons roar, belching forth fire and smoke, giving the effect of fury unrestrained. The battlefields are strewn with the bodies of the dead and the injured are seen being carried to the hospitals.

The special scenes include reproductions of the battle of Gettysburg, Sherman's famous march to the sea, the burning of Atlanta and the flight of its population, the last stand at Petersburg and the surrender of Lee to Grant.

In the last part of the play the scenes reveal the trials of the southerners in dealing with the headstrong negroes who have joined forces with unscrupulous white "carpet-baggers" from the north, who aim to control elections and to loot public treasuries. Demoralization is pictured with reconstruction through the agency of the Ku Klux Klan, a secret organization of men who wore white shrouds and who covered their horses with white hoods and blankets. The Klansmen [illegible] ically as night-riders who [illegible] and order after a reign [illegible] History states that [illegible] became such a [illegible] in the south [illegible] was [illegible] the [illegible]

UNION. July 22, 1915
SAN DIEGO, CAL

"The Clansman" will close its record-breaking run of five weeks at the Empress Theatre with Sunday night's performance. Only four more days remain in which to witness this greatest of all film productions. Never before in the history of things theatrical has a production of any sort played for such a lengthy engagement in San Diego.

This amazing motion picture spectacle has been presented twice each day in the Empress Theatre to capacity houses and the verdict of all who have attended is that "The Clansman" is "the greatest and most thrilling film drama ever produced."

It is being presented in the local playhouse in exactly the same manner as in New York, Boston and Chicago, where the admission prices range from 50 cents to $2 and the management asserts that "The Clansman" will not be returned to San Diego at any time in the future at reduced prices of admission. Following "The Clansman" next week, the Empress offers Paul Armstrong's great play "The Escape," put into seven stirring reels of pictures by David Griffith, the same master director who produced "The Clansman." Popular prices will prevail during the run of "The Escape" and three shows will be given each day: one matinee and two evening performances.

NG FROM
Date 7-24-15

Little Mae Marsh Outstars Big Sister on the Screen

Upper, Marguerite Loveridge; Lower, Mae Marsh.

BY GERTRUDE M. PRICE.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., July 24.—Marguerite Loveridge has gone back to her own name—Marguerite Marsh!

Not so many seasons ago Marguerite Loveridge was playing leads with the old Griffith company in the Biograph studios. Her little sister, Mae, since far-famed for her splendid role in "The Clansman," "The Outcast," and a [illegible] other dramatic parts, came hopping into the studio, wistful-eyed and straggly-haired, wondering at the grandeur of her big sister in make-up and costume.

"I'd like to act, too," she told her big sister.

"Nonsense," said Marguerite, "run home and play with your dollies. You couldn't act. You're not big enough, child."

But D. W. Griffith happened to see the quaint little figure sitting on a "prop." He immediately told big sister Marguerite to bring her along next day; that he had a little part for Mae to play.

To the unspeakable delight of the child and the astonishment of her sister, Mae was hired, first for "bits," and then for "regulars." She worked incessantly. She climbed slowly but surely. Then came a chance for her to play big acting roles. She had had no theatrical experience, but she surprised every one by her ability and insight into the characters she portrayed.

...KLYN, (N. Y.) TIMES

...

"Birth of a Nation"

...ty orphans from St. ... will be the guests of ... M. Kemble, the manager, at ... performance Monday of ... Griffith's $500,000 production, "The Birth of a Nation" at the ...ton Beach Music Hall.

Although "The Birth of a Nation," ...ch is a wonderful pictorial history ...the Civil War period, including the ...onstruction days, is drawing crowd...houses at the Music Hall Manager ...mble decided to adhere to his long ...ctice of inviting orphans to his ...house and sent word to the insti...tion that he would accommodate ...e hundred of the youngsters.

Bishop Charles E. McDonnell was ...municated with and gave his per...mission to the boys to attend. The ...tails of their arrival will be looked ...after by Joseph F. Keany, first vice ...president, and Alexander McKinny, ...second vice president. The boys will ...be conveyed to Brighton Beach aboard ...special cars and will be accompanied ...by the St. John's Orphan Asylum ...band.

Upon arrival at Brighton Beach the ...boys will form in a line of parade and ...preceded by a band playing patriotic ...airs will march along the boardwalk ...and come to attention in front of the ...Brighton Beach Hotel, where the band ...will play several selections. Follow...ing that the command to march will ...be given and the youngsters will ...march two abreast into the Brighton ...Beach Music Hall.

The boys will derive a double benefit ...from seeing the picture. In the first ...place it will afford them an afternoon ...of enjoyment and in the second give ...them a clearer idea of the events ...leading up to the Civil War, the Civil ...War period itself and finally the re...construction days in the South. As ...American history is a part of their ...school work, Manager Kemble believes ...the boys, by seeing the picture, will be ...better able to grasp and comprehend ...that part of it relating to the ...

N.Y. EVEN. SUN
JULY 24, 1915

LIBERTY—"The Birth of a Nation" starts the sixth month of its successful engagement at this theatre with no sign of diminishing interest. At the same time D. W. Griffith's wonderful spectacle is playing record breaking engagements in the Brighton Beach Music Hall, and also at Boston, Chicago, San Francisco and Atlantic City.

SAN FRANCISCO (Cal.) EXAMINER
JULY 22, 1915

THE CLANSMAN STILL RUNS.

"The Birth of a Nation" or "The Clansman," D. W. Griffith's spectacle in 6 reels, is in its fourteenth week at the Alcazar. Afternoon and evening performances are given.

SAN FRANCISCO (Cal.) BULLETIN
JULY 22, 1915

"The Clansman" Playing Fourteenth Week Here

"The Birth of a Nation" or "The Clansman," D. W. Griffith's spectacle in 6 reels, is now in its fourteenth big week at the Alcazar Theatre. This photo drama, composed of the greatest conflict of history and resulting in changing this country from a federation into a nation, passes into direct view of the eye in incidents which are stupendously more than those which Homer sang of his epic on the siege of Troy. Exhibitions are given daily, at 2 o'clock and the evening exhibition at 8.

SEATTLE (Wash.) POST-INTEL.
JULY 22, 1915

BIRTH OF A NATION THREE HUNDRED TIMES.

"The Birth of a Nation," which is having a phenomenal run here at the Clemmer, registered its three hundredth consecutive performance last Saturday at the Liberty theater in New York City, and is still packing the house. A second production of the great photoplay is also being presented at the Brighton Beach music hall, in New York.

"So," says the New York Review, "the record is piling up faster than was ever known before for a theatrical offering of this kind. The massive film conception of the dramatic forces in the most stirring parts of American history is so comprehensive in its appeal that it continues to be the most talked of attraction in town."

The identical picture which is making this "town talk" in New York is being shown here at the Clemmer with musical accompaniments that cannot be better in the Eastern metropolis than here. Manager Clemmer has certainly done his share to give the people of Seattle an opportunity to enjoy this great historic production in as complete and artistic surroundings as could be offered anywhere.

...LIPPING FROM
NEW YORK HERALD
...JUL 24 1915

SIXTH MONTH HERE OF "BIRTH OF A NATION."

"The Birth of a Nation" passes out of its fifth month at the Liberty Theatre with the performances this week and starts the sixth month of its successful engagement at this theatre with no sign of diminishing interest. At the same time D. W. Griffith's wonderful spectacle is playing record breaking engagements in the Brighton Beach Music Hall by the seaside here and also at Boston, Chicago, San Francisco and has begun a summer engagement at Atlantic City. The big attraction is being presented to over 50,000 people a week in these points.

N. Y. GLOBE.
July 24, 1915

THE BEST MOVING PICTURES

LIBERTY.—"The Birth of a Nation" passes out of its fifth month at the Liberty Theatre with the performances this week, and starts the sixth month of its successful engagemen at this theatre with no sign of diminishing interest. At the same time D. W. Griffith's wonderful spectacle is playing record-breaking engagements in the Brighton Beach Music Hall by the seaside

JOURNAL OF COMMERCE.
July 22, 1915

The fourth month of D. W. Griffith's great spectacle of postbellum days and the reconstruction period, "The Birth of a Nation," shows undiminished attendance at the Liberty Theatre. The present warlike conditions throughout the world appear to add singular attractiveness to the military incidents pictured so graphically.

MADISON (Wis.) JOURNAL
JULY 22, 1915

GREAT GRIFFITH PLAY AT MAJESTIC TODAY

Since Producer D. W. Griffith presented "The Birth of a Nation"—that most wonderful of all photo-plays, which has broken records at a $2 admission scale, his name stands for absolutely the best in motography presentations, and it is with a feeling of pride and pleasure that the Majestic theater management announce the coming presentation today of Mr. Griffith's biggest and best six reel offering, "The Avenging Conscience." This photo-play promises to be one of the big picture events of the entire season in Madison, as Producer Griffith claims it is one of the most mysterious, masterful motion dramas ever devised, and is everywhere acknowledged as one of his greatest achievements. "The Avenging Conscience" is a 6 reel drama, suggested by Edgar Allen Poe's Story of "The Tell-Tale Heart," and in its unfolding presents photographic feats never before attempted by a producer, and conceived by the master-mind of Mr. Griffith. Altho this picture has been shown heretofore at a high scale of prices, the Majestic management will offer it to their patrons at the usual scale.

HERALD AUGUSTA. GA.
JULY 22, 1915

There are few pictures before the American people today that have achieved greater fame than D. W. Griffith's "Birth Of a Nation." And the stars who acted in this great picture made reputations for themselves that have served most of them in good stead ever since. This holds true in many cases, with one notable exception—that is Henry B. Walthall. And the play which attracted Mr. Walthall to that famous director was none other than the one at the Strand today. Hence you may guess that "Beulah" is a film classic. It may be called "the play that made Walthall famous."

...HARRISON (N. J.) RECORD
JULY 23, 1915

BIRTH OF A NATION

Facts About the Declaration of Independence.

SIGNING OF THE DOCUMENT.

The Last Name, Thomas McKean, to Go on the Precious Parchment Was Not Appended Until 1781—The Mecklenburg and Maryland Declarations.

Of the fifty-six men who finally affixed their signatures to the Declaration of Independence, a document that heralded the birth of a nation, to the support of which they pledged their lives, their fortunes and their sacred honor, none was so old as to be liable to a suspicion of senility and few so young that they might be accused of immaturity of judgment. Even John Hancock, rather a roving blade and none too stable in his personal habits and predilections, was thirty-nine years old when the general congress met in Independence hall, Philadelphia, to sit in judgment upon the wording of the historical document.

The oldest man in the assemblage was Benjamin Franklin, then six months past his seventieth birthday, and the youngest was Thomas Lynch, Jr., of South Carolina, who was born Aug. 5, 1749, and was therefore a month short of being twenty-seven years old.

The first of the signers of the Declaration to die after the execution of the instrument was Button Gwinnett of Georgia, who passed away on May 27 of the following year. Charles Carroll of Carrollton, Md., lived the longest after the memorable date. He remained until Nov. 13, 1832.

James Smith of Pennsylvania was the only signer who lived to a more advanced age than Charles Carroll. He was ninety-six years old when his life ended on July 11, 1806. There were three others who became nonagenarians—John Adams of Massachusetts, who passed away at ninety-one years; William Ellery of Rhode Island, at ninety-three years, and Francis Lewis of New York, at ninety-one years of age. The youngest to die was Arthur Middleton of South Carolina, who was only forty-four years old at his demise on Jan. 1, 1788.

Of the fifty-six signers but seven had advanced past the age of sixty years on July 4, 1776. Nine were between fifty and sixty, there were nineteen between forty and fifty, the same number, nineteen, between thirty and forty and two below the age of thirty years. The average age was 43.87 years.

But, contrary to popular belief, the Declaration of Independence was not signed on July 4, 1776. As a matter of fact, the last signature was not appended until five years later, in 1781. Thomas McKean, a member from Delaware, who had been present on July 4, 1776, but "absent with the army at the general subscription of said instrument," applied for permission to sign. An act was then passed permitting him to affix his signature, and "be added thereto the date of such subscription." Another delegate, Matthew Thornton of New Hampshire, who had been present at neither the reading on July 4 nor at the later date of general subscription, presented his credentials on Nov. 4, 1776, and was permitted to sign.

It was the first reading of the Declaration of Independence that occurred on July 4, and the tentative draft presented by the committee previously appointed to draw up such a document was approved by all the members present. No resolution was passed until July 10, when it was "Resolved, That the declaration passed on the 4th be fairly engrossed on parchment, with the title, etc., and that the same, when engrossed, be signed by every member of congress." Two weeks later, the engrossing having been duly accomplished, the members of congress then present signed it.

Another fact in connection with the Declaration of Independence which we venerate is that it is neither the first nor the only Declaration of Independence from the rule of Great Britain that was made in her North American colonies.

More than a year before the framing of the document which we cherish, on May 20, 1775, a convention was held at Charlotte, N. C., and an instrument declaring freedom from the rule of Great Britain was drawn up and signed. This was the famous Mecklenburg declaration, the original of which was unfortunately destroyed by fire in 1800. It was [illegible]

...On the same day [illegible] adopted a Declaration of Independence, probably the first [illegible] by the colonies in any part of them, in special, written form. The document is still in existence.

ATLANTIC CITY (N. J.) REVIEW
JULY 22, 1915

WAR SPECTACLE TREMENDOUS HIT

"Birth of a Nation" Drawing Capacity Houses At New Nixon

D. W. Griffith's stupendous spectacle of peace and war, "The Birth of a Nation," is playing to capacity houses twice daily at the New Nixon Theatre. In San Francisco, Los Angeles, Milwaukee and Brighton Beach. In the above-named cities "The Birth of a Nation" has been attracting these record audiences for many months and in New York and Chicago it will be shown for a year to come.

Produced during the fiftieth anniversary of the closing events of the Civil War, the play offers an unusually vivid portrayal of those epoch-making scenes. It is just half a century since Lee's surrender to Grant, and the collapse of the Confederacy and the terrible assassination of President Lincoln in Ford's Theatre, Washington. These events that stirred the nation to its depth are depicted by Mr. Griffith in so realistic a manner as to startle with their [illegible] even the fast scattering few who were themselves a part of what was done in those momentous days.

The first part of the picture covers the entire period from 1861 to 1865 with massive battle scenes which by their horrors accentuate the blessings of peace. The second half Mr. Griffith devotes to the soul-stirring drama of Reconstruction. He shows the stricken South in the clutch of the Carpethagger and how it was saved by the Scottish Clan of the Carolinas. Here the dramatic power reaches its zenith. The eyes of the spectators look backwards for fifty years and see history in its making.

This wonderful spectacle is made still more impressive by the art of music, interpreted by forty picked musicians. Extensive mechanical effects increase the illusion of reality.

"The Birth of a Nation" is the first film spectacle to play any first class theatre at the same prices that are obtained for the most elaborate dramatic productions. Its success promises to revolutionize the theatrical world. It has set a higher standard for all forms of entertainment. And first of all "The Birth of a Nation" is great entertainment. In addition to that it is like reading history by flashes [illegible]

TIMES STAR. ALAMEDA
JULY. 31, 1915

JULY
MILWAUKEE WISCONSIN

Scenes from "The Birth of a Nation."

ON—"The Birth of a Nation," the photoplay, in its fifth week of a re-ng run. Shown at 2:15 and 8:10 o'clock

AL—Vaudeville of five acts headlined ive Flying De Valls, new bill opening afternoon. Matinee daily.
EUM—Continuous vaudeville, 2 to 5 and m.; pictures, 11 a. m. to 2, and 5 to
New bills Sunday.
REFLY—Pictures.
NDWA—Pictures.
TIC—Pictures.
ESS—Dark.
ERT—Dark.
TY—Dark.
T—Dark.

DAVIDSON.

day afternoon "The Birth of a ," D. W. Griffith's tremendous drama, which has attracted such ent, enters upon the fifth week of gagement at the Davidson, shat-all motion picture engagement in the state of Wisconsin and of northwest, with the exception of go.
day night the sixtieth performance is remarkable picture will be given is city. This is the first time any has been exhibited here at $1.50
, and the first time that any film, y price, has played an engagement more than two consecutive weeks.
opularity is attested by the capacity ds that still flock to witness the entations, and the fact that seats in demand for every performance he prolonged engagement.
is not necessary at this time to ss the tremendous size of this photo-
, the army of people required for its entation or the time and money spent its filming. Sufficient to say that in battle scenes, showing the fighting t Petersburg, Va., during the last d of the Confederacy, no less than 00 people were impressed in the bat-scenes, which were filmed from the of a 60-foot tower, and enacted on area of five miles. Telephoto lenses re employed in many of the scenes.
battles were conducted under orders in regular warfare, and the whole di-ted by Griffith with the aid of field phones. Realism is found in them to last degree.
The historic aspect of the story is in-resting. The tale of the Ku Klux lan is told honestly and fearlessly.
riffith and Thomas Dixon, whose vels, "The Clansman" and "The eopard Spots," form the basis of the ory, are Virginians. Both knew the ue facts of this unseen army from embers of their immediate families ho participated in many of the battles.
he reconstruction troubles are told in istory and records. The facts of negro omination under carpet-bag rule were itterly real, and it is these incidents hat play such a big part in the second ortion of the film, which deals with econstruction following Lincoln's death.
Performances are being given twice aily. The musical setting by Herman Kelbe's orchestra, synchronized to fit very portion of the film, is a big feature.
Presentations start at 2:15 and 8:10
'clock, and the offering is begun on the minute owing to the length of the perormance. There are twelve reels, with

News Milwaukee Wis
JULY 31, 1915

Upper section—Scene [illegible]; President Abraham Lincoln signing the Emancipation Proclamation; lower

BROOKLYN (N. Y.) EAGLE
JUL 22 1915

"BIRTH OF NATION" SCORED

Thinks Wrong Views Have Been Taken of History.

Editor Brooklyn Daily Eagle:

